"And it is a marvelous relief not to be deeply concerned about the cost to the patient of the treatments in hospital or about his loss of earnings while under treatment. That's all looked after by nonmedical people and so one can concentrate on carrying out the ideal treatment regardless of the time and money it may cost. It is really wonderful to see the social workers spending their time not in hounding patients for donations but in arranging for aftercare and improved home conditions and comfortable convalescence. It is simply delightful ordering appliances for patients and not fretting whether they can afford the initial outlay or the replacements. Oh, I know about the people who are getting things they don't need on money we are all bleeding to death paying out in taxes. But my people are really ill, and they have a right to these things, and it's good for the community that they should have them and get well. Mind you, we're giving all these benefits where we can and when we can, because our waiting lists are horribly, tragically long. But so far as we give them, those benefits are superb.

A budget is a method of worrying before you spend instead of afterward.

"I know it's a mess. Lots and lots of things are wrong with the Service from the ground up. But really, if a human being can do what I did to a kidney this morning, and leave its owner as good as new and even better, then it's reasonable to suppose that somebody else can put the National Health Service on its feet. And even if my banking account blows up and me with it, I'll say, 'God bless it.'"

VIII

I HAVE left out so many aspects of the Service I wanted to describe, but I hope I have convinced you that the British National Health Service is not just a folly. It is not meaningless. It is a muddle and a monster and a premature baby. It can never work out to everybody's satisfaction, even if it is unmuddled and grows up normal and gets out of the incubator looking fine. Remember this: A National Health Service must be a disappointment, however successful it is. It is bound to be taken as a promise to give the whole population first-class medical and surgical treatment. Well, it can't do that. There are not enough first-class doctors, surgeons, dentists, oculists or nurses to go round, and not enough hospital beds. You are up against a natural insufficiency here; and if you quarrel with it you will have to quarrel with the same insufficiency which makes it impossible to guarantee every citizen a wife as beautiful as Elizabeth Taylor, and a Park Avenue apartment. In any National Health Service a large proportion of the population will have to make do with second-rate attention, and maybe some that is not so good as that. But that would be more grimly true without a National Health Service, and we are better off with one, for it has a purpose, and unless there is another war and unless we all fail in our dut should fulfill it.

There are four points which the S has impressed on me, and I think it m useful to Americans to hear what are.

1. The National Health Service of Britain is not a piece of Socialist fre ness, but a necessity recognized by i gent citizens of all parties. The bulk population came out of the Second War unable to pay for medical attent the scale which was necessary if docto nurses were to make a living, and the tals were tottering toward insolvency.

If the pressure of history acts on the lation and on your hospitals in the sa kind way, you Americans will nee want—it won't matter whether you w or not, you will need it—a National Service of your own.

2. Start examining the medical lan early to see if that need is appearin the chief thing necessary for the esta ment of an efficient service is time. It be based on calcul beyond the power community to coll consider quickly. I enterprise compara the mobilizing of the or Navy or Air Force after the outbre war. Its accountancy alone presents trophic possibilities of waste. Ask an whose wartime work lay in the f department of any war-created unit Administration if you want confir of this statement.

3. It is necessary to frame the cond of the National Health Service so tha easy for the persons drawing benefit derstand how much it costs, and wh for it, and what their own contribut that payment, direct or indirect, is. dren should be taught the mechani the fund in schools, and the figures sho displayed in public places. When peopl spent in the old days, they knew it b their purses were empty. Now they ca spend and never know it, because purses are empty anyway, as they han most of their money to the tax collecto they cannot tell when his purse is e This is a new problem arising out of and complicated way of living and it be met by education.

4. A National Health Service shou lifted out of the political field, beca will be a success or a failure accord the degree to which it is regarded tively. In America you have a bipa foreign policy, and it is just as necess have a bipartisan health policy. N should be allowed to cheer or boo an connected with such a service. The demonstration allowable is a slight kn of the brows, such as might be provok the working out of a mathematical pr

In spite of the obvious fact that all points spring from my sense that ou tional Health Service is not so good might be, I invite you Americans with fidence to come to Great Britain ten from now and look at it. By then it something to be proud of; and you may we were not so foolish for frankly adm when times have changed and the o rangements for meeting the physical cr life had broken down, and setting making new ones. There are many dif sorts of pioneering.

THE VIOLIN

(Continued from Page 66)

his premium. It's just what he wanted, isn't it?"

"Sure, but when he sees it there's going to be trouble. I know. My brother's girl once sold something like that for a doll, and she hadn't had it five minutes before the head fell off. If you'd done like I said, put your foot down, we wouldn't have had this mess."

Mr. Spencer's head came up from the dishpan. "It's not a mess at all," he said. "I let him do this for a purpose. Maybe next time he'll be willing to take a little ad

"But what about the lad—spending weeks of his vacation selling salve, an ting nowt for it?"

"Good for him!" boomed Mr. Sp from the dishpan. His long arm grope the towel. Mrs. Spencer lifted it off th and thrust it into his hand. "It's just he deserves." Mr. Spencer came up, ru his face. "It's going to be a very good les

(Continued on Page 158)

· came back into the driveway. She l to the front door and unlatched it.
e came bounding up the front steps flat, narrow cardboard carton in his
He dashed into the living room, d on his knees in the middle of the d began tearing at the carton like a dog over a bone. Mr. Spencer came closed the door behind him.
ıd the packing now," Mrs. Spencer
I don't want to vacuum that rug ı one day."
there was no packing. Willie folded e flaps and pulled out the violin. He up; turned it around.
!" he said, and then more quietly, t's little, isn't it?" His voice grew I guess they make them that way on —so they won't be so hard for chilplay."
Spencer looked at her husband. He away.
: was rubbing his hand across the the violin. The varnish was rough. It ıt a scratchy sound that carried the still room. "In the picture it was nt color," he said in a subdued voice.
picture it was kind of red. This one's wn."
Spencer sat down. His fingers were on the crushed brim of his hat.
fitted a small black peg into the nd began tightening a string. The ckled ominously under his fingers.
y it splintered. Willie stared at it.
hed his hand quickly across his eyes.
in another one," said Mr. Spencer You only have to have one string to ıt." He rolled and unrolled the hat-his fingers.
fitted another peg into the scroll, riously threaded the gut string. This lding the small bridge upright as he he was able to get it tight. He took from the carton, and tried holding n in various positions, finally putigh on his chest. Carefully he drew across the string. No tone at all came nly a faint, high whistle.
: and see if there's some rosin in the r. Spencer said. He was leaning for-w with his hands on his knees. His fallen on the floor.

hunted through the box. He pulled oklet about the size of a large postal the front in small letters were the Instruction Book." He tossed it ickly. He dug into the carton again, e up with a small square of green de was an irregularly shaped piece of e held the bow between his knees, ed the rosin up and down the hair.
a lot of it on—more yet," Mr.
said.
rubbed till the powdery rosin was ıt of the hairs of the bow.
try it," Mr. Spencer said. lifted up the violin. He pulled the ss the string. The sound that came forth was thin, and whiny, without a particle of resonance. He put down the bow and held up the violin. "It's no good," he said softly. He turned to his uncle, and his lip began to tremble. "It's no good," he said in a louder voice. "It won't play." And suddenly he stood up, flung the violin on the sofa, and rushed sobbing to the bedroom.

Mrs. Spencer glared at her husband. "Well," she said, "are you satisfied?"

"It's a good lesson for him." Mr. Spencer's voice was scratchy. "It's turned out just ——" He tried to clear his throat, finally gave up, and stared fiercely at the rug.

"You and your confounded ideas," Mrs. Spencer said. She hurried into the bedroom. Coming out a few minutes later, she paused in the doorway. "And never you mind about that old violin, Willie," she called out, "because I'll be back from my shopping in a little while, and I'm going to bring you something real nice."

THE sobbing from the bedroom continued.

Mrs. Spencer turned to her husband. "Educational, eh?"

Mr. Spencer did not look up.

She picked up her shopping bag and went out, banging the door behind her.

It was almost an hour later when Mrs. Spencer returned. She labored up the front steps, pushed open the front door, balancing an armload of paper sack and the net shopping bag precariously. Mr. Spencer was still sitting in the chair.

"Where's Willie?" Mrs. Spencer asked.

Her husband indicated the bedroom. Mrs. Spencer cocked her head. From the bedroom came the rasping whine of a violin. She sighed.

"Well, anyway," she said, "I've brought him something nice."

She went into the kitchen, took the groceries out of her bags, and fixed up a big soup bowl full of ice cream and strawberries. The whining sounds still came from the bedroom. Mrs. Spencer walked back into the front room, carrying the bowl, and listening.

"You know, Henry," she said quietly, "it really doesn't sound so bad. He's sort of getting the hang of it." She turned to her husband. "Maybe, with some practice ——" Her voice faded out. On the sofa she saw the little violin, lying where Willie had thrown it. She put the bowl down on the table. "Henry Spencer," she said, her voice rising threateningly. She went into the kitchen. She came back with the open tea canister in her hand. "How much was it?"

"Fifty-five dollars."

Mrs. Spencer sucked in her breath in a long hiss. "You crazy fool," she said fiercely. "You great lumpin' fool." Then she set the canister down, and came over and put her plump arms around her husband. "Henry, you didn't have to do that."

Mr. Spencer drew away. "Now don't get the idea I'm giving in to him, Jennie. It's—well, I just thought it might be nice to have a little music around the house." THE END

"At least you'd think they would act like grown ups."

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

Cashmere Bouquet

And—

New tests by leading skin specialists PROVE the amazing mildness of Cashmere Bouquet on all types of skin!

Yes, in laboratory tests conducted under severest conditions on normal, dry and oily skin types . . . Cashmere Bouquet Soap was proved amazingly mild! So use Cashmere Bouquet regularly in your daily bath and for your complexion, too. It will leave your skin softer, smoother . . . flower-fresh and younger looking! The lingering, romantic fragrance of Cashmere Bouquet comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes, far costlier than you would expect to find in any soap. Fastidious women cherish Cashmere Bouquet for this "fragrance men love".

Cashmere Bouquet

—In a New Bath Size Cake, Too!

PHOTOGRAPH BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

Intelligent food habits, regular cleansing and medicinal care are the three major steps toward clearing up those pimples, bumps and blackheads medically classified as acne vulgaris. Depending upon the individual, it may take anywhere from two weeks to two months before you notice a pretty difference in your skin.

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

3 Steps to a Prettier Skin

"Facial" Foods

Skin imperfections are aggravated by fatty substances which accumulate in the oil glands of the skin. When this accumulation is excessive, it increases the amount of oil secreted by the glands of the skin to the point where the pores become clogged near the surface, causing blackheads and whiteheads. When these tiny glands become infected, your skin "breaks out" and trouble begins! By decreasing the amount of fat in your diet, you are taking step number one toward complimenting your complexion. Here is a basic eating plan, plus some diet reminders suggested by our dermatologist:

BREAKFAST

Fruit juice, large glass. (Choose from orange, grapefruit, pineapple, apricot or other nectars.)
Cereal, dry or cooked, with sugar if desired; no more than ½ cup milk.
Toast, 1 or 2 slices. Jam or jelly is allowed, but not more than 1 pat of butter.
Coffee or tea with little milk and sugar.

LUNCH

Thin soup. (Such as Scotch broth, clear tomato, beef or chicken bouillon.)
A light sandwich (or vegetable, fruit or cottage-cheese salad, Melba toast).
Stewed fruit (such as figs, prunes, pears, apricots, peaches) or gelatin dessert.
Fruit or tomato juice, large glass.
Tea or coffee with sugar as desired.

DINNER

Clear soup or fruit cup.
Any lean meat.
Any green vegetables, potatoes or rice.
Salad.
Stewed fruit or gelatin dessert.
Bread and butter (but not more than 1 pat).
Tea or coffee with little milk and sugar.

Diet Reminders

1. A glowing complexion depends upon good health so that your system can carry off body poisons. Insufficient food weakens your resistance to infection. Don't confuse your complexion diet with a reducing diet!

2. Bread, rice, potatoes and other starchy foods are permissible in your diet. Help yourself depending upon whether you are overweight, underweight or just about perfect.

3. Brush up on your will power and try to avoid: chocolate, ice cream, pastries, nuts, large amounts of butter, cream or cheese. Because egg yolks have a high fat content, our doctor limits his patients to two or three eggs a week.

4. Avoid fried foods. Broiled lean meats, steamed or boiled vegetables, stewed or fresh fruits are kind to complexions and should appear daily in your diet.

5. In addition to a quart of fruit juice each day, drink lots of water. A tumbler before breakfast, one or two at midmorning and late afternoon. Sufficient (Continued on Page 222)

Stockings so good they're signed with the label that won't wash off

New . . . Berkshire 151's with the pretty lingerie top

The sheer 15 denier, 51 gauge nylons you love . . . now lovelier than ever in their shadowless clarity. Our secret . . . the exquisite symmetry of each tiny loop. In Berkshire's Beautiful Blends, the new colors in stockings that give you Fall's tall slim look. $1.50

We're so sure you'll find your Berkshires satisfying in every way . . . so sure you'll want more . . . for your convenience we've permanently marked each pair with size, length and sheerness information, then signed them with the label that won't wash off.

Costume by Hattie Carnegie Shoes by I. Miller

sheer... sheer Berkshire Stockings

MADE TO FIT YOU BY THE WORLD'S LARGEST MAKER OF FULL-FASHIONED STOCKINGS

step lively...

step lovely!

Walk in the bright new beauty, the heavenly comfort of Tarsal-Treds, and you just naturally put pep in your step! So many fashion-new styles . . . so many brisk-as-autumn colors . . . you'll easily set fall fashion plans off on a sure-footing. Every shoe superbly crafted of rich, luxury leathers . . . all with exclusive features to permit a wondrous 'made-for-you' fit! And the price? Tarsal-Treds fill the bill without running it up! At good stores everywhere, or write for name of nearest dealer.

JANE

RUTH

Tarsal-Treds

$6.95 and $7.95

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND IF NOT AS ADVERTISED HEREIN

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SABOT

ALICE

The H. C. Godman Company,
Columbus 16, Ohio

THE SNOB

(Continued from Page 35)

"Swell," Kenny said. "Pratt."

"I never heard of such a school," Christian said. "What's it called—Pratt?"

"It's an art school. It's in Brooklyn. I got a catalogue in the mail last week."

Christian puffed at his pipe and looked across at his wife, who seemed on the verge of tears. "It's all foolishness."

Kenny looked at Elizabeth, who nodded in agreement and pressed her balled handkerchief to her nose. He sighed. "If I can't go to Pratt, the heck with school. I'm going to be an artist."

Christian went out on the front steps to smoke in injured silence. At length he returned and suggested that he might speak to Adam Bordner, who owned the hardware store in which Neffs had worked as sporting-goods clerks for two generations.

"What do you mean, you'll speak to Mr. Bordner?" Kenny asked warily.

"Maybe," Christian said, with the air of a magician producing silks from a paper frame, "maybe Mr. Bordner would be willing to start you off as a stockroom boy."

Kenny laughed. "No, thanks."

Christian lost his temper. "You've got to get this foolishness out of your head!"

"It's not foolishness."

"I've worked hard all my life. You'll have to work hard too."

"I am going to work, at my drawings."

"That's not work, son."

Kenny revealed, then, a secret he had been treasuring for weeks. "Couple of weeks ago I went down to the newspaper office and showed some of my stuff to Mr. Carmin," he told his father. "I'm going to be a cartoonist on the paper as soon as I get out of high school."

Christian Neff dropped his pipe.

A woman may consent to forget and forgive, but she never will drop the habit of referring to the matter now and then.

The Neffs never became accustomed to the thought of Kenny working on the paper, even after he had been at it six months; when their friends asked what the boy was doing, they replied bravely that he was thinking of quitting the paper and going out to look for something at the plant. Kenny had no such intention. The bitterest disappointment of his life came the day he was fired (for drawing a caricature of the managing editor, a Mr. Cletus Reinhold, as a pig with dollar-sign eyes.)

To the partial relief of his parents, he next worked about seven months as assistant to the window decorator of Schlager's, a department store. He lettered signs—FALL CLEARANCE SALE, GREATLY REDUCED PRICES—and kept hinting to the decorator that he might brighten them with line drawings. The decorator soon found an excuse to get another assistant, a more practical boy who could do straight, accurate lettering, none of this line-drawing nonsense. Kenny finally succumbed to his parents' entreaties and went out to the plant, where he was hired as a mechanical draftsman and laid off, as the personnel manager gently phrased it, a year later. No reason was given for his dismissal, but Kenny needed none: he had been intensely restless and unhappy at the job, and he planned never to do such work again. He told his parents, frankly and defiantly, that he wasn't going to do anything but draw pictures from then on.

THAT was in 1940. There isn't much to be said for his behavior during the next year, except that he acted his chosen role faithfully. He had grown to be a tall, personable young man, with what his puzzled, disapproving aunts called his father's features: straight black hair, dark blue eyes, a thin and slightly arrogant nose—the Neff nose, they called it in the family. To his mother's great embarrassment, he always wore red plaid lumberjack shirts and old sweat pants or jeans. He and his friend Ed Wenger were usually to be found in a neighborhood taproom on River Street, a few blocks down from the Neff house (Christian Neff had nev been in the place in his life).

KENNY and Ed had known each oth slightly when they were in McClockey Hig but they had never been close friends un the night Kenny walked into the Riv Street Café with an Ernest Hemingway bo under his arm. He had just finished it a was wishing desperately for someone to d cuss it with (Buchanan people, as a rule, not read books; no one has time to re books). Ed, sitting at the bar, had notic the book and said, in the clipped voice affected, "Good novel," and they had got talking and it had turned out that Ed's fa ily considered him worthless too. Ed want to be a writer, he explained apologetically. had been going to college, but had been forc to quit because his father, Elam Weng hadn't understood why any son of his shou want to major in English rather than busin administration. Ed was now working at t plant on the yard gang, trying to save enough money to leave home for New Yo he felt he might be able to get some writi done in Greenwich Village (he wanted write an autobiographical novel dealing w the moral corruption of Buchanan familie Ed spent most of his time in the River Str place because he no longer had a typewrit his father had taken it from him because made too much noise at night. He was getting much writing done because couldn't seem to do it in longhand: it ma him nervous he confid to Kenny; he didn't how Somerset Maugha managed it.

The two friends m nearly every night, talki about the fun they we going to have when would be selling stories the big magazines a Kenny illustrating them. Then they wou walk up the street and continue talki on the steps of the Unitarian church. Son nights they drank more than others, a one night they drank so much that ambitious young cop in a patrol c stopped them as they were singing a staggering their way home. He took the to the station, and the desk sergeant, w was older and more kindly, put them in t sobering-up cell. They lay on the hard c and fell asleep until around five in the mor ing, when the sergeant awakened them a said they ought to be ashamed of theirselv fellows their age acting a ram on the street that hour in the morning. He winked wh he said it and asked if they had bus fa The incident was reported in the paper, a Buchanan became more and more convinc that Kenneth Neff and Edwin Wenger w no good, no good at all.

After this incident, Kenny briefly cons ered joining the Army. He wasn't think much about the possibility of a war then, and Ed were still a year too young to taken in the draft. He thought the Arm might be a solution simply because it wo get him away from the nagging of Christ and Elizabeth, but he had to admit that hated the idea of Army discipline even m than he hated his life at home. Besides, had begun to send cartoons to the big ma zines, and although they were coming ba with rejection slips, sometimes one or t came with encouraging notes from edito

Almost every afternoon, after Ed finish his shift at the plant and Kenny decided had done enough drawing for the day, th met downtown in Sensenich's Drugstore talk to the girls who congregated there. T girls were either students from McCloc High or recent graduates who were work in stores or offices around town; they were pretty, bright, fluttering and giggling fr one booth to another, well dressed a lively—all completely unlike themselv Ed said sometimes, as they would be thirty, when they would have enjoy so to speak, ten years of married life. Th

...ED UP...

...with half-way dry cleaning?

...ur Sanitone Dry Cleaner ...s Clothes Really Clean!

...m coast to coast women are ...overing this amazing new ...d of dry cleaning called Sani-...e. It gets out all the dirt, even ...born grime. Colors come ...c to life. Spots vanish . . . ...ect press lasts longer! No ...e of cleaning odors!

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

...OK FOR THE NAME OF YOUR ...TONE DRY CLEANER IN YOUR ...ASSIFIED PHONE DIRECTORY

...Industries, Inc., Cincinnati 2, Ohio

was one girl, Nancy Thomas, whom Kenny saw more of than the others. He had taken her out several times the year after he graduated from McClockey; she was then still a sophomore, but now she was a senior and seemed much older. Their dates had never amounted to anything more than a trip to the movies or to the Y.W.C.A. weekly dance, and Kenny was unaware that she liked him better than anyone else. He simply thought of her as the only girl in the drugstore bunch to whom he could talk for any length of time without getting insufferably bored, but he often wished that she would get interested in some of the things he and Ed liked to talk about. At length he gave up trying to get her interested, but he went on seeing her because at least she didn't look bewildered or disapproving when he told her about some cartoon he was working on.

Kenny hurt Nancy cruelly one afternoon in February of 1941, although he didn't intend to and, in truth, didn't realize it at the time. He went in Sensenich's around four-thirty looking for Ed, who didn't show up at all that day, and then he saw Nancy and some other girls sitting in a booth in the rear. After a while he picked up his drink from the soda fountain and sauntered back toward them, and when he had gone halfway he saw the new girl. His first impression was so clear that he remembered it years afterward, but at the time he showed no particular emotion. He simply sat down beside Nancy, grunting hello to the other girls—Evie Jackson, Sally Millick, Gen Kennedy. They gave him a loud, foolish greeting, and someone asked if he'd been arrested lately (he and Ed had to take this joke every day from almost everybody they knew). Nancy glared at the girl who had asked the question and patted Kenny's knee under the table, which annoyed him. The minute he had sat down he had begun to feel stiff, shy and out of place, as though he didn't belong at the table or as though he were dressed improperly (which, by Buchanan standards, he was). He looked straight at the new girl; she looked back at him for a flickering second before she lowered her eyes to her cherry smash. The expression on her face disturbed him: he thought she found him disgusting. No one made any effort to introduce them (everybody assumed that they knew each other), and Kenny wished he could keep from staring at her. He had never seen a girl who looked so much the way he always had secretly thought a girl should look.

WHAT mainly struck him was the way she sat there, composed and calm, not smiling like the others, not talking in that near-hysterical tone they affected; simply sitting, sipping her drink, her hands folded neatly on the table. She looked younger than the others—Kenny suspected that she was probably no more than a junior—but she seemed older; she almost seemed to disapprove of them. Kenny kept looking at her covertly, pretending to be interested in the smoke from his cigarette; he liked the way her smile broke, slowly, and he liked her for not bursting into uncontrolled laughter at every opportunity. He wished he could figure out some way of getting her into the conversation, and in his mind he began to blame Nancy for not introducing him.

Five minutes later, the girl abruptly got up, said, "Well, good-by," and left. It was the first sentence she had uttered, but it was enough to fill Kenny with emotions he had never experienced before. He wished that he could turn and watch her walking out.

Gen, Sally and Evie, with a great commotion of gathering up books and tying head scarves, left him alone with Nancy a few minutes later. Nancy immediately began talking about the Valentine Dance her Girl Reserve Club was going to give, but Kenny couldn't keep his mind on what she was saying. He thought, I'd like to paint that little face. In his mind's eye he could see the way he would do the hair, the eyes, the mouth.

"Kenny!"

He realized that Nancy was frowning. "Sorry—what?"

"You haven't been listening." She sounded fondly reproachful. "When do you think you'll know?"

Princesse Simone Troubetzkoy, one of the best-dressed women in Paris, touches Evening in Paris Perfume to her ears, temples, throat, and wrists. Away from home, a purse flacon of Evening in Paris is always with her.

Wear Evening in Paris the way French women do*

Wear Evening in Paris day and evening. It's the best-beloved perfume—romantic, long-lasting. Today, join the smart French women who know the secrets of loveliness—make Evening in Paris an essential part of your life!

Evening in Paris Perfume, $12.50 to $1.00
Evening in Paris Flacon of Perfume, 75¢ & 50¢
Evening in Paris Bath Powder, $1.25
Evening in Paris Lipstick, $1.00
All prices plus tax

Princesse Nicole Murat, of the distinguished French family, climaxes her bath with Evening in Paris Bath Powder, so cooling and fragrant!

Mlle. Lorraine Dubonnet, lovely Parisian socialite, accents her perfect grooming with smooth, lustrous Evening in Paris Lipstick. In many, many wonderful colors, each delicately echoing the fragrance of Evening in Paris!

*Your Evening in Paris is compounded here in the U. S. A. from the same French formula that makes Evening in Paris the largest-selling fragrance in France.

Bourjois

"Know about what?"

"The dance, silly. Do you think you'll be able to go?"

Kenny didn't want to ask when the dance was going to be, so he nodded vaguely. "I'll let you know, Nancy."

"I hope you can go," she said, moving a little closer to him. "Gen's going to get her father's car, and she's asking Ed Wenger, and that way we can all go together."

"Fine."

"Kenny, did you have another fight with your parents or something?"

"Nothing more than the usual—'Kenneth, why don't you go out and try to get another job at the plant?' et cetera et cetera." He lighted another cigarette, trying to be casual. "Say, who was that babe?" (He and Ed called all girls babes, which the girls hated; they didn't understand that it was just the word he and Ed used, that it wasn't derogatory.) "The one that left before the others did."

"Oh, her." Nancy seemed relieved. "Jean Bowman," she said. "Roberta Jean Bowman."

"She new around town?"

"Heavens, no. We've been in the same class since first grade." Now she was regarding him with alarm. "Why?"

"No reason. Just wondered who she was."

Nancy's green eyes hardened. "So that's why you weren't paying any attention to me," she said. "It won't do you any good to get interested in her, Kenny."

"Who said anything about that?"

Nancy gathered up her books and held them tightly against her breast. "I have to go. Let me out."

"Wait a minute," Kenny said. "Why do you say it wouldn't do me any good to get interested in her?" He gestured vaguely. "Not that I want to."

"Her parents are particular about her. You know, they're Buchanan Club and all that. Come on, I have to go."

"So're your folks Buchanan Club," Kenny said.

"Mine're different. Daddy doesn't care who my brother and I go around with, as long as they're nice." She drew a long breath. "Kenny, I simply have to go. I promised mother. Come on."

Kenny reluctantly let her out of the booth and followed her to the front of the store. "Who does she date?"

Nancy stopped and faced him angrily. "You act as though you're thinking about calling her." Her eyes sparkled scornfully. "It won't do you any good, Kenny Neff! She only goes out with Buchanan Club boys, and if you think she'd go out with ——" She broke off, unable to complete the insult. "I think you're just ——" she burst out a second or two later, broke off again, pushed through the door and fled down the street.

KENNY thought, I never thought she'd behave that way. It didn't occur to him that his casual-sounding questions had wrecked Nancy's life for a long time—for a few months, that is, which is a dreadfully long time in the life of a high-school girl—and that she would always regard him as her lost, willful love. (Buchanan men are cared for and protected and nagged by their women, but they scarcely ever understand them.) A couple of days later, Kenny met Nancy walking down the street toward Sensenich's. She passed him by without a nod, and he was honestly puzzled.

Our Lady of Seasons

By Emily I. Alleman

Spring's lady is winsome, light-hearted and gay,
With garlands in her hair;
A daisy chain about her neck
And sparkling eyes that dare.

Summer's lady is pregnant and slow,
Heavy now with fruit,
Anxiously waiting the harvest days
While listening to Pan's lute.

Fall's lady finds her labor is over,
Her task has been well done;
She dons a gorgeous, crimson cloak,
And sallies forth for fun.

Winter's lady is weary and cold;
Anxious now to rest,
She snuggles beneath a blanket of snow,
By all who know her blest!

The evening of the day he first saw R Jean Bowman, Kenny sat down at his ing table and tried to do a sketch of h could remember her face clearly—it well-defined picture in his mind—b couldn't draw what he saw. She had re brown hair that fell in waves, a great hair, evidently naturally curly; her eye dark brown and her eyebrows were th a face as frail as hers; she looked th wasn't quite; there was a delicacy abo a sensitive look outlined by her no small mouth; and her face, he remem was scrubbed, not powdered. He to pencil again and tried to sketch her, b nose didn't come out right and th looked like a wig. He tried five or six more, but always the chin was too or the eyes were wrong, and when he the lines the drawing always looked

AT length he heard the telephone downstairs, and his father calling, " you," and at that moment he looked clock and realized that he had been at his drawing nearly three ho

It was Ed,
if he didn't kn
there was a lot
there that migh waste if he didn drink it. He his Mackinaw good night to h ents (who sighe left the house way down the he remembere
he had left th on in his roo went back, to unfinished sk off the boar tore them int strips which he into his pocke suspected rightly) th mother ofter into his ro
see what fool was going on,
was determine she wasn't go pry into this his life. He thr strips into a sc the way to th

Ed, in the
of giving the machine a thorough beating, was clined at first toward conversation.
was so anxious to talk that he could contain himself; he tried avoiding t ject for two or three minutes, couldn't hold it back after that.

"Hey, Ed," he said, in what he ho an offhand tone, "you ever know named Jean Bowman?"

Ed scratched his head. "Yeah, so—little babe, lot of hair. Why? Do me you're interested in her. She c more'n fifteen."

"She's a senior, same as Nancy. H you know her?"

Ed waved his hand. "I've seen her that's all. She used to go with . .
Schiller, I think. That crowd, an

"Oh," Kenny said dispiritedly.

"Snobs," Ed said. "Buchanan Clu Don't waste your time."

"She didn't look like that kind of a me," Kenny contended.

"Well, she is. You know that bunc our league, not our league a-tall."

"Nancy's Buchanan Club too," said. "So's Gen Kennedy. What's ference?"

"I'm not sure I know how to exp
but there's a difference," Ed said. "N old man, Gen's old man, they're diffe they belong to the club, but they frantic about it. Maybe it's because had dough all their lives. Guys like Sc old Schiller, Hap's old man—an Bowman . . . well, the way I get it

(Continued on Page 166)

Backboon! Just the bra for the new sleeveless blouses and dresses. If you wish, the back-elastic can be tucked completely out of sight and fastened by its hook to your girdle. Exquisitely embroidered white nylon marquisette. $3.50. Bra #2231.

At last—a halter! A tiny, adjustable strap halters the loveliest lace-on-nylon bra you could ever imagine. Two long, light straps fasten in front . . . baring you to be beautiful! White. $5.00. Bra #2210.

You'll see yourself in a new light, lovely!

The sheer magic of Warner's fabulous new bras

An angel must have dreamed them! They're so heavenly sheer! So bewitchingly beautiful! So delicately frosted here and there with touches of dainty lace. They're Warner's newest nylon bras . . . no longer wishes away.

And, of course, yours will be yours alone in your very own 3-Way-Sizes. At finer stores.

1. Your Warner's is your cup size . . . true-to-the-letter, perfect cup-sizing A to D.

2. . . . and your band . . . no bands, narrow bands, deep bands or elastic bands . . . every one with the snug-hug you love.

3. . . . and your uplift . . . whether you like a little lift or a lot you can have your own way in Warner's lovelies.

Taffeta a la marquisette! Whisper-weight nylon tissue taffeta topped with embroidered marquisette for a lovely, rounded lift. Pink, black or white. $3.50. Bra #2299.

Best seller! Millions love it! Nylon tissue taffeta topped with filmy nylon marquisette in the loveliest colors this side of the sun. Pink, white, blue, black. $2.50. Bra #2287.

Nylon with a notion! We have an idea you love the wispy-sheers but like a little firmer control. It's yours in white nylon tissue taffeta with French-stitched undercups. $2.50. Bra #2146.

WARNER'S®

3-Way-Sized

Foundations and Bras

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT* • WARNERETTE*
A'LURE* • STA-UP-TOP* • "FREE-LIFT"
*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off., The Warner Brothers Company
New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

(Continued from Page 164)

few occasions when my old man will accept me as a human being, they made their dough in the last twenty years or so. They're the worst snobs because they want to be snobs. It doesn't make sense—you'd think the Thomases and the Kennedys would be the worst. It's one of the things I want to put in my book."

Kenny said nothing. He felt as low as he would have if Ed had told him he no longer liked to read Hemingway. When Nancy had said "Buchanan Club," it hadn't meant much; but when Ed had said "Hap Schiller," and had attempted to explain the difference, the whole situation suddenly seemed hopeless. Hap Schiller was one of the richest boys in Buchanan; his father was a director at the plant. As long as he could remember, Kenny had been in awe of Hap and the boys and girls the latter accepted as equals. They went to Buchanan Academy for Young Men or Miss Kling's Classes, instead of McClockey High; they drove their own cars, they dressed well, they always had money, they went to whatever colleges they wanted to; they were so remote from the circle in which Kenny moved as to be like total strangers—although, of course, Kenny always nodded to Hap Schiller when they passed and Hap always nodded back. There was no friendship in the exchange.

Sipping his beer, Kenny realized that he could never hope to do more than sit opposite the Bowman girl in Sensenich's. It was unthinkable, just as his desire to be an artist was without precedent. If he had been, say, Matt Helfer, whose father owned a feed-and-grain business, there might have been some hope for him. Matt's family wasn't Buchanan Club, but it once had been richer than it now was, and Matt was sometimes seen running around with Hap Schiller and his crowd. Matt was even a little like Hap Schiller: he wore loud, flashy sports jackets, and drove a brand-new convertible that his father had given him when he graduated from high school. (Christian Neff had given Kenny a watch, a pocket model that Kenny never carried because most of the other guys he knew wore wrist watches.) Matt might have a chance with Jean Bowman; not Kenny.

Chance is the pseudonym of God when He does not want to sign His name.
—ANATOLE FRANCE.

Ed was looking at him. "Really hit you, huh?"

"No," Kenny said. "I mean, I'd just like to sketch her."

"I know what's on your mind, Ken," Ed said, "and let me tell you this: forget it. You'll just get yourself a lot of trouble. You'll get all mixed up with her—or think you're getting mixed up with her—and then one day, bang. They'll crack down. There's no licking that crowd. No cracking it, Ken. Not us."

"I been thinking about the way she looked at me," Kenny said, "and I guess you're right."

Secretly, he believed no such thing. Despite everything Ed said and everything he knew himself, he had decided that there was a chance—just a slight, irrational chance—that he had been mistaken about the look she had given him. Maybe, he thought excitedly, she felt the same way I did. The more he thought about it, the more certain he became. Her eyes had lingered with his longer than was usual—and once, as he was looking at her, he had been sure that she had looked back. She was so much the kind of girl he had been thinking about for so long, it seemed impossible that what Ed was saying could be true. She even looked, he thought, like the kind of girl who would understand why a man had to draw pictures.

The next few weeks were the best and worst that Kenny had ever experienced. The best times came when he was alone, when he could sit with his eyes closed and pretend that he was with her. The worst times were when he suddenly would be reminded of his status in the Buchanan world by some homely detail he had never particularly noticed before: the way the light in the dingy bathroom worked only part of the time boards in the upstairs hall that squea the corner of the kitchen ceiling that stained with dampness every time it ra He found that he was doing less and work at his drawing board; none of the toons he did seemed to satisfy him, an fell into aimless reveries more often tha had before. He became so critical of the he was forced to live that matters fi came to a head, with Christian telling that he either would have to get a job o out on his own, once and for all. He to part-time job, working mornings in M and Haymer's, a department store, assi in the package room and sweeping the walks in the mornings; he told himself he had taken the job not because o parents, but because he wanted to save buy a new gray flannel suit in case—ju case, he thought—he might ever mee Bowman girl.

He spent fewer and fewer evenings i River Street place, because he couldn't to get along even with Ed. One night had a violent argument over a matt trivial that neither of them, later, coul member what had started it in the place. Ed finished it by saying, "Since saw that babe you act like you're out of head," and this so infuriated Kenny th almost took a poke at him. As he was wa home the last snow of the season beg fall, first slowly and then in white sti swirls, and through it the quiet buil along River Street seemed colder, more more forbidding than he ever had seen look before. He had been so lonely, hated the town so mu and yet, he thought ering), if I leave no never get to know her.

Christian, reading paper on the sagging in the parlor, looke in mild surprise as Kenny entered. " chase you home?" he asked, not unp antly.

"Can't I even come home without kind of criticism?" Kenny demanded ran upstairs.

In his room, he threw himself on his He wondered if anyone had ever be lonely and miserable and helpless as he the thought infuriated him. He stoo quickly, turned on the bedside lamp, s to his drawing table and seized the sta newly finished cartoons lying there. E thing was useless, pointless; the com forces, the town and his family and his f pursuit of a foolish goal, suddenly be too much for him, and with this thou began tearing the drawings with long, s sweeping, vindictive motions, as thou were destroying everything that plague The pieces fell to the floor in gusts, li snow outside. They lay there as lim forlorn as his own body, sprawled acro bed that his mother had made (so lov that day.

The next day, surprisingly enough, much better. He had a twinge of regret he saw the pieces of paper scattered a the room, but then he grinned philosop at himself in the bureau mirror and re that it would be good discipline for begin all over again.

At breakfast that morning he s Christian. "I'm sorry about last nigh

Christian looked at him in su "Well."

"Maybe you're right, dad," Kenn "Maybe I am nuts, trying to be an But I've got this job, part time, and you'd just give me a little more time

"Son," Christian said, slowly eati oatmeal, "your mother and I just what's best for you."

"I had a nice note from the ed Homemaker last week," Kenny "Maybe I'll sell them something one days. Then maybe you'll see that it's foolishness."

Elizabeth, who was at the stove, s hear they're taking on again at the

(Continued on Page 168)

Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

It's fun to do dishes this way!

SERVISET by Sutherland ®

SERVISET—the economical new paper tableware that does away with dishwashing. SERVISET consists of "Handi-Handle" * paper cups and plates; matching napkins and tablecover; and plastic spoons and forks. Available in a variety of patterns, colors, and special occasion designs. Bittersweet design is especially appropriate for fall. At your favorite store . . . or write for name of nearest dealer.

* ®

NO DISHES TO [illegible]

NO DAMAGE TO WORRY ABOUT

NO LINENS TO LAUNDER

NO LAUNDRY BILLS TO PAY

[illegible] HANDI-HANDLE* PAPER CUPS • PLATES • NAPKINS • TABLECOVERS • PLASTIC SPOONS and FORKS

SUTHERLAND PAPER COMPANY • KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN

(Continued from Page 166)

"I'm not ——" Kenny began indignantly, and then realized the futility of argument. He got up from the table abruptly, got his coat from the hall, and left the house.

But even the breakfast-table unpleasantness couldn't destroy the feeling that had been in him since he awoke. It had been nearly three weeks since he had seen the girl, and he hadn't been able to get her out of his mind. It probably wouldn't be possible to see her, but there was no point in going on this way. Sweeping the sidewalk in front of Marton and Haymer's, he felt even more confident: the only thing to do, he knew, was to have a whack at it. The thought filled him with a quivering nervousness, but he resolved to go ahead. He felt pretty good the rest of the day.

A voice that sounded as though it belonged to a tall, severe schoolteacher answered the telephone.

Hesitantly, Kenny said, "Is—uh—Jean there?"

"Who?"

"Jean. Is this the Bowman residence?"

"Oh." The telephone was put down, and Kenny could hear the woman calling, "Robbie, dear, for you." (He wondered why Nancy hadn't told him that she was called "Robbie.")

When she answered, she sounded like a child of twelve or thirteen, not at all as she had sounded in Sensenich's that day, and Kenny was so startled that for a moment he couldn't speak. "Hello?" she said again.

"Uh," he said, "uh, I wondered if ——" He paused and breathed deeply. "This is Kenneth Neff. Kenny Neff."

"Beg pardon?"

"I don't think you know me, but I saw you one day downtown in Sensenich's. A friend of mine—you know her too—Nancy ——"

"Who did you say this was?"

"Kenny Neff."

Silence.

"Did I meet you somewhere?" she asked at last.

"Not exactly," Kenny said. "You were in Sensenich's with Nancy and the rest of them, and ——"

"Nancy who?"

"Nancy Thomas. It was after school one day about three weeks ago. After school."

"I don't guess I remember."

"I thought you mightn't. It was just for a little while—you left. It wasn't long, and you left, and nobody introduced us—I guess they thought we knew each other." He uneasily, hoping it sounded d "The reason I called you up. I wante to you about painting your picture,

"I don't understand. Try to talk

"All right." He put his hand ove ceiver and coughed. "I'm an artist. I'm trying to be an artist. I mostly toons, but sometimes I do serious d and I wondered ——"

"Could you talk louder?" she "What did you say your name was "Neff."

"Do you go to McClockey?"

"No, I graduated. I'm ——"

"The Academy? Did I meet yo Valentine Dance?"

"I don't go anywhere," Kenny graduated. I was going to go to coll dad and I talked it over and decided better keep on with my drawing at

"I can't understand what you're s there something the matter with phone?"

"There must be," Kenny said, wishing he had figured out what to

She clicked the hook several tim you still there?"

Kenny cleared his throat. "I'm wanted to ask ——"

"Where do you go to school?"

"I don't go. I work at home."

Another half-minute silence. "W you say you were calling about,

"Uh—it's kind of hard to explai you in Sensenich's that day and I color of your hair. I mean it looked a it might look good in a picture, and I maybe you might let me paint you.

"What on earth for?"

"Well, uh, just—just paint you, t Do you think you'd be interested?"

She didn't even hesitate. "I don so, thanks."

Kenny tried to sound jaunty, an "I see." He cleared his throat again thanks anyhow."

"You're welcome."

He hated her politeness, he hate eptitude; but he was driven to tr "Well, then," he said, "if you don your picture taken—painted, I m you suppose I could see you someti

Again no hesitation. "I don't t thanks."

"Are you sure?"

"Yes."

"Oh." There was nothing more "Well, all right, then. Good-by."

"Good-by," she said, hanging up

"That's a break—'No' in Spanish is the same as 'No' in English!"

THAT Elegant TOUCH

RIPE OLIVES . . . They're smart!
They're sophisticated!
Appealing in appearance!
Tempting to taste—in appetizers, salads, sandwiches and main dishes!
And perfect for providing an everyday meal with a holiday air. Yes, for that elegant touch, remember it's—

Ripe Olives
FROM CALIFORNIA

Write for FREE booklet of Elegant Ripe Olive Recipes: Olive Advisory Board, Room 1005, 16 Beale Street, San Francisco 5, California

ANT 50 WICK
Nationally advertised Card Ass'ts -- sell only 100 — make up to $50! Complete line Xmas, Everydays, Wraps, Stationery. Also novel "Spang-l-ettes" and "Prize" Ass'ts; Notes; Name Imprinted Xmas Cards, 40 for $1 up. Up to 100% profit. Money back guarantee. Request "Prize" and Metallic Boxes on approval.
30 FREE SAMPLES
CHILTON GREETINGS, 147 Essex St., Dept. T-11, Boston, Mass.

EXTRA CASH MADE EASY
SUPREME NEW CHRISTMAS CARDS
—an extra income! Sell friends amazing Metallic, Felt Applique, Comic, 50 for $1.00 cent. 90 items. Exclusive Gift Wraps. All-purpose boxes, Scented Stationery. Animated Books, Gifts, Fast service. Profits to Special offers. Bonus. Write today for samples. Name Imprinted Christmas Napkins. Stationery. Feature assortments. Approval. FREE catalog and selling plans.
FREE SAMPLES NAME IMPRINTED CHRISTMAS CARDS
GREETING CARD CO., Dept. C-1245, Elmira, N. Y.

"MEXENE GIVES CHILI THAT PERFECT FLAVOR!"
Says Mrs. T. A. McMullen of Marlton, N. J.
If you like to make your own chili, take Mrs. McMullen's word for it, give that perfect flavor by using Mexene All Purpose seasoning; a piquant blend of rare peppers and spices. Mexene is also the connoisseur's delight for seasoning meats, chops, spaghetti and other foods.
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Mother's AUSTEX Chili Co.
CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STEW
CORNED BEEF HASH • SANDWICH SPREAD
SPAGHETTI and MEAT BALLS

He discovered that the telephone was wet from his sweating hand. A single clear thought stood out in the jumble of disappointment that crowded his mind: he had ruined everything. Any chance he might have had of ever seeing her was now ruined once and for all, for everything he had said was wrong. But even if he had planned what to say to her and rehearsed the tone of his voice, he probably would have made comparable blunders—he would have made them because he was Kenny Neff and not one of the Hap Schiller gang. The faded flowers in the green-and-pink-and-brown wallpaper of the hallway suddenly snapped into focus before his glazed eyes, and he wished again, as he had so many times of late, that he were someone else. But even as this thought formed, the same dogged spirit that kept him drawing his pictures formed another one: just speaking to her had been an accomplishment, a step in the right direction. At least he had overcome his reticence, his inferiority, enough to call her. And, despite his embarrassment at his poor showing in the call, he immediately began to search for a new excuse to call her. He refused to believe that she was actually as cold and distant as she had sounded. It was probably because she'd been taught by her Buchanan Club parents to be polite. Maybe she didn't remember me at all, he thought; maybe if I could just see her sometime, she might feel the way I do. That was unlikely, he knew, but still ——

THE new excuse was almost too good to be true. One or two nights a month, Kenny attended a sketch class conducted in the local Y.W.C.A. by a Mrs. Florence Reedy Hemmelburger, Buchanan's one acknowledged artist. The other members of this class were old ladies who liked to paint on plates, and effeminate boys from McClockey High, and the only reason Kenny went was to sound off some of the notions about art that he had formulated either from experience or from reading—usually the latter. The women and boys pretended to listen closely to what he had to say, but most of them were bewildered by his conversation and dismissed him privately as a boy who was a bit strange—or so, at least, he thought. Yet he continued to go, for class was the one place he knew of in Buchanan where there was some interest, no matter how slight, in art; the one place where he didn't feel a complete outcast.

A couple of evenings after he called Robbie, he went to the class and found that Mrs. Hemmelburger had once again persuaded some local merchants to put up money for a sketching contest. Mrs. Hemmelburger, who was about thirty-eight, lithe and flashing-eyed, had once been married to a Buchanan Club man, a plant executive whom she later divorced. She had a way with the department-store people: they didn't really approve of art—it had no connection with anything they knew—but they had to admit, when she challenged them, that it was nice to have some pictures around, and that it was a good thing to encourage local people to paint them. So they donated the prize money and agreed to display the pictures in corners of their show windows. This time, Mrs. Hemmelburger told her class, the contest would be in portrait sketching. When Kenny heard the news, he wanted to rush right out and call Robbie, but he stayed and waited to hear the details, and then decided that it wouldn't do to call her right away.

He waited two or three days, as a matter of fact, until the contest was announced on the front page of the afternoon paper (Mrs. Hemmelburger had a way with editors as well as with department-store men). Then he wrote a note. It took him a long time; he wanted to be absolutely certain that it was worded properly. It said:

Dear Robbie: You may have noticed in the paper that the "Y" Sketch Class is sponsoring another sketch contest. I am a member of this class and would like very much to enter the competition, but the trouble is that I do not know of a suitable subject. Possibly you remember that I called you a few days ago and asked if you would sit for me. At that time you said "No," but I am hoping you will change your mind. I would very much like to sketch you be-

. . . with a Campfire touch of Extra Goodness

One taste of these heavenly Royal Hawaiian* desserts, and you can make believe you're dining on the beach at Waikiki! Each is a luscious tropical delight. With that Campfire touch of EXTRA GOODNESS that adds a touch of genius to your dessert-making skill. For Campfire Marshmallows are ingredient marshmallows, whitest, lightest, purest made. Most delicious, too. Always fresh—four individually sealed Packettes in one outer-sealed pound package. Your grocer has them. Get some today—for a tropical treat tonight.

Angelus Marshmallows are also available in 4-Packette economy pound packages

MARSHMALLOW LIHOLIHO
32 Campfire or Angelus Marshmallows
½ cup coffee cream or top milk
½ cup finely chopped cashew nuts
½ cup finely chopped candied fruit (cherries, lemon, orange, citron, grapefruit peel, pineapple)
Grated rind of ½ lemon blended with 1 teaspoon sugar
1½ cups heavy cream, whipped

Melt marshmallows in coffee cream over very low heat, turning until smooth. Cool and add nuts, fruit and lemon rind. When well blended, fold into whipped cream. Pour into 1-qt. ring or pudding mold. Place in freezer or mixture of ice and salt about 2 hours. When firm, unmold by dipping in hot water for a mere second. Serve with raspberry sauce. Serves 6 to 8.

BAKED BANANAS HAWAIIAN
4 large bananas
Juice of half an orange
1 tablespoon sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon
16 Campfire or Angelus Marshmallows

Peel and scrape bananas. Cut into halves lengthwise, place in baking dish and sprinkle with orange juice, sugar and cinnamon. Scatter bits of butter over all and bake in moderate oven 40 minutes. Then cover bananas with marshmallows and bake another 15 minutes or until well browned.

*By Paul Koy, executive chef Royal Hawaiian Hotel, Honolulu

Campfire and ANGELUS MARSHMALLOWS
The Magic Ingredients

WRITE FOR NEW COOK BOOK
Wonderful collection of new salads, frozen desserts, ice creams, icings, meringues, candies, etc. Yours for one Campfire or Angelus wrapper. Mail to:
THE CRACKER JACK CO., Desk 7, 4800 W. 66th St., Chicago 38, Ill.

Colgate Guarantees:

Veto Gives You Double Protection

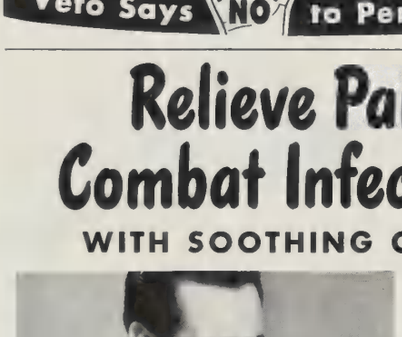
Against Underarm Odor and Perspiration!

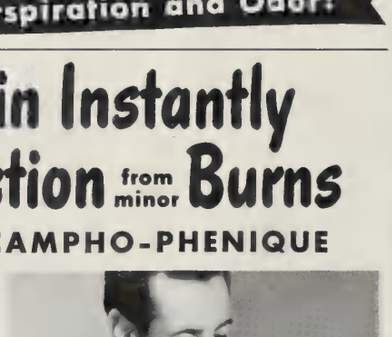
1. VETO STOPS ODOR INSTANTLY!

Colgate guarantees it! Used daily, Veto protects against underarm odor night and day, safeguards your daintiness from bath to bath.

2. VETO CHECKS PERSPIRATION!

Works quickly, effectively. Veto smooths on and is absorbed as easily as vanishing cream. Won't cake or dry out in jar. Has a delightful fragrance. And it's mild, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes.





If Veto isn't all we say it is, we'll gladly give your money back, plus tax and postage. Simply return unused portion to Colgate, Jersey City 2, New Jersey.

Veto Says "NO" to Perspiration and Odor!

Relieve Pain Instantly Combat Infection from minor Burns

WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions, Pimples*

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! Apply soothing CAMPHO-PHENIQUE. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use CAMPHO-PHENIQUE also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites, pimples.* Many doctors, dentists, nurses prefer this colorless liquid antiseptic. Doesn't stain the skin. Children like it, too. It's soothing, doesn't smart like ordinary antiseptics. Recommended over 50 years. Get it today!

*Due to external causes.

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

(PRONOUNCED CAM-FO-FIN-EEK)

THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

cause your face is ideally suited to the medium of pastels, which is what I plan to use. I will call you in a day or so to hear your answer.

Yours very truly,
KENNETH NEFF.
(Kenny)

P.S. I am sorry about that telephone call.

After some deliberation, he crossed out the P.S.; there was no point in letting her know that he knew how awful it had been. He showed the letter to Ed, who said it was all right, if he wanted to send it, but he didn't think it would do much good.

"I'm telling you, the girl's one of those Buchanan Club snobs," Ed said. "It's not going to do you any good."

"Maybe not," said Kenny, "but I won't be able to sleep until I'm convinced too."

"It must be wonderful," Ed said dryly, "to be so young and so alive and so gay and so in love."

"Go take a flying kick at yourself," Kenny said, smiling sheepishly.

He bumped right into her one day in the following week. He was going into Sensenich's, she was coming out, and they almost collided. She gave him a look that seemed to say he should look where he was going, followed by one that seemed to be recognition. He didn't know if she wanted to speak, or wanted him to, but he jammed his fists in his Mackinaw pockets and took the initiative.

"Hello, Robbie Bowman."

The expression on her face changed quickly to surprise. "Hello," she said, frowning slightly.

"I'm Kenny Neff," he said, his confidence beginning to go. Maybe Ed was right.

"You're ——" The surprise changed to astonishment. "Well," she said. "Hello."

"Uh—I was wondering if you got my letter."

She nodded.

"I was going to call you up tonight."

No response.

"I was—uh—I was wondering what you'd say."

She shook her head. "I don't think so, thanks."

For one horrible moment he thought he felt tears coming into his eyes. "Well, I thought maybe you might've changed your mind."

"I don't think so. I don't know why you'd want to do me."

Quickly he said, "I told you, your hair—that is, the color—the bone structure in your face, the ——"

She was laughing. "Do you use this kind of line all the time?"

Kenny flushed. "It's no line, honestly. Listen," he said, gesturing toward the soda fountain, "would you like a root beer or something?"

"I don't—oh, all right, I guess so."

As he took a step toward the fountain, he suddenly remembered that he had only fifteen cents. If she ordered a soda, or a large root beer or anything that cost more, he wouldn't be able to pay for it—and the clerks in Sensenich's always wanted their money right away. Too many of the high-school kids were always trying to cheat them out of it. Kenny flushed again, and said:

"Funniest thing, I guess we can't have anything now. I've got to see a guy, and I'm late—I forgot about it until this minute."

"Oh," she said (and he thought she seemed dubious). "Well, all right."

"Pretty dumb trick," he said, "asking you to have a drink and then running out." He cleared his throat, hoping she hadn't gathered that he didn't have the money. "How about the painting?"

"I'll have to know more about it."

"Fine," he said. "I'll call you, maybe tonight." And then he attempted what he later considered one of the stupidest gestures he had ever made. He shook hands—or, rather, tried to. She seemed startled and puzzled by the gesture, and made no movement toward taking his outstretched hand, and then he reached for hers but didn't quite catch it.

"Uh," he said, reddening again, "well, long," and then turned abruptly and we

All the way home he kept cursing and c gratulating himself, alternately: cursing cause he hadn't had money enough to s and talk to her—Hap Schiller would ne have been caught in such a situation, certainly Robbie Bowman would h looked down upon any boy who was s enough to have no money (naturally, thought, it would never occur to her tha person might not have money at all). impossible, he thought despairingly; Ed right, I just don't belong in her league. Bu the same time, he was congratulating him because it seemed that he was at last mak some kind of progress. He couldn't define look she had given him when they met at door, but it was altogether different from way her voice had sounded on the telepho At least she hadn't gone right by with speaking, and at least she hadn't said fl that she wouldn't allow him to paint Maybe I'm making some progress, he thou excitedly, and that night he was so genuin pleasant to his parents at the dinner ta that Elizabeth later remarked to Christ that he was probably in some kind of trou

He called her at eight. A strange fem voice answered, took his name, and said t Miss Bowman was not at home and was expected until late that night. The sa thing happened the next night, and the n

The fourth night, Robbie herself swered—answered, and promptly crus him. It was as though they never had me Sensenich's—her little-girl voice seemed have taken on some of her mother's auster She said she wasn't s that she wanted him paint her; she would h to hear more about it when he asked her if could see her the next in Sensenich's, she said didn't think so.

"I don't like that p much," she said.

"Well, when can I see you?" Ke asked.

"I'll think about it," she told him, hung up.

Kenny said to Ed, a little later in the R Street bar, "The more I think about ba the more mixed up I get."

"Do yourself a favor, Lover Boy," Ed. "Forget this one."

He saw her the next afternoon in S senich's. Her presence indicated clearly t he had been snubbed the night before, thought. He tried to catch her eye, and he waved at her; she didn't wave back, he felt so foolish that he got up and left. rest of the day he brooded, knowing should at least have gone up and tried to to her.

"Why would she act like that?" he manded of Ed.

"I've been telling you all along," Ed s "She's one of that Buchanan Club bunc

The next day he couldn't work. Tw three times he started writing a note to but he couldn't express exactly how he f He made several attempts at beginn sketches of her, but none of them satis him. He made four cartoon roughs and t them up as quickly as they were finished. smoked a pack and a half of cigarettes couldn't eat any dinner. He went back to room and tried to reread The Sun Also R but lost interest after the first three pa He decided that what he probably had to was get drunk, but the idea didn't make feel any better.

As he was leaving the house, the teleph rang. He picked up the receiver, thinkin was probably Ed. It was she. Kenny alm dropped the receiver.

"Is this Ken?"

"Ken—Ken speaking," he said, his vo trembling. He hoped that Christian Elizabeth, who were in the parlor off front hall, wouldn't suddenly come out see him blushing. "How are you?" he ad uneasily.

"I'm fine. How are you?"

"Fine. Uh ——"

> We love best in the days when we believe that we alone love, that no one has ever loved like us and no one ever will. —GOETHE.

Modart
DIFIER t's Modifier
the dian so beautiith the easy
ment tabs, ooths all of gure nicely
so comfort Light in and beauti-ade . . . it's xclusive of those ear it. There odart for igure type.
e the Modiyour store*
'll appreci-
s patented
ion.
ifier is e in ng style.
CALL
l Western Union by ber . . . ask for oper-25 and she will tell where to see and purse Modart garments.
MONDE CORSET CO.
Saginaw, Mich.

SELL WOMEN'S WEAR
Up to minute styles—DRESSES—street—house—DRESS GOODS—cotton—rayon—HOSIERY—LINGERIE—APRONS—TOWELS—STATIONERY—GREETING CARDS. Beautiful samples make easy sales. Good profits—from your spare time. Be first—write now.
MITCHELL & CHURCH CO.
Dept. 34 Binghamton, N.Y.

INGROWN NAIL
Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!
rops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from ng pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO tough-skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to nd thus prevents further pain and discom-UTGRO is available at all drug counters.

Direct From Bean
porting Apparel
For Women and Men
Free Fall Catalog
96 Pages—Illustrated
Showing Footwear, Clothing, Bags, Ski Boots, Ice Skates, Snowshoes, Blankets and 52 other leather and canvas specialties of our own manufacture. This catalog is a great help in choosing practical gifts.
n, Inc., 147 Main St., Freeport, Maine

EXTRA CASH for YOU
It's Easy—It's Fun—It's Profitable
Make extra cash showing friends, neighbors, coworkers nationally famous Wallace Brown "Feature" Christmas Box Assortment . . . 21 exquisite new designs. Sells for $1.00; up to 60c profit. Also large selection LOW-PRICED name-imprinted Personal Christmas Cards — orders shipped direct to customers. Plus DeLuxe Album of higher-priced Personals, 25 other Christmas, Everyday Assortments: "Pageant", Christmas Carols, Gift Wrapping Ensembles, Merry Christmas Comics, Religious, New DeLuxe Foil Cards, Christmas Stories, 16-card All-Occasion Ass't., "Floral" Stationery, Mandarin Notes, Children's Books, Gift Items, others . . . Personal Card Samples FREE: "Feature" 21-Card Box on approval. Rush coupon now.
WALLACE BROWN, INC., 225 Fifth Ave., DEPT. N-9 NEW YORK 10, N. Y.
NAME
STATE

There was a long silence.

"Say," he said finally, 'is this you, Robbie?"

"Of course. Who did you think it was?"

"I thought it was you, but I didn't expect—I mean, I saw you in Sensenich's yesterday, and I thought you didn't want to talk to me. I mean ——"

"I didn't see you.'

"Oh."

"I wanted to ask," she said slowly, "if you still want to do that thing you were talking about."

"That —— Oh, the picture. Sure. Gosh, sure."

"When would you want to do it?

"Gosh," he said, thunderstruck, 'any time. Any time at all."

"I thought maybe," she said shyly, "you might not be busy tonight."

He cut himself four times while shaving, and slipped and fell as he was stepping out of the bathtub and gave his shoulder a terrible wrench, and took nearly fifteen minutes picking out the right tie, which he tied and retied nine times until it was so wrinkled he had to spend more time selecting another one and finally, when he was ready to go, he was positive that he didn't look right. There was no time to change clothes again; he wanted to save the new gray flannel suit for some other night, in case (his heart began beating faster) she agreed to see him again. He ran downstairs and banged the door and ran for the bus stop, and halfway there remembered that he had forgotten his pad and pencils. Christian and Elizabeth, sitting in the parlor, exchanged worried glances; they were positive, now, that he was in serious trouble.

"Let me see it," she said.

Kenny regretted that he had begun the sketch; it was as bad as the ones he had tried at home. He was sure that she would think that he wasn't an artist at all; that his wanting to sketch her had been, as she had said, just a line.

"It's only a first rough," he said casually.

"I want to see it anyhow," she said, getting up and crossing to the leather chair in which he was sitting. She bent over; he closed his eyes as he felt her looking at the picture. She said nothing.

"Pretty bad, isn't it?" he asked timidly.

"Why"—he was certain she was trying to find something noncommittal to say—"why, it's wonderful, Kenny!"

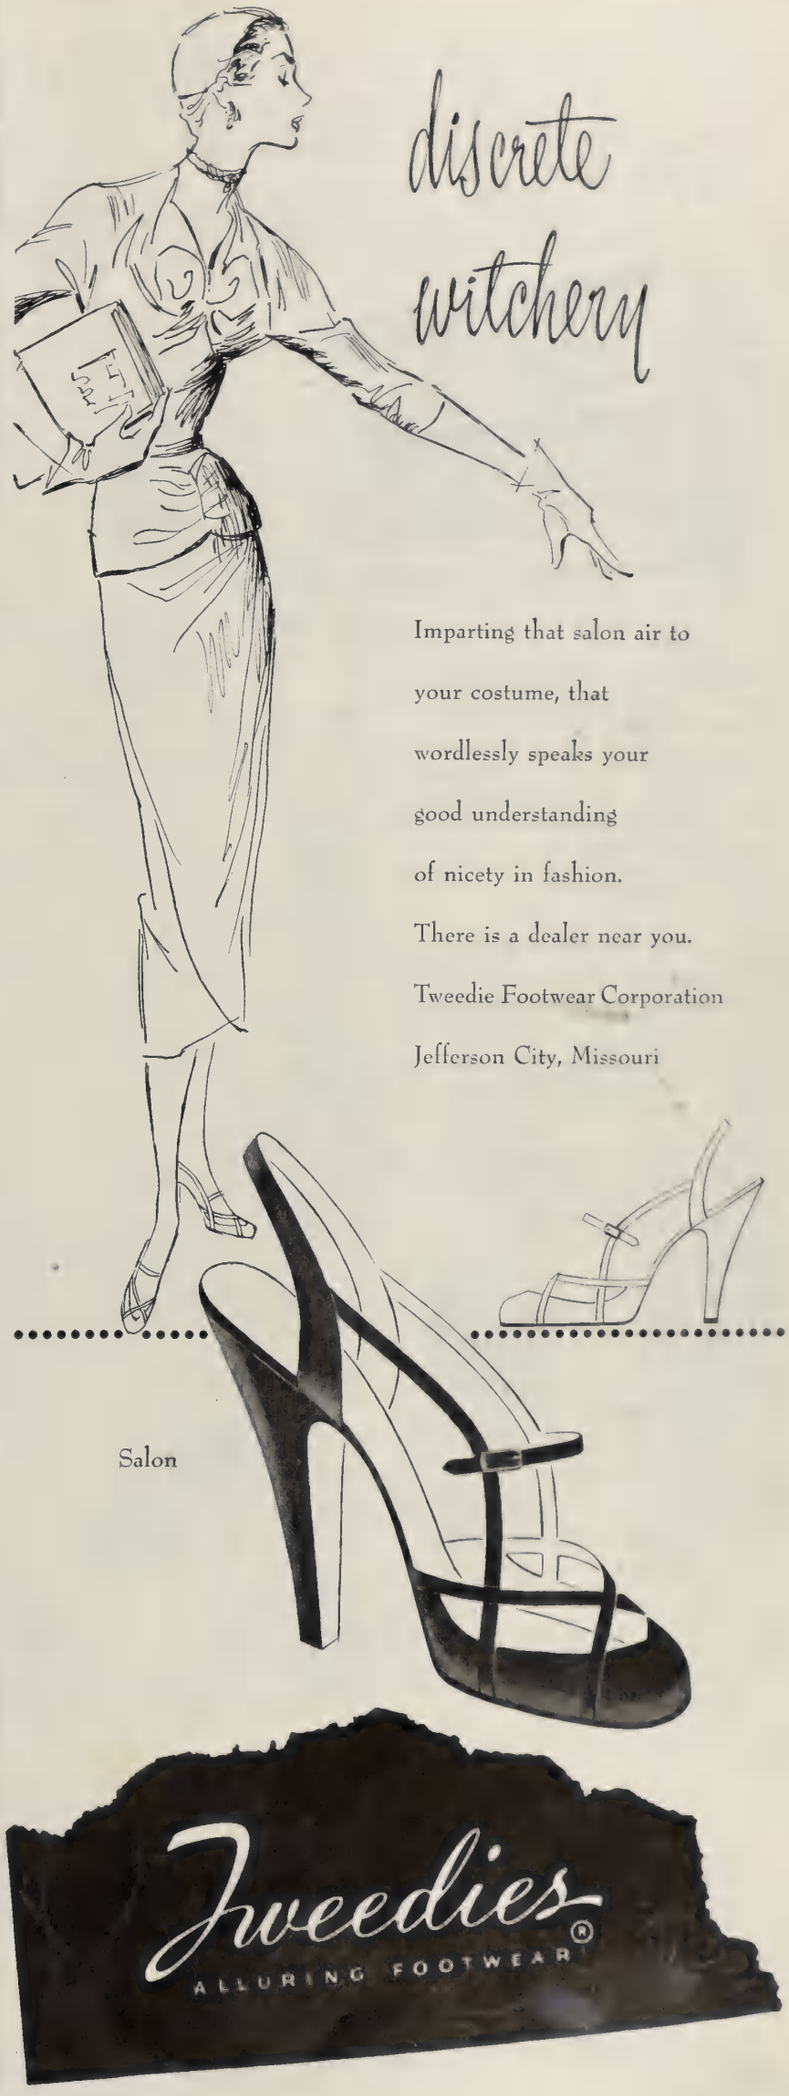
'Listen," he said sternly, "don't say that just to be nice."

"I'm not. I think it's . . . why, Kenny, I never thought you were this good."

"It's awful," he said gloomily.

"It's not. I don't think the hair is just right; it doesn't look like my—well, maybe it does. But the face is right. I'm not that pretty, but ——"

"Yes," he said softly, "you are. You're prettier." And where he found the courage, he never knew, but he found it somewhere: he put his hands on her shoulders, drew her down and kissed her. At first she protested, hastily and wordlessly, turning her head away, but he pulled her closer and his mouth followed hers and caught it and then she was kissing him back and all he could think of was how light, how beautifully light she was, how light and cool her mouth was against his.



"My goodness," she said at last, whispering.

He put his face in her neck and hair.

"Kenny." The word was like a kiss. His arms tightened. "Kenny," she breathed again, "I never thought ——"

"Me neither." It was a phrase he and Ed used, derisively, but saying it to her made him feel oafish, afraid that she would think he used that kind of language all the time, and as though to atone for using the crude words he kissed her again, more gently.

When they stopped he knew that he had lost all shyness, all reticence. Even this strange house, with its elaborate furnishings—the straight, uncomfortable chairs such as he had seen only in downtown antique shops, the thick red rugs, the heavy drapes, the way everything looked as though it were cleaned freshly each day (and all this

Tips for your shelf on baby care!

1. How soon should a baby be able to roll over?

At about 5 months, most babies master this new trick. It takes a lot of squirming around, so guard against chafing, as well as "urine irritation," with thorough smooth-overs of pure, gentle Johnson's Baby Oil. Apply it after his bath and at every diaper change.

2. Is summer a more dangerous time for babies?

Hot weather used to be a troublesome time for babies. But now, with modern refrigeration for baby's food, with flies screened out and utensils sterilized, summer days are beneficial. Cool, soothing Johnson's Baby Powder helps to keep silken baby skin free from little chafes and prickles.

3. Should babies be played with at bedtime?

Gentle is the word for bedtime play. However, it's often Daddy's only chance to take part in Baby's day. So let them make a little game of the soothing nightly ritual with Johnson's Baby Powder or Oil. Both of them will enjoy it—and Baby will sleep like a lamb.

in contrast to the shabby place of his parents)—even the house, which earlier had made him feel so awkward, could not affect the new strength he had found with her. He had no clearly articulated thoughts, but he knew that for the first time in his twenty years he had done something important: it was almost like the time Miss Howell had said that the Little Red Hen was a fine drawing, or like the time a woman had written in to the paper to tell the editor that she enjoyed a cartoon signed K.N.—but this was better, far better, than either of those times. And with this knowledge came decision. He put his arm wholly around her and settled her in his lap. She rested her head on his shoulder, and as she did he wondered if this really was real.

"You smell nice, Kenny," she said in a small voice.

He felt his forehead reddening. What did you say when a girl said something like that to you? He tried a joke: "I took a bath, even though it wasn't Saturday." She didn't laugh; she said nothing. "How do you mean, I smell nice?"

"You smell like cigarettes and like you've been drinking beer. Kenny, do you drink an awful lot?"

She couldn't have said anything that would have pleased him more. He smiled slowly. "No, not much—some nights, though, Ed and I get pretty plastered. I was going out to get drunk when you called."

"Who is Ed?"

"Ed Wenger."

"Oh, Edwin Wenger."

"He's my best friend—my only friend. Ed's a writer, a good one." (He had read only two of Ed's stories, and hadn't fully understood either until Ed had explained, but that was all right; Ed sometimes didn't understand his cartoons.) "You'll have to meet Ed," he continued.

She hadn't been listening. "Kenny, I wish you wouldn't drink so much."

Touched, flattered, moved beyond belief, he kissed her again, this time a long kiss; in the middle of it she moved her little hand and put it on his.

At last he said, "I wanted to do that the first time I saw you in Sensenich's."

She caught her breath. "So did I."

He drew back, stupefied. "You did? Why, the first time I called you, you didn't even remember my name."

"I thought you were something—somebody else. I remembered you, Kenny. I sat in Sensenich's that day and I wondered how it would be if you kissed me. And I wanted you to, and—it was the funniest feeling—I felt scared."

"If that's true, why wouldn't you let me see you when I asked you?"

"I couldn't, then."

"How come?"

"I just couldn't."

"I don't get it. If you wanted ——"

At that instant Kenny glanced up and saw, across the room, a handsome silver tea service gleaming on a large mahogany table. Behind it hung a thick velvet curtain, falling to the floor in luxuriant folds. The objects looked so perfect that they seemed almost to have been put there as part of a setting for a play; and then Kenny knew why they seemed artificial and unbelievable to him. He had never seen anything like them before, except in plays and movies. Such things were not parts of his life; they could never be

Good Memories

By Margery Mansfield

The folks are not vindictive. You can "live it down."
But nothing is forgotten in a little town.

"Five generations, they were ne'er-do-wells" . . .
"Thanks to the church, he has been going straight" . . .
"That girl was wild . . ."
It is a dubious fate
To matter so that no one can forget
What you did, or who your parents were.
We understand why many leave—and yet,
We would not like to go away too far.
We are not sure that we would rather be Where no one would be caring what we are.

the lives of Christian, Elizabeth an neth Neff. Elizabeth served tea to her Aid Society meetings out of an old ch that had been her grandmother's; it and clumsy-looking, with ugly rust Oriental figures painted clumsily on th Elizabeth thought it was pretty. Ke as though the Bowman tea servi spoken to him; he could not keep th lessness from flowing into his face. H stiffened, and she felt the movement

"Maybe," he said, forcing out the "maybe I'd better go home now, R

"Why?" She looked at him in surp looked, he thought with a pang, the had looked that day he bumped int Sensenich's. "Why so soon?"

"I'd just better, that's all."

"Nobody's home but Arthur—my br and me, and Arthur's out with Lind ler. My parents are on vacation— down South. Arthur won't be in for

Lindy wa Schiller's sist name cut into

"Please d so soon, P Please."

He stood set her on he thinking onc this time sorr how very li was—then tu around and her, playfull into the cha bent over h hands on th arms.

"Do you w to stay, Robb

"Of course voice became "Oh, Kenny Kenny, I neve anybody that fore in my wh I never ne hate that never did, thought I would until mar——"

"If that's Kenny inte "how come yo let me see you tonight?"

"I just cou

"Was it," he said tensely, "becau parents didn't want you to?"

She looked relieved; or, he though to. "Oh, no. They don't know abou

"Why haven't you told them?"

"There wasn't anything to tell. Le plain it to you, Kenny. I don't hav dates, and the ones I do have are with boys that—boys my parents Know their families, anyhow. My always been . . . I don't know how t he's just been funny. He likes to kno everything I do, and he's that wa Arthur too."

She paused, took his hand, and until he sat beside her in the big chair. Kenny waited for her to go on able; he was more convinced than ev Ed had been right: the girl was a sn was just trying to make it easier for looked at her coldly.

"When you called, Kenny, that fir I thought you were somebody else. why I acted the way I did. Then whe you that day in the drugstore, and fo you were the one who called, I was wanted to see you—but you know, know anything about you, and I ask Nancy anything about you becau Kennedy told me Nancy thinks you steady ——"

"She does?"

"That's what Gen says."

Kenny smiled wryly. "She's got thinks coming."

(Continued on Page 174)

Why risk his health with temporary disinfectants?

Lysol® germ-fighting action continues between cleanings!

ERY DAY, disease germs in house dust menace n the cleanest-looking home! That's why u need the disinfectant that helps protect r family 24 hours a day . . . day in, day out, h an anti-bacterial blanket.

Put "Lysol" in your cleaning water every e and everywhere you clean—floors, walls, woodwork, furniture—all through your house.

Unlike bleaches, which call for thorough cleaning, before disinfecting—and which even then act only temporarily, "Lysol" kills germs right while you clean—all in one operation. Its potency is not weakened by dust and dirt. And regular use of "Lysol" leaves a continuing anti-germ blanket on home surfaces between cleanings!

Guard your home with this fast-acting, continuing disinfection! Use hospital-proved "Lysol" brand disinfectant, the world's largest-selling germ killer. Highly concentrated, economical. You need only 2½ tablespoons to each gallon of cleaning water! Get "Lysol" today!

Real Boys and Girls Pre-Test Every Style of Poll-Parrot Shoes

Poll-Parrot Style 9626

For 21 years, real boys and girls have pre-tested every pattern of Poll-Parrot Shoes in actual wear! So your child gets such benefits as: extra reinforcements at strain points—pear-shaped heels to hug and cradle young feet—soft, durable upper leathers! See the latest styles now at your Poll-Parrot dealer.

Poll-Parrot Style B1838

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money — If Defective or Not As Advertised Therein

Commended by Parents' Magazine

ALSO STAR ★ BRAND SHOES ... AT LOWER PRICES

For nearest Poll-Parrot dealer, see Classified Phone Directory, or write us.

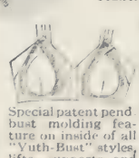
ROBERTS, JOHNSON & RAND Division of International Shoe Company • ST. LOUIS 3, MO.

Sensational New Scientifically Designed Patent Pend. BRAS for LARGE · MEDIUM · SMALL BUSTS

Correct and Flatter Your Individual Bust Problems INSTANTLY! on Free 10-Day Trial!

LARGE BUST SIZES 34 to 52

Style No. 101 Longline Built-up Shoulder only $2.98



Colors: Nude White Black

Secret Inside Control

Style No. ■ Adjustable Shoulder Strap Bra only $2.98

Special patent pend bust molding feature on inside of all "Youth-Bust" styles, lifts, supports and cups large busts into the smaller youthful alluring shape you want, whether they are extra large, spread out or sagging. Style No. 101 and 202 Longline also have Special V-Midriff Control to flatten bulging stomach, also girdle hooks. Light, comfortable, firm, adjustable! Durable washable fabric.

Style No. 303 Bandeau Adjustable Strap Bra only $2.75

Style No. 404 Bandeau Built-up Shoulder Bra only $2.75

MEDIUM BUST SIZES 32 to 42

Colors: Nude White Blue Black

Style No. 505 only $2.49

Inner Bra Bust Beautifier

Instantly flatters, accentuates average size bust, gives firm uplift, roundness, high- ■ to busts that sag, flatly spread out, not firm or round enough. Gorgeous washable fabric. Adjustable shoulder straps and elastic back closing.

SMALL BUST SIZES 28 to 38

NO PADS! No artificial bust buildup needed!

Colors: Nude White Blue Black

Style No. 222 only $2.49

This special patent pending bust molding feature on inside of bra lifts, supports and cups your busts, ■ matter whether they are small, flat or sagging, into Fuller, Well-Rounded "Up-and-Out" curves like magic instantly! Firm elastic back and adjustable shoulder straps. Beautiful washable fabric. Wear dresses, blouses, sweaters with bust-line allure!

Profile View of Hidden Feature in Bra shown here

Send No Money! FREE 10 DAY TRIAL!

Tested Sales Co., Dept. SML-OB9, 296 Broadway, New York City

Rush to me in Plain Wrapper my specially designed bra for my individual figure checked below, plus my free "Glamour Bustline Course" which I will keep whether I return merchandise or not. I will pay postman on delivery, the price, plus postage. If after 10 days, I am not completely satisfied, I may return merchandise for my money back.

HOW MANY	STYLE NO.	SIZE	COLOR
	101
	202
	303
	404
	505
	222

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

☐ Check here, if you wish to save postage by enclosing only the price with this order form. Same Money Back Guarantee!

FREE! GLAMOR BUSTLINE COURSE Contains 3 sections for small, medium, large ■ bustline and ■ ■, step-by-step ■ ■ ■ to bear the time that remained until

, when he would go out to see her again.
me his personality changed completely;
night, after dinner, he even offered to his mother dry the dishes.
nny found that ideas for cartoons were coming faster than ever, and he was sure his drawing technique was improving.
never he showed a new bunch of draw-to Robbie, she exclaimed over them in s of such honest delight and appreciahat he often thought it would not be before he was the best cartoonist in the ry. Two or three times he began sketch-er again for the contest, but he never ged to finish a drawing that suited he invariably stopped in the middle to er, and then they would either forget the drawing and crush it beneath in the chair they were sitting in or he exclaim, with a rush of love and won-hat he knew he would never be good h to satisfy himself with a picture of
He never did enter the contest.)
night, in the River Street place, Ed him rather petulantly what the two of did together all that time, and Kenny rced to say, "Nothing much, we just sit d and talk"—and it occurred to him, a sudden, that that actually was all did do. Their times together were as plicated as their love; other kids went ces, to the movies, or to the rec center
Sensenich fountain in the evenings,
Kenny and Robbie did was sit in her room or on the front porch. Some they went walking in the Buchanan ection, the residenea surrounding the nan Club.

The same defects which we find insupportable in others seem quite proper in ourselves; they are no burden, we do not feel them. —LA BRUYÈRE.

ny's one main t in those happy
as the love he shared er, and he tried to ll other, worrisome ts submerged as of the time as possiw and again, in spite of all he could y would crop up again, as on the eve-hen she took him into the basement of use and showed him the workshop in she refinished furniture. The shop was ed with woodworking tools that looked nore beautiful and expensive than the enny remembered using in the crafts ment at McClockey High. The hobby have seemed an odd one for most girls, seemed to him to fit Robbie's simple, disposition; it was a good and useful o do, and he was impressed by the
–a chest of drawers, three plain lvania Dutch chairs—she already had on; but somehow, the elaborate fit-the shop bothered him.
Idn't even have a brace and bit, if I ever old man I wanted to do this, he thought;
n't have it even though Bodner's gives ty per cent off on everything he buys.
're moody again," she said.
"
are. I know by the way your face is."
right," he said, furious at having been ut, and forgetting, for the moment, e was, "all right, I'm moody."
nny! You've never talked like that
"
're always telling me I'm moody, or ng."
you are that way a lot of the time."

BE I'd better go," he said, and with-ther word went up the stairs, got his aw from the front-hall closet (the the Bowman coats lined neatly in ade him feel more than ever like a er), left the house and went straight iver Street bar. He felt terrible when called to the telephone by Harry use an hour later. It was Robbie, callell him she was sorry.
're right—I do tell you you're moody
n," she said tenderly. "Oh, Kenny, that I love you so, I get upset when-ink you're troubled. I have to know n your mind."
t down the telephone and dashed to e so fast that he was completely out h when she came into his arms at the door. They were kissing in the doorway when Arthur came in. Arthur looked faintly annoyed, but said nothing and went out.

(Arthur looked faintly annoyed at everything, Kenny often thought. Robbie didn't like him much, she sometimes confided to Kenny; he was too much of a snob. Kenny said nothing, but he privately classified Arthur as the chief contender for the All-Time Jerk championship. His first meeting with Arthur had afforded the two of them the longest conversation they ever held. Arthur said, "Hello," and so did Kenny. Arthur said, "What do you do, go to school?" And Kenny had said, "No, I work for myself." Arthur said, "Doing what?" Kenny said, "I'm an artist." "Oh," said Arthur. "Well, so long." Robbie had later told Kenny that Arthur was "with daddy, handling traffic," and Kenny felt a little better, but not much.)

THE fight over the moods was their first and last during that blissful week in which the elder Bowmans were still away on vacation, but there was one night when Robbie was the one who wore the troubled look. At first Kenny thought she was concerned over her parents' home-coming (they were due to arrive the next day), but this so distressed him that he didn't want to ask what was the matter. After a while she volunteered the information. She began very gently.

"I was talking to May Gerlach today, Kenny." She looked at him for a reaction, but there was none. "She told me she was shopping on Saturday."

"So?" He had no idea of her point.

"She said she was shopping in Marton and Haymer's."

Instantly Kenny understood what writers meant by saying that a person's blood froze. "So?" he said brazenly.

"Kenny," she said, "what do you do all day?"

"Draw." He couldn't look at her.

"All day?"

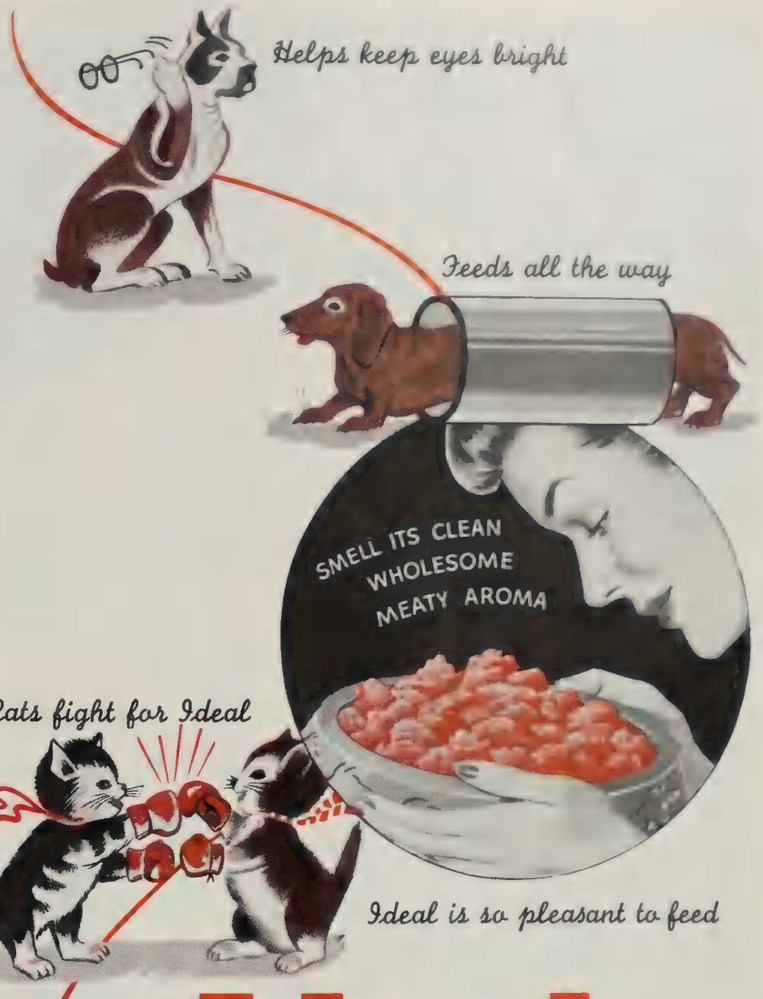
He bent his head, like a caught child; irrationally, he wished he had never met this girl.

Her voice was still low and sweet. "Why didn't you ever tell me, Kenny?" She touched his arm. "Why, Kenny?"

Still without meeting her eyes, he got up and started toward the front door. She ran to him and caught his arm, but he shrugged her away and grasped the knob.



"Kenny! Where're you going?"

He forced himself to look at her. "All right, I lied to you. I'll take off now."

"Oh, if I'd known it was going to make you act this way, I ——"

"May was right, Robbie. I told you I draw all day, but I don't. I do work at Marton and Haymer's in the mornings. I sweep the sidewalk and I straighten stuff on the shelves, that's what I do. It's my job. I used to draw all day, but I had to get a job or my parents would've driven me nuts." Everything was coming out now, and he couldn't stop. "I went to work because of them—not because I wanted to, but because they kept after me. They don't think it's respectable to be an artist—nobody here, nobody in this town, does. You have to work and earn dough, like Arthur. You have to be successful, like your father is. My old man isn't. To him that's a sin—so he's got to keep after me. If I make a lot of dough, that'll make him feel better—it'll make him feel as though he hasn't sinned in his life. That's the money philosophy this town is built on. It's like all Americans—like all American towns, I mean. If you don't make a lot of dough, you're no good. Ed Wenger and I've talked it over night after night. It's ——" He became aware that he was almost shouting, and quieted instantly. "I'm sorry to get so corny, Robbie," he said apologetically. "So long." He put his hand on the doorknob again. "I know this busts us up. But I always loved you from that first day in that drugstore, and I always ——"

Her hands were on his arms, then on his shoulders, then around his neck, and she was pressing her body (her light, light body) to

Ideal

THE 7-COURSE MEAL

feeds in all Seven Ways

Two important reasons why more and more women prefer Ideal are—1. Ideal's clean, wholesome, meaty aroma makes it pleasant to feed. 2. Ideal is best for the dog or cat because it feeds in all 7 ways for:

1. Strong muscles and growth.
2. Vitamin balance.
3. Clear eyes and glossy coat.
4. Strong bones and teeth.
5. Vitality and nerves.
6. Strong sinews and tendons.
7. Energy. Try Ideal. Watch your dog or cat go for it.

42 NEW PREMIUM OFFERS FOR YOU!

Look inside the Ideal label for new, money-saving premium offers. Two premiums are featured inside each label of Ideal. In all, 42 premiums are offered. These are money-saving values for you and your family. A convenient order coupon is also printed on the inside of each label. Get Ideal at your favorite store today.

A DOG'S BEST MEAL IS WILSON'S IDEAL—CATS, TOO!

WILSON & CO. INC.

Ideal DOG FOOD

Another WILSON Quality Product

him harder than ever before. He tried to push her away, but he couldn't move her; her lips were on his cheek, her mouth was all over his face, and he could feel her tears. His jaw dropped incredulously, the way it had the night she called him.

"Furthermore," he said to Ed, crazily proud, "she said she was glad I was sweeping those sidewalks."

"She just wanted to neck," Ed said.

Nothing could touch his triumph. "She said it didn't make any difference. She said she wouldn't care if Christian and Liz were both drunks and janitors out at McClockey. She said even if everybody she and I knew, knew they were janitors, and drunks, that wouldn't matter to her. She said she'd love me anyhow."

"Let either one of them be a drunk or a janitor," Ed said, "and I'll give you a thousand bucks for every time you go to State Street again. All babes are alike."

"No kidding, Ed, this babe is — have you ever seen her?"

"I saw her long before you did," Ed told him. "She looked kind of frail to me, frankly."

"Her eyes," Kenny said dazedly. "They're brown, mostly, but they're mottled. They've got little spots of yellow and green in them, little high lights. Mottled."

"Yeah," Ed said. "Ought to be remodeled."

"I'm serious," Kenny insisted, draining his beer. "You know what else she said to me?... Hey, Harry, a couple more here.... She said, 'Kenny, I know you're a good artist and I know you're going to be famous someday. But it takes time. You mustn't worry about your parents and you mustn't let anything get you down. You mustn't ever forget that you've got to do what you want to do. I believe in you, Kenny.' That's what she said. She believes me. Believes in me." Kenny finished one of the fresh beers. "No kidding, now, Ed, isn't that something? Ever hear of a babe saying anything like that?"

Ed looked as though he were beginning to accept the idea at last. "Pretty terrific, all right."

"Wonderful," Kenny said thickly. "Wonderful is what it is." He motioned again at Harry, who looked at him dubiously.

"Do you think," Ed said cautiously, "that her parents are going to share this lifelong devotion?"

"Hell with them," Kenny said firmly. "She's got her own life. That's what she says, anyhow. Hell with them."

"Son," Ed said, "nobody in that Buchanan Club bunch has any life but the Buchanan Club bunch's life. Remember that."

KENNY put his hand unsteadily on Ed's shoulder. "Someday I'm going marry that girl, Ed, and you're going be best man. Old Wenger. I can see you in a morning suit now."

"I'd have to be in one if you married her, that's for sure," Ed said. "I can see what kind of wedding you'd have now." He turned to Harry Buckhouse, who was leaning on the bar, regarding Kenny with a scowl that showed plainly what he thought of twenty-year-olds who couldn't hold their beer. "Don't forget you're living in Buchanan, Ken," Ed said somberly. "Someday, maybe, we'll lick it. Sometimes I think maybe we got to go away to do it—that's why I wan to New York. But you know, somet think"—Ed looked away, and seeme talking to himself—"sometimes I th never do lick it even if we run away lick it by getting adjusted to it. We c that; we're not that way. I don't kn we lick it, but I know that maybe w do. Maybe it gets us in the end. I — suddenly looked at Kenny again, and his head in disgust.

Kenny's head had fallen, and he wa ingly, soundly asleep.

J. LUTHER BOWMAN surprised Ken looking a good deal like some of the m brought their wives into the River Café on Friday nights to eat crab cak steamed clams. He was about five fee but his stout belly and his fattening face made him look shorter. His r kinked hair came to about an inch and above his eyebrows. Sitting in his front reading the Sunday papers, wearing kled brown salt-and-pepper suit, he look much like a Buchanan Club man, thought; he might have been Christia sitting there only differen that J. Luthe man got u shook hands, when Ro brought Ken the room; Ch might have hands, K thought, but would have oc to him to g Yet, despit man's disarm pearance, sensed that th under the hairline, we missing a detail.

"What's name, you Mr. Bowman "Kenny Robbie said, you about daddy." He held that m impatience which girls often speak parents.

"Oh, you're the artist," Mr. Bowma He sounded exactly the way Arth sounded when he found out; the word emphasized, but it wasn't slighted "I'm glad to meet you."

"How do you do?" Kenny said pol possibly too politely, he thought, for that Arthur, who was sitting on a across the room, reading Nation's Bu made an almost inaudible sound of d Arthur hadn't spoken as Kenny ente

Mr. Bowman grunted, a not unf sound, and got behind his papers Kenny wondered if he were expected t conversation—and, if so, what he wou about. All he knew about the man wa Robbie had told him: that he had star as a clerk in the plant's traffic depar worked his way up gradually, and fina to set up a trucking business of his o now operated a large hauling compan offices in seven states. His trucks carried plant products.

Robbie had taken a seat on a Vi love seat, and after a few indecisive s Kenny went over beside her. The ne minutes were awful. No one said any Mr. Bowman and Arthur continued t and Robbie played idly with some r sewn on her skirt. Kenny turned on glanced at her, trying to smile, but t pression was rather sickly. She evident waiting for him to say something, but thing he thought of would have sounde ish. It was as though the presence father and brother had suddenly made strangers. Once Mr. Bowman clear throat and looked over the edge of his

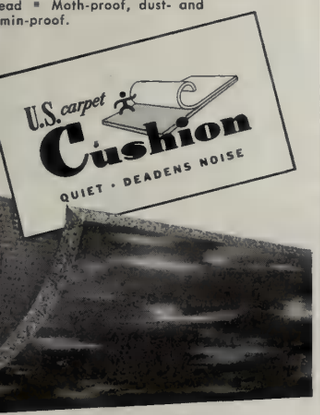
NEXT MONTH

"His Eye is on the Sparrow"

By ETHEL WATERS
as told to Charles Samuels

Of this autobiography, it can be simply said that anyone starting it will finish it and be glad of the opportunity of reliving, with Miss Waters, her amazing, inspiring, hair-raising story.

Complete Condensation in the October JOURNAL



From the book soon to be published by Doubleday & Co.

UGH, SPRINGY,
VES RUGS 9 LIVES

without good under-protection out faster. So give your carpets and luxury for years of wear Carpet Cushion. It's sponge rub-with unique advantages:

s to fit ▪ Won't creep, slide, mat, or ead ▪ Moth-proof, dust- and min-proof.

TED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Mishawaka, Indiana

loth
s the finest low Shades

Nothing . . . no, nothing . . .
an take the place of the tough cotton nat form the backbone of a CLOTH shade. Without this strong, flexible firmly woven fabric, no window naterial can take the punishment of t exposure and countless thousands ngs and unrollings without shrinkrling or sagging out of shape.
in a window shade, plastic-coated or ted, is your guarantee of long-lastaight-hanging beauty. CLOTH winades installed today will keep their crisp, new look for years and years ubstitute window shades have been away!

that fabric! At your dealer's, nna Western Quality Demonstrator indow shades "inside out" . . . lets the difference between and substitute
ls.

Joanna Western Cloth
Window Shades
e world you're a smart housekeeper!
A WESTERN MILLS CO. · CHICAGO

Kenny looked forward, waiting, but the man said nothing. Kenny's face got red. He felt in his pockets for cigarettes, took out the pack, and was about to light one when he looked at Robbie. She shook her head, a gentle warning, and he flushed once more and replaced the pack.

It was even worse when Mrs. Bowman came in a minute or two later. She was as tall and severe as her voice had sounded on the telephone. Her features were those of her daughter, but they were made more clear-cut and angular by age. She reminded Kenny at once of the silver tea service. He had the sense to rise immediately, but as he did he realized that the cigarette package was sticking from his pants pocket, making an odd bulge beneath one side flap of his jacket. He could feel Mrs. Bowman's cool gray eyes looking at the bulge and at the baggy knee of his left trouser leg. She made no attempt to shake hands. She said, "How nice of you to come . . . Kenneth," sounding (thought Kenny) as though it were the last thing in the world she thought was nice.

Mr. Bowman lowered the paper and looked at his wife. "How's she doing out there?"

Mrs. Bowman cast her eyes to the ceiling, as though the matter were beyond her control.

"Hadn't you better be out there watching her?"

"I make her nervous, Luther." Mrs. Bowman addressed Kenny. "The servant problem," she said, indicating that she was sure he would sympathize.

Kenny half smiled, nervously. "It must be pretty bad, from what I hear from my mother."

Robbie looked at him curiously, her little mouth open at the lie.

"It's dreadful," Mrs. Bowman said. "We've had three different cooks since the beginning of the year. This one came yesterday."

"She's funny," Robbie said, smiling.

"Robbie, dear, sh-h!"

"She is," Robbie insisted. "She put the spoons on the wrong side last night, and she puts leftovers in some of our best Spode and puts them in the refrigerator."

Kenny almost asked what Spode was, but caught himself. He tried to smile again.

"I kind of like her," Robbie said. "She talks to us at the table as though she's one of the family. She's funny."

"It isn't funny at all," her mother reproved. "It's dreadful. When you're running a house of your own, dear, you'll realize how dreadful it can be."

"When I'm running a house of my own, I'll do all my own work."

Arthur now contributed his single speech of the entire afternoon. "Huh."

Mrs. Bowman was looking at Robbie with an expression that indicated her desire to terminate the conversation, and her intention of going into it later at some length. Kenny was delighted: Robbie's words had been addressed to him, he knew. In a sense, she had been saying that she was going to marry him, and that she knew young artists couldn't afford servants, and it didn't make any difference. He felt much better, and relaxed a little.

Dinner was served about fifteen minutes later, and Kenny went into the dining room confidently. The week before he had taken a book by Emily Post from the library, and he had practically memorized the sections on table manners and silverware. He had even discussed his behavior with Ed, who said, "Just eat slowly, don't take helpings like you do at home—don't take as much, that is—and watch the others to see what forks and stuff they use. Wait'll Robbie's mother picks up her tools. That's the signal to go ahead." Kenny studied the etiquette book so earnestly that he was sure he would get through all right—and perhaps he would have, if it hadn't been for the Bowmans' new cook.

When she came through the swinging door from the kitchen with the roast of beef her eyes fell immediately upon Kenny, and she stared at him intently. Kenny, surprised, stared back; there was something vaguely familiar about her, he thought, but he

Invitation to Lounging

LAMPS and SHADES
by Verplex

Graceful informality in design bespeaks languid luxury with a dexterous touch of urbane smartness.---So temptingly priced, too!

Graceful wrought iron comes indoors. Inspirationally styled in the latest, approved decorator colors. Many attractive designs and combinations.

AT LEADING DEPARTMENT STORES AND WHEREVER LAMPS AND SHADES ARE SOLD

THE Verplex COMPANY
at Essex, Connecticut

SO MUCH RICHNESS AND BEAUTY
at so modest a price

Style I Console

Only Ivers & Pond, drawing on its long tradition of fine piano making, could produce a console of such exquisite beauty and tonal quality at such reasonable cost. Built by New England's finest craftsmen, these lovely instruments enrich any home.

Over 750 colleges and conservatories are now using Ivers & Pond Pianos.

IVERS & POND
Piano Company
Cambridge, Mass. Established 1870

Ivers & Pond Piano Co., Cambridge, Mass.
In Canada—54 Oster Ave., Toronto
Send catalog and "Suggestions on Choosing a Piano." Also name of nearest dealer.
Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State L-9

Serta

"Perfect Sleeper"

AMERICA'S FINEST SMOOTH-TOP MATTRESS!

The completely-satisfying, more refreshing comfort of the "PERFECT SLEEPER" cannot be found in any other mattress. It is the direct result of a remarkable, ultra-modern innerspring construction which includes:

PATENTED "VITALIZED CUSHIONING"—gives live, more comfortable—more healthful support—allows you to relax completely.

EXCLUSIVE "UNI-MATIC" TUFTLESS CONSTRUCTION—provides a velvety-smooth, uniform sleeping surface without buttons, bumps or disturbing pressures—adjusts automatically to your size and weight.

LABORATORY AND X-RAY TESTS—prove the "PERFECT SLEEPER'S" greater comfort and more-healthful support, as recommended by leading doctors.

UNCONDITIONALLY GUARANTEED—against any defects caused by faulty materials, workmanship or construction.

Test these qualities yourself—at better furniture and department stores!

"Perfect Sleeper" Mattress and Box Spring

"Perfect Sleeper Imperial" Mattress and Box Spring (with extra-luxury cushioning of SERTA-FOAM latex by FIRESTONE*)*

"SERTA-FOAM" Sleep Set, including all-latex Mattress and special Foundation complete

Canadian prices slightly higher. All prices subject to change without notice.

SERTA ASSOCIATES, INC. • 666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE • CHICAGO, ILL.

Serta, 1950

couldn't remember where or when he might have seen her. She was a fat, placid woman, with broad arms and red hands; her apron spotted with brown grease. She set the roast squarely in the middle, then, evidently remembering that it didn't go there, picked it up without embarrassment and placed it in front of Mr. Bowman, who looked annoyedly at his wife. Mrs. Bowman shook her head warningly. The cook backed off, her arms folded.

"Anything else?" she asked.

She hadn't taken her eyes off Kenny, and he began to wonder, worriedly, what was making her stare. He glanced down at his shirt front self-consciously.

"That will be all, Mrs. Maurer," said Mrs. Bowman.

Kenny was certain he had heard the name before.

Mrs. Maurer nodded, turned, started for the kitchen, stopped, whirled, and faced Kenny again. "Say," she said, with the air of having made a great discovery, "ain't you Mrs. Neff's boy?"

The blood in Kenny's face felt hot and cold all at once, and he knew that everyone at the table was staring at him. He started to answer, but couldn't; the only thing he could think of, at that crazy moment, was that the etiquette book had said nothing about a situation like this.

"I said to myself when I come in," Mrs. Maurer continued relentlessly, "I know that boy from somewhere. It just now come to me—I used to live across the street." She addressed the room at large. "Small world, ain't?" And, shaking her head, she retreated philosophically to her kitchen.

Kenny was never able to explain, later, just how he survived the rest of that horrible afternoon.

"You crazy?" the tailor said. "It fits you perfect around them shoulders." He tugged at the back of the coat. "You wouldn't want a better fit'n that. Not a wrinkle in her."

"It should hang straighter in the back," Kenny said, for the second time.

"The reason it hangs that way, you hold your head funny. You oughta try standin' up a little straighter."

"This is the way I always stand."

"You oughta stand straighter. Listen, you're gettin' a forty-fie-dollar Tux, hardly used at all, you wouldn't even know anybody'd ever worn it, for twenny-fie. I'm givin' it away to you, practically—alterations are a favor just because I know your old man, that's the only reason I'm givin' 'em to you. Anybody else walk in here wantin' a Tux, I'd charge him thirty-fie, forty-fie dollars for that one, and if he'd ask me to pay it off three dollars a week, you know what I'd do? I'd laugh at him. 'Take it or leave it,' I'd say. I'm doin' you a favor."

KENNY knew he was defeated. "All right, Mr. Nablo. But fix the pants, will you, for sure?"

"Cerny I'll fix the pants. I told you I would, not?" Mr. Nablo stood back and regarded Kenny. "You want my strictly honest opinion, honest I mean, you look like a coupla million bucks in it."

Mr. Nablo had been right, Kenny thought as he stood in front of the mirror in his room on the night of the dance that Millie Haverstick's parents were giving for her. The wrinkle didn't show when he stood straight; the Tux fitted him well, the pants were altered to the proper length, his shirt and tie looked fine (he had had a little trouble with the collar button), and, as the tailor had predicted, he looked like a million bucks. Even Christian and Elizabeth were impressed when he went downstairs; so impressed that he had to restrain himself from strutting. Elizabeth took some of the edge off his pride by saying, as he went out the door, "Now, you be sure to mind your manners with those swells out there," but his feeling of confidence returned when Mrs. Bowman complimented him quietly upon his appearance and Robbie said, "Why, Kenny, y handsome!" She told him again in the way to the Buchanan Club (N man had offered them her coupe thing was right this evening: he her a three-dollar corsage, he had bucks in his pocket, the heavy wonderful beneath him—at last b ginning to feel less like a trespasse

> The man who removed the mountain was he who began carrying away the small stones. —CHINESE PROVERB.

THE knowledge lasted until the inside the ballroom at the club, an on about fifteen minutes more, un covered that something was w wrong. The other young men, eve of them, were wearing business sports coats and odd pants. So chaperoning husbands.

While Robbie was in the pow Kenny sidled off to one corner, potted palms, thinking nervously t somebody else would come in a Tu maybe it wouldn't be so noticeabl lights were turned down for danci he lighted a cigarette he saw A who was Hap Schiller's best frie toward him, snicker, and whisper to Sally Killian, Hap's cousi looked around the room; a grou were clustered around Millie H furtively looking his way from tim It's my imagination, he thought in and knew at once that it wasn't. across the dance floor, trying to w pretending to be unconcerned, an on the veranda. A little knot of standing just outside, laughing up He paused and said "Hi" to Ma Matt looked at him as though recognize him, and then said, as t prised, "Oh, Kenny kept wal veranda railing there peering darkness, as th ing for somethi Robbie took "Hiding from m He couldn't l because he was sure that Helfe group in the doorway were wat

"Why didn't you wait for me in asked, in simulated indignation.

"Wanted to get some air," he s belligerently.

The sound of his voice brough up to his face quickly. Alarmed What's wrong?"

"I'm," he began miserably, "I' guy here in a Tux."

Her hand flew to her mouth. "Y Oh, you can't be, darling."

"I am," he said. "Why didn't y Robbie?"

To his utter disbelief, she begar "Why, Kenny, I —— My goodn vitation said semiformal, and t optional, usually. I didn't ask the their dates were wearing—I just assumed some boys would come fo usually do." Now she was laughin why didn't you call Hap Schille Bates and ask them what they were

How could he explain to her th the last thing in the world he w considered doing?

"Kenny," she said, "it's not you're in disgrace." She laughed

"I saw them snickering about i angrily. He drew a breath. "R might as well face it. I just don't your league, that's all there is to came into his eyes.

She stopped laughing and look keenly. "Kenny, you're making over nothing. Really, if it makes y awful, we'll just tell Millie that understood, and she'll understand

"We won't tell Millie anything fiercely.

"What will we do? Althou Kenny, I don't know that we have thing at all. Nobody will think about it, believe me. You act as the kids—as though you think the like you. That's not true. Lind asked me in the powder room if over to her house for supper on S

"I don't fit in with that bunch," Kenny said stubbornly, "and you know it. Robbie, I might as well go home."

"We'll both go."

"No, you stay. They're your friends."

"But, Kenny, you're my date! What ——" She was very close to breaking down.

"We might as well bust up," he said cruelly. And then, half to himself: "Ed certainly was right."

"We'll do no such thing," she said. "I know what we'll do. I'll say I'm sick."

He looked at her, at her little face, so resolute and so full of feeling for him, and somehow, that moment, he began to understand himself a little better. The knowledge wasn't particularly palatable, and he refused to accept it, then; he kept it hidden until years later, partly because he wanted to and partly because he couldn't do otherwise.

"We'll just tell Millie I'm sick," Robbie said, tugging at his arm and starting toward the ballroom. "It doesn't look as though it's going to be a very good dance"—her voice trembled a little—"anyhow."

The Tux episode was not forgotten (Kenny sometimes had horrible nightmares about it), but it was never mentioned again, and gradually it was eased into the background by the happy events that crowded their lives during April and May of that year. They saw each other constantly, not only after Robbie finished school in the afternoons but also on Wednesday nights (he met her after the Girl Reserve Club meeting), Friday nights (they sat and talked), Saturday nights (they went to the rec center), Sundays (he went out for dinner at her house; Mrs. Emma Maurer, fortunately, was no longer the Bowman cook), and on those occasional evenings when the Bowmans went out to visit friends and were likely to stay late.

Robbie was excitedly trying to decide which college she would go to in the fall; Kenny hated to think of her going away, and hoped she would pick one that wouldn't be too far from Buchanan. He tried to behave with enthusiasm when she was discussing the fall, but he couldn't help the depression that came into him when she talked about school. He wanted to say, "I wish we could get married," and didn't dare; he was sure that marriage was the last thing she had in mind, for that time at least, although one night when they were kissing she had said, "Kenny, I wish we were older." He hadn't pressed her, for he knew that if she brought up college again he would become surly and probably start a quarrel. He started all the quarrels, he often reflected bitterly; he started them, she ended them; but he sometimes had the feeling that she was holding back some part of her emotions. He sometimes caught her staring at him, and he thought she was thinking about how he was dressed (he still felt that his clothes weren't quite right; he never looked as neat as Arthur or Hap or even Matt Helfer, although he was spending virtually every cent of his Marton and Haymer money in the clothing department of the store).

He didn't really find out what was going on inside her until one night about a week before her Senior Prom. It was a Friday night, and they were going to the movies; when he got to the house, Robbie was still upstairs in her room. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman were sitting in the parlor, and she excused herself almost as soon as Kenny arrived. That was when it happened.

Mr. Bowman put down his newspaper and grunted once or twice, and Kenny thought he was going to begin one of his speeches on what Roosevelt had done to the country. The speeches came almost every time Mr. Bowman was moved, which was virtually every time Kenny saw him. But this night the man was looking at him oddly, and Kenny was suddenly afraid.

"Mrs. Bowman," Mr. Bowman began, "Mrs. Bowman and I have been having a talk, Neff, and now I want to talk to you."

Kenny thought, Here it is at last.

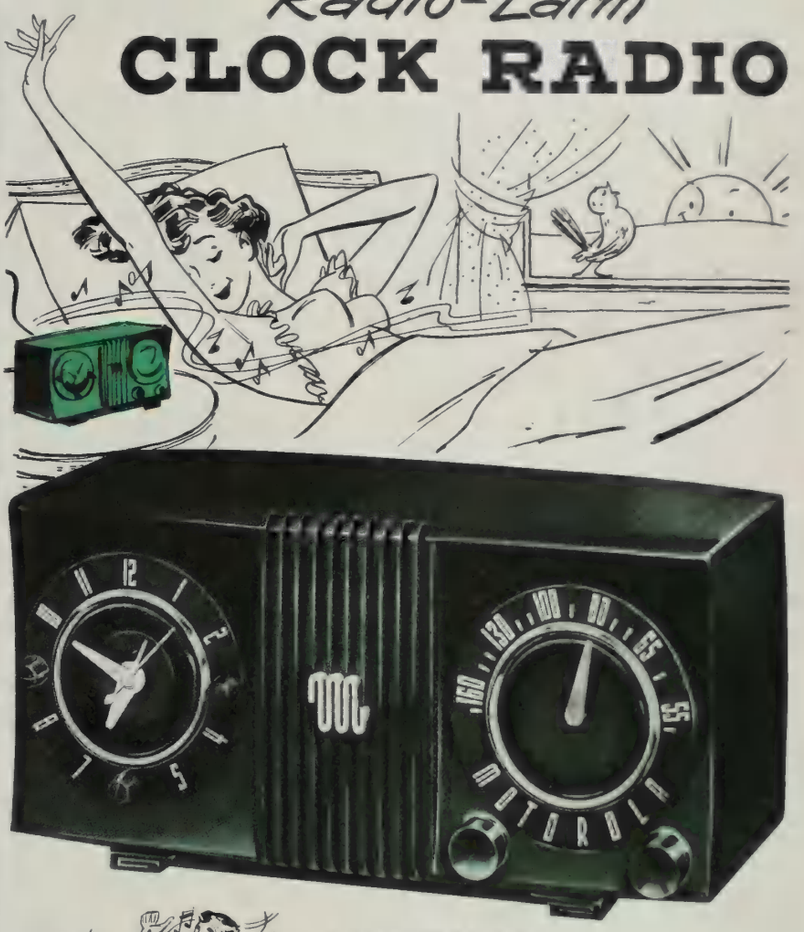
"Sit down," said Mr. Bowman, as though it had just occurred to him. Kenny sat in a

(Continued on Page 181)

...ollars in Savings". Write today for South Carolina ...ls' new, FREE catalog of cotton values. Down-to-...th prices on shirts, underwear, dresses, children's ...ar, prints, towels, sheets—scores of cottons for the ...ily and the home. Every item is backed up by a ...ONEY-BACK GUARANTEE. It's easy to order, ... Don't delay! Mail a postcard or a letter for your ...EE copy of this valuable "Cottons" Catalog today.

...OUTH CAROLINA MILLS
...pt. 625, SPARTANBURG, S. C.

...OW TO END ...ONEY WORRIES



A ...EW EASY MONEY MAKING PLAN
...WEL Christmas and Everyday Cards, Sta... ...nd Napkins with name on to your Friends, ...s, Relatives. No experience needed. Make $50 ... a week. Write TODAY for Selling Plan and ...on Approval.
...EWEL—401 W. SOMERSET ST.
Dept. 14—Phila. 33, Pa.

...ORNS
...d by Mosco, also Calluses.
...asy, economical. Just rub ... 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

...K CASH for ALERT WOMEN
...50 BIG MONEY MAKING CHRISTMAS ASSORTMENTS ... Show America's ...utstanding Christmas ... Everyday Cards to ...riends, neighbors. Up to 100% profit. Sam...les on approval. PEERLESS GREETINGS, ...Dept. L-3, HIGHLAND PARK, ILLINOIS
De Luxe ALBUM PERSONAL GREETINGS

...ST KNITTING WOOL
...r FREE Samples • Prompt Mail Service
...YARN HOUSE • 1231-B Cherry St., Phila.7, Pa.

NEW Motorola
Radio-Larm
CLOCK RADIO

Wake up to Music
Radio automatically turns on at any pre-set time.

Go to Sleep to Music
Radio automatically turns off at any time up to 60 minutes after you retire.

An Automatic Servant*
Turns coffee maker, toaster, appliances, lights on and off automatically.

"LET MUSIC WAKE YOU UP"

In the morning, it wakes you gently with music or your favorite radio program. At night, it soothes you to sleep. Turns electric appliances on, off for you. Just set the Radio-Larm for any time, any purpose. "Sleepyhead" Buzzer can be set for 10 minutes after musical alarm. Famous Golden-Voice Motorola radio and precision electric clock, in ultra-smart Bakelite cabinet. Forest green, walnut or ivory. See it today!

DOZENS OF HOME, GIFT USES

Uses galore! Starts your coffee...tells you exact time...turns on your favorite radio show...reminds you of appointments...turns lights on and off...sings you to sleep. All automatic, all-purpose...ready to serve and entertain day and night. Several gifts in one, at a price that makes it the greatest gift "buy" of its kind.

as low as $29.95

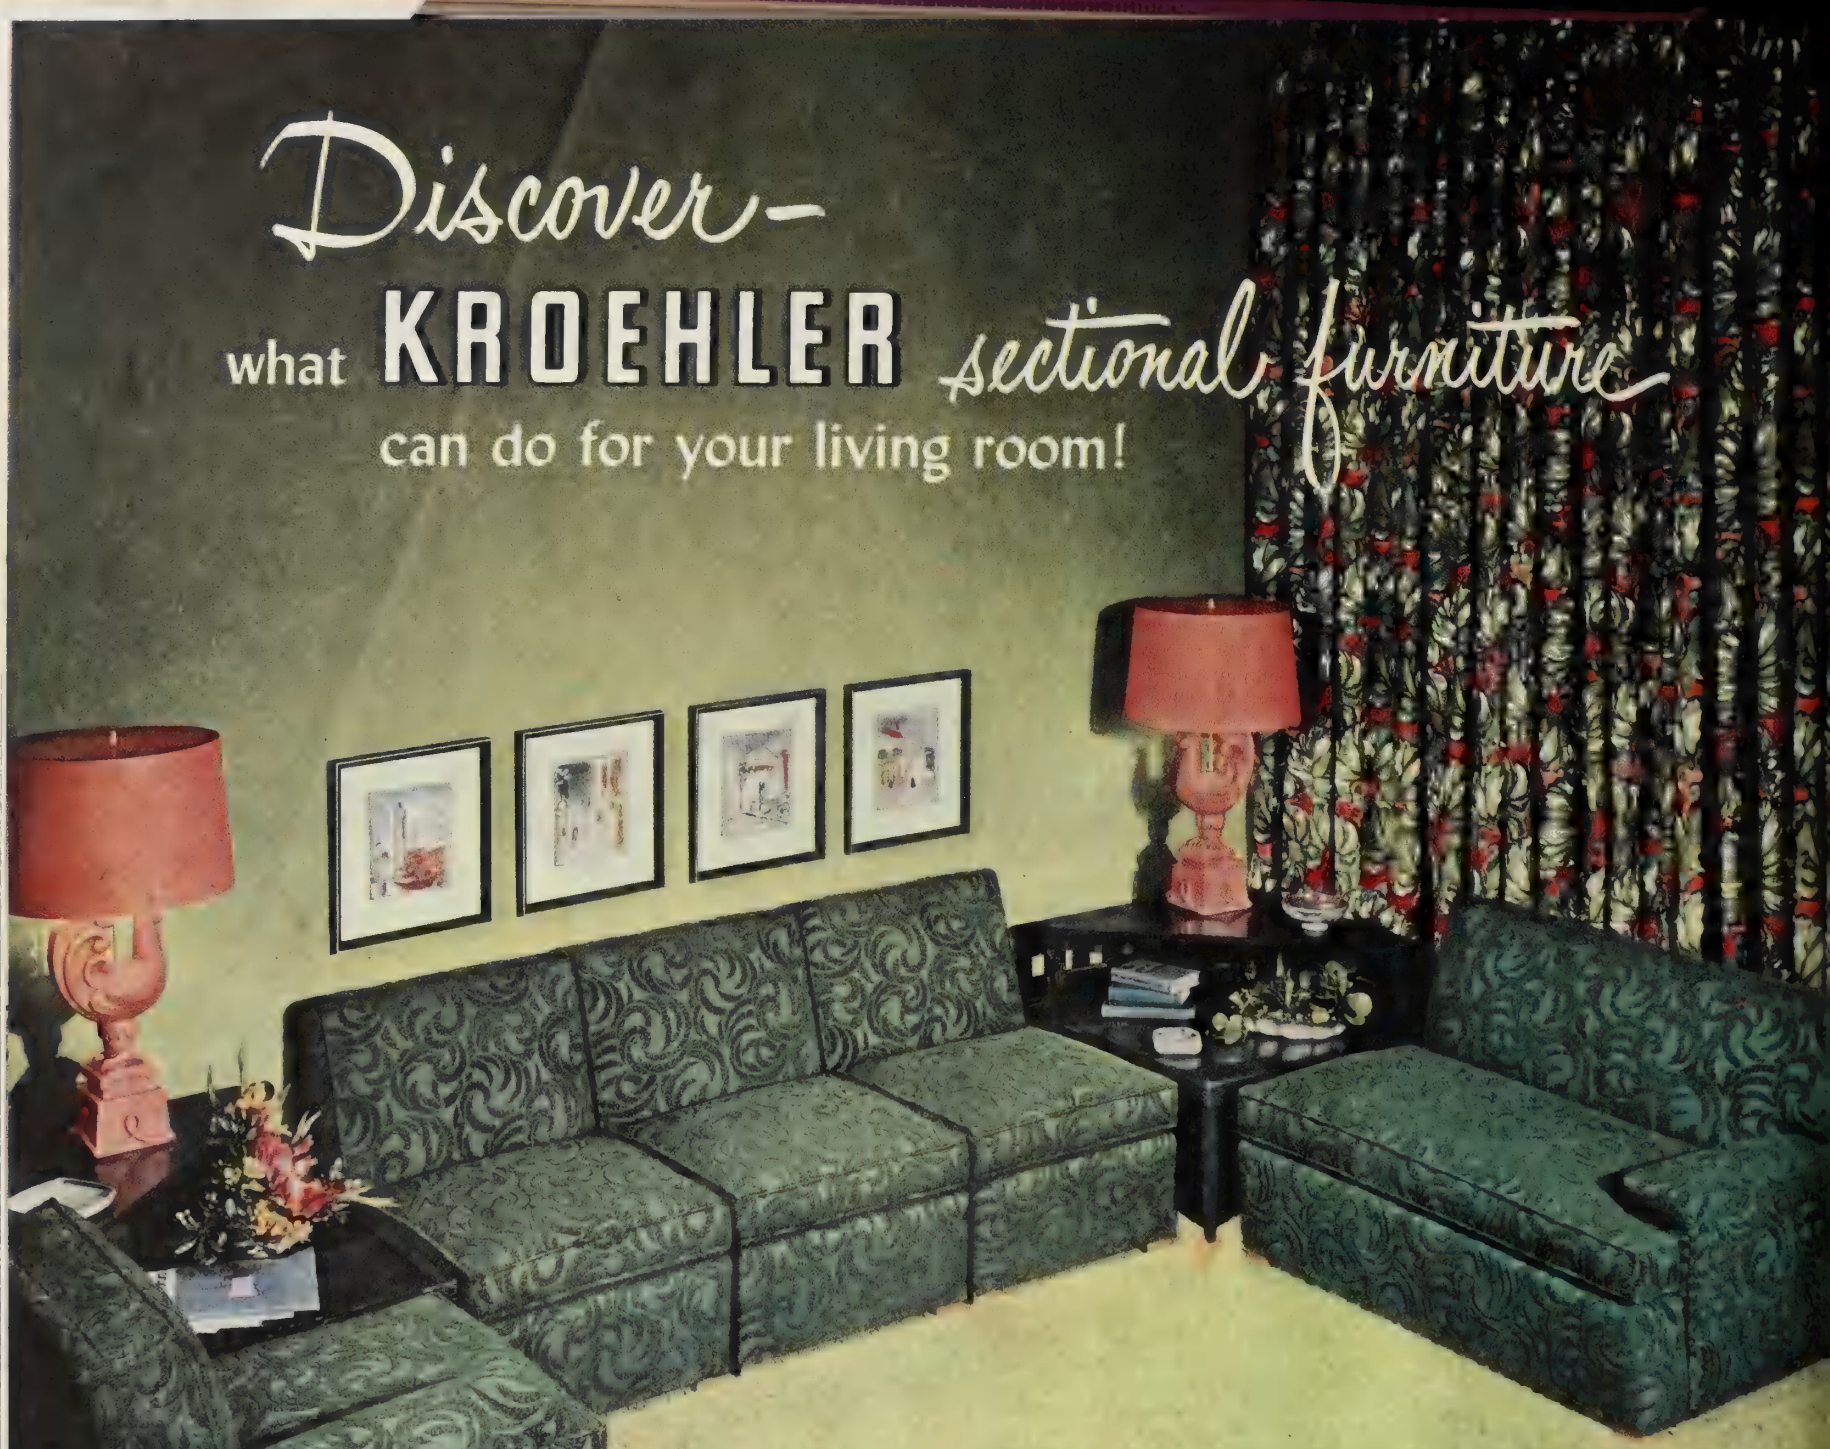
Models with appliance outlet slightly higher*



Motorola TV and Radio
Fashion Academy Award Winner

Prices and specifications subject to change without notice—Slightly higher in south and west

Discover—

what KROEHLER sectional furniture

can do for your living room!

Your living room can be more attractive and easy to furnish if you use Kroehler re-arrangeable sectional furniture. It does away with waste space . . . makes every inch of your room more livable . . . gives you extra seating . . . fits in any shaped room, regardless of door and window openings. Buy the individual pieces you need in your choice of new colors. Only Kroehler Furniture is Cushionized*. See your Kroehler dealer today.

KROEHLER
CUSHIONIZED FURNITURE
Since 1893
WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS

HOME FASHION TIME, Sept. 21-30
"Enjoy Living at Home"

WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURER

KROEHLER Furniture

(Say KRAY-LER)

Kroehler Mfg. Co., 666 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago 11, Ill.

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

CORNER ARRANGEMENT

FIRESIDE GROUPING

WINDOW GROUPING

LONG WALL ARRANGEMENT

(Continued from Page 179)

ck chair. "We've been seeing of you out here of late," Mr. Bow-tentatively, "and I must say I don't see anything wrong in that.
o have our kids bring our friends friends. That's what a home is for.
Robbie seem to like to go out with r, and I don't see any harm in that.
e way kids are. I'll say one more d that is you seem to be a good, ell-mannered young man. . . . How ou, anyway?"
ty."
eem all right to me," Mr. Bowman
. "I tell you frankly, I don't know about this art business, but I guess ably do and that's your business.
ur, now, he's in the truck line with know that. Maybe he won't stay
-he might go out in the traffic sec-e plant one of these days, just for re experione thing ur, he puts solid hours
You got to that kid."
his discom-y thought t the only would like Arthur was ust in the looked at an's moon-alf hoping he dreaded be said.
the same
e knew it
e anything

as saying,
Mr. Bow-
on, looking
. "So does
man. But Neff, it's... you a lit-g—you're ity, after you a little be so seri-tared, ungine what eant.

is our only
Mr. Bow-saying.
man and I, ays been ful of her.
at's only aybe you we feel, if a sister at seemed onfidence;
which had
ng quality, now became stronger rect. "You know, Neff, we don't have a sister or not. We don't ning about your family. Even s she's never met them. I under-bie tells me—that your father Adam Bordner in the hardware known Adam Bordner for years, ver met your father, Neff."
minable pause.
that we've always been careful
Mr. Bowman said, clasping his So, naturally, when she came to this getting-married business,

?" Kenny started forward.
like it was a surprise," Mr. Bowowman, you're——" Kenny confused to go on.

d been thinking it over, and de-dn't much want to go to college," n said. "The only thing we took as she's got it in her head to get u're the only fellow she's been th—I tried to get her to go out with Win Bates' kid a couple of times, so did Mrs. Bowman, but you're the only one."

Kenny began to see what the man was driving at; now it was only too clear, and his fear changed to anger.

"We have nothing against you personally, it's just that ——"

"BUT you do!" Kenny burst out. "I don't happen to be in the Buchanan Club crowd, so that makes me no good as far as you're concerned. I see that, Mr. Bowman. That's the Buchanan way, isn't it? As long as I just come out every once in a while and see her, it's all right—it doesn't matter much if my old man works in a hardware store. But if she gets the idea—and it was her idea, not mine—if she gets the idea that maybe she doesn't want to go to school, you decide you'd better put a stop to it. Is that right?"

Kenny's voice was so hoarse, so full of fury, that Mr. Bowman sat up straight, as though in alarm. "Better watch your manners there, young fellow."

"Watch my manners!" Kenny cried. "You know, for a long time I was pretty sure something like this would happen—but then, after a little while, you people seemed so decent, and Robbie so nice, I was pretty sure that maybe it wouldn't. What you're telling me now is that I'm not good enough for her. All right. That's all I want to know."

And, leaving the astonished man sitting in the living room, he turned and rushed from the room, without calling up to Robbie, without bothering to take his hat (which arrived in the mail four days later). At the corner of State Street and Buchanan Club Road he sat down, breathlessly (he had been running), and began to weep in rage and desolation. The following week, when he was standing in Sensenich's and saw her coming down the street, he quickly moved away and began walking home.

Kenny enlisted in the Air Corps late in 1941. He flew thirty-one missions from an English base as a gunner, and on the thirty-second he got some flak and broken glass in the face. He fainted, and it wasn't until they pulled him out on the ground that he learned there was a huge piece of metal in his left shoulder. He went to the hospital, where they decided to take off the arm; then they decided to try to save it, then they wanted to take it off again. Finally they made up their minds and left it on. He was in the hospital a long time, and there began drawing the Yank cartoons about the blundering soldier that later got him assigned to London to work on the staff of the magazine. He had a pretty good time in London.

Ed, who was stationed at a northern base, came down one week end on a pass.

"Promise one thing," Ed said. "Promise you'll never go back to that town."

Kenny snorted. "I won't go back. Maybe for a visit, and so I can see ——"

"See who? Whom. Who. Who cares? Who is it you want to see?"

"Parents," Kenny said.

"Parents! You've still got that babe on your mind. Ever hear from her?"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A Tree Full of Angels

By Joseph Auslander

William Blake went out and walked,
And after an hour came in,
His dark eyes glowing as he talked
To coal-eyed Catherine:
He said the lightfoot rain had turned
A tree to tiers of candles;
He said a bush with God's eyes burned
Where Moses left his sandals.

She knew that what he saw—wild plum,
Apple or peach or cherry—
Had by an act of faith become
A seraph sanctuary;
What few, if ever, seldom see,
Her William saw as plain:
A tree, a more than earthly tree,
Drenched with unearthly rain.

Her black eyes kindled to his mood,
For Catherine loved him dearly;
And since she loved, she understood
And shared his vision clearly:
She also saw the fine rain falling,
She also heard that rain—
The voice of God's bright angel calling
From an English lane.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Everything Looks Lovelier

WITH IMPERIAL WASHABLE WALLPAPERS

...in the latest fashions...to suit all budgets

THERE IS SOMETHING ABOUT WALLPAPER—and only wallpaper—that brings out the full beauty of furniture and furnishings. See how your home responds to Imperial Washable Wallpapers. Suddenly it acquires a loveliness, a warmth, a distinctive personality it didn't have before. With over 1500 Imperial patterns and colors, it is simple to find new fashions for dramatic room contrasts . . . or delightful room-to-room harmony. And with Imperial's wide price range, it's just as simple to find papers to suit your budget. Each is "Color Locked"—guaranteed for 3 years against fading, and to clean satisfactorily when instructions are followed. Insist that your dealer, or decorator, show you wallpapers identified by the Imperial Silver Label.

SEND FOR Imperial's New "Color Harmony Kit" by Jean McLain. A unique, helpful and authoritative guide for creating color schemes—quickly, interestingly, correctly. Crayons in 10 basic colors help you to sketch your own schemes on planning sheets. Achieve interesting harmonies or contrasts . . . coordinate wallpaper colors with rugs, draperies, furniture. It's yours for only 25¢.

IMPERIAL PAPER AND COLOR CORPORATION
Dept. L 58, Glens Falls, N. Y.
Gentlemen: I am enclosing 25¢ for my copy of your "Color Harmony Kit."

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

City _____ *Zone*___ *State*_____

Miracle-Tread

SMART SHOES FOR GRACEFUL POISE

STYLED AND CRAFTED FOR THAT

fresh-as-tomorrow FEELING

Their smooth styling . . . soft, mellow leathers . . . beautiful crafting, with careful attention to special comfort features, rate them a distinct favorite for that "fresh-as-tomorrow" feeling.

$6.95 and $7.95

A FEW STYLES HIGHER

Distant Points Slightly Higher

The Drake

Write for Name of Nearest Dealer MIRACLE-TREAD DIVISION Craddock-Terry Shoe Corp. Lynchburg, Va.

Scientific Help for the LARGE FIGURE

A Camp Support is not a reducing garment but it does help scientifically to bear the burden of extra pounds. It gives gentle lifting support and eases the strain on tired muscles and internal organs. You'll feel and look better. See the expert fitter in your nearby store of Authorized Camp Service. Write for free booklet, "The Inside Story of Scientific Support."

Camp Supports are sold by reliable stores — identified by this symbol of Authorized Camp Service. They are never sold by door-to-door canvassers. Priced according to intrinsic value — from $6.50 to $15.00

S. H. CAMP and CO., Jackson, Michigan. World's Largest Manufacturers of Scientific Supports. Sponsors of the Transparent Woman Exhibit and National Posture Week.

Authorized Service CAMP Scientific Supports

PLENTY OF CASH FOR YOU!

Make big spare-time pay! Sell SOUTHERN Christmas Cards. Gorgeous Folders low as 50 for $1 WITH NAME IMPRINTED in Brand New Way. Sensation of 1950. Sell on sight from FREE SAMPLES. Also show on-approval sample of new "Southern Beauty" 21-Card $1 Assortment. Make $60 CASH PROFIT on 100 Boxes! 60 other fast-sellers including Gift Wraps, Religious, Everyday Boxes. EXTRA CASH BONUS. Don't delay. Write for samples NOW

SOUTHERN GREETING CARD CO., 216 S. Pauline, Dept. E-21, Memphis 4, Tenn.

the Ladies' Purse Light

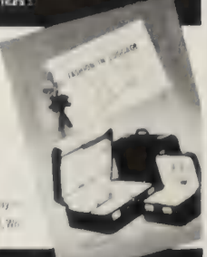
Beautifully designed lipstick size gold tone finish. PINS IN PURSE for instant light — avoids searching and fumbling. Order an extra and please a friend. FOR ONLY $5. POSTPAID

HUDSON TAYLOR Dept. A, Clarendon, Texas

ONLY 100 POSTPAID SEND CHECK, CASH OR MONEY ORDER. NO C.O.D.'s PLEASE

WANTED!

YOUR SPARE TIME FOR CASH



Show Welcome Christmas and Everyday Cards, Stationery and Napkins with name on to your friends, neighbors, relatives and others. Used by everyone. Sell on sight. Your profit to 100%. Full or spare time. Write for Selling Plan and samples on approval NOW.

WELCOME GREETING CARD CO.

368 Plane St., Dept. 35, Newark, N. J.

Send for your free copy of FASHION IN LUGGAGE

Shows patterns, sizes, prices!

● FREE folder shows fifteen choices of open-stock patterns in actual colors. Helps you decide on the right size and shape in matching pieces, gives you exact prices for the world's most exquisitely styled travel cases.

● WRITE for your free folder today — address Skyway, 21 Wall St., Seattle 1, Wn.

LUGGAGE BY Skyway Awarded Fashion Academy Gold Medal

"No."

"You write to her?"

"I started to, once or twice."

"Forget her."

"Don't think I haven't tried, Ed."

Ed promised that he would come down again in two weeks, before his outfit was moved, he said, but he was killed not long after that in a mass raid over Regensburg.

Kenny's Yank cartoons were picked up and reprinted by national magazines in the States, and when he finally got back he found that he had a small reputation. There were offers waiting for him everywhere, it seemed. It pleased him to be recognized at last, but somehow the knowledge didn't give him the great bang he had anticipated. He worked in the New York Yank headquarters while sweating out his discharge, and in the evenings he went with other staffmen to Tim Costello's or Nick's or Bleeck's. Everybody, he soon found out, knew his work (or pretended to), and he met a great many people whose names he had been seeing in books and magazines since the days when he and Ed had first begun to read. He liked most of the people he met and they seemed to like him, and he decided that he would stay in New York after his discharge. A publisher decided to bring out his cartoons in a book and gave him a $1500 advance. Leonard Lyons mentioned him twice in his column, once after he went to "21" with a stupid, dark-haired little movie star he had carried off from a party at which she found it unnecessary to be seen. He was attracted to her because of her voice, which was like that of a child, but he became tired of her fifteen minutes after they left the party.

FINALLY, reluctantly, on the furlough just before his discharge, he went back to Buchanan. Elizabeth Neff (who looked older and more frightened than he remembered her) was hurt because he hadn't come home sooner, but Christian seemed sincerely glad to see him, and a few hours after he arrived, Christian unbent so far as to say that he was proud, very proud, of the way Kenny's work was going. Kenny felt no real satisfaction when he heard the remark; he was tempted to say something about the original lack of faith, but he decided there was no point in it: those days were over.

He walked uptown to the Hotel Buchanan and met two brothers he had known before the war, the Creamer boys. They told him they were working for the plant's new war-products annex and asked if they hadn't seen his picture in the paper. They remembered seeing it, they said, but they forgot what it had been put in for; you know, they said, so many guys were getting their pictures in all the time. He spoke to them a few moments, and then went into the hotel lobby and used the telephone.

An unfamiliar male voice answered. "No," it said, "this is the Bowman residence, but Robbie isn't here. This is Arthur."

"How are you, Arthur—I didn't recognize your voice. This's Kenny Neff."

"Kenny —— Oh, Neff." A slight silence, just long enough to be irritating. "Robbie isn't here any more—dad built a new house, out in Buchanan Vista. She's out there, I guess."

"Can you give me the number?"

"Why," said Arthur, as though he were somehow unwilling, "I guess so." And, after a few seconds, he did.

Kenny felt as though he should say something more. "Still with your father, Arthur?"

"No," said Arthur, "I'm out with the plant now. The big annex they built out on the East Side." (He said it in a way that conveyed his considerable authority.)

"I see," said Kenny, conscious that Arthur hadn't asked what he was doing. "Well, thanks for the number. See you around, maybe."

"You're welcome." Arthur hung up.

Kenny dialed the number Arthur had given him.

Her voice had not changed. He felt himself trembling. "How are you?" he asked, his voice unnaturally husky.

"Why," she said, gasping, "why, for goodness' sake!"

Have "SECOND LOOK" Legs!

Kept smooth and hair-free longer . . . by N . . . the safe, odorless depilato lotion . . . that removes leg hair quickly, easily . . . leaves legs smoother . . . more exciting . . .

For petal-smooth legs use Nair, cosmetic lotion that dissolves hai No ugly razor stubble—keeps leg longer! Easy to use—rinses off q clinging depilatory odor, no irritat mal skin. Slower and softer regrowth. For "second look" legs—get Nair today!

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair safely

Na LOTIO

FOR LEGS THAT DELIGHT USE NAIR TONIGHT 7

FALSE TEE

KLUTCH holds them

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds so much firmer and snugger that one can with greater comfort and security; in man as well as with natural teeth. Klutc constant fear of a dropping, rocking, cha and 50c at druggists. . . . If your drug don't waste money on substitutes, bu and we will mail you a generous trial box

KLUTCH CO., Box 5021-I, ELM

THE NEW SITROU ...say SI TISSUE

SOFTEST, FINEST, STRONGES Y ought maybe I'd have to identify myhless, she asked, "When—when did back?"

morning. How are you?"

ny, are you discharged?"

days or so, and I will be."

n hardly believe it's you."

, it is. Can I buy you a drink?"

' she said regretfully, "I have to e—I'm expecting a call. I'd love to, ."

t is, Kenny thought, the old brush-off. might have known.

don't you come out?" she asked.

ld it be all right?"

t do you mean?"

last time I was there," he said, "I left under—well, I imagine your asn't any too pleased."

't be silly," she said. "That was a e ago. Can you come out?"

ou want me to?"

ove to see you."

t weak as he left the booth, and in on the way to her house.

ouse was even more impressive than on State Street had been. It was a ry colonial—white frame, green a breezeway connecting the main to a four-car garage, a coach light in the drive. He wondered, absently, Bowman had been able to get the s for it in wartime—and knew, in instant, that for Bowman it prob- ln't been a problem at all. Such ver were problems for the Bowmans Schillers. She must have seen the the cab coming up the drive, for waiting at the > Love consists in this, that two solitudes protect and touch and greet each other.

> —RAINER MARIA RILKE.

en he got out, he driver two dol- had a brief argu- ecause the man l that it was much ; Kenny had for- hat this wasn't k. Finally he left in the middle of a sentence and to her in the doorway, wishing his 't feel so feeble.

hook hands, but didn't say much of . She motioned him toward the living ich looked much the same as the one her house. It was bigger, but the niture was there, and so, he saw, ilver tea service. She led him into a to one side, a study, also furnished familiar furniture that had been in house: the red chair, the boat lamp, (never used, but never dusty), the ng prints on the paneled walls. She Vindsor chair and he sat down in the r one by the desk, and as they were felt all his confidence run away and of the telephone conversation was y destroyed; now, in these remem- roundings (remembered at least f the furniture), there was as great a en them as there had been on the t he went to see her. She said, nd he said, "Well," and that was of them said for a moment.

ery nice to see you, Kenny."

o see you too."

een a lot of your cartoons in maga-ded.

ght they were awfully good."

ks."

lo you ever think of your ideas?... much older."

on't. You seem just the same."

I guess. You know Buchanan. u go away to school for four years, o change."

Are you working or anything?"

out at the Junior League nursery ee afternoons a week."

— I might have known." This himself.

did you say?"

that's fine." He began to think g her again was a bad idea.

l nothing for a space that seemed Finally: "What will you do when it?"

"Work for magazines, I guess, free-lance. I had a couple of offers, but I can probably do better by myself."

"You always did like to work alone. Oh, Kenny, it's so wonderful that you're so successful."

"I'm not," Kenny said. "I want to be an illustrator; now I'm only a cartoonist."

"But you will be. And it's so wonderful that you've done so much already."

"It's great," Kenny said. "Just great."

"You sound bitter."

"Me? Why, I'm the picture of sweetness and light. Old Pollyanna Neff, the boys call me in the Yank office." He stopped and looked at her. "Refinished any furniture lately, Robbie?"

"Why, yes, I— Why do you ask that?"

"Just wondered." Then, unable to control himself: "I asked that," he said slowly, "because it often seemed to me one of the few things about this place that represented anything real and true." When he saw her hurt expression, he softened. "Sorry, Robbie. I don't know what's the matter with me. Coming back here got me depressed, I guess. I walked downtown tonight after dinner. Everything was just the same, but everything was a little changed. I was a stranger here when I lived here, but at least I was accepted as a stranger. Now I'm a real stranger. I don't know where I belong."

The front door opened, and her parents came in. They came immediately to the study without removing their coats. "You in there, Robbie?" Mr. Bowman called.

"Come in a minute," Robbie said.

Mr. Bowman waddled in—he had grown much fatter—and when he saw Kenny he stopped, shocked, but quickly recovered his composure. "Why," he said, "it's . . . Neff, isn't it?"

"Why, Kenny Neff," said Mrs. Bowman, without gladness. "You're taller, aren't you?" She sounded as though she were examining a piece of worn material that somehow had survived the years; she made no attempt to shake hands.

"Kenny's home on furlough before getting his discharge," Robbie said.

"Been a long time since we've seen you," Mr. Bowman said.

"Yes," Kenny said, an edge in his voice. "Guess you saw some action, eh? Or no, you worked on that magazine, didn't you? They had a story about you in the paper here. Robbie showed it to us."

"I worked mostly on the magazine," Kenny said. He touched the scar beneath his left eye and said, "I got this from a broken window. Some guys were playing baseball outside, and one knocked a homer ——" He felt a little crazy.

"Kenny was a gunner for thirty-two missions," Robbie said impatiently. "He was wounded. See—he's got the Purple Heart."

"That was for one day when I cut my finger peeling potatoes," Kenny said. He was angry: he was still Kenny Neff, they were still the Bowmans, and there was no reason for this false display of cordiality. The uniform was a pass to the house, but it was stamped TEMPORARY. His name would not come up at their dinner table, nor would his activities be discussed at the Buchanan Club. He was, in effect, the friend of the cook who had come back, and he could sense this, he thought, in their manner. What was worse was that Robbie seemed bent on defending him. He made an effort to be civil. "Well, I just stopped by to see Robbie for a minute, so I guess I'd better ——"

"Why," said Mr. Bowman gruffly, "stay a minute, Neff. Maybe you and I could have a drink."

"Don't go, Kenny," Robbie said.

"I kind of promised my parents I'd be home early."

"Have a drink," Mr. Bowman urged. "Your parents'll wait for you. They've been waiting a long time, haven't they?"

"It must have been terrible for them," Mrs. Bowman said, with what passed for

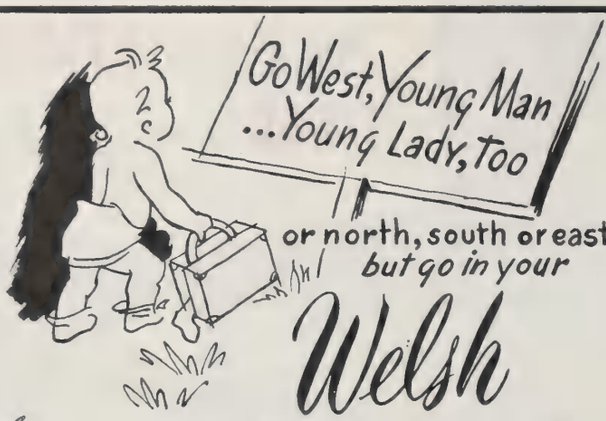
And Look!

KENTILE FLOORS are guaranteed as long as you live in your home!

THIS WONDERFUL money-saving floor gives you more advantages than the most expensive floor you can buy! It's custom-made for you . . . laid tile-by-tile in your own individual design . . . in any color combination you choose! It's so easy to keep spotlessly clean . . . resists scuffs and mars . . . washes easily with mild soap and water . . . needs only occasional no-rub waxings to keep it gleaming. And Kentile won't wear out . . . it's guaranteed as long as you live in your home. Even the lovely colors can't wear off, they go all the way through each rugged tile! Be sure to ask about beautiful Kentile floors at your dealer's.

Low-Cost KENTILE is ideal for Bathrooms, Playrooms and Kitchens!

* Price quoted above is for 12'x15' Living Room. Your Kentile floor may cost less or slightly more depending on the colors you choose; design, size, type and condition of floor; and freight rates to your city. Get a FREE estimate from your Kentile Dealer. Look under FLOORING in your classified directory for his name and address.



David E. Kennedy, Inc., 52 2nd Ave., Brooklyn 15, N.Y.

KENTILE . . . KENCORK . . . RUBBER TILE

KENTILE®

The Asphalt Tile of Enduring Beauty

or north, south or east but go in your

Welsh "Boodle Buggy"

LIFTS RIGHT OUT EASY TO CARRY

GOES IN THE CAR,

FOLDS FOR STORAGE

Save the expense of renting a crib — take your own Travel Bed wherever you go! Use it in the car, on train or 'plane — in tourist camp or hotel!

So easy ... Lift the body out of frame.

AT ALL LEADING STORES

WELSH COMPANY

World's largest manufacturer of folding baby carriages

1535 S. EIGHTH ST. • ST. LOUIS 4, MO.

sincerity. "I don't know what I would have done if Arthur had had to go."

Kenny wanted to ask why Arthur hadn't been in the service; as far as he knew, Arthur had always been in good physical condition.

"How about a drink?" Mr. Bowman asked again.

Kenny was unable to understand why the man was attempting to be so friendly; it didn't follow, not after the unpleasant scene that had ended their last encounter. Maybe he thought irrationally, he wants a drink so he can get up courage to throw me out again. He half smiled, then said, "No, I really don't think so, thanks."

"I suppose Robbie has told you her good news," Mrs. Bowman said.

"News?" Kenny looked at Robbie questioningly. Robbie was looking at her mother with an expression that was more exasperation than anything else, and he suddenly was alarmed. "What news, Robbie?"

Robbie said, "Oh, mamma."

Mrs. Bowman said, "Our Robbie is going to announce her engagement next week."

Kenny felt faint. He couldn't look at anyone but Mr. Bowman; and then he thought he understood why the man had been so cordial. "Why," he said, "swell." The flat, hopeless tone communicated everything. "Who to?"

"To Hap Schiller," said Mrs. Bowman. "You probably knew Hap in school, didn't you? Or, wait—Hap went to the Academy. You went to McClockey, didn't you?"

"I knew Hap very well," said Kenny.

"Isn't that good news?" Mrs. Bowman went on. "Such a nice boy. We've known him ever since Arthur and Robbie were very small."

"Well, congratulations, Robbie," Kenny said.

"Next week Robbie will be having a party at the club, and you must —— Oh, but you won't be in town, will you?"

"I'm afraid I'll be going back to New York tomorrow."

"So nice to have seen you again," Mrs. Bowman said. She put out her hand. "Do come and see us again sometime."

"Yes," said Mr. Bowman. He, too, put out his hand. "We can have that drink then; how about it?"

"Swell," Kenny said. "I'd like to."

"Good night, Neff," said Mr. Bowman, following his wife across the front room.

"Good night," Kenny said. He picked up his service cap from the arm of the red leather chair and finally looked at Robbie. "Good night, Robbie."

Her voice was unnaturally shrill. "Stay!"

He sat down.

Two awful minutes passed. Kenny began to stare at her; he stared until she nervously stood up, walked to the front room and came back.

"I'm sorry you had to hear it that way, Kenny," she said.

"I won't ask why you didn't tell me."

"I wanted to do it later." She closed her eyes tightly.

"You're twenty-two," he said, "or is it twenty-three? And you're still acting the way little girls do. 'Robbie dear, put on your party dress. Robbie dear, don't go around with Kenny Neff. Robbie dear, marry Hap.' I hope you have a ——"

She sat erect. "You've got no right to say those things, Kenny."

He picked up his cap, gripping it as though he wanted to rip it in shreds; and then the tension collapsed inside him. "I know," he said. "I guess I never had any rights in the whole situation. I never had any right to get interested in you in the first place, no right to get to know you. Your father made that clear, perfectly clear."

"Kenny," she said, "don't talk like a martyr. He just thought we were getting too serious, that's all."

Kenny said, his voice rising, "If we're talking about rights, what right did he have to decide that?"

"After all, he is my father," she said added hesitantly, "And maybe it wa fault. I didn't say anything about g married, exactly, but I talked about girls who were engaged, and I guess n once or twice I said I wasn't sure whet not I wanted to go to college in the fall. I said was enough to worry him."

Kenny shook his head. "It wasn' idea of your getting married that w him—a lot of babes around here get m when they're eighteen. They just want you to marry me." His voice b rough. "The snobs!"

"Don't say that!"

"It's true."

"It is not. You wanted to believe i it wasn't. All my father did was ask yo to be too serious, and you lost your te You ruined everything. When I told about you in the first place, they h objection—they liked you, even, whe started coming out. They ——"

"They didn't like me as well as Sch he put in hastily.

"—— and they were very nice to except Arthur, and he didn't count. D remember how mother used to give car when we had dates?"

"I never wanted to take it. It wa charity."

Her voice was distraught. "It wasn' Kenny, why are you this way? Why a so stubborn?" She clasped her hands t and her brown eyes were bright with "I've thought about this a lot, Ke I thought about it all the time you were and I think I finally began to unde what made you the way you did. I know how it happene somewhere just befo met me you got mix about—well, about a things. Somewhere y the idea that just b your parents didn't lot of money that was something ashamed of, and because your pare and you can't blame them, because didn't really know better—because you ents wanted you to do something else b draw your pictures, you thought ther something shameful about that too. M Ed had something to do with it, too—I know what he thought about things, know you and he felt about them the way." She caught her breath, and h tried to interrupt. "Don't stop me. K Somewhere you got off the track, Kenn I never realized it—I never realized serious it was until you had that scen daddy. You're ——"

What we need most is not so much to realize the ideal as to idealize the real.
—F. H. HEDGE.

"You're wrong," he said coldly.

"You see?" she wailed. "You won' listen to me, Kenny! You won't look truth about yourself! Do you know w think? I'll tell you — I think you' snob!"

She sat back, her eyes open wi though surprised at what she had Kenny's mouth opened, first in indign then in confusion, then in a mixture two, and finally in thunderous recogn At last he saw, completely and clearl part of himself he had glimpsed that he'd worn the Tux to the Buchanan dance. But the sight was too much f just then; the knowledge was too d ing.

"It's not true," he said, in a whisper.

"It is," she said, nodding. And then: but Kenny, I ——" and she was sta in his arms.

He stared at her for a moment, kiss twice, then suddenly sat on the floor, p her with him; she protested, at firs after a second she came to him wil almost happily. He kissed her again.

"Robbie," he began, "I don't what Wait." Doubts beset him "If you believe the things you just sai that mean you don't love me?"

"Love doesn't have anything to d those things." She said it firmly, but last three words she seemed to choke.

(Continued on Page 187)

Four boxed corners fit sheet to mattress like a second skin. Taut tuck-under prevents sheet from wrinkling.

WHY FIGHT SHEETS ALL NIGHT?

Amazing CONTOUR sheet can't wrinkle, can't pull out... and now at the price of conventional sheets

WHY SLEEP ON ridges and wrinkles all night? Pacific's Contour* is an amazing new kind of sheet that fits tight as a drum, can't wrinkle, can't pull out, no matter how you toss and turn. Wake refreshed, bottom sheet smooth as when you went to bed. Morning re-making goes in a jiffy because there's no re-tucking to do.

Here's the secret: Sheet corners are cut, taped, and sewed to fit your mattress like a second skin. As you slip on the four corners a generous tuck-under pops into place on all four sides, holds the sheet taut and firm, until you take it off.

Pacific Contour Sheets keep their fit because they're Sanforized. They're dollar-savers, too . . . cost less to launder because they're less bulky, weigh less. Practically iron themselves! Available in double, twin, and crib sizes, combed percale and extra-strength muslin. Standard sizes adjust to slight variations in mattress thickness.

Try your favorite store or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. K-9, 214 Church St., New York 13, N. Y.

*TM Pacific Mills Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

For each bed in your home you need . . .

6 Pacific Contour Sheets, bottoms
6 Pacific Hemmed Sheets, tops
6 pairs Pacific Pillow Cases
2 Pacific Quilted Mattress Pads

If there's a baby in the house, add

6 Pacific Cribfast* Sheets
6 Pacific Quilted Pads

It's a PACIFIC sheet

BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS

Live with tomorrow's fashions today.

"Forecast Carpets and Rugs" by magee

This is "CRAFTPOINT"... a luxurious new Wilton, one of Magee's famous carpets-of-tomorrow.

makes a house a home

Available now in Pewter Grey (shown here), Surf Green, Beach Beige. 27 inch, 9, 12 and 15 foot width

THE MAGEE CARPET COMPANY · BLOOMSBURG,

GLOVES BY ANDRÉ DAVID

MAKE YOUR OWN DECORATING PLANS. SEND 25¢ FOR FASCINATING "MAGEE ROOM SERVICE KIT" WITH MINIATURE CUT-OUTS, BRUSH AND WATER CO

(Continued from Page 184)

"That proves I'm right," he said stolidly. 'If I'm the one you want, why're you narrying Schiller? They're forcing you into t, aren't they?"

She shook her head miserably. "No, they ren't. Hap's always been around, you now that. I've known him all my life. I vas sure you'd never come back, or that if ou came back you wouldn't be changed—ou'd still have those ideas about not being anted—and I was sure we'd never get to-ether. I thought you'd forgotten me. You ever wrote."

"I wanted to. I'll bet I started a hundred tters."

"Oh, Kenny, I wanted to hear from you much," she told him. "I thought about ou every night. I used to worry and I cried ll the time."

His voice hardened a little. "If that's true, hy Hap?"

"I told you," she said. "He was just al-ays around, that's all. And he's nice, nd ——"

"He's nice," Kenny said, his voice getting arse again, "and he's rich, and your par-nts want you to marry him, and ——"

"Kenny," she said quietly, "you'd better ."

He stood up, and pulled her to her feet. Good night, Robbie."

She caught him at the door and put her ms around him. "Oh, Kenny, please ——"

He grasped her by the shoulders and held r away to look at her. "You can't do it!" said fiercely. "You're my girl, Robbie."

She closed her eyes, clenched her little ts, and put them against his chest. She ook her head.

"Please." Now he was almost crying. t's your life, Robbie. Don't let them run —don't let them ruin it!"

"They aren't," she cried—and it was al-ost a scream. "You are!" Sobbing, she rned and ran up the steps. He heard the or to her room slam.

Quietly, he opened the front door, stepped t, closed it behind him and walked down e long driveway, where he turned and oked back at the house. There were no hts on the second floor. He imagined her her room, weeping on her bed, and he t his old angers and doubts return. The obs, he thought, and the words brought ck to him, at once, the things she had d, the truths about himself that he didn't nt to hear. He took a half step forward, as ough to go back, and then the realization hit him as hard and impersonally as the flak had hit him that day in the bomber. He wasn't willing to admit that everything she had said was true, but he knew that she had been close to the truth—close enough to make him realize how wrong he had been. He started forward, thinking he would go up and knock on the door, and she would come down, and he would tell her he knew he was wrong, and she would kiss him, and then she would go upstairs and get some clothes together (if her parents asked what she was doing she would simply tell them and so would he), and then they would go and tell his parents and go back to New York and get married and ——

She was going to marry Hap Schiller.

He stopped, halfway to the door, and looked up again at the dark second-story windows. He stared at them a long time, as though hoping for some flash of light, some signal, some sign that she was looking out, hoping for him to come back. There was no sign, and there never would be. He opened his mouth to call, but as he began to form her name he felt ridiculous: it was exactly the sort of thing that Buchanan Club people did not do. He turned, then, and walked away, not looking back at the house, and when he finally came to a street corner he sat down under the light, took off his cap and began slapping his knee with it. This time he didn't weep. He simply sat, staring inward.

After his discharge from the Army he took a two-room apartment with a skylight on Barrow Street in Greenwich Village and began to look for work in magazines. It came easily; in less than a week he had enough assignments to keep him occupied for two months. He bought a great deal of expensive equipment and materials, including an air brush he didn't really need, fixed up the apartment the way he wanted it and started to work.

Tried to start.

The first job he did, an illustration for a boy-girl romance, was a relatively easy warm-up, and took him only a day of steady work. He felt good and sure as he sketched, and he was satisfied with the penciled version, but when he took up his pens and watercolor brushes, he wasn't so certain. He leaned back, examined the drawing carefully, and knew he couldn't submit it to the editor who had given him the job. It was an acceptable piece of draftsmanship, but there was something wrong with the picture: the people in it looked as though he'd used clothing-store dummies as models. They were standing stiffly, and the smiles on their faces weren't remotely real. That night he fell asleep with his clothes on. The next day he tried again, and again the sketch didn't come off. He went to bed early that night, but didn't fall asleep until around four A.M. When he awoke around eleven he went straight to the drawing table, trying to concentrate on the work he had to finish, but by six that night, after twenty-odd false starts, he knew that it was no use. He went to sleep again. Two or three hours later he awoke, his head feeling as though someone had taken a knife and cut a deep gash from the outside corner of his left eyebrow to a point about an inch below his left ear. Nevertheless, he tottered to the drawing table, sat down, tacked on a new sheet of paper and picked up his pencil. Then he threw it down and went to the telephone.

The operator was exasperating. She didn't understand the name of the town at first, she got the number wrong until Kenny corrected her irritably, and she pronounced the name "Bowmer." Kenny, sweating, lighted his third cigarette.

"Hello?"

The fact that it really was her voice, that she really was there, was almost more than he could stand. For a second or two he couldn't speak; all he could think of was that she always sounded the same on the telephone, always like a little girl.

"This is the Bowman residence," she repeated. "Hello?"

"It's me." He didn't sound at all like himself.

"Who did you wish to —— Kenny!"

"I'm sorry to call you this late," he said, thinking as he said it that it wasn't actually very late.

"Are you in town?"

"No, New York."

She said nothing, and he literally began to tremble.

"Listen," he said, desperately keeping his voice from shaking, "I've got something to tell you, Robbie." He swallowed, wishing he could get his breath. "You were right." He paused. "I've thought about everything you said—I haven't been able to think about anything else. I don't know how it happened to me, but it did; I was the snob, you were right. I haven't thought about anything else for two weeks. I can't work. I haven't drawn a line. I know it's too late, but I had to call you and tell you that I think you're right, and"—he broke off, gasping—"and," he finished lamely, "I'm sorry."

"Kenny," she said, "I ——" She stopped.

For nearly a minute there was no sound but the faint static on the long-distance connection.

"Are you still there?" she said at last.

"Yes," he said. "Are you?" Struck by the ridiculousness of the question, he laughed. "Well, I guess that's all. I hope you'll be very happy. I mean that. I'm sorry it didn't work out, Robbie."

Without saying good-by he put down the telephone abruptly, bent his head and propped it in his hands, and sat that way nearly fifteen minutes. He didn't want to think, he didn't want to feel: he wanted to cry, but knew that he wouldn't allow himself that cheap, unsatisfying release. "Well," he said aloud, "so much for that." He sat down at the drawing table, and as he did he knew that this time his work would go along smoothly.

He was right: it went along so well that the sharp headache faded away, and when he next looked at the clock it was four A.M. He leaned back in the chair, exhausted, dropped off to sleep, and awoke around ten in the morning. It took him a second or two to realize that the telephone was ringing. He picked it up, wondering who could be calling him, and realized that his back and neck and arms were stiff from sleeping in the chair.

Her voice was as cool and sweet as his forehead was hot when he realized who it was. "How on earth," she said, without any preliminaries, "do I get from this station to Barrow Street?"

THE END

"Does that help? I'll finish this chapter in a minute."

the one sewing machine that has everything . . .
does everything . . .
sews everything!

PFAFF
WORLD FAMOUS SINCE 1862

select any stitch
dial it...sew it...
no attachments needed!

Even beginners can be sewing wizards—with a Pfaff! Just flick the dial—easy as turning on your radio! Fully guaranteed—parts and service always available. Complete selection of period and modern cabinets and portables.

With exclusive dial-a-stitch you can sew: zig-zag, plain, buttons, button-holes, borders, set-in laces, cut-out work, darn, applique, monogram, blind-stitch, and many more!

write for complete information!
Pfaff Sewing Machine Corp., Dept. A-4
39 Cortlandt Street, New York 7, N. Y.

"At Lamb School you'll learn where meadows are richest, dew is sweetest and where the coolest shadows are featherstitched with sun.

You'll learn how to grow the thickest, strongest, softest, loveliest fleece in the world, Ophelia.

"Then, someday, that most particular St. Marys man will say: 'Ophelia's fleece is fine enough for a St. Marys Blanket!'

"That's top billing, darling. . . ."

ST. MARYS BLANKETS

ST. MARYS, OHIO

ST. MARYS BLANKETS ST. MARYS ROBES

DISTRIBUTORS OF THE THREE WEAVERS HANDWOVEN THROWS

© 1950 St. Marys Woolen Mfg. C

Army service halted Todd's career in '41, but brought him Katherine, who knows, too, "acting's in the blood."

"THE MOST TALENTED KID IN TOWN"

Meet the Todd Karns, of Hollywood. Todd isn't a star, or even a name actor, but people who know what it takes say he will be.

By ROGER BUTTERFIELD

SWING south off Sunset Boulevard near the place where it runs out of Hollywood and into Beverly Hills and you can quickly lose yourself in short side streets that all look pretty much alike. Here the little green and buff and salmon-colored stucco houses crowd closely together, though each has its tiny front lawn and its flower beds. Flowers are cheap in Southern California; they spring up wherever there is a garden hose. And when you add their vivid colors to the sun-baked hues of the houses, even a tired old street can be beautiful.

The children give life to this section. They spill out of the too-small houses and leave their toys and tricycles strewn across the sidewalks; on hot afternoons they squat on the curb and try to make mud pies out of sand that is always too dry. Although Ciro's night club is only a few blocks away, this is not the fabulous Hollywood of convertible Cadillacs and tiled swimming pools and cool tree-shaded estates. But it is Hollywood nevertheless, and one of the oldest parts of town. Some of the houses here, the residents will tell you with awe, are actually thirty years old.

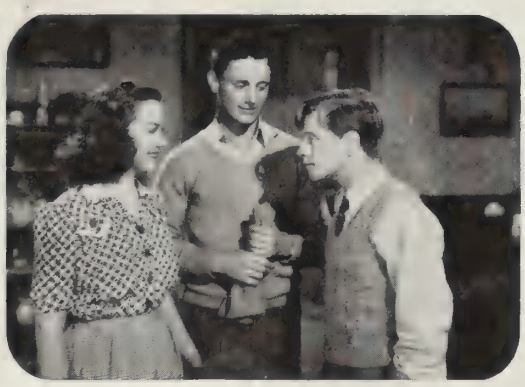
The house at 8959 Norma Place, where Actor Todd Karns and his pretty blond wife Katherine and their four-year-old daughter Tina live, is one of the older ones. It is a low, square four-room house with grayish-white stucco walls and a peaked roof and a small front porch which is always full of Tina's express wagons and fire trucks. A hedge of red geraniums five feet tall runs along the driveway to the one-car garage where Todd keeps his 1938 Chevrolet coupé. (He bought it ten years ago for $500 cash, and it is still running fine.) In the back yard there are a couple of young fig trees, and some wire clotheslines that are always busy, and two chain swings for Tina and her friends and a concrete incinerator for rubbish. About the only other thing there is room for is a lean-to shed of whitewashed boards which used to be a chicken coop but which Todd has converted

With Tina Karns, 4, "everything's a production"—from mud pies to new speed records in her express wagon.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY DON ORNITZ

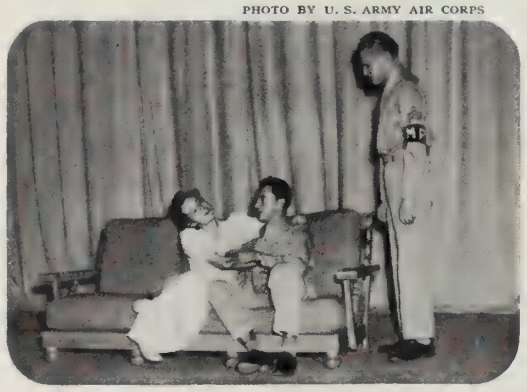
Telephone is important to the Karns—"an actor never knows when a call might come for him." Todd has an agent who "does the scurrying for movie work"; if he has lined up a job, interview or screen test, he will phone that news to Todd early in the day.

Talent alone won't fill the family dinner table—and "even actors like to eat."



into a studio, with a wood-burning fireplace and barbecue inside. Th is where the Karns hold most of their dinner parties, and have fun i the evening with their friends.

Todd Karns is a motion-picture actor and a good one, according t some well-qualified experts. Leo McCarey, for instance, the man wh produced Going My Way and other smash hits, thinks that Todd ha "the brightest future of any young man in Hollywood." And Jimm Stewart, the actor, grows positively lyrical in assessing Todd's poten tialities. "He's loaded with talent," says Jimmy. "He stands out fro the crowd around here like a—like a—bonfire in the night!"



But talent alone won't fill the family dinner table. And as Katherin who does the cooking, says: "Even actors like to eat—especially m actor!" Since Todd got out of the Army at the end of 1945 he has ha less than one year's work in a total of five pictures. Three of thes jobs were for featured roles, while two were small "speaking parts that lasted two days each. His earnings from all five came to $11,36 Add to this $2740 which he picked up doing short stints as an acto and part-time director in television, and you get a total of $14,10 Subtract the usual 10 per cent for his agent, and you're back t

High lights from Todd Karns' own story

PHOTO BY U. S. ARMY AIR CORPS

Todd was "one of 1941's most promising actors" after role in Andy Hardy's Private Secretary.

Army brought Todd and Wac Katherine Flaten together when they lent talents to a camp show.

"Strictly against regulations"—officer dating e listed Wac. Dates, later marriage, were secre

Good Sam, with Gary Cooper, gave Todd good part in '47 at $600 a week—but for 4 weeks only.

1948–9 brought movies' "big scare"; few jobs. In '50, "best part to date" in It's a Small World.

Temporary job as assistant director for televisi studio provides modest pay—but good experienc $12,697. Deduct another $4000 for hospital and medical bills—Katherine has had two serious operations, and surgeons, like almost everybody else, seem to assume that all movie actors are swimming in money—and you're down to $8697. Divide this by 4½ years, and you get something like $37.16 a week for such trifles as food, clothing, monthly house payments, an antitermite treatment for the kitchen wall, telephone and electric bills, furniture, tires, gasoline, insurance.

Obviously it isn't enough, and the Karns are frank to admit it. They have got by so far, and stayed out of serious debt, by infinite ingenuity and the utmost thrift. Katherine's food bills rarely come to more than $15 a week plus $3 a week for milk, which is sensationally low for Hollywood. Whenever she finds a good "special" in meat at the nearby supermarket, she buys a large quantity, and stores the surplus in the freezing compartment of her refrigerator. She serves lots of fresh fish, which in California comes as low as 9 cents a pound. Spanish rice, and pea soup cooked with a chunk of salt pork, are other "main" dishes which don't cost much.

It was Katherine who discovered Veteran Salvage, Inc., a kind of permanent rummage sale in a big concrete warehouse just around the

During lull in his acting career Todd took up painting—with Tina's Christmas-gift paints. It was just fun at first, later serious ("with making money in mind," says Katherine) when his gay, colorful pictures found ready market at $25 to $125 each, paid surprising $3000 first year.

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

When he has no acting job Todd paints 6 or 7 hours a day, finds Katherine a hard-headed and helpful critic. Back-yard studio, once a chicken coop, has fireplace, barbecue, now provides room for entertaining.

's a Wonderful Life (Todd played Jimmy Stew-'s brother) made 1946 best year financially.

th actress Helen Chapman, Todd plays lead in films about young-marrieds Jackson and Jill.

Already a complex personality at 4, Tina has a well-developed sense of drama, loves speed, often plays so hard she literally drops. Four-room Karns' home is old for Hollywood—30 years; was once home of Todd's actor father, Roscoe Karns.

"Thinking out" a picture problem in his studio, Todd is reminded of an appointment by Katherine. Sometimes he wonders if he should give up acting, earn his living painting and designing textiles. So far the answer has been "no"—acting's still his first, and real, love.

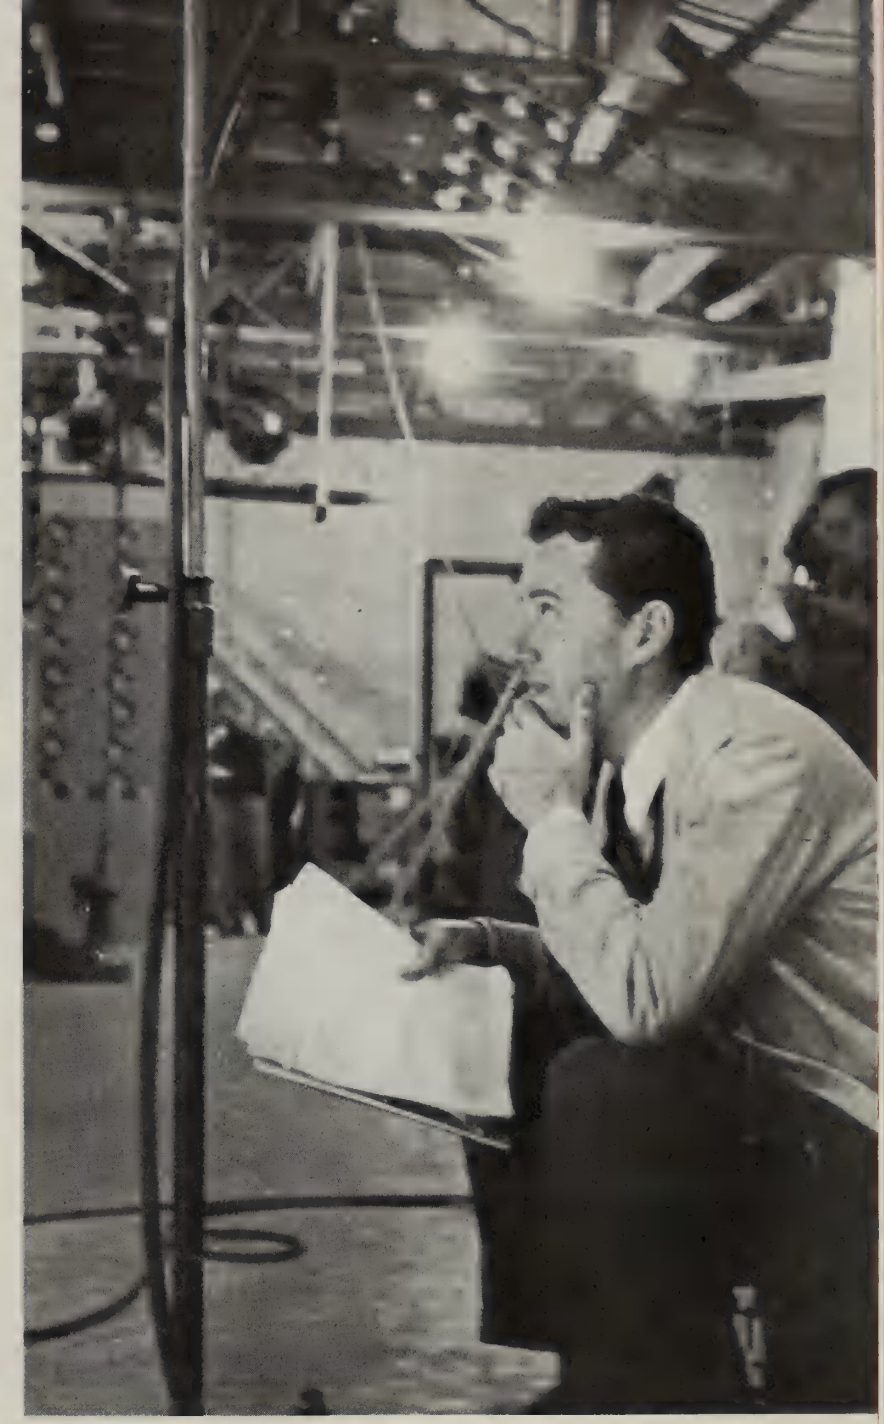
"We are not what America thinks o corner from their home. She bought a wicker rocking chair there for $1, painted it white, and installed it as an attractive feature of her semi-Victorian living room. A walnut ladder-back with cane seat also cost her $1, but it took her a week to scrape the paint off it. Todd buys secondhand work pants at Veteran Salvage, for 50 cents a pair.

Luckily for them Todd's father, Roscoe Karns, himself a well-known film and television actor, holds title to their house. Todd pays the $40-a-month finance charge in lieu of rent, but when he is hard-pressed his father takes over part of the burden on a loan basis.

Both Todd and Katherine are veterans and they have long since collected and spent the 52 payments of $20 a week which they were allowed after the war. And at times when he is really flat Todd doesn't

The Karns don't care much for big Hollywood parties, like to entertain a few close friends informally, with beer, steaks barbecued at the studio fireplace.



"I love having him home most of the time," Katherine says, "and he really knows his four-year-old as well as I do." During long convalescence following Katherine's second, incomplete pregnancy, Todd kept up his work, cared for Tina, did most of cooking and cleaning.

…hen it hears 'Hollywood actor.'" hesitate to go down to the big building at Santa Monica and Orange Drive where the State of California hands out $25-a-week unemployment-insurance checks to jobless men with families. This isn't relief money, exactly; it is fully financed by a payroll tax on employers, and anyone who has earned a certain amount the previous year, and is willing and able to work again, is entitled to it. Todd has had plenty of professional company on these trips, for movie profits have declined sharply in recent years, and hundreds of competent actors and actresses—thousands if you count the "extras"—have been out of work in Hollywood.

Todd's biggest "break," if you want to call it that, has been with his painting. He has always been interested in making pictures, though Todd's "assistant director's" job on television called for script changes, arranging props, pinch-hitting for actors; ended recently. "What did I do? Came home, ate a good meal, and washed the dishes. I always wash the dishes when I get fired."

Real celebration calls for a rare evening out for dinner and dancing. A favorite spot, La Golondrina, on downtown Los Angeles' famed Olvera Street.

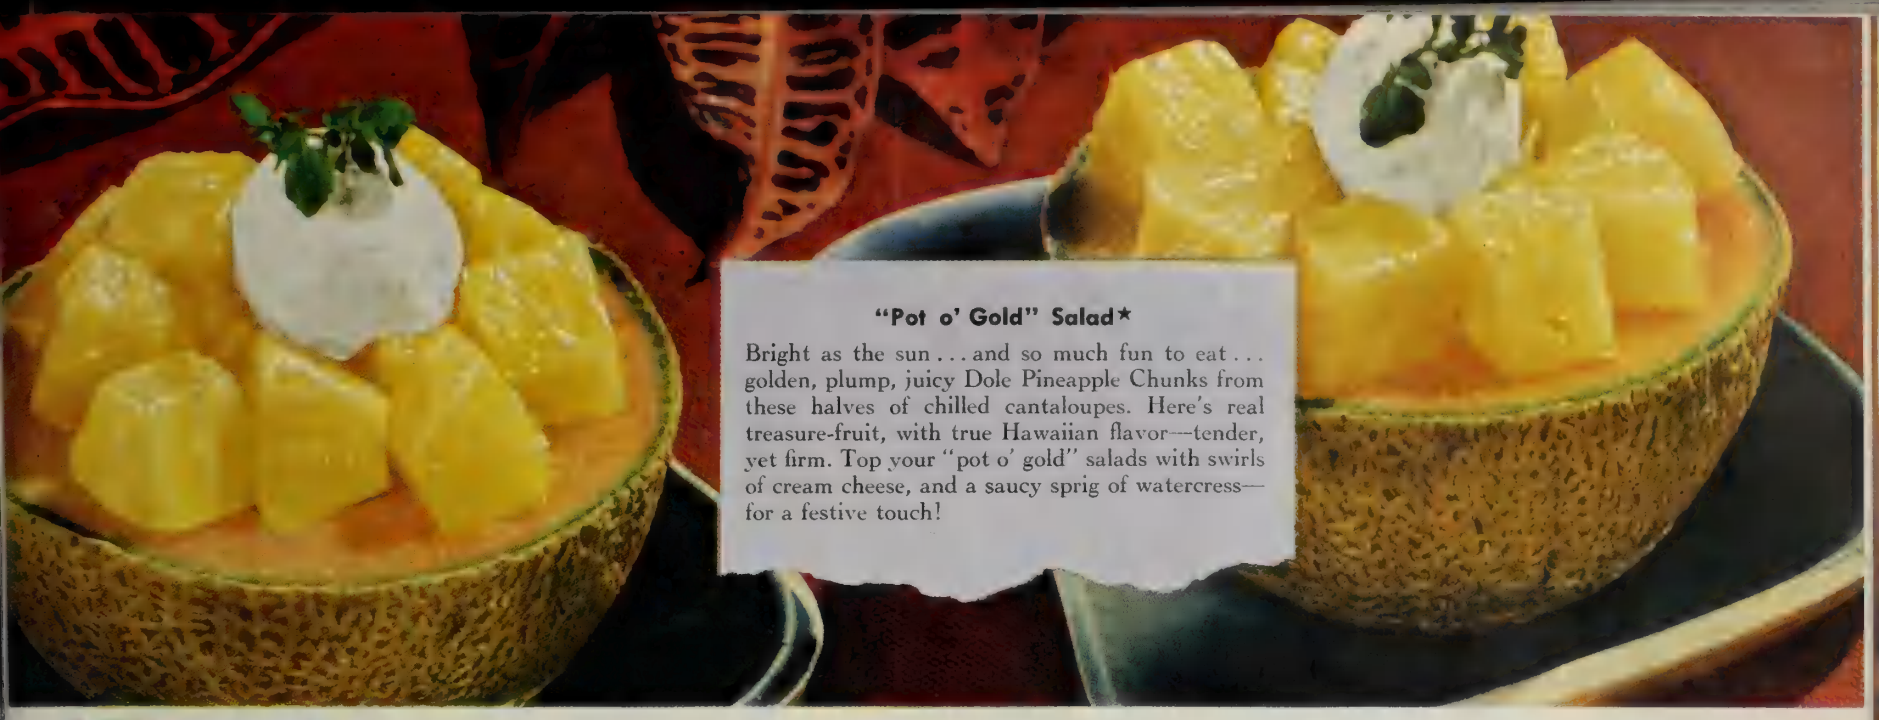
Katherine has been actress, radio announcer, designer, librarian, Wac—she can cook a 36-cent dinner for 3, or collaborate on a scenario with Todd.

"We're solving our problems in our own way—and successfully."

totally lacking in any kind of art training. In 1947, when he was broke and out of work, he did a little water-color landscape as a Christmas present for his parents. It was pretty crude, but Todd had fun doing it, and when Tina came home with a box of water colors from a party soon afterward, Todd confiscated it and did some more. He worked mostly from snapshots of places he had seen in Europe before the war—street corners, churches, the Paris flower markets, and so on.

In January, 1948, he took three of these early efforts to Barker Brothers, a big downtown furnishing store. To his great surprise the lady buyer in the art-and-gift section paid him $12.50 apiece for them, ordered more, and gave him a little window display. His work was labeled "Primitive," and sold out within a month.

Todd's next-door neighbor, Al Ruditzky, heard about this and took Todd to see his brother, who had just opened a new night club on "The Strip," which is really Sunset Boulevard. The brother gave him a big commission to paint eighteen world-famous restaurants, like Maxime's in Paris and Antoine's in New Orleans, to decorate his club's lounge. Singer Frank Sinatra saw these night-club pictures and asked Todd to do a series of New York City scenes for his office in Beverly Hills. Garry Moore, the radio comedian, also ordered a painting from Todd.



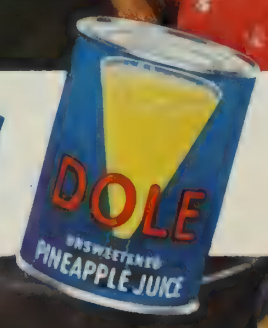
All together, in his first year as an artist-for-profit, Todd earned nearly $3000 by painting. This was phenomenal, when you consider that some really distinguished painters go on for years without collecting half as much. Todd attributes his success to two things: 1—His early prices were low, from $25 to $100; and 2—He tries to give his customers exactly what they want, in (Continued on Page 203)

"No money in the bank, but we're eating, and all the bills are being paid."

Television's a "must"—Tina insists. Favorites, Hopalong, puppet "Beanie."

"Pot o' Gold" Salad★

Bright as the sun . . . and so much fun to eat . . . golden, plump, juicy Dole Pineapple Chunks from these halves of chilled cantaloupes. Here's real treasure-fruit, with true Hawaiian flavor—tender, yet firm. Top your "pot o' gold" salads with swirls of cream cheese, and a saucy sprig of watercress—for a festive touch!



Hawaii comes to your house —

Ham Crushettes★

Give that leftover baked ham a brand new lease on life—with Dole Crushed Pineapple to provide the glamor! Just make your favorite ham croquettes, heat a can of Dole Crushed, and spoon it around the croquettes with a generous hand. You'll like that rich pineapple taste—for Dole Crushed is crisp-cut, not mashed or shredded!

when you have DOLE for dinner!

Five-Fruit Cake★

Good way to get acquainted with a grand new treat—Dole Fruit Cocktail—now on your grocer's shelves! In one wonderful swoop, you get whole peaches and pears gem-cut into sparkling cubelets, plump grapes, bright cherries—all blended with pineapple by Dole. Serve with layers of cake and whipped cream—or straight and chilled from the can.

★By Patricia Collier, DOLE HOME ECONOMIST
DOLE, 215 Market Street, San Francisco 6, California

ONLY
Improved FELS-NAPTHA OFFERS THESE WASHING ADVANTAGES

1. Mild, golden soap.
2. Gentle, active naptha.
3. Finer 'Sunshine' Ingredients that give white things extra, brilliant whiteness—make washable colors brighter than new.

Yes, little girl, your Mother's a very smart lady . . . she is a regular user of Fels-Naptha Soap Chips—now improved for finer washing results.

You and Mother will have your wash done in a jiffy, with Fels-Naptha and your wonderful automatic washer working together. Your play-soiled dresses will come sparkling clean and fresh and fragrant, because Fels-Naptha combines the extra washing energy of golden soap and gentle naptha, plus the special 'Sunshine' ingredient that makes washes 'sparkle-white and color-bright.'

IMPROVED
Fels-Naptha Soap
WITH NEW 'SUNSHINE' INGREDIENTS

Main Dish for Four $1

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

KATHERINE KARNS has several pet economies: buying day-old bread, rolls, pies, and so on, at bargain prices; using margarine, and always buying the supermarket special for the day in meat or fish—whatever it may be. "When shad is nine cents a pound, for instance, I buy shad, and for about a quarter we have a delicious dish for dinner.

"Spending only fifteen dollars a week (bottled milk is extra) for food is not such a feat. Three or four of my friends spend only that much and they all have larger families than I do," Katherine says. "Here in California our variety of fresh fruits is so large and usually plentiful and cheap that I think there is little excuse for extravagant spending. We don't have meat every day—we eat more local fish and are completely happy with good things like Spanish rice and homemade vegetable and pea soup as the main dish—one reason budgeting is fairly easy for us."

Whether it's easy or a struggle for you to keep the week's meals within the limits of your own top figure for food spending, a main dish for four that is a pleasure to eat and that has the added advantage of costing in the neighborhood of a dollar is welcome in anyone's menu plans. Here are seven good ones that may cost more or less than their price tags, depending on the price situation.

★ ★ ★

BEEF-AND-NOODLE CASSEROLE

Approximate cost, $1.08. Serves 4.

Brown 1 pound raw ground beef in 1 tablespoon shortening. Add ⅓ cup chopped onion and cook a few minutes. Cook ½ package noodles (4 ounces) in boiling salted water and drain. Mix with meat and onions and add 1 cup cooked or canned peas, ⅔ cup diced celery, ⅓ cup diced green pepper and 1 can mushroom soup, thinned with 1¼ cups milk. Season with 1 teaspoon salt and a good dash of pepper. Mix well; pour into a casserole. Dot with margarine or lay 2 strips bacon over the top. Bake 1 hour in moderately slow oven, 325° F.

★ ★ ★

LAMB KIDNEYS TARTARE

Approximate cost, 95c. Serves 4.

Buy 8 lamb kidneys for 4 (about 1 pound). Remove outer membrane and fat. Draw a sharp knife nearly through each kidney from the outer or rounded part without actually cutting in two. Spread open. Brush with melted margarine. Season with salt and pepper. Broil under moderate heat until just done. Serve on toast, hollow side up, with a spoonful of tartare sauce in the hollow of each.

Tartare sauce: To ⅓ cup mayonnaise add 2 tablespoons minced dill pickle, 2 or 3 stuffed olives, chopped, ½ teaspoon grated onion and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley.

★ ★ ★

NEAPOLITAN SOUFFLÉ

Approximate cost, 44c. Serves 4.

Cook ½ cup elbow macaroni in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and add 1½ tablespoons margarine. Make a thick cream sauce as you do for the base of any soufflé, using 2 tablespoons margarine, 2 tablespoons flour and ½ cup milk. Add 1 cup canned tomatoes, 1 cup grated American cheese, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon paprika and some pepper. Add macaroni, and heat together for a minute. Cool slightly. Beat the yolks of 3 eggs until thick, and fold into the macaroni-and-cheese combination. Lastly, beat the 3 whites and fold them in. Pour into a 1½-quart baking dish or casserole. Set in pan of hot water and bake 45 minutes in a moderate oven, 350° F.

★ ★ ★

BLANQUETTE OF VEAL

Approximate cost, 96c. Serves 4.

Have 2 pounds shoulder or breast of veal cut into 2- or 3-inch pieces. Put in pan with water to cover. Bring to boil. Remove scum. Simmer, adding 2 small atherine Karns keeps within the limits of 15 for her week's meals—says it's easy.

ions (stick 1 clove in each), 1 carrot, ed, ▪ sprig of parsley, 1 teaspoon t and a pinch of basil. Simmer slowly til tender. In last part of cooking—at is, just before the veal is tender—d 8–10 small peeled onions. When at and onions are tender, strain th. Remove all vegetables but the 10 onions added last. Thicken broth th a little flour and water. It uldn't be thick—just past being ny. Heat and add meat and onions. d some of the gravy to 2 slightly ten egg yolks. Return to pan. Add ablespoons lemon juice and ¼ tea-on grated lemon rind. Heat a few nutes, but do not let it boil. The nquette may be brought up to this nt in advance, adding egg at last nute. Serve around a bed of rice. rinkle with chopped parsley.

★ ★ ★

CHIPPED-BEEF FONDUE

Approximate cost, $1.01. Serves 4.

t 6 slices bread into small cubes. ate ¾ cup Cheddar cheese. Alter-e layers of bread and cheese in a king dish—having 4 layers in all and ling with cheese. Make a custard of int milk, 2 eggs, slightly beaten, l salt and pepper to taste. Pour this r the bread and cheese and bake 1 r in a moderately slow oven, 325° F. rtly before it is done, shred 6 ces chipped beef, then sauté in 3 lespoons margarine. (If beef is te salty, freshen it first by letting it nd in boiling water a few minutes, then draining.) Push the beef to side of pan—blend 3 tablespoons of flour into fat. Add 2 cups milk gradually. Stir until thickened. Season with pepper. Serve the chipped beef over the fondue.

★ ★ ★

BAKED PORK CHOPS WITH CORN

Approximate cost, $1.08. Serves 4.

Flour 4 shoulder pork chops (1¼ pounds) and brown in 1 tablespoon shortening. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Place chops in casserole. Sauté 2 medium onions, chopped, in the drippings. Sprinkle over the chops. Combine 1 No. 2 can whole-kernel corn, ½ cup chili sauce, ½ teaspoon salt, some pepper. Pour over chops and onion. Cover, bake 45 minutes in moderate oven, 350° F. Uncover and bake 10 minutes more.

★ ★ ★

SPANISH LAMB

Approximate cost, $1.10. Serves 4.

Put ¼ cup flour and ¾ teaspoon salt in a paper bag. Put 1¼ pounds lamb shoulder cut for stew in the bag and shake well so that the meat is evenly coated and seasoned. Brown meat evenly in 3 tablespoons bacon fat. Add 6 small peeled onions, 1 carrot, diced, 1 cup diced celery, 1 can tomato sauce, 1 cup water, 1 tablespoon vinegar, ¼ teaspoon thyme and ¼ cup chopped green pepper. Cover and simmer 1 hour or until lamb is tender. Skim off fat. Reseason to taste.

See your G-E Dealer. $34.95 Price subject to change without notice.

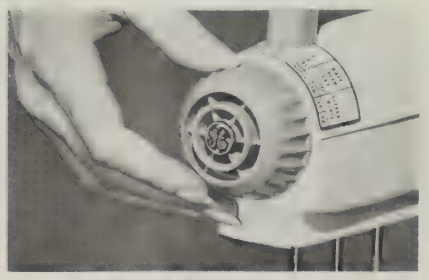
New! Beautiful! The 1950

General Electric Triple-Whip Mixer!

With 3 powerful beaters and the best juicer ever!



New juicer that strains automatically comes with each 1950 Triple-Whip Mixer. You'll love it. It lets you squeeze a dozen or more oranges with no clogging.

Built-in light shines directly down into bowl so you can clearly see what you're mixing. (A four-quart and a two-quart bowl accompany each mixer.)

For faster, more thorough mixing, you get three beaters. They're easy to clean. No center shafts, no hard-to-reach corners. Beat completely from center to side of bowl.

Improved Speed Selector—out in front where it's easy to read and set. You get lots of power no matter what you mix! General Electric Co., Bridgeport 2, Conn.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

This is an ordinary little room given style by its Rousseau color scheme, its area of unbroken color, a good new chair and tables and Todd Karns's modern paintings.

PHOTOS BY HAROLD FOWLER

Traditional pieces add a homey touch in an otherwise modern room and look comfortably at home.

Bare Elegance

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

"DEAR MISS MURDOCK: You requested that we submit our ideas on what we would like to have done to our living room in theme, feeling, and so on, within the limits of our budget. We want our walls a powdery terra cotta—complimentary to a couple of interesting old walnut pieces and, incidentally, flattering to myself. The rest of the decorating should consist of elimination. We want a freer, easier-to-keep-clean, uncluttered room with an air of bare elegance."

There were numerous changes that we helped Katherine Karns make in order to achieve the air of bare elegance which she desired. The first thing was to rip out a fake fireplace which broke up a good wall space and added clutter to the room. We then suggested making a real asset of the floor, since the Karns could not afford rugs or carpets. The floors were sanded and stained a deep walnut, very pleasing with the (Continued on Page 232)

We deliver more children than the STORK!

THANKS TO Flagship service, today's children are really going places—and going alone when they are old enough.
Parents know their little daughter can safely make the long trip to Grandma's and travel like a princess all the way.

You see it's so easy on a Flagship. No matter what the distance, she's there before her spirits wilt and party manners vanish.
And, how she loves mealtimes with her very own tray brought to her.

Blame us if she's just a trifle spoiled on arrival.
Our stewardesses will make a fuss over little passengers. Guess that's why so many children love to go by Flagship. Yours will, too.

America's Leading Airline AMERICAN AIRLINES INC.

Four-gore plaid skirt makes news because the 100 per cent wool is guaranteed washable. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6521, 24 to 34 waist. Worn with a black jacket.

Crisp white linen blouse with trim roll collar. Five buttons sparkle down the front, ribbon tie at neck. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7159, 12 to 20. Wear with plaid skirt.

$100 Pattern Wardrobe

By NORA O'LEARY

$100 must cover pretty Katherine Karns' every wardrobe need from morning shopping to evening partying. The JOURNAL took on the assignment and worked out a wardrobe which included even accessories and a topcoat (not shown) within the $100 budget. Designed to be interchangeable and practical, it is based on a black wool sheath dress with waist-length jacket. The total cost of fabric (Continued on Page 206)

Black wool dress with matching waist-length jacket, white linen collar, black velvet pill-box and bag. Vogue Design No. 7071, 12 to 20.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MARK SHAW

Slim black wool dress worn with a crisp black taffeta sash makes an exciting silhouette for dining and dancing. White doeskin gloves.

© VOGUE

The black sheath dress worn with a net overskirt banded and dotted with black velvet . . . gathered onto a velvet ribbon sash. Vogue Design No. 7102. Small, Medium, Large.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, Ont. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.)

"THE MOST TALENTED KID IN TOWN"

(Continued from Page 194)

ubject matter, and even in colors. (What e doesn't say, because he is very modest bout his work, is that his paintings are ways bright, amusing, and different from he usual run of decorative art.)

Todd is frankly in a quandary about his ainting. There are times when he has a rong impulse to chuck everything else and ust earn a moderate living by painting pic-ures and designing textiles and such. And here are other times when he realizes that his would probably be a mistake. His adven-ure in art has kept his creative energy burn-g during the long periods when he couldn't et regular work, and it has enhanced his lf-respect as well as his pocketbook.

But acting is in his blood.

Ten years ago, when Todd first broke into he movies, he seemed to be headed for ardom in a hurry. He was only 19 then: a im, self-possessed youngster with dark hair nd big brown eyes and a serious, watchful xpression that could change in a flash to a eaming smile. (He still looks pretty much he same, though the seriousness has eepened.) Todd had grown up in Hollywood here his father was a popular and successful ember of the movie colony, so he knew a lot the right people to start with. Even in high hool he was a remarkable golfer, and he ayed golf with Bing Crosby and Groucho arx and a lot of other celebrated characters.

It was Billy Grady, the hard-boiled talent out for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who "dis-vered" Todd for pictures, as the saying es. Grady watched him perform at the ax Reinhardt Workshop in Hollywood, d wrote a glowing report which began: This kid is the most talented kid in town. . . . in play light comedy with the best of them d also can do the dramatic. Watch Karns." etro promptly signed him to play opposite ickey Rooney in Andy Hardy's Private cretary and Todd almost stole the picture. uella Parsons said in her column that ickey had better watch his laurels, and she picked Todd as one of the ten most promis-ing actors of 1941.

Metro put him in another Andy Hardy picture and one named Eagle Squadron and then Fox grabbed him to be Jane Withers' leading man in an epic of the 4-H Clubs called Young America. At this point an em-barrassing interruption occurred when Todd developed make-up poisoning on his chin and had to quit the picture after three days. "I was crushed," he recalls. But Leo Mc-Carey signed him to a personal contract for a whole series of pictures he was planning to make, and Todd was riding high again.

It was just his tough luck, of course, that the Japs picked this particular time to bomb Pearl Harbor. But the fact remains that the nearly four years which Todd spent in the Army broke into his career at a crucial point—the point where he had already made good in a big way as an actor, but was not yet established as a box-office "property." When he got out he had to start almost at the beginning again, and that was really tough.

But if there had been no war, Todd might never have met Katherine, and that would have been tough too. Because Katherine is really something. Not only does she have an interesting face and an attractive figure—both important qualifications—but she has initiative, charm and brains. Katherine is a veritable blond volcano of helpful ideas, ranging all the way from a thirty-six-cent dinner menu for three to a movie scenario which she and Todd are writing in their spare time, and which they plan to produce on their own someday. Katherine has done a little acting herself, and she has also been a radio announcer, window designer, publicity girl, small-town librarian and a lot of other things in her 29 years, including a corporal in the Women's Army Corps, better known as WAC.

She was assigned to the publicity office of the big flight training center near Hobbs, New Mexico, when she first met Todd, or "Rock," as she calls him. (Todd's first name

How the Karns Spend Their Money

MOVIE actor Todd Karns' income is so irregular he and his wife have no fixed budget. "He just gives me $20 a week and that's it," says Katherine. When Todd has a job they live as cheaply as usual, and bank all they can against the big expenses that are sure to come. Following are their basic expenditures during the 52 weeks ending June 1:

	WEEKLY
Food (including $12-a-month milk bill)	$18.00
Payments on house	10.00
Clothing (about $100, mostly for alterations on secondhand things from their families)	2.00
Gas and electricity	2.00[1]
Telephone	2.00
Water (including $2.85 a month for softening service)	1.00
Newspapers and magazines	1.50
House furnishings	5.50[2]
Doctor and dentist	5.00[3]
Life and auto insurance	6.00
Gasoline, tires, etc.	4.00
Painting materials	7.00[4]
Club and union dues	.75[5]
Church and charity contributions	.25
Total	$65.00

Note: The Karns' earned income during the same 52-week period was considerably less than their expenses. Todd collected $2042—net—from movie and television work, and $803 from paintings and textile designs. The difference was met by a refund on his G. I. insurance, and by state unemployment-insurance checks.

[1] The kitchen gas stove supplies their only heat in winter. And even in Southern California, January can be cold!

[2] This includes installment payments on a new bed and set of table silver, and $83 which Todd paid for his television set on a trade-in.

[3] Until recently Katherine took monthly blood tests, to guard against possible anemia.

[4] Including wood and molding for frames, which Todd and Katherine make for all his pictures.

[5] Todd's necessary card in the Screen Actors Guild costs $4.50 a quarter. He also has an "honorary" membership ($9 a year) in the Hollywood Athletic Club, and Katherine belongs to the Beverly Hills Women's Club ($12 a year).

BIG COMPLIMENTS COST YOU LITTLE!

...all wool home-sewn original of

"BOTANY"*

brand CERTIFIED† FABRIC for Home Sewing

This classic suit is made of "Botany" Brand Flannel. Simplicity Pattern #3310. As seen in Simplicity Pattern Book.

LOOK FOR THE "BOTANY" BRAND LABEL ON PRODUCTS FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

CROSS COUNTRY COLORS
New and true fashion hues—Exclusively Botany! Metropolitan Red...Overland Grey ...Coastal Green...Suburban Rust.

This "save-as-they-rave" suit...in a dashing pattern of luxurious 100% virgin wool...can be sewn at home by you for a fraction of what you'd imagine...with "Botany" Brand Certified Fabrics. Pre-shrunk and sponged...especially pliable and luxurious..."Botany" Brand Fabrics are simple and economical to sew with because they're certified for the job. Insist on them...at the piece goods counter of leading stores...always look for the name on the selvage!

*"BOTANY" IS A TRADEMARK OF BOTANY MILLS, INC., REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COPYRIGHT 1950, BOTANY MILLS, INC., PASSAIC, N. J. †CERTIFIED BY BOTANY LABORATORIES. SALES OFFICES: BOTANY BLDG., 16 W. 46TH ST., NEW YORK 19.

ASK FOR THIS LABEL TO SEW IN YOUR BOTANY GARMENT

Foot Saver Shoes

comfort can be fashionable

Foot Saver Shoes do lovely things to your foot . . . flattering with fashion's most sleek and charming lines . . . comforting, with smooth, soothing fit that brings you blissful ease, constant support. For the active woman with a flair for fashion— it's Foot Savers, always.

For Fall style booklet and name of nearest Foot Saver Dealer write: The Julian & Kokenge Co., 264 So. Front St., Columbus 15, Ohio is Roscoe, like his father's, but his friends have always called him "Rock" or "Rocky." He uses his middle name on the screen.) They were working together on some acts for a big camp show. Katherine wasn't much impressed at first—Rock was only a second lieutenant assigned to hospital rehabilitation work. Besides, he had grown thin in the Army so that his eyes looked bigger than ever, and a couple of warts stood out on his face with startling clearness.

Only Foot Savers are made over the Shortback® Last which prevents looseness or gapping at the heel without pinching at the toe.

But after she watched him work on the stage for a while, Katherine discovered that Rock was not only handsome but appealing. Even better, his sense of humor seemed to coincide exactly with hers. There was one skit he did in the show which she particularly enjoyed—one that Rock had "stolen" from Groucho Marx. In it he pretended to be the timid patron of an all-night lunch counter, trying to explain to the proprietor why ten cents was too much for a cup of coffee and a doughnut. "Across the street," he kept saying, "I could get a cup of coffee and a doughnut for five cents." "Yeah," growled the proprietor, "but here a cup of coffee and a doughnut is ten cents." It doesn't sound so funny in print, maybe, but Katherine laughed at it until the tears rolled down her cheeks. On the night the show came off Rock was easily the star, and Katherine realized that she loved him.

There was a party after the show, with real coffee and doughnuts for members of the cast, and Rock and Katherine stayed there for a while. Then they drove down to the flight line to say good-by to a friend who was flying to New York to take part in the big Air Forces show, Winged Victory. This particular member of the Air Forces had never been in the air before, and every time the B-17 commander would rev up one of his big engines, the actor-aviator would come dashing off the plane, scared to death. Rock and Katherine had a million laughs out of this, as the saying goes, and drove back to her quarters in a very cheerful frame of mind.

But at the door Katherine's happiness took a sudden nosedive. "I wanted to see him more so badly," she remembers, "but it was against regulations and it might get us both in serious trouble, only it would probably be worse for him. We had a colonel in command of the post who was a real so-and-so and always sniffing around for scandal—everybody hated him. So I told Rock we'd have to say good-by. That hurt me more than anything I ever did."

But Rock wasn't listening. "Don't worry about it," he said. "We'll manage somehow."

At first the way they managed was for Rock to stroll casually into the publicity office where they could snatch a few minutes together. But there was always a chance the colonel would hear about it, and transfer one or the other of them a thousand miles away.

So they started arranging outside dates via the trunk in Rock's car. He would park behind the mess hall at dinnertime when everybody was inside eating. Katherine would hurry out early and climb into the trunk, and Rock would slam down the lid and lock it. Then off they would go two or three towns away to dance to juke-box music. Sometimes Katherine would bring along a sweater and a string of pearls and substitute them for her WAC blouse in the nearest washroom. And sometimes they would just drive out in the desert and look at the stars.

After several weeks of this dangerous business an MP stopped Rock's car at the gate one night. "Sorry, sir," he explained. "Someone stole the colonel's tool kit. We have orders to open all the trunks."

"What?" yelled Lieutenant Karns, sparring madly for time.

"You'll have to open the trunk," the MP repeated.

"But it hasn't been opened for years. I don't think the key fits," Rock lied outrageously.

Katherine, who could hear everything, died a thousand deaths waiting for the lid to open. But Rock twisted the key in the lock, tugged ineffectually on the handle, and put on perhaps the most convincing show of his life.

"It simply won't open," he insisted.

"Oh, all right, go ahead," shrugged the MP and turned to the car behind.

That did it. Several nights later when they met at the usual place Katherine started to open the trunk, but Rock pulled her up on the front seat beside him. "You're only going to make one more trip like that," he told her. "That is, if you'll marry me." For just an instant Katherine reflected blissfully that marriage was against the regulations too. And then she said yes.

The following Sunday (February 27, 1944) they drove sixty miles to the little town of Artesia and persuaded the Methodist minister to interrupt his afternoon prayer meeting long enough to marry them. Then they had to drive back to the camp very fast because Katherine was on duty that night.

When the marriage became known, the results were about as expected: the colonel blew his top and banished Katherine to headquarters at Santa Ana, California. But later she was transferred to Deming, New Mexico, which was only about 340 miles from Hobbs. On his free weekends Todd could drive almost all day and meet Katherine part way at La Cruces, where they would have Saturday-night dinner together, and then go out and camp in the warm sand beside the Rio Grande. On Sunday mornings they would wake up with the sun—and sometimes a group of wide-eyed little Mexican children staring down into their faces. They would take a dip in the big river, and then Todd would start the long trek back.

During Todd's final months in the Army they banked about $500 toward the expenses they knew were coming. Katherine was six months pregnant when they arrived in Hollywood just before Christmas in 1944. The housing shortage was on in full force and they had to move in with Todd's family. This was not a happy arrangement, though the elder Karnses were kind. Katherine happened to have a very uncomfortable pregnancy, with all the nausea and fatigue she thought had been relegated to the Victorian age. She was sure Todd's parents regarded her hasty marriage as a drawback to his career.

One day Todd's father drove by the little house at 8959 Norma Place, a sentimental journey he sometimes made, because this was the very house where the Karns family had lived when Todd was little and Roscoe his father, a rising young actor. To his delight he noted that there was a new "For Sale" sign on the house. He hurried to the agent's office and bought it on the spot, then turned it over to his son on terms that amounted to $75 a month rent. (Later, when Todd was out of work, the house was refinanced and he now pays $40.)

Todd's best year, financially, was 1949, when he was featured as Jimmy Stewart's

NEXT MONTH

Roland and Edith Powers made a farm of 160 acres of unbroken Idaho land. A transplanted barracks building is their home; nearest doctor for their three babies is 23 miles away; they detour 2½ miles to the mailbox in bad weather. Their hard work paid $4000 last year, and they're living the life they want. Meet the Powerses, homesteaders on the Minidoka Project, Idaho, in

HOMESTEADERS 1950

By Richard Lauterbach

How America Lives in the October Ladies' Home Journal

pril Showers

Finest imported talcum powder

39¢ plus tax

ERAMY perfumer

AKE $50. plus FREE GIFT COUPONS!

E! ple nts. Cards nery -Notes and lib ogs

Sell only 50 boxes imprinted Xmas Cards. Sensational profit-sharing plan gives you choice of over 300 gifts, and guarantees handsome cash profits on complete line. Write today! Send no money! Deluxe boxes on approval.

CREATIVE ART PUBLISHERS, INC
45 Warburton Ave., Dept. R-2, Yonkers, N.Y.

0 minute... beauty miracle

sk your real skin beauty this magic home facial

, fresher, more delicate...that's your skin will look and feel in just nutes after a Hopper White Clay Simply smooth on. Let dry. Rinse. enly...your face feels refreshed, ting- clean, looks fabulously fine-textured, er, too. Money-back—if not completely ed. *25c to $1. Also 10c trial size.

OW-UP your Hopper White Clay Pack Home with extra-softening Hopper Homogenized Cream. *prices plus tax

PER® white clay pack HOME FACIAL younger brother in It's a Wonderful Life, a successful Frank Capra production. He worked most of that year under contract at $200 a week, and earned $8000 altogether. Even with the expense of Tina's arrival in March, he was able to put $2000 in the bank.

But all of this, and a lot more, was wiped out a year later when Katherine became seriously ill during her second pregnancy and was rushed to the hospital for a series of costly blood transfusions. For weeks she was under the care of three special nurses, and she lost her child.

Todd's contract with the Capra group expired in March, 1947. After that he didn't earn another cent until October, when he landed a part in Good Sam which had Gary Cooper in the principal role. Todd got $600 a week while he was working on this picture, which sounds like—and is—good money. But he worked only four weeks.

During all of 1948 and most of 1949 Todd had no film work at all. This was the period of the Big Scare in Hollywood, as previously mentioned, and thousands of others were out of work too. Todd's agent, Leon Lance, worked hard for him and Todd himself went so far as to follow an old producer friend of his father's to a ball game and ask him, between bites of a hot dog, whether he could give him a job. Another time he wormed his way into a big studio on a fake pass, practically demanded a screen test for a part in a new picture.

His latest role, which he thinks is the best he has had so far, was in It's a Small World, a picture about the life of a midget which has been released only recently. In it Todd plays the part of an amiable Gulliver in G. I. togs who shows the midget hero how he can earn his self-respect in a world that likes to laugh at undersized men. Prior to this picture Todd had usually been cast as what the trade calls a "character juve," or juvenile. His new role gives him a chance for some thoughtful and sympathetic acting, and he makes the most of it. However, this job lasted only ten days, and because the picture was made by a small independent on a greatly reduced budget, Todd's pay was only $500.

Meanwhile Katherine had suffered through another disastrous and incomplete pregnancy, and there were more huge medical bills to pay. (She is fully recovered now, and the doctor thinks she can have children with no further trouble.) During her long convalescence it was largely up to Todd to take care of Tina, which included such things as feeding, dressing and trying—often without success—to make her take an afternoon nap.

For Tina, a curly-haired and lovable child, is also something of a handful. She has inherited all her mother's effervescent energy, plus the acting talent that runs in the Karns family. With Tina, as Rock says, "everything is a production." For instance, she will be sitting in front of the television set after dinner, seemingly absorbed in the adventures of Beanie, a puppet character who is her favorite. Todd or Katherine will start out the door on a momentary errand. Instantly Tina jumps off her chair, sobbing as though her heart would break, and wraps her chubby arms around her parent's legs. "Whe-e-ere are you go-o-ing?" she wails. "Just down to the store—I'll be right back," is the answer. "All right," says Tina, switching instantly to a businesslike mood, "bring me back some ice cream." Once she was sent off to bed, howling mournfully, but became strangely silent the instant the door was closed. Katherine tiptoed in and found her on a stool, staring at herself in the mirror. "I want to see my tears," explained Tina.

Because of Todd's uncertain employment status, the Karns have no routine schedule. When he has a movie or television job he has to be up at seven and out of the house before eight. At other times—which have been in the majority so far—he and Katherine get up around eight and enjoy a leisurely breakfast together. Then Katherine dresses Tina while Todd does the dishes. She used to object to his doing any housework, but he finds that a certain amount of it helps to clear his mind and put him in a good mood for painting.

Around ten Todd goes to his back-yard studio to paint and wait for a possible call.

Martha Manning Dresses

WOMEN'S AND "ILLUSION" HALF-SIZES

ruler-slim silhouette in a half-size Costume Suit

Smart rayon sharkskin suit, impeccably tailored, with slim self-belted jacket that releases a pleated peplum. New sheath skirt. Brown or Black. Sizes 14½ to 22½. Style No. 8136. Under $15

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

For name of store nearest you, watch local newspapers or write

MARTHA MANNING GARMENT CO.
Dept. LH9 Saint Louis

You feel Good because you look Lovely

You can look lovelier, slimmer ...feel better no matter what you weigh. How? By wearing a Spirella that is made from careful, accurate measurements taken at your convenience, in your own home. Thanks to an exclusive designing principle that gently lifts stretched muscles, your Spirella gives you the support you need for a younger, trimmer, more slender figure.

THIS AMAZING STAY NEVER GOUGES, NEVER POKES ...the exclusive Spirella stay bends and curves with the body to make your lightweight Spirella more flexible, more comfortable than any foundation you have ever worn.

For a FREE figure analysis that will show you how much better you can look and feel, fill out the coupon below.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Get a natural lift with Spirella

FREE FIGURE ANALYSIS

The Spirella Co., Inc., Dept. L-90, Niagara Falls, New York
(In Canada—The Spirella Company of Canada, Ltd., Niagara Falls, Ont.)
Yes, I would like a FREE Figure Analysis.
Please have a Spirella corsetiere get in touch with me.

Name.....
Address.....Phone.....
City.....Zone.....State.....

Leading dress designers know— they say "STARCH WITH LINIT"

KATE GREENAWAY dresses little sister in a 2-piece middy dress of plaid gingham, big sister in a bolero dress of striped corded chambray. Both dresses set off with broadcloth . . . $3.95 to $5.95. They're pre-shrunk, washable, and very LINIT starchable!

LINIT® starch keeps cottons crisp and new-looking longer . . . starches evenly . . . gives smooth iron-glide. It penetrates fabrics . . . so they stay fresh, neat, jaunty. That's why many leading dress designers label their dresses: "Starch with LINIT."

You'll avoid laundry greyness with LINIT, too, because dirt floats out on these "wash-out" starch particles. And LINIT's so easy to use! Just mix with cold water, add boiling water, dilute, and it's ready. Try LINIT once — you'll be "sold" for life!

LINIT adds the "finishing touch" . . .

. . . to dresses, blouses, children's clothes, housecoats, men's shirts, curtains, bed and table linens. Make LINIT in a minute . . . see easy directions on every LINIT package. All grocers sell LINIT.

from his agent. That usually comes before noon, and may lead to a studio appointment, or even a screen test. But most days he puts in six or seven uninterrupted hours at his easel, lunching quickly on a sandwich and milk which Katherine brings out on a tray. Her own activities, aside from Tina and preparing meals, revolve to a considerable extent around an ancient Singer sewing machine which she picked up cheap ($32) from a neighbor. She turns out cotton dresses and lingerie for herself and Tina, and numerous Christmas and birthday presents. Some of her best-looking clothes have come to her secondhand from Rock's younger sister, who is married to a well-to-do hotelman in San Francisco. Rock also wears his brother-in-law's sports jackets, altered to fit.

The family dinner is at five-thirty, and at six Tina's television show begins. Her bedtime is at seven, but this is often stretched for an hour or more, especially during the long summer evenings under daylight saving, when the sun simply refuses to go down. Todd sometimes works in the studio at night, but if he is in a relaxed mood he will pull the television set into his bedroom, stretch out on the bed, and watch a baseball game or wrestling match. He rarely feels like reading anything except movie scripts and the daily papers.

The Karnses know a lot of movie people, including some whose names are world-famous. But they don't see much of them. And they don't like the typical big Hollywood party, where everyone seems to be pushing and striving for the limelight. "The trouble with most actors," says Todd, "is that they are always 'on.'"

Their own idea of a good time is to have one or two couples drop in at the studio for barbecued steaks and an evening filled with talk about art and Army life and babies and other things they have experienced together. Their closest friends are a well-mixed group—they include a prominent Hollywood script writer, the manager of a wholesale provision store, an up-and-coming sculptor, a lady lawyer from the U. S. District Attor office, and a Nisei war veteran who wo a supermarket by day and paints beau imaginative pictures at night.

All of them are frank young folk who pretty freely about their problems. Not ago, for instance, there was a discussi which several persons present casually mitted to affairs before marriage. The these average young Americans talked a their most intimate feelings in front of friends was surprising to Todd and Ka ine. "We don't shock easily," Kath said later. "But it does seem as th people are shedding their inhibitions faster than we ever realized."

Their own marriage, a wartime elope to begin with, has had more than the Hollywood rocks on which to crash. Ther almost every obstacle against it: illness of money, two high-pitched temperam which were soon supplemented by a thir Tina is very precocious emotionally), depressed by unfulfilled ambition, Katherine depleted by long sieges in sick

Strangely enough, the last two lean seem to have brought them closer tog than they ever were before—closer, than those carefree mornings when woke up together in the warm sand besid Rio Grande. Maybe it was all the tro they have faced and come through toge maybe it was Rock's painting, which given them both a new outlook on life. way, it happened—they both agree on

The last time I saw them, at the e May, Todd had just been interviewed possible part in a big Civil War epi grinned when he told me. "Maybe maybe no," he said. "I've been throug so often that I don't even tell mysel hopeful. It'll be great if it happens, be I got fired again last night. They had me go at the television studio. So what do? I came home and ate a good meal then I washed the dishes. I always was dishes when I get fired."

$100 PATTERN WARDROBE

(Continued from Page 200)

and findings for this costume came to $15.82, using a $4.95-per-yard woolen. The dress can be worn with a sheer overskirt or a sash, and when worn with the jacket looks like a suit. Her extra plaid wool skirt, which is guaranteed washable by virtue of a new treatment, cost only $7.12 to make. We have allowed Mrs. Karns a total of $32.90 for accessories—hat, shoes, bag, gloves, collar, sash—and still were able to allow $15 for material to make a short, bright-colored coat to wear over these other clothes. Below is the itemized list of cost of fabrics and accessories.

Black wool jacket dress (Vogue Pattern No. 7071)

Wool crepe	$13.62
Findings and pattern	2.20
	$15.82

Overskirt (Vogue Pattern No. 7102)

Net appliqué	$12.75
Findings and pattern	2.15
	$14.90

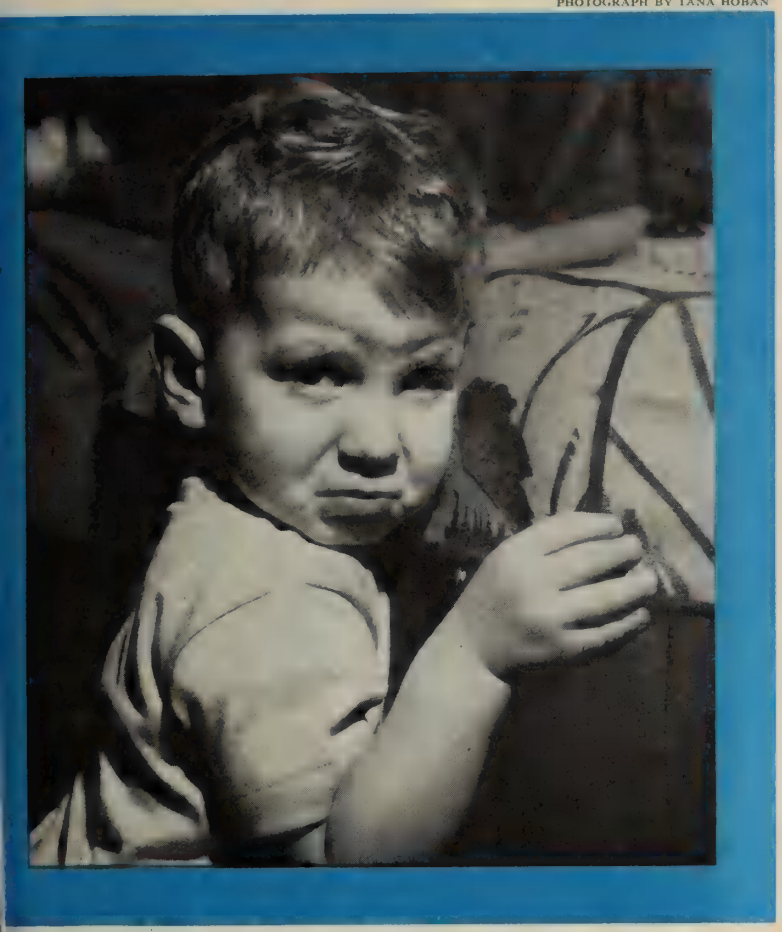
Plaid skirt (Vogue Pattern No. 6521)

Washable woolen	$
Findings and pattern
	$

White blouse (Vogue Pattern No. 7159)

Linen	$
Findings and pattern
	$

Allowance for fabric and findings for a short topcoat . . . . . Total



Accessories

Sash	$ 5.00
Gloves	7.00
Hat	5.00
Shoes	8.95
Bag	5.00
Collar	1.95
	$32.90 Total

Vogue Design No. 6521. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 34 waist. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 7159. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7071. One-piece dress and jacket-blouse; 12 to 20, 3 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 7102. "Easy-to-Make" aprons; Small (22-24), Mediu (26-28), Large (30-32) waist. 40c.

PHOTOGRAPH BY TANA HOBAN

Children don't know that we call it reassurance, but when their behavior is difficult they are asking for love.

reat Childhood Fears With Love

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

EW weeks ago a young mother came ) me for help with her preschool child, hose behavior had taken an unac)untably bad turn. Hitherto a happy, rained child, Dickie had suddenly d having temper tantrums, refusing sucking his thumb constantly and ıg his bed night after night. "I just understand it!" the mother wailed.
)uldn't understand it either—at first.
told this mother what I have told so others on these occasions: "There's s a reason for undesirable behavior.
find out what it is."
course the first thing to look for in a this kind is some physical ailment or ion that may be causing the trouble.
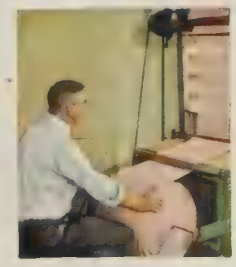
rade infections, for example, nutritional disorders, and many other conditions that are not severe enough to produce pain or other active symptoms, often result in behavior disturbances such as this child showed. Hence a thorough physical examination by the family doctor is always the first step. In the greater number of cases, however, many of the children who display these signs of "problem behavior" are reacting to deep-driven fears of one kind or another. To understand and correct their behavior, we must find and remove the cause of the fear.

In some cases this is a fairly simple procedure. Often, for example, an obvious cause suggests itself, such as the arrival of a new baby in the family, with consequent loss of attention to the older child. He fears that he is no longer loved and wanted. Where the cause is more obscure, the search may entail a painstaking study of the whole family situation, and possibly also examination of the child by a psychiatrist. Today many school systems employ trained psychologists or guidance experts who are glad to assist parents with this type of problem.

In the case of Dickie, our study of the tantrums, bed-wetting and other bizarre behavior revealed the cause to be one of the more common childhood fears—fear of desertion by his mother. But it took us some time to find this out. At first, neither the mother nor the father could think of any change in the family's life or any experience of the child's that could have been responsible for the onset of the disturbed behavior. In fact, they were inclined to believe that Dickie was just passing through a "contrary phase," and they were a little impatient with me because I couldn't give them a few simple rule-of-thumb procedures to straighten him out.



My persistent questioning finally revealed a fact that seemed unimportant in itself, but which proved to be the key to the situation. A few months before the difficulty started,

RATEFUL young mothers from aine to California tell us that octor Bundesen's baby booklets ve been of the greatest help to em in caring for their own babies.
ıe first eight booklets cover your by's first eight months. They sell 50 cents. The second series of oklets covers the baby's health
m nine months to two years—en booklets for 50 cents. A nplete book on the care of the by, a necessary supplement to monthly booklets, OUR BABIES,
. 1345, is 50 cents. A booklet breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S ST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No.
46, sells for 6 cents. Information prenatal care is given in BEFORE E BABY COMES, No. 2383, which priced at 50 cents. Address all uests to the Reference Library, DIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadel-a 5, Pennsylvania.

Nitey Nite sleepers are soft as fur because a fine quality of long staple cotton is carefully selected for their fabric.

Every inch of fabric is scrutinized for "twits" and flaws. After inspection the perfect fabric is cut into sleepers.

Smooth seams are nine-thread sewn, reinforced at points of strain. Gripper fasteners are applied for easy closings.

thread for thread...dollar for dollar...

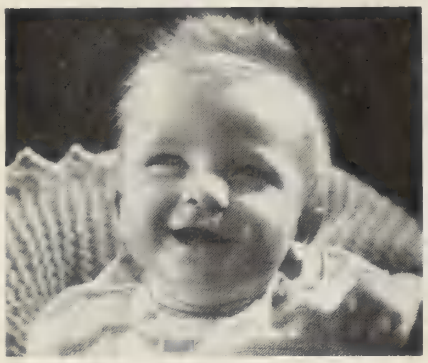
Nitey Nite sleepers

are 10 ways better

Young America delights in their gay NITEY NITES and the fur-soft touch of the pure cotton fabric. Mothers know that these sleepers are both pretty and practical. Only NITEY NITE sleepers have all of these 10 important advantages: ★ healthful, absorbent, pure cotton fabric. ★ every important seam is nine-thread sewn. ★ every point of strain is reinforced. ★ full-cut seat and "I-help-myself" closings. ★ comfortable neckline assures needed chest protection. ★ wurm sweater-cuff gives 4-inch adjustable sleeve-length. ★ exclusive "bootee" foot, double sole for warmth, wear. ★ Gripper fasteners end button problems. ★ easy to wash—hold shape and fit—every color is sudfast. ★ generous sizes in a choice of seven songbird colors: Canary, Bluebird, Flamingo, Parrakeet, Hummingbird, Tanager, Robin.

NITEY NITE SLEEPERS are weather-conditioned in Arctic and Medium weights. ARCTIC NITEY NITE—one-piece style; sizes 4-8. ARCTIC and MEDIUM NITEY NITE, two-piece style; sizes 0-4. Also three-piece sets. NITEY NITE PAJAMA, ski-style, no feet; sizes 4-8; 10-16. NITEY NITE JUNIOR, a cuddly take-to-bed doll.

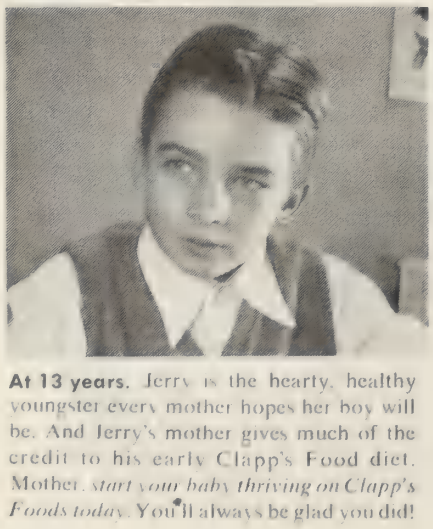
Nitey Nite REG U.S. PAT. OFF.



sleepers at your favorite department store or children's shop

NITEY NITE SLEEPERS MADE BY GLENDALE KNITTING CORPORATION • PERRY, N.Y.

This true story can mean good news for your baby!



At 4 months. Jerry Wright was thriving on Clapp's Baby Cereals. The delicate flavor and extra-fine texture of Clapp's Cereals made spoon-feeding easy for Jerry from the very beginning. And what's more—Clapp's Cereals gave Jerry 3 times more iron than unfortified cereals!

At 8 months. Honestly, did you ever see a healthier, happier baby? His smile is almost as big as his appetite when Clapp's Strained Foods appear. Like every baby we've ever known, Jerry goes for the true, fresh flavors of Clapp's Foods.

At 11 months. 29½ inches tall and bubbling with health, Jerry tips the scales at 23 pounds. He'll soon be graduating to Clapp's Junior Foods. Like all Clapp's Foods, they're pressure-cooked to bring babies extra vitamins and minerals.

At 13 years. Jerry is the hearty, healthy youngster every mother hopes her boy will be. And Jerry's mother gives much of the credit to his early Clapp's Food diet. Mother, start your baby thriving on Clapp's Foods today. You'll always be glad you did!

DOCTORS HAVE BEEN RECOMMENDING CLAPP'S BABY FOODS LONGER THAN ANY OTHER BABY FOODS

Products of American Home Foods

on several occasions the mother's regular baby-sitter had been busy and a substitute had been employed. The woman had seemed kindly and competent enough and had reported no trouble at all with Dickie. It developed, however, that she was neither so kindly nor so competent as it had appeared, and that she had enforced her idea of discipline by such threats as, "If you don't go to sleep (or keep quiet, or eat all your supper) right away, your mother won't come home at all!"

Actually, it is unlikely that a few such incidents could have caused all the problems that ensued, or that even repeated occurrences could have been so troublesome, had there not been other contributing factors. The mother in this case was inclined to be nervous and irritable, and the father was often away from home on business. These circumstances combined to give the child a feeling of insecurity and uncertainty. The baby-sitter episodes served to touch off bad behavior when fear of desertion was added. The behavior was an unconscious, and successful, effort to claim attention of which Dickie had felt a lack.

In this case, as in many others, it was not enough simply to find and explain the cause. Mere disciplinary measures, I knew, not only would not suppress the bed-wetting, thumb-sucking and other symptoms, but might also cause the child's fears to find expression in still other ways. Night terrors, loss of bowel control, vomiting and even speech disorders can emerge from these hidden fears when they are dealt with arbitrarily. It was necessary to convince the parents that the child's fears could be overcome only by repeated assurance, through actions as well as words, that

No one becomes bad suddenly.
—LATIN PROVERB.

Dickie was loved and wanted. The process took months, but it resulted in the disappearance of the symptoms.

Of course childhood fears commonly occur as responses to many different causes. Fear of loud noises, for example, is frequent in babies and small children, as is fear of falling and of the dark.

Fear of strange places, and especially of strange people, is another common cause of upsets in child behavior. But while the small baby may burst out crying when confronted with a strange face, the child of two or three or more may suppress his fear only to have it emerge in the form of odd behavior. Other symptoms that I have seen on many occasions are fear of dogs and other animals, fear of certain objects such as automobiles, mailboxes or fireplugs, and even fear of the moon, stars or bright lights.

Wise mothers never scold or belittle children for expressing such fears. It may be natural for a mother to feel some humiliation when her own child shows desperate fear of a dog that other children accept and romp with, but she must not speak impatiently to the child or let him know she is ashamed of him. This cannot possibly do any good, and it may only add to the child's fear.

These children with fears need love and sympathy, and the need is especially great at the time fears are felt. Mothers and fathers who turn away when the frightened child runs to them for comfort and protection are betraying a trust and perhaps doing serious harm. Instead, they should comfort the child until the acute fear has passed, then gently and carefully show that the feared object is actually harmless—taking pains, however, not to force acceptance or persist in the effort if the strong fear shows signs of returning.

The point for mothers to remember, however, is that the particular situation or object that produces fear is usually comparatively unimportant. The real cause is likely to be found in the family relationships, and the cure requires first understanding and then patient, continuing effort—as well as real love.

THE END

RELIEVES HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS PAIN FAST

Here's Why...
Anacin® is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients that are specially compounded to give FAST, LONG LASTING relief. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

Pro·tek·tiv
for children's normal foot growth

Style 5968

Smart style with excellent fit. Conforms to the shape of the foot in every size. Write Dept. J for illustrated folder.

Curtis, Stephens, Embry Co., Inc., Reading, P
MODERN AGE and OFFICIAL GIRL SCOUT SHO

INCOME INDEPENDENC for REFINED WOMEN

Be the money-making Child's Clothing Counselor in your community. Have your own profitable business with steady, year round income as representative for famous, nationally advertised Klad-ezee Self Help Children's Garments. Attractive, trimfit styling, with buttonless drop seat and other exclusive features that mothers buy on sight. Take orders in homes by appointment, from swatch book and samples. Complete training and sales help given. Hundreds making good incomes. Write today, telling all about yourself, for details of money-making plan, full time or spare time. Klad-ezee, Dept. 90, 267 First Ave. N. Minneapolis, Minn.

SELL XMAS CARDS NOW
40 Diff. Box Assortments, Plastic, Metallic, Aluminu also gift wrappings. Stationery, Notes. Earn up to 10 Profit. Write for Bargain Offer.
S. H. Greeting Cards, 177 William St., N. Y.

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR FREE CATALO
Fall Styles
Dresses ■ suits for morning, street, afternoon, or sports, $2.95 to 22.50. Also maternity corsets & lingerie. (Catalog mailed in plain envelope.)
CRAWFORD'S. Dept. A 729 Balt., Kansas City 6, Mo.

HOW TO KEEP BABY SAFE while you're busy

No worry about high chair fal or Baby getting hurt. You lively infant sits safely centere in the low Babee-Tenda. N need to watch, and you g your work done much faste Raises for feeding, lowers for pl ExTenda Legs adjust with push button ease. Snugly cushione seat adjusts as baby grows. Fole for carrying. Converts to many use table. Doctor-approve

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
LET'S GET WHAT WE DESERVE OR RETURN OF MONEY
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

WRITE TODAY for free illustrated folder safety hints, or see phone book for authorize agency. Not sold in store

Babee-Tenda

The Babee-Tenda Corp., Dept. 5-22
750 Prospect Ave., Cleveland 15, Ohio
Please send illustrated "Baby Safety News"
Name
Address
City & State
® Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

SOMEBODY'S ALWAYS CHASING SOMEBODY

(Continued from Page 38)

*Y*ou got acquainted. In case you've foren, it was when you came wandering my apartment while I was painting my
"
t was an honest mistake. I got the g floor."
Furthermore, bats don't get in your hair.
's an old wives' tale. And you've been g you want me to get married."
do, I do," Henry said grimly. "I've got t you married. Do you realize I'm going il in thermodynamics? I am eager to you get married. You could say I'm des-
e. In case you've forgotten, I helped n your campaign with that nonobjective er until you decided you didn't like his urns, and I helped you with that bas-st until you dropped him for sneering hönberg. What more can I do?"
Those were girlish infatuations. Oh,
, this time it's really love."
Then grab him. What are you hung on?" e won't notice me. He doesn't know I He's so deeply withdrawn in himself, n such a vital, thrilling way. Oh, he's nse."
at guy?"
mean his soul. He's like Beethoven.
ully, he's sort of diminutive, but in a tough way. You'd make two of him.
like a—like a dashing, finely drawn He's terribly handsome, naturally.
ead looks like it should be on a new
But you can only really know him gh his poetry. He's the editor of Dithy—it's a quarterly published over on Eighth Street. I've memorized all his that I've seen. Would you like to ne?"
ry grunted.
's called Bucket." Alice closed her eyes cited:

You say nor care I why I'm bottomless a pale pail paler looks in crescent's Pan an stars of crystal Jupiter t sore unbound."

e opened her eyes. They were touched weet and tender light. She said, "Isn't utiful?"
unds vain," Henry said.
said the 'Isn't it beautiful?' myself.
isn't in the poem. Isn't it perfectly 1?"
."
t it paints him exactly, exactly as e got a picture of a little horse with a hless bucket."

s plain to see that about poetry you know thing one."
ing one?"
s an expression of Dimmick's. Will ke me over to the Village Villa to-It's where he always goes in the eve-

." Henry said.

is it, Hank, really. The minute I immick I'll go out of your life forever.
er bother you again. I'll be moved a pink cloud. . . . What the heck is ng?"
pointed to a metal figure, or structure, g on his desk. It was composed of and arcs of shining steel. She lifted it nd it heavy and put it down again.
a toolmaker's vise," Henry said.
ounted on a double sine bar, which is d on two protractors, so you can hold ce at any angle for grinding. I made yself."
you invent it?"
sn't an invention, it's a modification.
makes the job a little easier."
very impressive. It could be a Pistraction." Alice looked at it admirhile she tilted its jaws one way and
. She said, "I'll make coffee and ham-e while you clean up. If we eat now
't have to buy anything at the Villa."
vent into the kitchenette, which was ff from the main room of the apartment by a canvas curtain. Henry sat for a while looking at his toolmaker's vise, warming himself at the memory of Alice's casual words of praise. He was proud of the contraption, and Alice's recognition in it of some sort of achievement brought a rather unreasonable sensation of bittersweet gratification.

He got up at last and collected clean clothes from the golden-oak bureau behind his desk and went into the bathroom and locked the door.

HENRY had been drawn to Greenwich Village, not by its Latin Quarter traditions but by a job in a tool shop on Spring Street, a shop small and informal enough to provide a job for a tool grinder working part time while he went to school. Henry's G. I. educational allowance had run its course and he still had two years to go for the engineering master's he had set his sights on. There was nothing to do but bull it through on a margin of nickels and dimes by working at his tool-grinding trade. In a sense he had to stand aside from the rest of life for those two years, and dedicate himself. Henry did not think of it as dedication, but something in his make-up, some deep psychological flaw doubtless, would not permit him to stop what he had started until it was done. He could live with the bum food and the hard work, but such extraneous influences as Alice made it very tough. Alice was merely an emotional problem, to be sure, and the inner struggle she created could be fought down by iron will and calm intellectual control. Above all, calmness, calmness to keep his sense of values straight and his eye unwaveringly on the ball.

The Village Villa was a basement restaurant. In a corner a man with a guitar sang Dollar is Your Best Friend. Most of the customers were middle-aged people quietly eating spumone. Dimmick sat at a table alone with a bottle of wine. Henry recognized him before Alice pointed him out. Dimmick did indeed look subtly like a small, neatly brushed horse; a nervy, straightforward little guy, Henry thought grudgingly.

They sat down at a table and a waiter brought them a basket of bread.

"Just coffee," Alice said.

"Nothing for me," Henry said.

They each got a piece of the bread before the waiter took the basket away. Dimmick saw them and got up and came over to their table, carrying his bottle of wine and a glass.

He said, "Hey hey."

"Hello," Alice said. Her blue eyes dwelt on him with melting adoration.

Dimmick spun up a chair and sat down.

"This is Henry," Alice said.

"Hi," Dimmick said, without looking away from Alice. "Listen, I asked all over where I could find you. You can't do this to me."

"But I told you I had a date."

Dimmick appeared to come to himself. He looked around at Henry. He said, "Well, I'm dead."

"Henry's just a friend," Alice said. "He lives upstairs from me."

"It's all right, buddy," Dimmick said to Henry. "Somebody's always chasing somebody. Give me a minute and I'll go away and cut my throat."

"Sure, go ahead," Henry said.

The waiter brought Alice's coffee and two spoons. Dimmick asked for empty glasses all around.

When they came Dimmick poured wine and said to Henry, "Is it permitted to drink a toast to your girl?"

Alice smiled, her comeliest smile, with dimples.

"To Alice," Dimmick said soberly. "I look at Alice and I know what living means."

"I've got to go to work," Henry said. He stood up.

"Don't get sore," Dimmick said.

Henry went out calmly. In the street he found that he was still clutching his glass of wine. He drew back his arm and hurled the glass of wine at the moon that soared over the party's on plastics Housewares!

Water Pitcher by The Bolta Company. • Square Bowl by Burroughs Mfg. Corp. • Parti-Set by The Plas-Tex Corporation. • Utility Dish by Artcraft Plastic Moulders, Ltd. Cake Plate and Cover by Federal Tool Corporation.

As carefree as a child's party describes color-bright housewares "made of STYRON" (Dow polystyrene). They're fun to use, easy to clean—AND durable enough to withstand the wear and tear that only the "small fry" can give them. Best of all, there's little chance of breakage and the festive colors won't chip or peel. ◇ Wise mothers are using Evaluated housewares because they know the "made of STYRON" label stands for long, colorful and dependable service. Look for them in leading department, chain and variety stores everywhere.

DOW
plastics

Plastics Division Dept. SHP 11 • THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY • MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

When "Childhood Constipation"

makes your "high chair" baby cross...

When baby is cross because of "Childhood Constipation" give him Fletcher's Castoria . . . the mild yet thorough laxative that's made especially for his delicate little system. Your doctor will tell you Fletcher's Castoria does not contain a single harsh drug. So gentle, it cannot cause griping, diarrhea or discomfort. So pleasant tasting even very young babies take it willingly.

or your "high school" boy cranky...

When your older child is cranky because of "Childhood Constipation," remember this: Strong, adults' laxatives . . . even in reduced doses . . . may be too harsh! Give Fletcher's Castoria! It's thorough and effective, yet so gentle it will not upset sensitive digestive systems. And children really like its pleasant taste. So play safe, keep Fletcher's on hand at all times.

give Fletcher's Castoria

The laxative made especially for infants and children . . . children of all ages!

Chas. H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

"From high chair to high school!"

Waverly Place. He went home and changed clothes and went to work. He ground tools for three hours, and at half after midnight knocked off and went past the Village Villa on his way home.

Alice and Dimmick were still at the same table. Now they were holding hands. Henry went in.

He sat down and Alice said dreamily, "Don't you think so, Hank?"

"Think so what?"

"Haven't you been listening?"

"I've been away," Henry said.

"Oh." Alice looked at him and after a time her vision cleared. She said, "Oh, you've changed. Are you going to work?"

"That's where I've been."

"Oh. Then you didn't hear."

"No," Henry said a little apprehensively. "I didn't hear."

"About Dimmick. He's going to win the Fellowship. It's so important because it means everything. But you've got to help."

"Give him the libretto," Dimmick said. "He doesn't read you."

"It's a long story," Alice said. "It begins with the fact that Dimmick's father is wealthy but he won't give Dimmick any money."

"He's got a bundle yea gross," Dimmick said, measuring with his hands to indicate a trayful of banknotes and, presumably, gilt-edged securities. "But he won't get up dime one."

"He gave Dimmick a thousand dollars and told him if he could make his living for two years as a poet he would subsidize him thereafter. Dimmick invested the thousand dollars in Dithyramb and got the job as editor in return, but it doesn't pay enough to live on because the magazine loses money instead of making money and even though Dimmick gets first dibs at the petty-cash box he says there's never any more in it than thirty cents at a time. And he positively slaves at the job."

"I could make more sitting still," Dimmick said.

"So he'll never live through his two years," Alice said. "But then I thought of the Sacheverell Honeywood Fellowship at the Honeywood Foundation where I work. The Fellowship amounts to five thousand dollars given outright to the artist selected from among a recommended group, and he can use it in any way he wishes to further his education or career. It's perfect for Dimmick and I happen to know that the board hasn't been able to decide on a suitable recipient for the Fellowship this year, and I'm Mr. Dodd's secretary, and he's the director of the Foundation, and all I need to do is submit Dimmick's name through Mr. Dodd, and Mr. Dodd will do it in a minute, he's an angel. So it will have Mr. Dodd's recommendation and the only other person on the board who counts is Mr. Barnett, the painter, and he doesn't know anything about poetry anyway so he'll simply take Mr. Dodd's recommendation."

"I've got it made," Dimmick said. "It can't miss."

"The only catch is," Alice went on, "that names must be submitted in pairs in applying for the Fellowship. It's just a rule. So we have to have someone else to submit with Dimmick and we want to be sure it's someone who wouldn't have the ghost of a chance, so I thought of you. We can submit your statue. I mean your toolmaker's vise."

"That's not only ridiculous," Henry said, "but it also sounds crooked."

"Crooked," Dimmick said. "How straight can you get, for that kind of hay?"

"It's perfectly legitimate," Alice said indignantly. "You made it, didn't you? It's part of your career, isn't it? You could use five thousand dollars, couldn't you? Theoretically, I mean, to further your education?"

"Theoretically, yes," Henry said.

"On that kind of scratch a poet can get married," Dimmick said. He squeezed Alice's hand. Alice closed her eyes and her cheeks grew pink.

Henry knocked over the wine bottle. Dimmick and Alice stopped holding hands and dodged back. Fortunately, the bottle was empty. It rolled off the table and Henry

Do the job with a Q-tips® Swab

YOUR LIFE'S MADE EASIER WITH Q-TIPS in 101 different ways!

They're handy applicator sticks with soft, sterilized cotton anchored securely on both ends. No more mussing and fussing with annoying, make-shift swabs that become loose and messy. Q-Tips swabs are completely sterilized—always safe.

Your Q to Neater Make-up

Use Q-Tips to clean up smeared mascara, remove excess lipstick and powder, for manicures and pedicures, to color eyebrows and lashes, for bleaching hair.

Your Q to Safer Medical Application

Reach for Q-Tips to remove wax from ears gently, for nose and eye hygiene, for throat and all medical applications.

Q-Tips for baby care . . . for general hou

29¢, 49¢, and 98¢

Q-TIP

. . . for years the largest-s sterilized sw

Q-TIPS INC., LONG ISLAND CI

aught it as it fell and put it on the table etween Alice and Dimmick.

"Sorry," Henry said.

"We'll call your statue a time-space de-ign," Alice said.

"Year One, Atomic Era," Dimmick said.

"Oh, yes, that's good," Alice said. "It won't be any trouble at all to you, Hank. There won't be anything for you to do except ign the application. I'll make it out for you. And the best of it is that the Fellowship has o be granted by next Tuesday. We'll just barely get in under the wire, and it will go hrough before there's any chance for some-hing to go wrong."

"I want to see this thing first," Dimmick aid.

"Oh, Hank's statue," Alice said. "You an see it tomorrow night at the party."

"What party?" Henry asked. Alice kicked im on the shin.

"So I buy that," Dimmick said. He and lice peered fondly at each other around the ine bottle. "Don't I get to see you again ntil then?"

"Silly," Alice said. "It's only until to-norrow."

Dimmick reached out like a blind man and ently touched the dimple in her cheek. He aid, "I'll take that with me and put it under ny pillow." He got up and walked out with-ut looking back.

Alice said, with a blissful sigh, "Isn't he verything I said?"

"He left us with the check," Henry said.

"He did not. He paid or everything while ou were gone. That's he way he is."

"What makes him alk the way he talks?"

"He's a student of ant. I mean slang, not mmanuel. He wants o be a poet of the peo-le. I think he's begin-ing to like me."

"He's obviously off is rocker about you, which brings up an-ther point: What's he idea of dragging me in on this romance in he first place? I heard the guy say he's been egging you for a date."

"You're so ignorant of these things," lice said. "A girl can't be too cagey. That's hy I said there was a party tomorrow night. 've got to look busy and popular, so he has he feeling he's only able to see me from the utside, like the prince looking at Sleeping eauty through the wall of glass or what-ver. When he's driven to the point of knock-ng down the wall, then that's it. Otherwise 's just a wayward interest, just a big rou-ine to pass the time away, something that appens any day."

Henry became aware of the man with the uitar, singing a song in his corner. The song as about a Signifying Woman.

"I know," Henry said. "Somebody's al-ays chasing somebody."

HENRY got home at two, studied for an our, got up at seven to make his eight-'clock class, came home at noon for a cup of offee and a doughnut, and found Alice re-ecorating his apartment in preparation for he party. She had pushed all the furniture nto one corner and hung a bedspread in ront of it. Illustrations of Maillol designs ut from an art magazine were thumbtacked round the walls, and a record player was in he middle of the floor. The toolmaker's vise as displayed in simple dignity on a stack f books.

"Dimmick is mad about bebop," Alice aid. "It's the Richardsons' record player, so had to ask them, and they'll get terribly anned up on the beer because they haven't ad anything to eat for a week except beans nd pancakes. I asked Amadeo, too, because ou should have the landlord if it's going to e noisy."

"What beer?" Henry asked.

"I'm going to buy it myself. And the most onderful news is that maybe Mr. Dodd will op in, because I showed him the poem Dimmick is submitting for the Fellowship and he's simply raving to meet him. I've made out your application and you'll have to go over with me when I go back to work, and sign it."

"I've got exactly forty minutes to eat lunch and study for my afternoon classes," Henry said.

"Then do it in thirty. It will only take ten minutes to go sign up, and it has to be done right away. You can carry the statue over there any time, but the application has to be in today. Dimmick came to the office this morning and signed his."

"It isn't a statue," Henry said. "It's a toolmaker's vise."

His voice echoed around the room and he realized he had been shouting. He charged calmly into the kitchenette and found it crowded with buckets and mops. He discovered one dried doughnut in the breadbox and crawled over the stacked furniture behind the bedspread to get the necessary books and papers from his desk and went into the bathroom to study.

THE party was very successful. The Richardsons, a miserable, starving, hollow-eyed young couple who wrote novels, sat on the floor and howled over the beer and pumpernickel. Amadeo, at Alice's adroit suggestion, mixed up some plaster and repaired the cracks in the kitchenette walls where the roaches came in the quickest, a job Henry had been wanting to do for weeks. Dimmick, after examining the toolmaker's vise and testifying that if it won a prize as a production of art he'd be bored for a ten-gauge occiput, settled himself equidistantly between Alice and the record player, which endlessly blared a composition entitled Somebody's Always Chasing Somebody. Henry was pleased to find out where Dimmick got at least some of his cant, but he had heard better music in a traffic jam. After a time he left the party to go to work, and when he came back at midnight Mr. Dodd had arrived.

To make one's self beautiful, to dress the hair, to excel in talk, to do anything and all things that puff out the character and attributes and make them imposing in the eyes of others, is not only to magnify one's self, but to offer the most delicate homage at the same time. And it is in this latter intention that they are done by lovers; for the essence of love is kindness.

—ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

Mr. Dodd was a tall, bony, ugly man who looked like a drawing by Toulouse-Lautrec for the bill at the Moulin Rouge. The magnificence of his evening clothes made Henry's apartment look like an ash can.

"And this is our sculptor," Mr. Dodd said, shaking Henry's hand. "That's a very interesting piece." He bowed courteously in the direction of the toolmaker's vise. "You have a grasp, my boy."

"Henry plays a fast stick," Dimmick said magnanimously. "He's a real gone guy, I clue you. . . . As I was saying about my poem, it represents a radical use of the terza rima, quite difficult."

"Oh, terribly," Alice said. "From the very first tercet."

"You will recall that the title is The Day I Die," Dimmick said. "It is considered as the introduction of each stanza. For example, the first:

"Will it be cold or hot rain or shine day or night here or there who cares but I."

"It's so stark," Alice said.

"Very interesting," Mr. Dodd murmured, leaning on his silver-mounted stick.

The Richardsons were sick in the bathroom and Amadeo was boiling out the drain in the kitchenette so Henry got his books and went behind the bedspread to sit on his bureau and study. Presently Mr. Dodd came and lifted the bedspread, looking for him. Mr. Dodd had the toolmaker's vise under his arm.

"I wanted a word with you, my boy," Mr. Dodd said, with a conspiratorial air. "Alice thinks she has been very subtle in influencing me in your favor for the Fellowship, and I may say that now that I have seen this work of yours I fully share her enthusiasm. If the other members of the board agree with me—and I feel rather confident they will—you may expect to learn this coming Tuesday

"CORRECT," says teacher, "for any child of any age"

Children always feel comfortable in E-Z Underwear.

Fits snugly but never binds. Convenient EZ-ON* necks slip over head easily. No buttons to come off.

Kitten-soft E-Z Sleepers put youngsters in the mood for sleep. Yes—teacher, and mother, know best—it's E-Z "for any child of any age".

KIDS FEEL LIKE TWINKLE-TOES IN E-Z HOSIERY

How youngsters go for E-Z's bold striped socks and colorful solids! Big variety of styles and dozens of colors in E-Z's knit-to-fit quality hosiery.

E-Z MILLS, INC., EMPIRE STATE BUILDING, NEW YORK 1, N.Y.

*Patented

New "Shadow-Line" Pattern 3060, Pabco Warranty Yard Goods

Pabco Warranty Yard Goods look like a million dollars — yet the material cost is as little as $12.64 for an average-sized room! Famous "Stainless Sheen" surface cleans as easily as a china dish — and wears, wears, wears!

Select from the newest, smartest 1950 colors and patterns — exclusive new tile, floral, carpet and geometric patterns in Pabco Warranty Yard Goods — now on parade at good stores everywhere! Also: room-size Pabco Guaranty Rugs, unconditionally guaranteed for 5 years!

Send ten cents in coin for big, full-color "Pabco Home Decorating Guide," to Pattern Dept., nearest office.

For perfect floor care—Pabco Linoleum Cleaner and Pabco Self-Polishing Wax*

Styled in California.... Approved by all America!

THE PARAFFINE COMPANIES, INC., New York 16, Chicago 54, San Francisco 19

Makers of Pabco Paint Shingle Roofing, Building Materials, Insulation

PABCO

that the Fellowship has been granted to you. You won't speak of this, of course, in the meantime. Understood?"

Henry looked at him foolishly.

"I should like to take this piece of yours with me, if I may," Mr. Dodd said. "I am quite anxious for the others to see it. Good luck, and my congratulations, a trifle premature though they may be."

He shook Henry's hand again and dropped the curtain and went away.

After a while Henry clambered out dazedly from behind the bedspread. The Richardsons had gone to sleep beside their record player. Amadeo and Mr. Dodd and Dimmick and Alice were gone.

He did not see Alice the next day, which was Saturday. In the afternoon he went down to her apartment and banged on the door until Amadeo came up and informed him she had gone someplace with her poet. Henry looked in at the Village Villa during the evening, but Alice and Dimmick were not there. After he came home from work he waited for some time, sitting disconsolately on the stairs, and when she did not come in he at last nailed a note to her door reading, "Got to see you."

The next morning he raced down to her apartment in his bare feet to find her already gone. A note on her door read, "Come up to my pink cloud."

He had the entire day free for study. Alice was not there to interrupt him. He gazed helplessly at his books throughout the morning, and in the afternoon went out and walked savagely up to Central Park and down to the Battery and back and forth across Brooklyn Bridge. Alice was still out when he came home. He slept all night on the stairs and awoke five minutes late for his early class.

He came home in the evening and surprised her leaving her apartment with a parcel in her arms.

He placed himself dramatically across her path and said, "Where do you think you're going?"

"Just to the garbage can under the stoop with this stuff," Alice said. "Why?"

"I thought maybe you were moving out," Henry said. "Where were you all day yesterday and the day before?"

"By myself, just thinking about things."

"I thought maybe you got married," Henry said desperately.

Alice said with an angelic innocence, "Why, no."

"What was that pink-cloud stuff?"

"Well, Dimmick did ask me."

"You double-crossed Dimmick," Henry said. "You tried to set me up for that Fellowship, not Dimmick. Your boss told me."

Alice bit her lip. She gave Henry the package of garbage and said, "Will you take this out, please? I don't want to stand here holding it."

Amadeo yelled up the stairs to tell Henry he was wanted on the telephone. Henry went downstairs with Alice's parcel under his arm and answered the telephone in the hall.

Mr. Dodd said, "My boy, I'm jumping the gun on the official announcement to tell you this, but I feel that I should."

Alice came downstairs and stood beside him, listening.

"The board has overruled me in your case," Mr. Dodd said. "The Fellowship is being granted to What's-his-name, the young poet. I argued for you, but Mr. Barnett was unimpressed with your work. He said the figure you submitted looked like a toolmaker's vise. I'm deeply sorry. I know what a disappointment this will be to you."

"Well, I wasn't counting very much on it," Henry said. He thanked Mr. Dodd and hung up.

Alice said in a small voice, "You lose?"

Henry nodded. They looked at each other earnestly for a time.

Henry said, "Do you remember when I made that pass at you?"

"The first time we met," Alice said. "When you came in while I was painting my toes. But you never made another."

"You slugged me. Remember?"

"I didn't hit you that hard."

"No, that wasn't it," Henry admitted. "I found out I was in love with you. I tried to lie to myself about it, but I knew better. It was a simple matter of wanting to spend the rest of my life with you. Nothing else was any good."

"I didn't get exactly that impression," Alice said wistfully.

"Because I haven't got any life to offer you. I've got years of this starvation diet ahead of me. I didn't think I could ask you to go through it with me. Then this possibility of getting five thousand bucks came along and changed everything."

"It was a low, underhanded bribe," Alice said. "I'd tried everything else."

"It was a very fine bribe," Henry said. "I wanted to ask you right away, but I couldn't catch you. Now the money is out and I still want to ask you. I'm selfish, I need you around. I learned that these last two days. It will be rough and it will keep on being rough for a long time and we'll have to work like dogs for all our young lives. All I've got to offer is that I love you."

"That's the magic word," Alice said unsteadily. "What do you think I've been trying to make you see all this time about that darned old glass wall?"

Amadeo, beaming behind them, said, "Hey, give me that stuff." He took Alice's package of garbage from Henry and went away with it.

TELL ME DOCTOR

(Continued from Page 31)

thence to the tubes and finally the lower part of the abdominal cavity itself.

"An infection results in inflammation, and every inflammation goes through the same course regardless of what part of the body it may involve. Consider the common head cold. It is an infection which results in inflammation of the inside of the nose. The first stage is that of congestion, when it is hard to breathe through the inflamed nostrils. 'My nose is stopped up,' the sufferer is likely to say.

"The stage of congestion is followed by one of watery exudation, and you have to blow your nose until you have a dozen handkerchiefs wet. Then Nature tries to kill off the invading infection by sending the white cells of the blood to fight it. In this process millions of these white cells are destroyed, and a great quantity of the casualties constitutes what you know as pus.

"Now, that is the process that has taken place in your internal organs. Your tubes became involved and inasmuch as the inflammation blocked off both ends, they became distended with this virulent pus, mixed up with the invading gonococcus microorganisms. The result was that they lost all semblance to the fragile, slender, tubular structures which they normally were, and became round, distended pus bags, as they are commonly known. When the walls of the tubes became distended to the point where they could stand stretching no more, they began to leak slowly, and it's mighty lucky for you that they did, for if they had ruptured, you could easily have lost your life.

"As a result of that leaking and the efforts of Nature to combat it and wall off the infected lower portion of the delicate peritoneal cavity, I find your lower abdomen in the horrible mess it is. It has become what we call a frozen pelvis, meaning that all normal outline of organs has been lost and there is to be felt only one solid mass, fixed and immovable from the countless adhesions which have formed between the various viscera. Have I made clear what has taken place?"

"I guess I'll have to believe what you tell me, Doctor. They said you knew your business."

"I know precisely how this kind of infection works, at least — just as well as I would d it been one resulting from an

"
—is there a difference?"
itely. The coccus infections follow-abortion seldom travel along nembrane surfaces—they do even d penetrate directly into the blood h channels with which the womb is antly supplied. It is true that they s invade the tubes, reaching them the lymphatic vessels supplying t usually they pass directly out into e located at the sides of the uterus, ey are likely to get into the big that region and perhaps eventually he entire circulatory system."
pose that would be bad."
ably fatal," the doctor told her, we now have penicillin, as well as er antibiotics."
illin would cure it?"
uld certainly help, yes. Penicillin, is not a
"
how, that infection ncern me?"
's right, and respect you nate."
't see it that y am I fortu-

use you will,
robability,
state where come practilieve you of eased organs, would never ime when it safe to oper-e face of the eofinfection, ugh, as someappens, we forced to do

, what do n? I have no n of being
"
't force you d I certainly intention of do so. I can ise."
is it that vise me to e?" s were a new just beginning, it would be dif-
As it is, with a deeply seated, pread, old infection—well, others er from me, but as I see it, the y you are likely to become per-cured is by complete hysterectomy:
of all the internal generative or-erus, ovaries and tubes."
ove all my organs!" the patient ex-
"Why?"
use they are gone, anyhow, as far as ng is concerned. I'll bet you haven't nstruated correctly for a year—or is true. I haven't menstruated at all ast three months, and before that it much—much too much."

aren't menstruating because you ny ovaries—they've been destroyed gonococcus."
you say that definitely?"

TICALLY. I can say with a certainty
're cystic—completely cystic, which at they have been largely destroyed exist as collections of water enclosed mbrane. Your tubes are closed, en-the size and shape of a frankfurter doubtless filled with pus, and so dherent to what is left of the ovaries impossible to distinguish where one f and the other begins. Your uterus is , for it is unlikely you could ever be-egnant; and if you did, you could rry the pregnancy."
oesn't seem possible that it can be as
hat."

"I assure you that it is. Tell me—what have you been doing with yourself for, say, the past six months?"

"Well—going from one hospital to another, for the most part."

"You haven't been able to work, or perform your usual duties?"

"I can scarcely walk," she told him. "How could I work?"

"PRECISELY. Every now and then you commence to have pain and run a little temperature—or maybe not so little. That's because you've been just a little too active, causing one of those organs to spring a leak, and some of that poisonous pus oozes out, starting inflammation anew. Then you lie in bed for ten days or two weeks, and the inflammation subsides, new adhesions spring up to reinforce the walling-in of the pus, and you feel better. Then you get up and try to become a little active again—and the process is repeated. Am I right?"

"I—I'm afraid you are."

"Tell me—haven't any of your other doctors suggested operation?" the doctor asked.

"Why, yes, but I didn't think they knew what they were talking about. Isn't it possible that this will get well if we leave it alone?"

"It could get some better, in time. In time it will probably get to the point where those millions of gonococci will die of old age. It is possible that they have done so already. But the damage to your organs has been so great that, in my opinion, they can never repair themselves. Those cystic remains of your ovaries will not absorb—on the contrary, they will tend to get larger. In my opinion—and God knows I don't want to operate upon you, for it will be a tough job under any circumstances—you will never get to the point where you will become a useful member of society again until you are rid of that mass of disease that fills your entire pelvis. I am sorry if I appear brutal, but I want to make you understand the true situation."

"What do you suggest, Doctor, for me to do?"

"I suggest bed rest in a hospital until any exacerbation of this infection, under which you may at the moment be suffering, has abated," the doctor said. "Certain blood tests will determine that time. Then—complete extirpation of your internal generative organs."

"And I can live in comfort after that?" she asked.

"I think I can promise that—as near as I can promise anything."

"I'll think it over, Doctor, seriously."

"I trust you will."

"And I could have escaped all this, had I kept on with treatment when I was first infected?"

"I wouldn't go so far as to say that you could have escaped all of this, but I am confident your troubles would have been materially lessened."

The woman tugged silently at the corner of her handkerchief as she weighed the doctor's words.

"Well," she finally said, "I guess I had to learn the hard way. And now that I've learned—it's too late."

(To be Continued)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Indian Summer

By William Stafford

In autumn-leaved, soft-moccasined
September
Dim Indians from the ground have seized the corn,
Moved quietly at night,
Surrounded fields,
Crept through the town.
(Softly move your moccasin,
September!)

The ducks and geese, the swallows and the cranes
Have cried and fled their lives
before a storm.
(The day is June; the night is cold
November.)
In thick sunlight the golden world
slows down;
The far hills fold their gestures brown on brown.
And all who are most free most feel their chains
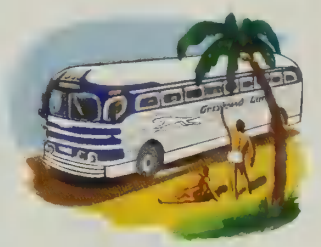
In tawny-leaved, soft-moccasined
September.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



Yes'm—you homemakers travel by GREYHOUND more than any other group!

We're proud that the most careful buyers in the Land are Greyhound's best customers.* A recent Nationwide survey has proved that you women, who are entrusted with the job of getting your families the best of everything for the fewest dollars, demonstrate that same buying skill when you shop for travel. Wherever or whenever your next trip may be, we invite you aboard a Greyhound SuperCoach—the convenient, scenic transportation that offers a lot more travel for a lot less money!

...and here are the reasons you gave for choosing Greyhound, in a recent Nationwide survey:

- Most Convenient Service
- Saves Money
- Goes More Places
- Most Scenic Travel
- Time-saving Schedules
- Comfortable Coaches
- Courteous Employees
- Makes Best Connections
- Safe Drivers
- Most Dependable Way

Do you know about "Amazing America" Tours?

Enjoy thrilling pleasure trips at lowest cost! Greyhound Expense-Paid Amazing America Tours include hotel accommodations, transportation, and special sightseeing—with everything planned, reservations made in advance. Hundreds of these Tours are available to America's major cities, National Parks, and popular resort areas of the United States, Canada, Alaska, Mexico, Cuba!

GREYHOUND

AMAZING AMERICA TOUR FOLDER—FREE!
Mail this coupon to Greyhound Information Center
105 W. Madison, Chicago 2, Ill.

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
State _____ LHJ 9-50

Baby's 7th Month: ALL'S RIGHT WITH HIS WORLD

Jeanette briefs Dana on the latest hairdos. More fun than a doll, her versatile seven-month sister can sit up, roll over, pull off her bootees, make sounds like ma and mu. Though company-minded, she's happily able to cultivate solitude.

Photographed by Dana's father
WAYNE MILLER

EASY to live with, easy to love—that's a seven-month-old. He's reached a new high in his development, a plateau where all the skills he's mastered keep him busy and peaceful. Having discovered how to hold his head up and make his arms do his bidding, he uses hands and eyes endlessly to explore the world about him. With equal enjoyment, he can be alone or part of the family, content with a toy or without. For a while, your days with him will be bonus days. Here's an average one as charted by Yale's Dr. Arnold Gesell.

The seven-monther wakes at anywhere from 6 to 8 A.M., having slept (in most cases) for 11 to 13 hours. Indifferent to wet pants, he'll perk up his head to see if anything's going on. Rarely will he insist on immediate attention, since almost anything can be his private plaything: a ribbon on his nightgown or a corner of the blanket. His hands are a source of infinite pleasure as he makes them pass before his eyes, watching them go into and out of his field of vision. After about half an hour, he'll growl or squeal to tell you he's ready to hit the milk train.

If he's still being breast-fed, this early meal is the best time for it, since later in the day he prefers bottles and solid food. He's adroit at taking hold of the nipple and at sucking and, finished, will draw away and try to sit up. His reward for your attention: a big smile. This cheer is part of his pleasant morning wakefulness. He's fine if left in a room by himself, particularly if he has a toy like a soft rubber rabbit or a rattle. Toy play is serious business. He'll give his the once-over from every angle; feel it, bang it; change it from hand to Family date with the doc—but Dana's not likely to make the visit too hectic. This is an age when babies like to be undressed, won't mind strange places if mother's near.

It's time for "shots." Diphtheria and tetanus toxoid are often given now if your baby hasn't had them. By seven months, he'll have lost his natural immunities.

Monthly checks on baby assure the doctor tha bones are straight, that he gets enough vitamin prevent rickets. Fontanel should soon begin to Touch system: his hands are teaching a seven-monther the size, weight, shape and texture of things. His grasp is less pawlike now and his thumb much more useful.

Baby's Independence Day: he knows both what he wants—and how to get it. One toy may briefly content him; then he'll be on the lookout for something new.

Mere grabbing talents are no longer so importe baby. He can shift a toy from hand to hand, and pick it up, bat it out of reach, even try to f hand; drop it, retrieve it, re-examine it. To him, this is vitally important, for the constant exploration builds a reservoir of knowledge without which he could not advance to new skills.

Family get-together, early A.M. style. A girl's best friend is still her mother—but Dana can respond to several people at a time now, likes a spot of roughhouse.

By 9 o'clock or a little later, he's ready to be propped in his high chair for some cereal. He sucks well from the spoon now, may occasionally take hold of it or of his mother's finger, and as the meal progresses seems to get more and more eager. But when he's full up, there's no more nonsense; he'll either bite the spoon or shut his mouth tightly. His daily bowel movement is likely to occur around this time; however, invariably, it's in his diapers. Most seven-month-olds are resistant to training, though some girls dislike being wet and show an earlier tendency toward bladder control.

Baby's morning nap usually starts somewhere around 10. He prefers it outside in his carriage and has no trouble going to sleep or waking. This nap may last until about 1 o'clock, when, cheerfully, he'll look around but make no great demands on you. If he fusses at all, a toy brings peace; in a little while he may enjoy being propped up. After his 2 P.M. vegetable-and-bottle meal, he's ready for a carriage ride. True, he's not keen about having his bonnet tied, but he does enjoy the sight-seeing. He'll probably wait for his afternoon snooze until he's home in the crib and can sleep from about 3:30 to 4:30.

From this, he wakes more slowly than he did in the morning and responds to a spot of orange juice. You'll find that he prefers a cup for water and juices, but at this age may refuse to take milk from it. He knows how to fasten his lips on the rim, though he probably has trouble keeping all the juice in his mouth once the cup is removed. Late in the afternoon he is less self-dependent. He likes to be with people who will pay attention to him. He recognizes certain facial expressions and gestures and, further, can interpret them. This marks his growing social perception—as important to him as the knowledge he gains from handling objects.

Partying with the family is a fine prelude to his bath. It's fun to get undressed, to be bounced on someone's lap, even more fun to splash wildly in the water. Scrubbed, rubbed and tubbed, he'll want an extra bit of loving from mother. Then the 6-o'clock supper goes down with dispatch, and so to the end of a wonderful day for the seven-monther.

I dreamed
I went to the theater
in my maidenform bra
Shown: Maidenform's Maidenette® in white satin and lace.
There is a Maiden Form for every type of figure!
©1950, MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERE CO., INC. *REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

NOT A CARE IN THE WORLD

(Continued from Page 59)

He shook his head. Sam and Grace were is older brother and sister-in-law. "I just his minute drove in. Wait a minute." He eld up a finger. "Hold everything."

He went outside and returned in a minute ith a small package held in his palm. She new; she had guessed when he went outside. He never wrote while he was away, not even card. But he always brought her a little omething.

"Boyd, no!" she said, delighted. And when he opened the small box and lifted out a pair f tiny shell earrings, she said again, "Boyd, o! How lovely!"

He looked around the showroom. "Four ars on the floor. For Pete's sake, what's New ngland Motors doing with four brand-new ars on the floor?"

KATE was so thrilled she felt like putting he earrings on right then and there. "H'm?" he said. "Oh. Oh, well, business isn't what used to be, Boyd. People can get cars now, ll over. And they don't beg you, please, uick, to take thirty-four hundred for the ig de luxe jobs."

He deliberately made his voice sound off-and: "Boss around?"

"Hartford. He had a chance to get rid of a ancy suburban he's been stuck with all win-er. Buyer's market now. He won't be back ll late tonight. You thinking of coming ack with us?"

Boyd cleared his throat. "Well, I was onsidering it," he said. "How's Gus? Is he usy?"

Gus worked the year round in the New ngland Motors body-and-fender depart-ent and Boyd moved in and joined him uring the summer. There was more work hen, with the summer crowd in town. And esides, Boyd did the more exacting jobs. us was no good when it came to really fine ork. He was poor at middle-of-the-hood bs and poor at shrinking metal.

Kate put the earrings back into the box. Gus isn't here any more, Boyd."

"He isn't? Since when?"

"Oh, about January." She closed the box, itted it, the trace of a reflective smile on her s. She blinked. "Well, you know. You ow about Gus. He was never good at it. eople stopped coming if they were at all rticular about the work. Finally, that de-rtment was losing so much money that r. Gifford had to close it up."

Boyd began to feel hollow inside. "For od?"

"That's right. He's turning it into an-her car-wash stall."

Boyd looked around the showroom so that wouldn't have to look at Kate. In his mind, iving north, he'd been all set. Four or five months' work at New England Motors; room and board at his brother's for thirty a month; dates with Kate when he felt like it; fishing week ends. Everything under control. Everything nice and easy. Nothing to worry about.

Kate was saying, "I saw some ads for men in Hartford."

Hartford wasn't so far. It was far enough, though. Shame flared in her and she half turned away. What was she thinking of, at a time like this? But he was so sweet. In some ways he was blind, selfish, thinking only of himself, like a child; living for today only, with never a thought of tomorrow. But he was sweet. He was so sweet.

Boyd said, "Well, I was only considering coming back here, anyhow. It was just an idea. Remember me to Mr. Gifford and tell him I think he did right. No use running a shop if you can't keep an A-one man in it. See you, Katy. Give you a ring soon as I'm settled. Say hello to your pa."

When he had gone, she opened the box and gazed down wistfully at the earrings. Her head tilted from side to side and her smile came and went, fluctuant and uncertain. She felt like crying. They had known each other so long, since they were kids; and always, ever since she could remember, he had meant so much to her. He had never been unkind, she thought; just thoughtless. Going his own way when he felt like it, doing the things he wanted to do. Kissing her if he felt like it, and never as if he meant it. Never seeing, or never wanting to see.

She turned her left hand in the light, catching the sparkle of the ring on her finger. He hadn't noticed. He hadn't even noticed her engagement ring.

Time meant little to Boyd. Stopping here and there on Main Street to say hello, drinking a couple of beers with Harv Leverett, the plumber, in the Yankee Bar and Grill, he didn't reach his brother Sam's till after six. From half a block away, he could see Sam on a ladder painting the trim of the shingled house.

That was Sam, all right: always working, always doing something. There was nobody in the world that Boyd thought more of than Sam; and there wasn't, of course, a better carpenter anywhere. But all their good times together were in the past. No more fishing trips to the camp Sam had built years ago on Parker Pond. No more hunting in the winter woods, camping out for two or three days at a stretch. Nowadays Sam was busy all the time.

Boyd grinned in secret amusement. He rolled the car quietly up beneath the big maple out front and was tiptoeing across the lawn with elaborate care when the eight-year-old twins, Sammy and little Grace, came shouting around the corner of the house.

"Uncle Boyd! Uncle Boyd! Daddy, mommy!"

Boyd knelt and hugged them and Sam said from the top of the ladder, "Well, for Pete's sake—well, doggone it!" and carefully laid his paintbrush across the can. He faced forward and came down the ladder as easily as a man walking down a flight of stairs, no hands. He was slight, angular, with gentle eyes in a plain, bony face and a deep V-shaped smile under his long nose.

"Sam, pal," Boyd said, towering over his brother, shaking his hand, squeezing his shoulder. Boyd's face, his eyes, shone with pleasure. But then he turned grave and stepped back, holding Sam's shoulder at arm's length. "Hey, fella, you've lost weight. You've been working too hard." There was a ten-year span between them.

"Uncle Boyd," Sammy said, tugging at Boyd's arm, "what did you bring me, huh? Huh, Uncle Boyd?"

"Now that's certainly not a nice way to greet your uncle," Sam said mildly, but he laughed at the same time and gave Boyd a slap in the small of the back. "You look great. Brown as an old saddle. Never saw you come back so brown, kid."

"Uncle Boyd," little Grace said, "take us for a ride, will you, h'm? I haven't had a ride in a real nice car, only the old truck, since forever and ever. Please, Uncle Boyd. H'm?"

"Honey, you bet. Sunday. We'll take a long ride, all of us, the whole family. I'll have to give your daddy a talking to, not taking you for a ride in that new sedan he bought last year."

"We haven't got the nice new sedan any more," she said.

BOYD looked at Sam. Sam shrugged and said, without any grievance in his voice, "It was either the truck or the sedan, and I need the truck in the business."

Puzzled, Boyd looked around, up. He caught sight of Grace at an upstairs window, and even as he waved and called, "Grace! Hello, Grace!" he realized that she must have been standing there for minutes, watching.

"Hello, Boyd," she said and disappeared from the window.

And as Boyd glanced quickly at Sam, Sam glanced away and said, "Well, I'd like to finish painting that cornice before the light gets bad." He climbed the ladder, paused halfway up and started to turn, as if to say something, then went all the way up without saying anything.

Still caught in the web of his puzzlement, twitching his shoulders as if to break out of it, Boyd went back to the car with the children running ahead of him. He opened the trunk and hauled out his suitcase and Gladstone and the cardboard carton containing the small gifts he'd brought for the family. He peered curiously through the branches of the maple at the ladder. Sam was painting again, but between strokes he looked toward the car.

The screen door on the porch slapped and Grace came down the steps. Boyd was standing with the carton in his hands and the children were tense with happy anticipation.

"Grace," he said, "what's this about the new sedan?" He saw the mixture of anger and embarrassment in her round, ruddy face. It was usually such a jolly face and now it wasn't. And she wouldn't look straight at him. He saw Sam watching from the top of the ladder, rotating the brush in the paint bucket. "For goodness' sake, Grace," he said, "what's the matter?"

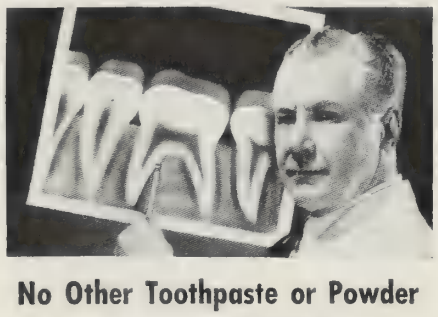
Her voice sounded clogged. "I didn't think Sam would tell you," she said. "Yes, we had to sell the sedan. Sam was in the hospital all of January and half of February. Appendicitis and then complications. Six weeks of hospital bills and doctor's ——"

Boyd's head jerked up; there was almost a ring of indignation in his voice: "Well, for

"It doesn't seem possible. My little baby—going out formal."

"Now I can dress as young as I feel!"

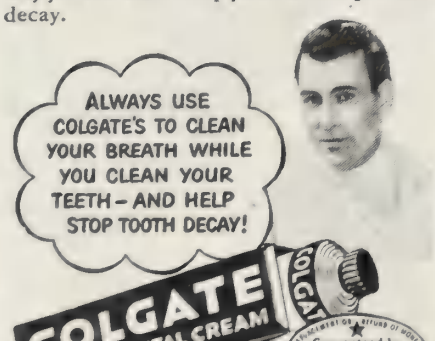
PEG Palmer
Youthful Mid-Sizes



For the modern half-size figure ... the slim, slim sheath of a dress, done with softness, with gentle detail by Peg Palmer. The fabric, a supple rayon crepe in green, blue, red or brown, sizes 14½ to 22½. About $15.00. Other Peg Palmers in sizes from 12½ to 24½. For your retailer, write Peg Palmer, 1110 Washington, St. Louis 1, Mo.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

July
READER'S DIGEST*
reports the same research which proves that brushing teeth right after eating with
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST



Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Published Reports!

Read July Reader's Digest's report on one of the most extensive experiments in dental history! And remember these additional facts: The toothpaste used exclusively in this research was Colgate Dental Cream. Two years' research showed brushing teeth right after eating with Colgate Dental Cream stopped tooth decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene! The Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever reported in all dentifrice history!

No Other Toothpaste or Powder Ammoniated or Not Offers Proof of Such Results!

Even more important, there were no new cavities whatever for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate Dental Cream correctly! Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results! No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay.

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! Colgate Dental Cream, while not mentioned by name, was used exclusively in the research reported in Reader's Digest.

crying out loud, why didn't you let me know? Why didn't someone write me?"

She grimaced and angry tears came to her eyes. "Tell you! Write you! Where? Whoever knows where to reach you? We thought he was going to die and I wanted to send a telegram, but whoever knows where to locate you?"

"Well, gee, Grace," Boyd said, his voice faltering, "I'm sorry, I'm sorry, Grace. But gosh, you know me, I never write."

"Well, you might! You might once in a while. That hurricane they had down there, Sam was like a hen on a hot griddle, worried sick. But no, not a letter—not a card—not a word." Some strands of hair came loose at her temples and she tucked them back with quick, shaking hands. Her lower lip trembled and she didn't know where to look. She shook her head, tightened her lips. She choked, "You can't stay here, Boyd!"

Little Grace covered her face with her hands and ran off and Sammy said, "I like Uncle Boyd. I like him better than old Mrs. Fullerton. Uncle Boyd's more fun."

Boyd said in a hushed voice, "All right, Grace, if that's how you feel about it." He was hurt. "I don't have to stay here, you know." He couldn't have made his voice loud if he'd tried. He spoke very carefully for fear his voice might break. "I've always paid my way here. I've always paid for my room and board. Here, anywhere, ask anybody, I've always paid my way."

"Always," Grace said ironically. "Always. Just what was expected of you. And not one thing more. Not one. Did you ever help Sam put the screens up, or take them down? Or paint them? Did you ever help him with the hundred-and-one things he does around the house when he gets home from work or on week ends? Don't stand there and tell me you've paid for your room and board. You've paid very little and you've had a home where you came and went as you pleased. All the comforts of home and none of the responsibilities."

"Now, now, dear," Sam said, coming across from the foot of the ladder.

"You stay out of it, Sam!" Grace cried. "You wouldn't tell him about the room, would you? No, you leave the dirty work to me. Oh!" She burst into tears, turned and ran into the house.

"Gosh, Boyd," Sam said, tugging at his ear.

Boyd's lips were dry. He licked them and peered dazedly at Sam. He handed Sam the carton and Sam held it and looked down glumly at it. Boyd groped for his bags and bumped his head on the open trunk door as he swung them in.

Sam cleared his throat. "You don't want to think too much about what Grace said. She was just all worked up. She was embarrassed about the room and you know Grace, when she gets embarrassed she gets mad."

Boyd rubbed his head where he'd bumped it and little Grace came running from the back of the house. "Uncle Boyd," she yelled, "mommy says there's some warmed-over meat loaf and potatoes."

"Thanks, honey," Boyd said in his hushed voice. He smiled gently at her. "Tell mommy I'll eat downstreet."

"Boyd!" Sam laughed, chiding him affectionately with the sound of it. He put his arm around Boyd's waist. "Don't be a goof, Boyd. If Grace can take it after the way she blew up, you can."

Boyd set his jaw. His eyes glinted. He said through barely parted lips, "Okay, if Grace can take it, I can." He looked down at his brother, so small and thin and worn; and, he knew from away back, so full of quiet courage. Despite what Sam must have gone through, there was in his eyes a still, soft humor, a reflection of some deep, inner peace. "Sam, I'm sorry about this past winter!"

Coming out of nowhere, swiftly, suddenly, a feeling of intense loneliness swelled into an immense cold ache in Boyd's chest. It shocked him. He had never experienced it before.

Kate said, "Boyd's back, pa. He wanted to be remembered."

"Good," George Edson said, and hung up his coat on the back of the kitchen door. He rolled his sleeves up over thick forearms. His movements were quick, easy, for such a short, heavy man. He chuckled, his eyes twinkled. "Get my chessboard out again. Heck of a town. Nobody plays chess any more. Except Boyd. What's good to eat tonight?"

"Liver and onions. And I got a rolled shoulder for the week end. It was on special."

"M-m-m! Ah!" He dried his hands and forearms with zest. "Invite Boyd over tomorrow night."

"Len's coming."

"All right, so what? Len can dry dishes and Boyd and I can settle down to a good game of chess."

A Woman's Weapon

Murray Hill, New York City
September 15, 1776

By Eleanor Stanley Lockwood

The day was cool, the air was still.
The manor house on Murray's Hill
Pulsated with a sharp unease
Whilst Mary Murray strove to please,
Regale with luncheon and admire
The redcoats gathered round her fire.

Though wife to Robert, yet did she Flirt with her guests outrageously.
Officers tarried, sated, lulled,
Their main intent and purpose dulled . . .
As Howe partook of viands sweet,
Americans in full retreat

Pushed firmly up to Harlem Heights,
Where Washington these many nights
Had been encamped—for Putnam's men
Were eager all to fight again.
Howe had planned to cut their flank
To halt them at the river bank;

But Mary Murray's eyes were bright
And Mary Murray's biscuits light.
And well the woman, Mary, knew
Good meals for warriors were few.
So, tempting, brought a needed pause
And cost Lord Howe his country's cause.

"Some other time, pa."

"Okay, okay, chicken." He sat down at the kitchen table, picked up the Bulletin, where he worked as a linotype operator, and said, "Let a pressman go today, and one of the girls out front."

Kate put on the pot of deep fat for French fries. "I wonder where Boyd will go."

"That's right." George Edson put down his paper. "I forgot about that. Tough. Boyd's a good man. Lot of people around here wouldn't let anybody but Boyd touch a fender job. Well, I guess I lose a chess partner after all. Why don't you talk Len into learning?"

"No, thank you."

George Edson hooted and slapped the table. It was an old joke. Even Kate smiled.

But it used to exasperate her, it used to bring her almost to the point of frustrate tears. Boyd would wander in for supper, never on time, and afterward they'd leave her with the dishes. They'd set up the card table, get out the chessboard and the chessmen, and sit down with all the restrained gravity of men facing a world-shaking crisis. From then on she simply did not exist, and if she made a noise, dropped a book or riffled a magazine, Boyd or her father would give her a blank look. Son of those nights she would have liked to dancing, or to the movies, or just riding the car somewhere. But they never went u less Boyd felt like it. And yet she used to watching him, the still look of concentrati on his face, the crisp dark cap of his hair, t angled sweep of his jaw, the full firm li that—when he felt like it—had smil against her own, with a little laugh behi them. Always a little laugh. Never seriou Just in fun.

"Well, anyhow," George Edson sai "nobody need worry about Boyd. Good m like Boyd can land a job anywhere."

Anywhere, yes. And Kate, slicing onio nodded to herself. Anywhere. Far awa probably. Bridgeport, or even New Yor And when autumn came round again, sou with the birds. Shame flared in her as it h done that afternoon. Why was she carin worrying, about where Boyd went, or h far away? She had Len.

"Len phone?" George Edson said.

Kate said, "Of course," with some i patience; and added, almost smugly, "Y know Len always phones Fridays."

Friday, always, at noon sharp; from Da bury, thirty miles away, where he was a ce tified public accountant. Sometimes, if couldn't get up for the week end, Kate wou take the bus down Saturday afternoon a spend the night with his folks. They'd go a movie Saturday night and visit arou among Len's relatives Sunday till it was ti for the evening bus back. It didn't matt that she disliked most of the relatives: s wouldn't have to live with them. It didn matter that Len was twelve years older; s was going on twenty-six herself. And didn't matter that he had two kids by former marriage who were rotten spoil after living three years with their gran parents. All right, Len was stiff and dig fied, always clearing his throat a little b fore speaking. But he was kind, considera And he couldn't help it if he was short than she was and had an ulcer and couldn eat things fried or rich gravies. One thing, always dried the dishes.

"Onion," Kate said.

"What?" her father said.

"Onion, onion!" Kate cried out, imp tient with herself. She dabbed at her eye But she wasn't sure whether it was the onio She wasn't sure about anything.

Boyd spent the week end in the fishi camp on Parker Pond. He didn't go near t village. For one thing, he was almost brok and for another, he didn't feel like hangi around the Yankee Bar and Grill or bowli at Riley's. He felt out of focus, off balanc He was more shaken than he realized. H had been so dead sure of the job at Ne England Motors; and as for his old room his brother Sam's, it was like home: it w home, full of all the odds and ends of his pe sonal things.

But no more. Those things were now in t attic, put there to make way for Mrs. Fulle ton. Mrs. Fullerton was a great help. S took care of her own room, pitched in wi work in the kitchen if Grace didn't feel we stayed with the kids when Sam and Gra went to the movies or to town meeting Boyd wondered why he had never thought stay with the kids instead of letting Grace g in a neighbor or a paid sitter.

The cold spasm of loneliness that ha gripped him as he stood under the big map with Sam had left its trail of bleak, persiste fear. Fear for Sam. For Sam could die: had almost died. Worry was a stranger Boyd, immense and fearsome. And all Satu day night he tossed in his bunk, hounded b a roving, shapeless sense of guilt.

Sunday morning he cleaned the tools of h trade—slappers, ding hammers, dollies, t milled-tooth file holder and the bodyman portable jack with its multiple fitments. H left early Monday morning and was in Har ford before eight. He felt better. Hartfor would be fine—a five-day week, two-fifty a hour, a cheap furnished room, and week en at the fishing camp. Maybe see Kate Satu

(Continued on Page 224)

Blemishes.* A Charm School Director has to have a beautiful complexion. And lovely Patricia Vance of Chicago, Illinois depends on Noxzema! She says, "I've used Noxzema for years for blemishes* and for cleansing. I've found it such an excellent and reliable all-purpose cream that I recommend it to students in my Charm School!"

Dry Skin. "The new Noxzema Home Facial is wonderful," says Colleen Nelson of Sacramento, Cal. "It helped make my skin look softer and smoother and was extremely helpful in relieving a very dry condition. Just using Noxzema is a pleasure! It leaves my skin feeling so cool and refreshed. I've just bought the large jar!"

NEW HOME FACIAL

Look lovelier in 10 days... or your money back! Read these 4 simple steps developed by a doctor

No need for a lot of elaborate preparations...no complicated rituals! With o cream, you can cleanse...help protect...and help heal! Yes, here's a wonderful new aid to a more beautiful-looking skin. Now, you can help your complexion look not only softer and smoother, but fresher, too...with just a dainty snow-white cream—famous greaseless Noxzema.

The way to use it is as quick and easy as washing your face. It's the new Noxzema Home Facial—and daily use can help bring you a lovelier-looking complexion, in as little as 10 days' time —or your money back!

Here's All You Do

Morning—Step 1.—Apply Noxzema over face and neck. With a damp cloth, "creamwash" just as you would with soap and water. Rinse well. "Creamwashing" with Noxzema cleanses so thoroughly. Why, Noxzema even smells clean!

Step 2.—After drying, smooth on a light film of Noxzema for your make-up foundation. This greaseless, invisible film of Noxzema not only holds make-up beautifully, but also helps to protect your skin—all day!

Evening—Step 3.—At bedtime, "creamwash" with Noxzema, just as you did in the morning. How clean your skin looks! How fresh it feels! See how you've washed away make-up, the day's accumulation of dirt and grime—without any harsh rubbing!

Step 4.—Now, lightly massage Noxzema into face and neck. Pat a little extra over any blemishes*. While you sleep, Noxzema helps heal them—helps your skin look softer and smoother, too. And it's greaseless! No "smeary" face or messy pillow!

Proved in Clinical Tests

A skin doctor developed the new Noxzema Home Facial! Then, under the supervision of three skin specialists, it was tested on dozens of women—women of all ages, with many different skin types. And 4 out of 5 showed marked skin improvement—in 2 weeks or less!

The new Noxzema Home Facial proved a wonderful aid in softening and smoothing rough, dry skin... helped heal blemished* skin...helped normalize both dry and oily skin. And you'll be thrilled to see how it can help your skin look lovelier, too!

An Exclusive Formula

You see, greaseless Noxzema is a unique medicated formula—a marvelous oil-and-moisture emulsion. This exclusive formula not only helps supply a light film of oil and moisture to the skin's outer surface... but it helps heal blemishes,* at the same time! That's why daily use of Noxzema, in this easy Home Facial, can do so much for your skin...why it can help bring you lovelier-looking skin in 10 days. Noxzema is so pleasant to use, too. It leaves your skin feeling cool, refreshed!

It Works—or Money Back

We're so sure you'll agree that Noxzema is wonderful—so positive that the new Noxzema Home Facial can help make your skin softer, smoother and lovelier-looking—that we make this sincere offer. Try the new Noxzema Home Facial for 10 days. Then, if you are not genuinely satisfied with the results, your money will be cheerfully refunded. All you do is send your jar of Noxzema, with the unused contents, to Noxzema, Baltimore, Md. But you will be delighted! Get your jar of Noxzema today. 40¢, 60¢ and $1.00, plus tax, at any drug or cosmetic counter.

*externally-caused

Skin problems aren't troubling pert Jacqueline Brabant of New York now! "A student nurse first introduced me to Noxzema," she says, "and I've used it ever since to cleanse, as a powder base and night cream."

Very dry, tender skin is Mrs. Christine London's beauty problem. "But Noxzema gives my complexion the needed protection," says this charming Miami housewife. "It's the ideal all-purpose cream for me!"

Startling New Beauty! Unmatched Performance!

HERE'S the wonder-working

1951 Whirlpool

AUTOMATIC WASHER

See the Beautiful 1951 Whirlpool AUTOMATIC WASHER at your dealer NOW!

Here's modern washing . . . master style! The 1951 Whirlpool brings you brilliant beauty to match perfect performance—plus a world of work-saving features found in no other washer. Whirlpool washes snowy white, really bright . . . not "just clean," but Clinic Clean! Whirlpool's modern-to-the-minute every way—to give you welcome hours of washday freedom! By all means . . . see the 1951 fully automatic Whirlpool washer today!

WHIRLPOOL CORPORATION, St. Joseph, Michigan. For over 50 years Manufacturers of the World's Finest Home Laundry Equipment.

MAKE THE REST OF WASH DAY WORK-FREE TOO!

See the beautiful 1951

Whirlpool Dryer

at your dealer's NOW!

It's today's greatest advance in home laundering. Dries a big wash in minutes, fresher than a breeze, wrinkle-free, fade-free. Exclusive features put it years ahead!

And here are the exclusive features that make Whirlpool the Big Difference in Automatic Washing

Suds-Miser AND THE Seven Rinses

save soap, fuel, hot water . . .
get clothes sparkling bright!

Ultra Violet

GERMICIDAL LAMP

Sanitizing rays flood clothes with sweet sun-fresh fragrance!

Aqiflow Action

Thorough top-to-bottom washing . . . your clothes get cleaner, faster!

Cycle-Tone SIGNAL

tells you when washing's done . . . saves you countless steps!

- FULLY AUTOMATIC — Just dial it!
- TOP LOADING — Full 9-pound capacity!
- FLEXIBLE TIMING — Wash as you wish!
- LIFECOAT FINISH — Modern Design!
- SIMPLE INSTALLATION — No bolting down!
- 5-YEAR WARRANTY — On Transmission!

(Continued from Page 218)

day nights and take the kids for a ride Sundays. Easy. A hundred bucks a week. Save every penny he could and by the end of summer have enough to give Sam for the down payment on a car, so Grace wouldn't have to walk eight blocks to the village every time she shopped. Easy. Wonderful.

But there was nothing doing in Hartford. He'd missed one job by a couple of days and another by a week. He left at noon and drove down the Connecticut Valley to Middletown; found nothing there and took 6A to Meriden, where he turned down a job for one-sixty an hour. There was nothing in Waterbury, and by the time he reached Bridgeport it was growing dark. But he was so possessed by his plan to help out Sam that he felt no letdown.

He was out on the streets bright and early next morning. But the morning turned up nothing. However, in the afternoon he walked into a big shop downtown and the girl in the office told him there was an opening and asked him to wait for the boss. The boss came in at five and said, no, there wasn't, he'd already hired a man. Boyd, tired and a little bewildered, drove to New Haven and spent the night there.

He took a job for one-ninety an hour in a ragtag shop he didn't like the minute he walked into it. He lasted one day. He was finishing up the metalwork on a fender when the boss said, "You don't have to bust a gut on that bead, fella."

"This is the way I like to do a bead. Any bead I do, you don't see a ripple afterwards."

"Okay, smarty pants. You do your bead your way and we'll go on doing it our way. We undercut on prices here. We don't make 'em look factory-new. Finish, pick up your day's pay, and so long. Either that, or rough through the jobs like you're told."

Boyd said, "You don't want an A-one metal man here, chum," and turned to gather up his tools. He pointed a bumping file at the fender and said, "Finish it yourself. Never mind your day's pay. Any time I do lousy work deliberately, on purpose—nuts!"

That night he slept in his car on a beach road at Madison, because his money was running out. Next morning he crossed the Connecticut River on the new bridge near Old Lyme and followed Route 1 to New London. The convertible seemed to eat up gas worse than ever, but he knew that it didn't. Eight cylinders under the hood and a hundred and thirty horse took plenty of gas; always had. For the first time, he began to feel like an impostor. What right had he to be driving a car that had taken him almost three years to pay for on the installment plan? Oh, but he had wanted this car, this beauty! Like a child, he had wanted this toy! With the top down, and wearing big dark glasses and a fancy sports coat and hitting seventy or eighty on the big pikes!

He picked up two days' work in New London because a man was out sick. From there he went to Providence, and from Providence to Springfield, Massachusetts. He was so discouraged now that he felt sick at his stomach. He couldn't breeze into shops the way he used to. He even felt self-conscious about his fine clothes and changed to a pair of khaki pants, a work shirt and a leather jacket. There was nothing in Springfield, but he hadn't, somehow, the energy to move on. His stomach hurt him, and he thought of Sam's operation, but he was afraid to go to a doctor. And he was down to two dollars.

He knew what he'd have to do—to get by, to mark time. He'd done it in Florida the last three months of his stay there, when the shop he'd worked in folded. He'd hated doing it and he wasn't going to like it now. But he threw some tools into a bag and set out on foot in the bright, warm sunlight. The sun had been hotter in Florida. That was why he'd come back home so much browner than in other, easier years. Working at curbs in the blazing sun ——

He spotted the car as it pulled into the curb and stood beside it as the man got out.

"Fix up that dent in your fender, mister?"

The man was chunky, with big, hard hands. "Peddling curb service, eh?"

"Two bucks," Boyd said, keeping his gaze on the fender.

"A floater, eh? A floating body-and-fender man."

Boyd felt his stomach growl. He took his gaze from the fender and leveled it at the man's pale, chunky face. The man shook with silent laughter.

Boyd said, "You want to make something out of it, buster?"

The man laughed. "Look, Jack, don't get sore. I was just kidding. I've done it myself. Sure, a little masking tape on the head of a ding hammer, and curb service while you wait. But I'm through with that kind of rat race. Got my own one-man shop up in Hannah Falls now. Sorry I got you sore, pal."

Boyd stared at him, not moving, blocking his way.

"Now look, Jack, I was just kidding, I didn't mean anything ——"

"H'm?" Boyd said. He blinked, said, "Oh," as if in a daze, and stepped aside, off the curb, into the street.

He was still standing there a minute later when a horn blew and a woman shouted, "Will you please get off the street? I'd like to park."

"Oh," Boyd said.

The night George Edson went up to the firehouse to shoot pool Kate walked over to her sister Miriam's to sit with the baby while Bud and Miriam went to the movies. Miriam was four years younger than Kate. Her other sister, Polly, was even younger, just twenty, but she'd already been married a year, was living up in Great Barrington, and expected a baby in August. They'd kidded Kate a great deal about being an old maid and sometimes they'd made her downright angry.

But they didn't kid her any longer. They said how lucky she was. They were impressed by Len Wengrow. He drove a big car, he was a certified public accountant, and when he came to Governorstown he took Kate to the homes of people like J. G. Stover, the judge of probate, or Walter Burkhart, the cashier of the local bank. Kate thought they were silly, for she wasn't impressed by anybody, by how much they had or what they did.

Bud and Miriam got home at ten after nine. Bud offered to drive her home, but Kate said she'd rather walk. It was a beautiful night, mild, with no breeze, no movement of the leaves in the trees she walked under up Purdy Street. Sounds carried with a soft, languid clarity, and the traffic light at Main and Center was jewel-red, then jewel-green. She drew in her breath with a sweet pang of pleasure, a pleasure in the familiar—the smell of spring-damp earth and the pungent odor of bark still wet from the morning's rain.

"Katy! Hey, Katy!"

She saw him stop beneath the traffic light and retrace his steps, moving in his easy, loose-hipped way, his hands spaded casually in his back pockets. He wore work pants and his jacket was zippered.

"Boyd, for goodness' sake!" she exclaimed. "Where've you been? Pa's been all steamed up about some chess, and neither hair nor hide of you."

"Didn't your boss tell you? I phoned him at his house last night from Springfield, Mass."

"He wasn't in today. Springfield, Mass.? What were you doing up there?"

"Feel like a cola, Kate?"

"Sure. And I've got some home on ice. Why don't you get your car, so you won't have to walk back for it?"

"Okay, over here. I just got in from Springfield. You gotta step high to get in this one, Kate."

"You mean this is yours?"

"Upsydaisy," Boyd said, boosting her into the jeep. "Beat-up and no curtains, but once I do a valve job on her and build me a plywood top, she'll be okay. Haul anything. Hold on, Katy."

"Oh!" she said, holding on, as he booted the jeep down Center Street on the patched macadam. "Oh, Boyd! Ouch!"

"All the joys of horseback riding and no danger of falling off. Giddap, giddap!"

He turned on a dime and parked in front of the Edson cottage. Kate was still holding on. Boyd looked at her and laughed and slapped his knee. He leaned back and propped his foot against the instrument panel.

"Well," Kate said, feeling if her hair was still in place, "I can't say it compares with your snazzy convertible."

"Ah," Boyd said, sighing, "those oversize balloon tires, that quick getaway. Well, what the heck, it was nice while it lasted. And I got a fair price for it, just this morning, and picked this heap up cheap." He slapped the steering wheel. "Need it in my business."

"Boyd," Kate said with fond, half-laughing impatience, "what are you talking about?"

He was silent for a minute. "Katy, I ran into a guy on the street in Springfield ——" He rubbed his knee. "Kate, I always liked nice things—a fancy car, nice clothes, first-class food. And since the war, it all came easy. Anyhow, it seemed easy. But I was never ahead of the game, really—never more than fifty bucks ahead. Never a dime in the bank to fall back on if the going got rough. Always the sirloin steak when it should have been hamburgers or hot dogs. Come day, go day. Nothing to worry about." He struck his knee with his fist. "I wasn't even in any position to help my brother Sam, and him up against it like nobody's business! And I figured I could make it up to him the easy way: a fat job in Hartford, week ends here, fishing up at the camp—have my cake and eat it!"

"Boyd," Kate said, patting his arm. "Boyd, sh! You're shouting. The neighbors."

His voice dropped. "So now I've got to do it the hard way. Well, I phoned your boss last night and he'll sell me his body-shop equipment and I phoned Harv Leverett and he'll rent me the empty half of his plumbing shop." He stretched his arms above his head, drawing all his muscles together. "And I'll be near my brother Sam. I don't like the way he looks. I'm worried. Maybe I can help him do some chores." He relaxed all at once, letting his breath out. He chuckled, poked Kate with his elbow. "Be near you, too, Katy."

"Boyd ——"

He leaped out, walked around the front of the jeep and said, "Okay, come on, jump."

She jumped and he caught her in his arms. He laughed softly and held her in his arms, her feet clear of the ground.

"Half pint," he said, and kissed her.

She kissed him back the way she always had done—lightly, restrained. And then she let something go within her, something she had never let go before, and she pressed her lips against his with a wild, reckless yearning. And his lips against hers quickened and were sweet with a burning urgency. Maybe, she thought, this would have happened long ago if she hadn't held back. She should have known that Boyd, behind his casual, offhand way, was really shy.

But it wasn't too late. Her arms were around him, beneath his jacket, hard against his lean, strong back. She managed, even in her confusion, to remove her engagement ring. It was, she thought, right now, the decent thing to do.

THE END

JUST AVERAGE

The average person who lives to be 70 years old has slept 20 years of it away.

The average worker in the United States is idle 10 days each year because of illness.

The average person continually gives off as much heat as a 100-watt electric bulb.

Between 15,000 and 20,000 persons kill themselves in an average year in the United States.

The average man's heart beats 3,000,000,000 times in a lifetime.

—HAROLD HELFER.

Gentler bleaching action.....

added protection for linens! Linens cost money. Clorox saves money because it conserves linens . . . it's free from caustic, therefore extra gentle. Give your white and color-fast cottons and linens a long, useful life by laundering them with Clorox! Besides conserving linens, Clorox makes them snowy-white, color-bright. It removes stains, deodorizes, makes linens sanitary, too!

Greater disinfecting efficiency...

added protection for health! Because youngsters want to be near Mom as she works, the kitchen floor is a favorite playground. But floors can harbor harmful germs. That's why so many women use Clorox in routine household cleaning. They depend on its germ-killing power. For Clorox disinfects better, kills germs quicker than any other product of its kind! Directions on the label.

Copr. 1950, Clorox Chemical Co.

CLOROX AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

Pineapple Ice Cream Supreme

A PARTY FLAVOR THAT'S CREAMY-SMOOTH!

1 can Ten-B-Low
1 cup water
1½ teaspoons vanilla
½ cup pineapple juice
½ cup well-drained canned crushed pineapple makes a quart

FOR REFRIGERATOR:

1. Set refrigerator control to coldest temperature.
2. Place Ten-B-Low in a mixing bowl and gradually add water, pineapple juice and vanilla. Mix thoroughly.
3. Pour into freezing tray and freeze until mixture is frozen. You need only add water and flavoring to Ten-B-Low because each can contains all the sugar, heavier-than-whipping cream, milk and egg yolks necessary for extra-rich, real ice cream.
4. Break up and spoon frozen Ten-B-Low into mixing bowl. Beat until slightly softer than creamy mashed potatoes. Do not overwhip. Stir in crushed pineapple.
5. Immediately return to freezing tray and freeze. That's all there is to it. Nothing to add but flavoring and water. Because only water has been removed. Ten-B-Low is not an imitation. Ten-B-Low is genuine ice cream in heavy concentrated form . . . containing heavier-than-whipping cream lacking in so-called "mixes." Make real ice cream . . . make rich ice cream with Ten-B-Low. Get several cans today!
6. Top with canned crushed pineapple when serving.

FOR HAND FREEZER:
Just add water, flavoring and freeze.

2 super desserts made with

Ten-B-Low

CONCENTRATED REAL ICE CREAM and crushed canned pineapple

Pineapple Super-Chiffon Pie

CHIFFON LIGHT! ICE CREAM RICH!

made without cooking

1. Thoroughly combine 1 can Ten-B-Low, 4 teaspoons lemon juice, 2 teaspoons vanilla extract with 3 well-beaten egg yolks.
2. Sprinkle 1 envelope unflavored gelatin on ¼ cup cold water, soften 5 minutes. Combine ¾ cup water with 1 cup undrained, canned crushed pineapple; heat to boiling. Dissolve gelatin in hot liquid.
3. Gradually combine with Ten-B-Low mixture. Cool. When it begins to set, beat thoroughly.
4. Beat 3 egg whites until stiff, gradually add ⅓ cup sugar while continuing to beat. Fold into Ten-B-Low mixture.
5. Pour into baked 10" pie shell. Chill several hours until set. Top with whipped cream if desired.

FREE — 20 delicious recipes, including many unusual and easy-to-make desserts. Just write to Sally Ross, Ten-B-Low Co. Dept. B-59, Columbus 16, Ohio.

3 STEPS TO A PRETTIER SKIN

(Continued from Page 160)

fluid intake is an excellent intestinal cleanser and encourages regular elimination.

6. With the exception of young people and teen-agers, who require milk each day to build strong bones and good teeth, it is helpful to cut down on the amount of milk you drink. You may drink skim milk, or check with your doctor and dentist to see whether it is safe for you to cut milk out of your diet almost completely for a while.

7. You may find that because you are cutting out sweets entirely, you are hungry between meals. If so, eat figs or celery and carrot sticks.

KEEP IT CLEAN

Our doctor reports that overly ambitious patients who rub and scrub at their faces in an effort to "wash away" blackheads are only stirring up trouble by causing irritation! So keep in mind that a gentle hand and faithful daily care will bring you faster—and rosier—results! Follow these steps:

Wash your face with warm water and soap at least two or three times each day. Soap your hands thoroughly or use a soft, sudsy facecloth and go over your entire face and neck. Give special attention to the oily areas around your nose and chin and don't forget to wash right up to and around your hairline. When you have done a thorough job of cleansing, rinse your face with clear warm water. Follow with a splash of cold water or skin astringent to help close the newly opened pores. Then blot your skin dry with a soft towel.

Depend on a good, bland soap to keep your skin fresh and clean. Mildly perfumed soaps are said to have no deleterious effect on acne and may be used. Skin specialists warn against rubbing creams and greasy cleansing agents into infected skin areas, since this may spread the infection and clog the pores. Massage and facial packs have similar tendencies and should be avoided.

Try this treatment two or three times weekly before retiring: Add one level tablespoon of boric-acid crystals to a pint of boiling water, stirring until the crystals are completely dissolved. (You can buy the prepared solution in a drugstore.) Pour the preparation into a bowl, and while it is cooling make two compresses, using double thicknesses of flannel large enough to cover your entire face. Soak the compresses in the solution, wring out, and apply while warm, alternating compresses every minute for twenty minutes. (Be sure to keep this preparation out of the reach of youngsters.)

MAKE-UP HIGHLIGHTS

Overloading your face with make-up in an effort to hide skin blemishes will not only aggravate a poor skin condition, but fail miserably at its goal! On the other hand, there is no reason to believe you are destine to meet the world with an unadorned face The prettiest solution lies in moderation— and ingenuity!

Acne presupposes an oily skin and so it best to avoid oil and cream-base make-up Use, instead, one of the cake-type prepara tions. Choose a shade slightly darker tha your own skin tones and use immaculate co ton or sponges wrung out in clear water t apply it lightly over your face and neck. A low to dry, tissue off the excess, then dus lightly with powder. Draw attention to you eyes by brushing your lashes with a dar mascara. See that your eyebrows are shape into a pretty arc, and be sure to clean u those stray hairs beneath the natural eye brow line. Brighten your mouth with th clearest red lipstick you can find. Maintai powder-free hairlines and necklines, an bring as many fresh, immaculate touches t your general appearance as you possibly ca Cool-looking white or light collars—prett pastel scarves—a real or make-believe flowe in a becoming color adds femininity an imagination to any costume.

And how about your hair? Our doctor tel us oily scalp conditions and dandruff a found in a high percentage of acne patient Regular shampoos, special cleansing toni and clean hairbrushes and combs all work t ward clearing up the condition—and pr ducing a prettier head of hair than eve before.

AIDS AND MORE AIDS

Lotio alba (white lotion) is used to hel clear up mild cases of acne and can be applie at home. Physicians suggest that you gentl rub this lotion on your face at nighttim after you have cleansed your skin with soa and water.

Sunshine is as effective as it is inexpensive Five to ten minutes of sun-bathing the firs few days is usually enough. Gradually in crease your exposure periods, making an eve tan your goal—not a blistering red!

Daily exercise in the fresh air is an excelle means of stirring up a stubborn circulatio and encouraging regular elimination.

Plenty of sleep and an easy-does-it attitud toward life in general will relax your nerves- give your system a chance to prove it ca produce a prettier skin.

Ask your dermatologist about: (1) The lo tions and ointments which contain many ne effective remedies. (2) The dry-ice trea ments (performed only by skin specialist which are designed to diminish the amount o oil on the skin and cleanse the pores. The ic peels the skin and improves circulation. properly given, it reduces and does awa with ugly scarring. THE EN

"She doesn't like violets or roses or heliotrope and that stuff. She likes popcorn."

PHOTO BY GLADYS TABER

Autumn is a time for reminiscence, and a lingering, loving look around the world in case tomorrow brings the first frost.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

DROVE to the village yesterday along the golden country road. At every farmhouse a group of children stood waiting for the school bus. Hair brushed, shoes lished, pencil cases in small scrubbed nds, they looked like storybook children. I passed, they all waved at me, and I ved back. Suddenly I felt proud of my untry all over again, for it came to me at there are places in the world where the ildren waiting along the road would fear stranger in a car, and places where the ldren do not stand on September morn- s clean and rosy waiting to ride to a free hool.

Farther on, I turned out for a load of hay, ast rich gift from the earth. The sweet sty smell of the grasses blew in to me.

"Nice day," called the farmer.

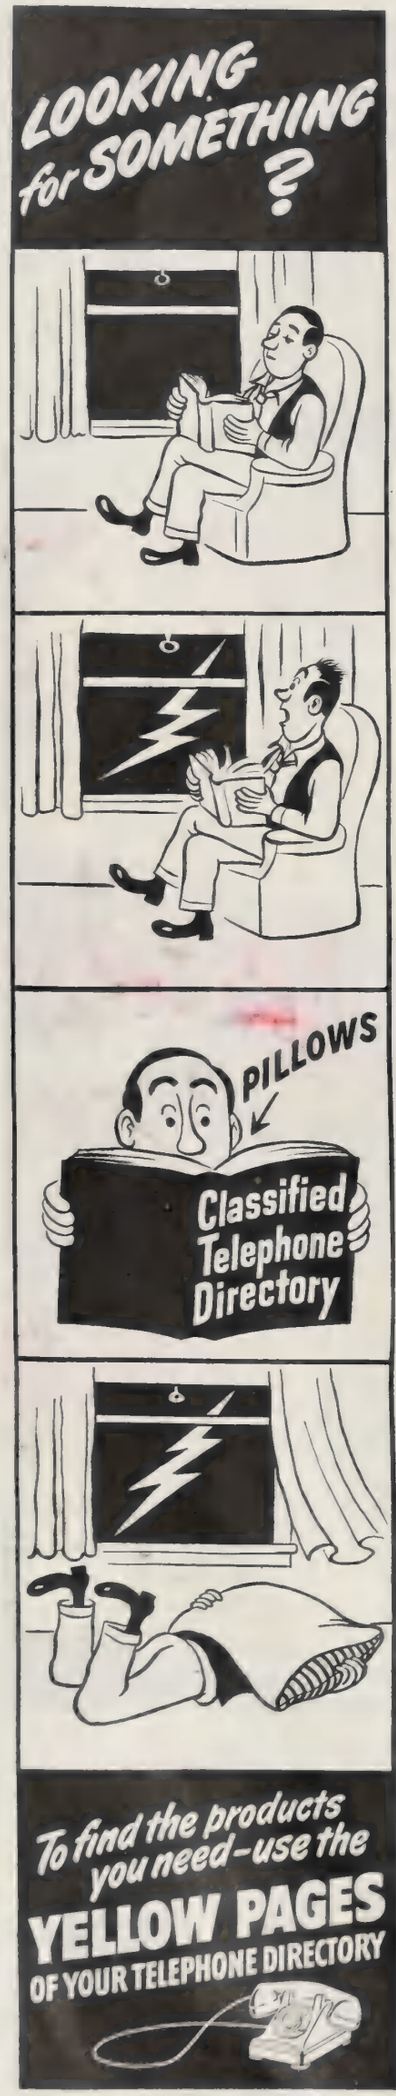
"Nice day," I said.

The whole countryside is bright with or now—not the tender color of spring, t the vital tones of early autumn. Goldenl follows the line of the fences with its thery spikes of minted gold, and the cory sets deep blue stars along every e. The gardens are like a Mexican fiesta h the countless shades of the zinnias. My favorite zinnia color is the soft, her pale salmon, and I love to mass the ssoms in an old dark blue sugar bowl. e side of the bowl is cracked, but that esn't matter when the flowers are in. For t sharper-colored oranges and yellow- s, I use a small old wooden bucket, and t tones of the wood make the zinnias a ely background.

When I was growing up, most people had atnots and they displayed family curios, rida grasses, a Rogers group, a souvenir e from the St. Louis exposition, and ious shells. When I went calling h mamma, I would sidle up and look a the treasures, and sometimes I might allowed to lift a shell and put it to ear and listen to the immortal echo of sea.

Now I have a large polished shell sent from Florida, a conch shell, and I use it on the table with creamy white roses in it. The color of the shell is just the color of the deepest petals of the roses. In mamma's day, people put flowers in flower vases, but nowadays we use everything from pie tins to old salt dishes.

Jill has been down in the lower meadow looking at the cranberries. Last year we forgot them until too late and they were all frosted. The wild cranberries are elegant, big waxy ovals, very sweet and paler in color than the commercial ones. We usually have enough for four or five pints of cranberry sauce, treasured for special occasions.



There are so many things to can or freeze now that the days need to be stretched out. We made pepper relish and corn relish and piccalilli this week. The whole house smells of spices and vinegar and sugar, and the shelves in the fruit cellar are filling up nicely.

Pepper relish is the quickest and is wonderful with cold meats or sliced turkey. To make it, I chop together 12 red peppers and 12 green peppers, seeded, 12 onions, peeled. Cover them with boiling water and let stand 5 minutes, then drain. Then I add 2 cups vinegar, 2 cups sugar, 3 tablespoons salt, and boil the mixture 5 minutes, pour into clean hot jars and seal at once.

The corn relish calls for 18 ears of corn, from which I cut the kernels with a sharp, long knife. I mix the corn with 4 large peeled onions, 2 green peppers and 1 red pepper which have been seeded and chopped, add 1 pound light brown sugar, ¼ cup salt, 3 tablespoons celery seed, 3½ tablespoons dry mustard and 2 quarts vinegar. I cook this slowly for 20 minutes, stirring to prevent sticking. This goes into sterilized hot jars and is sealed.

Making catchup is a little discouraging because you work so long for such a small result. But I always make a batch or two, for it tastes so good in winter, and there are extra tomatoes to use up, even after we make gallons of tomato juice and fifty quarts of canned tomatoes!

After a day of canning, I like to pack supper in a basket and have a picnic. The air is dreamy and quiet, and at twilight a pure-blue haze drifts over the woods.

For me it is the time of nostalgia, much more than spring. The beauty has an ache in it. I know our destination is winter, and every perfect day is a station stop that I would like to get out at. The first golden leaf seems to sing in the air, the rosy windfall apple is sweeter than honey, the joe-pye weed paints the fields with exquisite blue-pink.

I remember how Honey used to race around the lawn. This was her favorite season; she always thought she was a puppy when she sniffed the September air.

Susie and young Flyer are going to school now, hoping to learn their Obedience lessons in time for the October show in Waterbury. Susie is not so distractable as her brother; like all little girls, she takes to her books neatly. Flyer would always be making spitballs if he were in a classroom. But in the end, he will probably do better than Susie; this is the way things work out usually.

Jonquil is a flyaway, but her mind works like chain lightning. Now at eight and a half months, she is the most beautiful color I ever saw. As her sturdy little body goes bucketing over the ground, I am always trying to describe that color to myself. She was the color of fresh country butter at first, but now she is more like pure maple sirup, or a freshly toasted English muffin. She is never afraid. When she pulled out the lamp cord and the wall lamp crashed down on her head, she gave a wild leap away from the debris and then poked her nose right back under the shade to see what in the world this was all about. When the big Irish bowls her over in a mad rush, she scrambles to her feet and takes off after the setter.

It can be very hot in September in New England, with a kind of concentrated heat, and I often give the oldest dogs a quick bath when it is the hottest. It cools them off marvelously, though it makes me boiling. Lugging a plump, elderly spaniel up into the tub and washing and drying are warming occupations. Jonquil gives herself a dip in the water bowls, flailing the water out and dunking her head, ears and all. This also is not cooling for the human who has to fill water bowls every half hour.

And then suddenly it turns cold, and around the twenty-sixth of September we almost always have the first killing frost. If only those fancy rainmakers would unmake that one frost, we would have flowers and vegetables way through October, for it always warms up and is wonderful afterward.

We never bother with the weather reports about the frost. We just go calmly along until the morning when George says, "Tonight it comes." Then we fill the house with flowers and cram the kitchen with vegetables and move in the best window boxes.

Maybe, I think, we ought to get at that fall house cleaning before it is too cold. And the fence needs painting and the kennels should be scrubbed. We build up the fire in the fireplace while the frost walks in the garden, and plan a great amount of new activity. So the next day, we go off on another picnic because it is such a lovely day it is too bad to waste a minute of it!

We got as far as buying an old-fashioned carpet beater this week. All the modern cleaning aids are so good, but I have a great respect for a carpet beater. If you put a small rug on the line and beat it smartly the dust flies out in clouds, and the rug seems to have air whipped into it. The colors look better. Dog hair winnows out. For the large rugs, I like ammonia and water and a piece of old Turkish towel. A thorough rubdown with this brightens and freshens any rug.

When we are housebreaking puppies, I keep a can of cleaning fluid and a soft cloth right in the cellarway, and when a puppy makes an error, I finish the cleanup job by applying cleaner and sopping it in and wiping it up with the cloth. This deodorizes and protects the rugs.

After the house has been full of guests and family all summer, it seems quiet. It is a good time to finish the books I began in July, or to spend the evening finding out how many dollars off I am in the checkbook. We miss the children, back at school and work, but I am a good deal like the Burnettes' little girl, Becky. The Burnette cook says, "That Becky sure is sometimey. Sometime she like to be with folks and sometime she like to be alone."

I think I am a sometimey person too. Sometime I like to be alone and listen with my heart to the sound of September, which is the stirring of leaves about to fall. Our whole countryside has been rich all summer, the earth has yielded the crops generously. Now the plump cattle come in from summer meadows and the kittens are half grown and the spring chickens look fat and matronly as they scratch in that silly important way hens do in the barnyard.

As I walk down the road at dusk with Sister and Jonquil trotting along hoping for rabbits, I think how peaceful the old house looks, under the arch of sugar maples. It looks happy, even though the paint is definitely peeling from the front clapboards.

I like to think that the men who shaped the beams and built the stone chimney and laid the wide hearth felt they were building for a long time. Now that another September moon is rising above it, I feel grateful that the little white house can dream through another golden season.

But Jonquil and Sister are not grateful at all. They have lost that rabbit again!

THE END

Portrait of Aunt Belle

By Harriet Gray Blackwell

Aunt Belle's back was never bent
Though she was eighty when she went,

And neither did her long brown hair
Reveal white ravelings of care.

Her crinkled skin was soft as silk,
Her blue eyes guileless as a milk-

Fed kitten's. Flowers of balsam were Quite simply "tech-me-nots" to her,

And when we children looked askance
At her quaint speech, our mother's glance

Was sobering; later we heard
Why she was untaught as a bird.

War left her poor as a winter bough
And her slim strength was used to plow

The fields. She had no time for books,
Yet in her mind were little nooks

Of knowledge fresh as April rain,
And wholesome as bread from home-ground grain. . . .

Perhaps in that fair land she grows
Celestial ribbon grass and rose,

Then it would be just like Aunt Belle,
Noting the call of Gabriel,

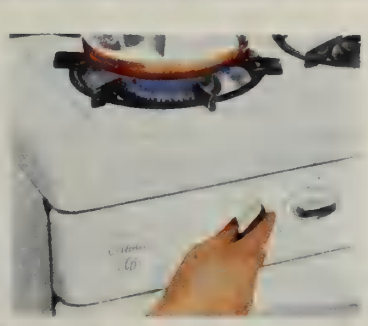
To give new saints a bright bouquet
In keeping with home-coming day.

Beautiful to behold!

and so automatic

you can love it and leave it!

You'll fall in love with cooking all over again when you change to a new Gas range. It's so beautiful you can't stop looking at it . . . yet so automatic it cooks a complete meal without a glance from you. Cool, clean, instantly fast — it gives more than any other modern range—yet costs less! Less to buy, install, operate! Join the millions who are choosing new Gas ranges every year!



NEW FREEDOM GAS KITCHEN DESIGN

CEDRIC "CP" GAS RANGE—ONE OF MANY ALL NEW, ALL AUTOMATIC GAS RANGES BUILT TO "CP" STANDARDS.

Complete clock control!

Any heat—instantly!

Smokeless broiling!

GAS has got it!

FOR MODERN COOKING
REFRIGERATION
WATER-HEATING
HOUSE-HEATING
AIR-CONDITIONING
CLOTHES-DRYING
INCINERATION

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

So precious, so perfect

...La Mode fashion buttons impart an expensive air to everything they touch... enrich, enhance your entire wardrobe. Buttons appear like magic... in every conceivable shape, shade and price... whenever you ask for La Mode. At your favorite Button Department. Pattern #9888 illustrated.

La Mode
FOR EVERY FASHION IN EVERY PRICE RANGE BUTTONS
Since 1857

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

B. Blumenthal & Co., Inc., 1372 Broadway, New York 18, New York

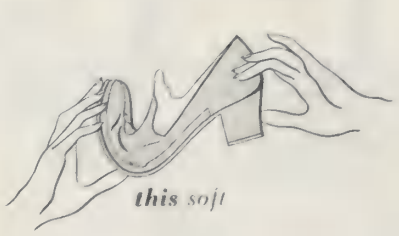
Also creators of nationally advertised Le Chic buttons, available at variety stores.



THE GENUINE ALLIGATOR YOU'VE ALWAYS WANTED... EASY TO OWN AT

14.95 & 15.95

handbags to match

stella red green brown
black 15.95

SHENANIGANS

this soft* reno

red green brown black 14.95

write, we'll tell you where:
shenanigans • dept. lh 9 • 47 w. 34th st.* new york 1

By CARMEN STONE ALLEN

WE live with a cat, a squirrel, two lizards, one turtle, five tadpoles, and two frogs that escaped and are at large somewhere in the living room. The number and variety vary with the mortality rate, and the degree of firmness we can muster to keep any others away. Presented to us wistfully and hopefully before each birthday and each Christmas is a request list asking for: a horse, two boxer dogs, a talking crow and a small monkey.

No one ever warns young parents about pets. A sleeping baby makes a lovely picture to his adoring parents. Little do they dream that in a few years their son will come trailing through the front door followed by a dog with muddy feet. He will sidle furtively toward his room because he has a small snake in his pocket and a frog in his cap, both of which he will stash away in the chest drawer. The beautiful blond angel in the starched pinafore will have a cat and three nursing kittens on the pale yellow bedspread.

The only way to avoid having pets is to avoid having children. Fortunately, by the time pets come along parents have become quite attached to their children; otherwise infanticide would be rampant. Parents with young children ask, "When shall we let Billy have his first pet?" Give a child his first pet when his nagging for one becomes worse than the evils of having a pet around. Last week I overheard some sage advice from one ten-year-old to another: "Just keep on and beg, and beg, and beg. Pretty soon you can drive them nearly crazy. Then your daddy will say, 'Oh, let her have the dog.'"

The person who doesn't know what he is talking about says, "Let the child have pets when he is old enough to be responsible for their care." That time comes when he is an adult with children of his own. No matter how well organized a house is, the morning always comes when everyone oversleeps, and the children dash out, shoestrings flapping and shirttails flying, to catch the school bus. It is either have them underfoot all day, or feed Gertrude yourself. You could let her go hungry, but as she weaves figure eights around your ankles or puts her paws up on your skirt, it would be difficult to convince her she isn't your responsibility.

When pets are the children's obligation, what happens when they go away for the week end, or go to camp, or get the measles? Who is going to drive the car to the vet's to get the animals inoculated? When Gertrude gets killed by a speeding car, and leaves three five-day-old kittens, who is going to stay home days and get up nights to feed them? Poor old mamma is the answer to all such questions, and it is small wonder that poor old mamma has a wide white streak of hair running down the middle of her head.

All children are going to take their pets to bed with them. All parents are going to deliver a firm ultimatum, and haul them out. The day comes, however, when little Alice is in bed convalescing, and the discovery is made that having Trixie on her bed will keep her quiet for hours. That night she raises such a howl for the same setup that her cough gets worse. You weaken. "Just this one night," you warn in a feeble facsimile of a stern parent. Alice and Trixie give each other a knowing look, and from that time on the hump at the foot of Alice's bed will be Trixie.

I envy those people who have cats that are lazy and no-account. Ours are always prosaic, hard-working laborers whose sole aim is to rid this section of all rodents. That in itself would be admirable, but they bring all their catches home alive to prove their prowess. Just as I was getting out of the tub one day, I saw the bath mat give a big heave. I put my foot back in, shut my eyes for a second and looked again. Again it heaved. I held firmly to the towel rod and tried to think if there had been insanity anywhere in my family. Then I saw Claribel, and knew that I was still sane, and the heaving was real. I lifted the corner of the mat very gingerly, and underneath was a mole, trying rather frantically to burrow in the tile floor. I dragged Claribel over and showed the mole to her. "Oh, yes," she said, "I caught it, and brought it in to you." At least I got it outside before any child came along and made a pet of it.

Some parents clutch at the idea that some varieties of pets are no trouble, and they will limit their collection to those. It doesn't work. Goldfish should be simple. You just go in the dime store and pick up two in a glass bowl. All is serene for a few days, then they develop an asthmatic gulping and wheezing that can be heard all over the house. At this point your husband begins reading about balanced aquariums, and you end up with fourteen tanks of tropical fish. Each tank has lights to keep the water an even temperature, and each one has a gadget to supply oxygen to the water.

Every parent has at least one simple-minded friend who comes over Easter morning with two baby ducklings as Easter presents. They are golden balls of fluff, and even your hardened heart softens when you hold them. Six weeks later the golden balls of fluff are gone, and in their place are two monsters that wake you up at five every morning. They eat the lettuce as it comes up, nip the buds off your most expensive petunias, and get right under your feet every time you step outside. The rest of their time they sit on the front doorstep and leave evidence of their presence.

Crickets seem harmless enough. By diligent searching, and frequent references to the nature-study book, the children in our neighborhood found a male and some female crickets. They told me about it, but I was preoccupied and only made some sort of asinine remark about the cheerful sound of a cricket chirping. Some time later, I found we had seventeen lively crickets jumping around merrily in a closet.

Lizards are quiet and require little care, but they are Houdinis at getting out of cages, and at seven o'clock in the morning the sight of a miniature dinosaur flicking his tongue out from behind the cereal box has proved too much for many people. White mice get lost in beds, it is an unending struggle to keep the cats and the mice separate, and they multiply at alarming rates.

Babies come just babies. All too soon they are followed by a Pied Piper assortment of cats, dogs, rats, birds, calves, goats and ponies. You don't have a child, you have a menagerie. If you have three children, you can count on at least twelve pets simultaneously. You can't have children without pets, but it's a high price poor parents pay. THE END

HOMELESS CHILDREN IN BUTTE, MONTANA

(Continued from Page 23)

ve much time to waste. Secondly, it said ght in the charter that if the club didn't n some sort of service program for the com- unity, it would have to disband. Its name is the Soroptimist Club—"soror, for sister, timo, for the highest good"—and it had a tional reputation to uphold.

Mary proposed at the very first meeting at the Butte Soroptimists take on as their rvice the creating of a home for children. e club gave her its polite attention, as was e a fellow member, and then moved on to ner ideas. Some of the other ideas, most of ich weren't so ambitious, began to blossom d bloom. But not the idea of the home. It oked at first as if the Soroptimists were st as scared of a big job as anyone else.

One of the club's officers, however, wasn't ared of anything. Lois Jacobsen was just ling her time. Her husband believed that f you want to do something badly enough u can do it"—and so did she. One day she oked Mary in the eye and said, "Mary, u're going to have your home. I've rallied ough strength in the club now, and tomor- w it's coming to a vote. You watch—Butte about to get the finest children's home any ld would need."

The club argued over the idea all the next eting. Some said bluntly it was just too a job. Others said they thought it was a nderful idea, but that first there ought to a committee appointed of those who were husiastic to "make a study." The pessi- sts pointed out that a home would cost a of money and if they found they could lect only half enough, they'd have had all work of getting that in—and then they'd ve to work like dogs to take it all back. ere was no Butte Community Chest then all back on, no special funds for city proj- s—once started, they'd be on their own. The opposition, however, lost the day. e club agreed that: one, they'd look for a table house; and two, they'd campaign for money to buy it.

May, 1947, only three years after they'd anized, they found their house. A condi- n of the Child Welfare Department was t it must be near schools and churches. s was; in fact, it was in one of Butte's residential neighborhoods. A demand of club was that it should be big enough to d at least twenty children. This could: its -story brick walls held twelve rooms and baths. Moreover, it was in pretty good dition, needing only fresh paper and nt—and the cost was only $5500.

he club set its sights for $8000 to include niture, and began campaigning. First they w up a list of 10,000 names—the county's ulation is around 55,000—and two by sixteen women began ringing doorbells, gering receptionists, writing letters. They only evenings, lunch hours and Satur- days. But by the end of the first two weeks they'd put $500 down on their house, had $1500 in the bank and had gathered enough momentum to get radio spots, news space and a lot of word-of-mouth publicity.

Excited and enthusiastic, they then:

1—raffled off a car;
2—sponsored the dog races for one night;
3—held "white elephant" raffles at every meeting;
4—gave three rummage sales;
5—sponsored one concert, two book-reviews and a tea;
6—threw a large charity ball (the governor led the grand march);
7—continued canvassing all clubs, civic societies, unions and big businesses for contributions, work and donations.

By the spring of 1948, they had enough money and support to purchase the house outright, paying cash on the barrelhead, buy some Army bunks and other furniture, wangle some paint, and to start a work project.

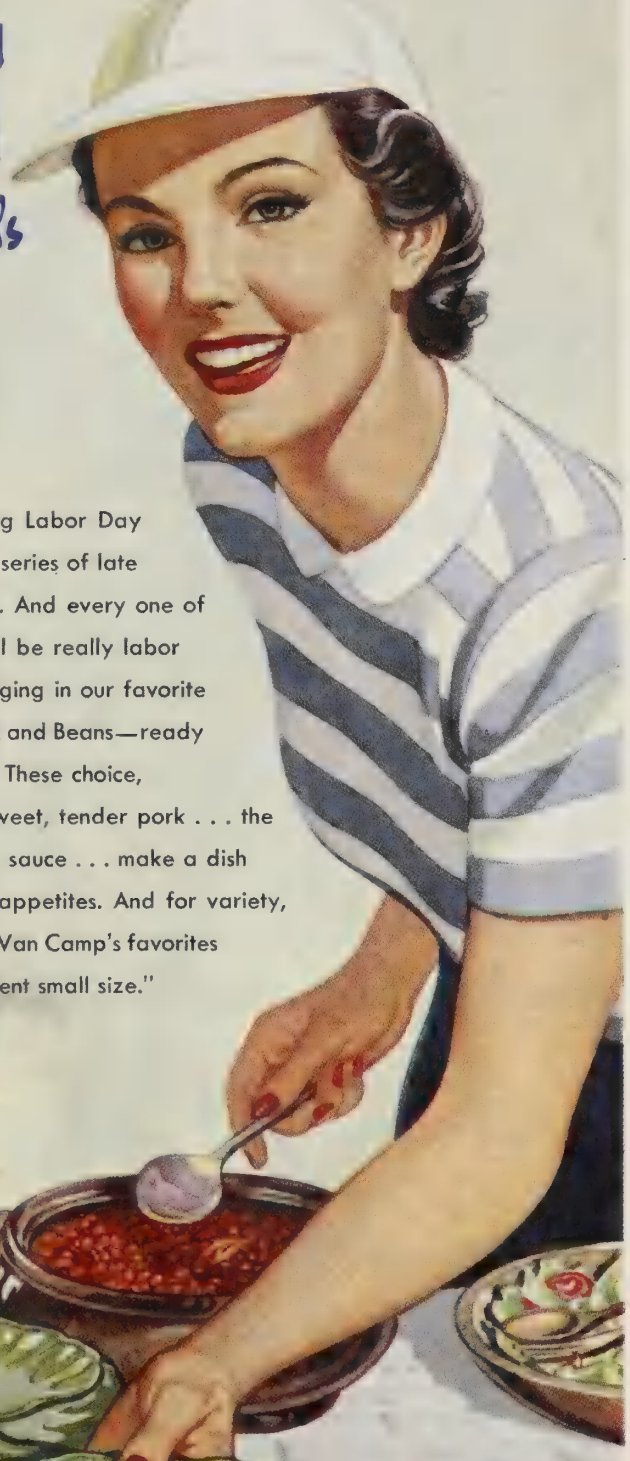
ONE woman member was a plumbing executive—Faye Perry—and she checked all the plumbing. Another ran a cleaning firm and she cleaned all the donated curtains, bedspreads and clothing. Two hotel executives—Ruth Boulter and Ethel Dunstan—made two old feather mattresses into twenty pillows—and got so covered with feathers they looked like chickens. Husbands—the girls like to call them "Soroptimisters"—repaired toys, put together the Army surplus bunks, carted in donated crates of food. Work parties got together in the evening, cleaned, scrubbed and painted. The girls put on the first coat of paint; the Active Club, a men's service organization, put on the second.

To do the work, the Soroptimists not only had to recruit workers and find the time, but they also had to get union approval. Butte is practically a closed shop; even the hospitals are organized, and a merchant who puts up a shelf himself in his own store gets picketed—fast. The girls had to go to union meetings, explain the projects, plead their case and get approval before they could do their own work—and before anyone could donate any working time to them.

But they had little trouble: the city was almost as enthusiastic as they were. The big Anaconda Copper Company, whose black rails zigzag up the hill behind the city and whose mile-deep mines work down under the city itself, gave generously. So did the big power company. Food dealers donated vast amounts of soups, baby food, crates of popcorn, chicken, ice cream and lollipops.

Old clothes poured in in such abundance that one woman said she believed that there wasn't a person in town who hadn't sent something he'd grown out of. The doctors

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 50 and 51.



Vogue Design No. 7017. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7018. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist measure. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7124. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 7122. One-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 7103. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 7165. One-piece dress and dickey; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. 75c.
Vogue Couturier Design No. 574. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $2.

Van Camp's helps me get many quick, tasty outdoor meals

"We're making the long Labor Day week-end the first of a series of late summer and fall picnics. And every one of these outdoor meals will be really labor saving—for we're indulging in our favorite food—Van Camp's Pork and Beans—ready to heat, eat and enjoy. These choice, plump beans . . . the sweet, tender pork . . . the tempting savory tomato sauce . . . make a dish that satisfies our keen appetites. And for variety, we will also enjoy other Van Camp's favorites in the new, very convenient small size."

on Television
Look • Listen • Enjoy
Van Camp's LITTLE SHOW
Tuesday and Thursday evenings
NBC-TV Network

Heat · Eat · Enjoy these other delicious Van Camp's products

Van Camp's SINCE 1861 • Stokely's Finest SINCE 1898 • Honor Brand Frozen Foods SINCE 1933

offered free medical examinations and treatment; the hospitals offered half rates for tonsillectomies and other ailments requiring hospitalization. The mental-health clinic promised free psychiatric care. Almost every Butte merchant offered a 10 per cent discount on any purchases they had to make, and practically every other club offered support or money.

"We got to be the best little beggars in town—we'd beg for anything," Mrs. Jacobsen says. "Only a few held out against us. One man—a big restaurant owner—said he believed that it was just encouraging parents to desert their children to provide a children's home. A big club took the same stand—but there the individual members passed a hat and made a voluntary contribution."

By November of 1948 the house was ready for occupancy. The Child Welfare Department had found a matron—an experienced child-care worker, with three children of her own. New furniture was bought for her large front room. The Army bunks—now white with childish decals on them—were in the children's sleeping rooms. The huge old wobbly dining table someone had donated was braced and surrounded by an odd assortment of chairs. There was linoleum on the floor of the playroom, and the big refrigerator and stove left behind as gifts by the outgoing tenants were in apple-pie order. Clothes were clean, pressed, mended and in closets—and in the basement there were piles more, unsorted.

Before the first children moved in, the Soroptimists held two open houses. One was held for their own organization—when they were host to the Soroptimist Northwest Conference. In came more gifts. The club from Great Falls festooned the rooms with clothes ropes, decorated them with dish towels, pinned on with clothespins. And the regional board presented them with 365 paper dollars—a vast feat in this silver-dollar area.

The second open house was for the people of Butte and Silver Bow County. They came—by the scores. And, although it was unplanned, they gave. The Soroptimists, feeling that, after all, there was a limit, had planned for nothing; an early guest, however, tossed a silver dollar into an ash tray. In no time all ash trays were full, and a salad bowl was called into action. That was the way people felt about the home—and still do.

The Soroptimist Receiving Home for children of Silver Bow County, Montana, opened for business November 1, 1948. Eight children were the charter residents—but by November 4 there were 15, and within two weeks there were 25. In the first year and a half, there were more than 175 small guests.

Complaints about the care of children come from anyone—neighbors, teachers, police, ministers, or even the children themselves. All, however, are referred to the Child Welfare office. For the children's upkeep, the county pays $1 per child per day. No children born out of wedlock are cared for: There is a good Florence Crittenden home nearby which takes care of these mothers and babies. A few of the parents pay the Welfare Department for the care of their children, but they are the rare ones; most of the children are from homes in such a sorry state that there is even less money than there is loving care.

The home is, of course, intended to be only a receiving home—a place where the youngsters can stay until foster homes are found for them, or their own parents can give them proper care. However, things don't always work that way; until two years ago there was almost no foster-home program in Silver Bow County, Butte's home county. Due to the efforts of the Welfare Department, there are now 17 foster homes—but even they are not enough to keep the turnover at the home as speedy as it should be. At one point this past winter there were 8 children under two at the home, and many of them stayed for months. It was grueling on the matron and her assistant; it was not good practice; but there was no alternative.

Most of the abandoned, deserted or neglected children come from homes where the problems are psychological, first, and financial, second. There is very little une ment in Butte—it is a solidly pro town of homeowners, and most of its housing problems were cleaned up years back with a good-sized housin
ect. There are, however, many illega bling places, a red-light area, and mo enough bars to go around. The popul of mixed backgrounds—Finns, Indian icans, Swedes, the English, the Germ the Irish have all pushed their way the continental divide to the "richest earth" and its progressive mining ca city of Butte. The home, of course, is all children, regardless of race, color o and every effort is made when placin in foster or adoptive homes to find th ground closest to their own biologi religious inheritance—which sometim be very mixed up indeed.

To get back to the home itself a Soroptimists, however, the club's job from done when the home was opene ing their campaign Mary Phillips ha ill and they had been without guidanc no sooner had they opened for busine they discovered that in order to s state license, they would have to hav firmary and a fire escape. To add troubles, the matron complaine rightly—that with so many infants for, she needed downstairs bedro fenced-in play yard, and a large ar equipped laundry.

The next year was spent in gettin
Fortunately, although incredibly, th enthusiasm was at as high a pitch as and there was some $2000 in the ba

So they began again. They held m fles, did more canvassing, wrote more rang more doorbells. When the rode to town and all the restaurants strike, they offered to take over the problem of the cowboys, the handle the 10,000 visitors. "We were up to o in hamburgers before we got throug member says reminiscently, "but an ance there was to us and our driv away then and there. We worked hard the horses." They also imported Heidt's radio show, held more raffl their second charity ball—and ther they had collected and made about the newly formed Community Ches priated $8000 to the home and they

In February, 1950, they got the license—and the warm blessing of th tana state supervisor of child-care
tions, Miss Gertrude Davis. "We," s referring to the whole State Welfare ment, "are very much impressed."

The children were impressed to youngster, sent back home when her were reunited, ran away and came the home. A child turned up ragged sheveled at the police department a he'd heard that they had all the ic they could eat at a home in Butte, wanted to live there. A baby who, its ing mother said crossly, had never s her life began to gurgle and crow wit ness. The thin one grew fat. The star began to creep. Five bright-eyed k looked and acted like young tramp they were first removed from their dis ble home and drunken parents by th became honor students—and were t foster parents.

Part of the home's success was du mere fact that it existed. But part due to its basically sound organizati Soroptimists' standards and goals we of the professionally trained welfare ments of the city, county and state maintenance budget was based on a f plan: part Community Chest, part cl Welfare Department and part city
ity. Their day-to-day operation w way—club work, plus child-care guidance and assistance.

Typical of its well-rounded basis citizen board of directors—elected club. This board included one welfare
T. G. Sivalon, State Field Supervisor fare; two doctors: Dr. D. L. Gilles
H. L. Casebeer; one lawyer: J. E. and one housewife: Mrs. L. E. Sa

er of many ham and cooky clubs for ome. The club's board meanwhile in- d all its officers (current president is Shaw, a credit specialist; the treasurer ary Lamb) plus an advisory board.

d typical of its community contacts is st of clubs and businesses which work the Soroptimists. At Christmas the company sets up a tree and lights it in ont yard—while the Girl Scouts spear- a drive for toys, and the candy and clubs provide treats for the big Christ- party. ("All I want is something that s real good," one little girl wistfully told roptimister playing Santa Claus.) The r League provides all transportation d for medical treatment (as well as g for one of the mental-health workers Butte clinic). Protestant and Catholic hes alike send food and clothing, and women's clubs do the mending. Not a has withheld permission for special lone for free, or at reduced rates. The ber of Commerce gives office space g Soroptimist money drives. The y Club, the Kiwanis Club and the respond generously when called —and the Bucks Club contributes $25 r to the special hospitalization fund. onda Copper leased the land for a playground at $1 a year—and put up a around it "high enough to stop a base- as a gift. The Venture Girls—the jun- oup of the Soroptimists—entertain the sters on Saturdays, and the young service group, the Active Club, not ainted, but helped clear out, the base-local movie house lets the children in n Saturdays. The neighborhood barber care of their haircuts on the house. The an at the hospital (a club member, Kelly) plans the meals. The police send squad car when needed to cart up a gift , or any other rush donation. The Gar- lub is planning to landscape the home's ard. And the pediatricians have formed e-man club, splitting the year between so that one of them is always on call at me.

that the home has no problems. The re still green about what really makes a child-care institution, as they are the o admit. Some of the club are more -minded than children-minded: one of- was so afraid that the children might break the toys that she put them all away. There were also staff problems: the first matron left because she had too much to do—as well as taking care of the children, she was expected to do all the housework and laundry. An assistant was hired along with the second matron, but even so the job was a backbreaking one—and now the home is on its third matron, who has one sleep-in assistant, and one day worker to help her. Even so, she works from dawn until considerably after dusk, and rarely has the time to read to the children, or give the individual attention that the children sorely need and that she wants to give.

THERE are also cost-of-maintenance problems. On top of the support given them through the Child Welfare Department, there is about another $3000 yearly needed to get, and hold, the staff they want, and to get, and keep, the home in good condition.

They can expect half of this to come from the Community Chest, which is solidly in back of them, and they count on two projects a year—the Charity Ball and the rodeo-feeding job—plus small extras, to raise the rest.

Weaknesses in the County Welfare Department have made other problems too: the lack of enough foster homes means that there are still too many babies and preschoolers staying too long; not enough records on the children who are cared for; a slip-up now and again on the department responsibility for medical and psychiatric examinations. But that these things will be ironed out, there is not the slightest doubt—for there is an aliveness to the problems plus an eagerness to lick them in both the Welfare Department and the Soroptimists. And the club's "home committee" is visiting other institutions, studying technical and professional books and listening long and hard to the welfare workers so as to become better informed.

"We know," said one member candidly, "that we've had too much emphasis on bricks and mortar and cooking and cleaning—we know that we have created only a haven as yet—but we had to get it running first, running smoothly, before we could start incorporating into it such things as play programs and group therapy and other psychological assets. We'll get those, though, never fear; it's our dream to make it a true children's home—and as close to perfect in all ways as possible."

THE END

"Well, if it isn't the Howards . . . we have to get up early tomorrow, so we're going to bed early tonight . . . how are you?"

KVP Paper Maids for Neater, Easier Living

For Juicier, Tastier Frozen Meats

All the succulent, savory goodness nature puts into meat can be preserved practically 100% with KVP Freezer Papers. They keep the flavorful juices in — prevent mottling and freezerburn. Insist on KVP next time you freeze meats. See what a difference it makes!

Wrap tight — twice around.

Sealed-in flavor is so delicious!

(KVP Freezer Paper) The original freezer paper — the kind the commercial lockers use. 4 sizes 15" to 24" wide, 70 to 400 ft. long in rolls.

Paper Maids Save Time—Save Work

Shelf Papers ▪ Freezer Papers ▪ Heavy and Fancy Waxed ▪ KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers ▪ Pie Tape ▪ Baking Cups ▪ Place Mats ▪ Cookery Parchment ▪ Pressing Parchment ▪ Kalacloths.

Your Guarantee of Quality

Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Co. Parchment, Michigan

Best for Household Cleaning and Scouring

Long-lasting, inexpensive Gottschalk's Metal Sponges do a thorough time- and labor-saving job cleaning aluminum, copper, porcelain, tiles, enamelware, floors.

BRONZE ALLOY 3-IN-1 PACK 25c

(3 regular 10c sponges)

Gottschalk's Metal Sponges

Harmless to hands. Won't rust, splinter or damage polished finishes. Easily cleaned. Get time-tried Gottschalk's Metal Sponges at supermarkets, hardware, grocery stores, today.

DOMESTIC SPONGE 10c

STAINLESS STEEL SPONGE 25c

METAL SPONGE SALES CORPORATION
3650 North 10th Street • Philadelphia 40, Penna.

JOLLY TIME POP CORN ALWAYS POPS BETTER

IS $10.00 A DAY WORTH A ONE CENT STAMP?

NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED

Let me show you how YOU can make as high as $10 a day, without previous experience, by showing Merit Christmas Cards, Stationery and Napkins to your friends, neighbors, relatives and others. We print your customers' names at no extra cost. No risk or investment. Drop me a penny postcard TODAY and I'll send you complete Selling Plan and samples on approval by return mail.

MERIT GREETING CARD CO.
370 Plane St. Dept. 39 Newark, N. J.

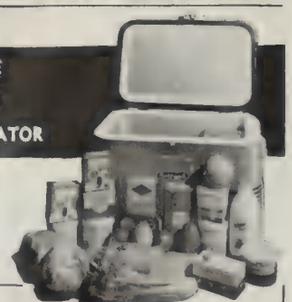
MAKE MONEY FAST!

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS to friends, neighbors, club members, others. AMAZING PROFITS. Extra cash bonus plan. No experience necessary. 100 sell on sight items, 5 leading 21 card $1.00 boxes, Religious, 50 for $1.00, Comics, Children's Cards and Books. Wrappings, Imported Napkins, Scented Stationery, Deluxe Personals, Rain Sandals, many Gifts. Write for SAMPLES on approval and Special Offers.

HEDENKAMP & CO., Inc., Dept. L-8
361 Broadway, New York 13, N. Y.

Rooms Smell Nice Quick with VAPAIR TRADE MARK ROOM DEODORANT Bomb or Wick

VAPAIR BOMB For instant killing of odors. Just press the button. Now Two Sizes $1.59 98c



VAPAIR WICK For continuous killing of odors. Just pull up wick. Full 10 oz. 69c

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

A CLEAN HOME PRODUCT

PORTABLE ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR

NOW ONLY $89.95

SEE YOUR DEALER OR ORDER DIRECT—MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

1½ cu. ft. capacity with III cube ice tray. 24" x 16" x 19" high, weight 75 lbs. Attractive gray-blue crinkle finish. Sealed unit, automatic temperature control operates on 110 volt AC. Full year guarantee on mechanism. Stays cold in car 8 to 8 hours. Ideal for apartment, office, cottage, trailer, nursery, etc. Lowest priced electric refrigerator on the market. In our sixth year.

KOLD-PAK SALES CO.
204 BAUCH BUILDING, LANSING, MICHIGAN

Should a mother say "no" to this? Grin and let 'em rip—such pep's a sign they're getting nutritious food that pays off in energy. Like the real, genuine Minute Tapioca you make yourself with body-building milk and eggs. Good? Try this recipe!

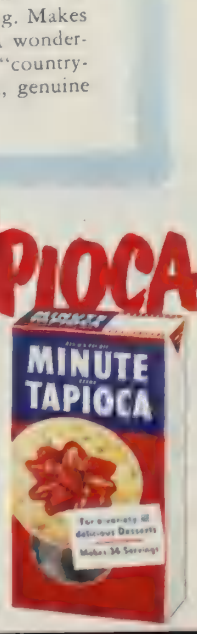
Swell-elegance for kids

So easy...so exciting...made the real Minute Tapioca way!

MINUTE TAPIOCA COOLER

1 recipe Minute Tapioca Cream Ice Cream

Prepare Minute Tapioca Cream according to package directions. Then take a big scoop of your favorite ice cream—chocolate, vanilla, strawberry . . . they all go well—and plump it right on top of each serving. Makes 5 or 6 servings. Nothing could be easier—or taste better! (A wonderful way to get milk and eggs into small fry, too.) For that "country-kitchen" goodness no ready-made dessert can match, get real, genuine Minute Tapioca today!



REAL TAPIOCA! MINUTE BRAND TAPIOCA

FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS!

FREE! WONDERFUL NEW RECIPE BOOK! Over 50 recipes for delicious Minute Tapioca puddings, cream desserts, omelets and soufflés that stand up, meat loaves that slice without crumbling, juicy fruit pies that don't run over, and many salad plate recipes. Get your FREE copy—send your name and address to Minute Tapioca, Dept. V-4, Box 815, New York 46, N. Y.

Offer expires February 1, 1951. Good only in U. S. A.

A product of General Foods

Quick and Easys for Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

JOHN and Mary Battles live in an ex-stable-garage in the cou with a Dickenslike address—Hardscrabble Road. Part of an e their cottage has been rebuilt with knotty-pine paneling complements their many family antiques.

Culinary snooping has come to be one of John and Mary's fa hobbies. They both like to cook and to talk about it.

"We call our cookery doings 'hardscrabbling,'" John exp "This consists of giving sustenance to our year-and-a-half-old dau Holly, a neurotic setter dog and a black cat of dubious ancest addition to our hungry selves—and, of course, the friends who p And it is fun! How does one hardscrabble? Some designers adv a basic dress. Some people advocate a basic recipe, but we like to a little zest and ingenuity in our family pot."

"This routine of dining at home is usually supplemented o week by a trip to New York," Mary adds. "However, after san kofta, bhajai and other exotic dishes, it is pleasant to retu Hardscrabble Road."

MONDAY
Sunday's Leftovers
Catchall Casserole
Garden Lettuce Salad
Raspberry Sherbet
Coffee

TUESDAY
"Take Your Plates and Wander"
Battleburgers
Potato Salad
Peach Compote
Coffee

Mary speaking: "Sunday we either dine out, or, if at home, kill the fatted calf and put a roast in the oven for dinner. This gives us a perfect excuse for building our Monday-night catchall casserole, which, of course, is made up of Sunday's leftovers. After I get the casserole in the oven and Holly is salted away for the night, we go down to the garden to pick our salad and a few fine tomatoes. Coffee rounds out the meal. We have the sherbet after dinner."

CATCHALL CASSEROLE

Cook ¼ cup rice in boiling salted water about 15 minutes. It shouldn't be quite done. Drain. Dice medium-fine enough leftover roast—chicken, veal, lamb or beef—to make 1 to 1¼ cups. Mix with the cooked rice. In a skillet, fry out gently 1 onion, chopped, ¼ cup minced celery, about ½ cup minced green pepper and ½ clove garlic, crushed, in 1½ tablespoons shortening or peanut oil. When onions and vegetables are softened a bit, add 1 cup stewed fresh tomatoes or canned tomatoes and mix together with meat and rice. Season well with salt and pepper. Add 2 dashes Tabasco sauce and ⅛ teaspoon mace. Mace (or nutmeg if you haven't any mace) gives this dish a special flavor. Pour into casserole and bake about 30 minutes in moderate oven, 350° F.

John speaking: "Tuesday after I have packed up my m show (I'm a pharmaceutical man), I may prepare supper Mary feeds our baby, dog a This will probably be a 'w meal—to the terrace, if weath mits; or anywhere in the livin where it's coziest. We have a call 'Battleburgers.' The sauc distinctive feature."

BATTLEBURGERS

Add 1 egg, 3 tablespoons cat tablespoon minced onion, 1 tabl milk, 1 tablespoon Worcest sauce to 1 pound ground round Shape into patties about the siz palm of your hand, ready to broil. Make this sauce before y the hamburgers: Melt 1 tabl butter or margarine and blend blespoon flour. Add ½ clove crushed, 1 small can sliced mus and juice, 2 tablespoons red wi gar—or, if you like, red wine—1 spoon Worcestershire sauce, spoon salt, dash of pepper and hot water in which 1 bouillo has been dissolved. Stir until ened. Turn heat low and sim minutes. Pour sauce over hot burgers.

This sauce does strange an derful things to those little tha wich steaks too.

PHOTO BY DONALD STUART

and John both like to dine casually—where it's most comfortable.

WEDNESDAY
ardscrabble Potluck"
Veal Pot
n Squash with Nutmeg
French Bread
Iced Coffee

speaking: "Wednesday we other pot meal. This is served om the range to kitchen table. I get home I feed the animals Holly bedded down, while ets the pot going and puts two of acorn squash, dotted with and sprinkled with salt and , into the oven to bake. This s time to take a walk while cooks."

VEAL POT

slice of veal cutlet cut ¾ inch nd weighing about 1½ pounds. with salt and pepper and dust our. Melt 1 tablespoon butter, ne or veal fat in Dutch oven y pot. Sear veal in the fat on des. Add 3 onions and 3 car- into pieces and brown a bit ith the veal. Add 1 cup stock ith 1 cup hot water, 1 table- lemon juice and 1 chicken- cube dissolved in it. Now put y leaf, a few whole black pep- or 2 pieces of celery cut small, 1 iced, if you have it, several f parsley and a pinch of thyme, in a square of cheesecloth. This got—the French method of g—and eliminates removing ter and straining gravy. Cover mer about 45 minutes or until tender. Remove fagot. Add peas and cook a few minutes til they are tender. This dish— rench bread to mop up the -is hearty. The Battles usually quantities, using a 3-pound veal, when someone shares.

THURSDAY
Ve Save Our Dessert"
Simmered Ham Butt
Corn on the Cob
Mary's Apricot Whip
Iced Coffee

John speaking: "Dinner on Thursday night consists of a small smoked ham butt simmered gently with bay-leaf and cloves in the stock, corn on the cob from our garden, and an apricot whip. When we make this, it's always an excuse to round up someone for canasta. Then we save the dessert for serving later with iced coffee. It's quick and easy and a delicious dessert for a warm September night."

MARY'S APRICOT WHIP

Drain 1 No. 2½ can whole or halved apricots. Reserve juice for sirup sauce. Press apricots through strainer to make 1½ cups purée. Whip ½ pint heavy cream and fold into apricot purée. Pour into refrigerator tray and freeze until firm—about 1½ hours. For the sauce: Make a sirup, adding ½ cup sugar to the apricot sirup. Boil until quite thick. Cool; when ready to serve, flavor with a little rum extract.

FRIDAY
"Pickup Supper"
Lobster Bisque
Mary's Salad Bowl
Garlic Bread
Coffee

"Friday and Saturday evenings we never know how many will share our board. There is a swimming pool on our landlord's property which usually draws a couple of genial souls who later share pickup suppers with us and they are always hungry! One of John's specialties is lobster bisque—a fine, speedy Friday-nighter so fast that the chef need not miss any of the party. I make the salad and we usually trap someone into helping with the garlic bread."

LOBSTER BISQUE

Empty 1 can condensed pea soup and 1 can condensed tomato soup into top of double boiler. Fill up 1 soup can with milk and stir it into soups. Add 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, a dash of Tabasco sauce, a pinch of cayenne pepper and salt to taste. When thoroughly heated, add 1 six-ounce can lobster. Remove any bones from lobster before adding to soup. Serves 4.

Tuna à la King

WITH TOAST TULIPS

2 tablesp. chopped green pepper
1 tablesp. butter or margarine
1 can Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup
½ cup milk
1 7-ounce can tuna fish, drained
2 tablesp. chopped pimiento
3 hard-cooked eggs, quartered
12 slices thin-sliced bread

Cook green pepper in butter until soft; mix in Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup, stirring well; add milk. Heat in top of double boiler. Break tuna fish into chunks; add to soup, with pimiento and eggs, reserving one yolk for garnish; force this yolk through a fine sieve. Heat oven to 375° F (moderate). Trim crusts from bread; press a slice of bread into each section of muffin pans; toast bread for 12-15 minutes. Pour tuna-mushroom mixture over toast tulips. Garnish with pimiento and sieved egg yolk. Makes 5-6 servings.

SO EASY...and SO GOOD!

Here's how to make velvety-smooth, delicious cream dishes every time!

DELICIOUS AS A SOUP... AS A SAUCE AND IN COOKING

It's got so, now, that millions of women never even think of making a cream sauce from scratch. Very clever of them, too! Why go to all that bother and risk, when you can get a delicious, velvety-smooth sauce in five minutes flat . . . simply by opening a can of Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup and stirring in half a cup of milk as it heats? And with the added luxury of mushrooms! Fine, cultivated mushrooms, and extra-heavy whipping cream! Golly, it's good!

FREE COOK BOOK
50 PAGES
99 DISHES
FULL COLOR

Mail coupon now to: Campbell Soup Company, Dept. L 9, Camden 1, N. J.

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____
ZONE_____ STATE_____

"MY CALORIC HAS Cook-ability Plus*"

*one of thousands of enthusiastic statements in letters from Caloric owners.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

What is "Cook-ability plus?" Caloric owners, like the one quoted, can tell you. It means the finest cooking, broiling and baking results you've ever had, with far less work.

A fast Ultramatic Caloric Gas Range actually saves you hours of time every week. It offers extra value for your money to begin with—and saves you money in operation as well. Your Caloric dealer (listed in the Classified phone book) has beautiful new models to suit your needs and pocketbook. Caloric Stove Corp., Widener Bldg., Phila. 7, Pa.

1 Flavor-Saver Dual Burners speed cooking, save gas, hold flavor. Give instant control. Replacement guaranteed for life of range.

2 Hold-Heat Oven, with exclusive door seal and the Veri-Clean Completely Removable Broiler make baking and broiling easier and assure better results.

3 America's Easiest Ranges to Keep Clean have acid-resisting triple-coat white parts, porcelain enamel throughout. Seamless oven, broiler, burner box wipe clean in a jiffy.

Any Caloric can be factory-equipped for "Pyrofax" Bottled Gas or other LP-Gases. "CP" features optional on all models give automatic cooking.

ULTRAMATIC Caloric GAS RANGES

AMERICA'S EASIEST RANGES TO KEEP CLEAN

BARE ELEGANCE

(Continued from Page 198)

terra-cotta walls. They were given a high polish so that when the cherished, antique walnut pieces were placed upon them they truly created an air of elegance.

We left the mixing of the color to Todd Karns, the artist of the family. The ingredients are so unconventional we would not recommend them to anyone else, but Todd Karns's account of what went into the mixture is so amusing that we can't resist quoting him here:

"At the risk of sounding facetious, I will tell you how we mixed the paints which cost a total of about a dollar. One pint of pale pink water paint which was given to us; a handful of yellow plaster, much water to make the water paint and plaster go further and then as the color was approaching a glum nothingness into it went a bottle of Mercurochrome, my entire supply of brown water colors, a handful of dirt, one pint of beer for more brown, and then when the brown got out of hand, down to the drugstore I rushed with our last bit of change and came back with a bottle of red ink, most of which we still have."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Hope

By Jeanne-Alix Maisonville

Charity's cloak is for any in need.
Faith speaks in accents of strength and grace.
Hope's eyes are haunting, soft and clear gray, and Ever so big in her wistful face.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A variety of greens in upholstery mat for the old love seat and chairs impar Rousseau effect to the color scheme i Karns's living room. This was height by some rather lush green plants. C shantung hangings, two simple moder bles and a new chair completed the r

Todd Kar paintings, of co give the room individuality, bu other young co not this talented sonally, can ac the same effect the excellent prints that are available. From standpoint of ration, it is a idea to get a gro four prints relat theme and colo have them fra identically. Rou prints would charming agains terra-cotta walls which the Karns li much. This treatment is particularly tive over a sofa where there is a large ex of blank wall space.

A few good pieces of furniture, a s but unusual combination of colors, the ination of a variety of small items will in achieving distinction when mon scarce.

OUR OWN YOUNG MARRIEDS

(Continued from Page 55)

derful view of the Delaware River. John had ordered many daffodils (Our Flower, of course), but the management slipped up and had funereal bouquets of gladioli crowding the low ceiling. We took along slacks and warm jackets against the early spring chill, and spent a lovely, sunny Saturday in and out of bookshops and galleries—to the graveyard to communicate with dusty relatives—ate tremendous meals—got a new robe to match the daffodils that weren't there!"

Ellie and John like to keep their week ends free—have adopted the old Puritan idea of cooking for the Sabbath. "Early Saturday morning," says Ellie, "in the time it takes to get one meal, I cook up enough chile to fill two casseroles, mix a bottle of garlic salad dressing, and a double batch of brownies (my husband's only interest in dessert). Come Saturday and Sunday suppers, all we have to do is heat the casserole, break up lettuce and Roquefort (for the salad), set the table and pitch in."

Polly Toland (Cooke)—she read fiction and article manuscripts and is now a free lance—has found that she and her husband "and most people" would rather entertain themselves than be entertained. "A long evening at home with friends can be creative, fun and far less expensive than a night on the town," says Polly. "I think that about five friends (after the ice has been broken), with a good play and soft drinks or coffee, can spontaneously have as much fun as an audience at a New York opening. I loved reading plays at school, and I find I love them just as much now. We read them aloud, each person taking a part. It is a very good way of keeping up with plays we cannot see, with friends we like to see, and of having a good time."

Nora O'Leary (Smith) started early on her career of designing and making clothes, using her dolls as models. By the time she was in the eighth grade, she was making her own clothes and eventually those of her mother and sister. This led to New York, where she started working with a small manufacturer of skirts and blouses, then sold free-lance articles to the JOURNAL Fashion Department and joined its staff in 1942. When a separate Pattern Department was created, she came its editor. She spends much of her time sewing for her home, and her own wardrobe too.

A year and a half ago, before her Stephen was born, she worked out scheme for her maternity clothes: mad herself three short full jackets—one wool, one checked black-and-white wool a velvet collar, the third, red velvet wit front quilted to stand out concealingly lected a stock of ribbons, pearls, flowers, ruffled collars to vary each of the three, centrate interest at the neck of each cost

Nora and her husband live a suburba in Manhattan in their back-yard garde roomy two-floor apartment. They re furnished, are busy trying to adjust t velvety, chandelerious personality o owners. Summer evenings find John the yard, Nora weeding the garden, an eighteen-month-old son toddling a underfoot.

Helen O'Donnell (editorial assistant Beauty Department) and her husband more stamina at the end of the long week than the rest of our young ma They tackle household chores on Frida nings. This gives Joe, who works every Saturday, time to do more pleasant thi his Saturday off and keeps her from to do everything alone on his working day. "We take our laundry out and h done while we shop for food," Hel scribes their Friday-night schedule. husband pushes the little cart arou store sneaking extra treats when I' looking. Then we rush over to the la ette to find we are overdue. We can are late by the look on the manager's we approach, plus the ten cents ex charges. When we get home, we cle house. Joe does the heavy work s scrubbing or waxing floors while I du vacuum. This way the 'dirty work' about three and a half hours and lea Saturdays for baking and just enjoyi selves."

John and Mary Adele Morris live monk, New York, in a modern Y-

se set in the midst of four and a half acres abandoned apple orchard. The Morrises e one daughter and two sons, aged eight, and four, in turn. Mary Adele says, "As as I can see, all child problems are baffling. ave finally come to the realization that n people speak of 'growing pains' they n for the parents, not the child. The most cessful treatment seems to be the talk-it-one, even though this involves talking it on several different occasions with the e lengthy explanations. It's hard to re-nber that children get just as bored with sound of your voice as you do, and dur-the first two sessions are probably delib-ely thinking about something else (their comment after the lecture is usually a d giveaway). But eventually it does sink ohn is the JOURNAL'S picture editor, e to the JOURNAL in 1946.

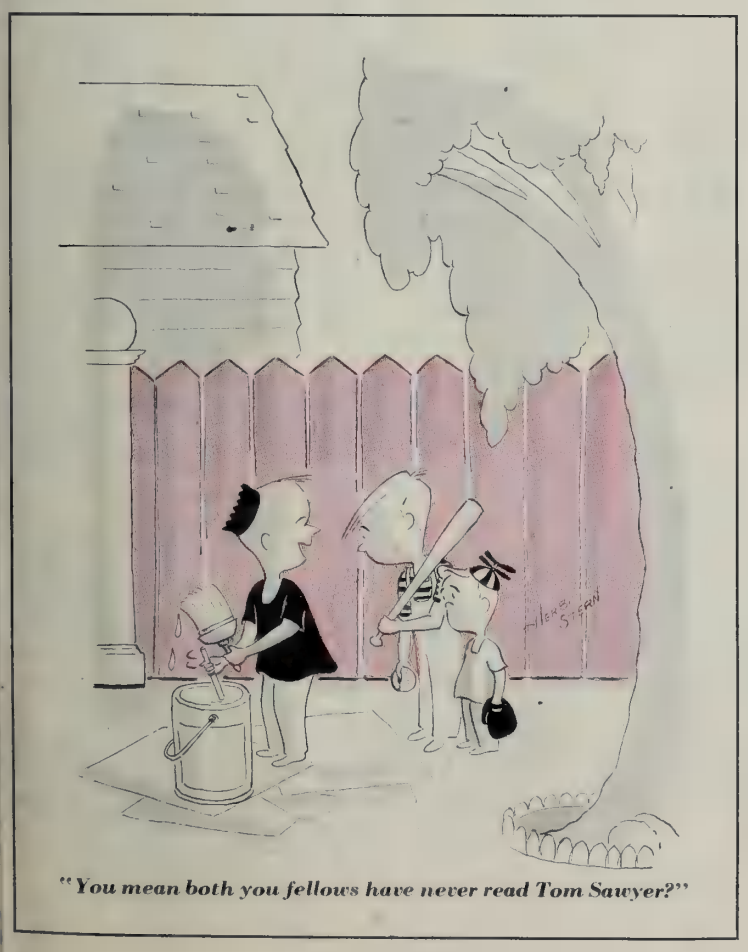
Miriam and Jim Skardon (Miriam writes densations of JOURNAL articles for radio newspaper use) live in a furnished apart-t in Brooklyn that has a mysteriously ed closet without a doorknob. On the sub-of who does what around the house, Mir-says:

We divide our weekly house cleaning n the middle—two rooms to each, king simultaneously. One cleans kitchen bath while the other shines up the living bed rooms. Then a couple of quick once-s during the week keep the place tidy. Sat-y is cleaning day, but when the Philadel-Athletics are playing baseball here, the e has to wait. I do the dishwashing most he time and Jim has been emancipated drying by a drain rack. During his elor housekeeping days, he cooked his meals, but cooking is definitely my ince now. He usually has some writing evenings, so I try not to let the house-interfere with that."

LVE of these editors in our young-ied group came to the JOURNAL fresh of school and were married on the job. of the girls wanted to write poetry, her to write short stories, still another journalism. One had ambitions as an . Three knew in high school that they ed further study in home economics and on. The JOURNAL provided the post-uate training to the five others who came as editorial apprentices.

Today, having made a good start toward achieving editorial goals, our young marrieds have a fine score on the domestic side. The record shows five brides, six mothers, and another expecting soon to produce a future President.



Doing double duty as homemakers on the JOURNAL as well as in private life, our young marrieds need and get considerable household help from their husbands—a team-play operation we find more often than not among new householders today. All these husbands believe that they have joint responsibilities in the business of making a home, bringing up children, in the children's schooling and in community life.

ALL fourteen wives will swear happily on a stack of JOURNALS that their husbands are smarter and more important than they are (nine of them use their married names on the magazine; the five of maiden-name variety had had signed articles in the JOURNAL and did not want to lose their identity with their readers).

Of the fourteen husbands in the group, eleven can cook. The six who are fathers pitch in whenever they can, be it baths or bottles. Each of the latter group has tried his hand at all the angles of baby care, and in an emergency could take over completely. And they are a red-blooded bunch of males who hold down he-man jobs in a variety of fields.

John Smith is a stockbroker; Jim Tracey and Bob Hoffman are lawyers; Joe O'Donnell is a television technician; John Gray is an actuarial insurance man; Fred Russe and Bob Norman are engineers; Todd Cooke is a city planner; Jim Skardon and John Simmons do newspaper work; Rod Wilson, whose first job was with the JOURNAL (where he met Marion), is now working for an engineering firm; Bob Lee is an automobile dealer; Dan Hoffman teaches English literature at Temple University, in Philadelphia, and John Morris is picture editor of the JOURNAL.

Some of our young marrieds live in tiny flats. Others have rented apartments in city brownstones. A couple of them have chosen the country where grass is always needing to be cut and the willow tree trimmed. Those with children have had to arrange careful schedules for their daily care. As Marjorie Lee puts it: "This angle calls for more clear thinking and solid conviction than any other; the

"You mean both you fellows have never read Tom Sawyer?"

Four New Stars
in
FRANCISCAN FINE CHINA

If the stars in the heavens were made of fine china, then these four new Franciscan patterns would surely outshine all others. For this is stellar china... its translucent loveliness mirroring Nature's own simplicity and beauty of design... its colors taken from Nature's own palette... captured forever in Encanto, the Franciscan coupe shape that weds modern grace to classic symmetry. To the hostess who has not yet found her heart's desire in fine china, we say: "Be the first in your circle to have Franciscan Encanto. It's in open stock at your dealer's now." Write for pamphlets with full-color illustrations and prices on these and other new Encanto patterns.

SMARTLY GIFT-BOXED PLACE SETTINGS in all Franciscan Fine China Patterns are now available at better dealers everywhere. Each contains one dinner plate, salad plate, bread and butter plate, cup and saucer... the perfect answer to thoughtful giving. Prices for 5-piece place settings in:

Sierra $10.75 Mesa $14.50 Palo Alto $17.50 Canton $17.50

FRANCISCAN Fine CHINA

MADE IN CALIFORNIA BY GLADDING, McBEAN & CO., LOS ANGELES
SINCE 1875

*"If the rim of a Libbey 'Safedge' glass ever chips, we'll replace it."

Tall? Or low? Both are practical for everyday! Tall for a dress-up table... Libbey's long-stemmed beauty, "Crystal Garland". Low, the functional, sophisticated "Laurel Classic". In fine cut-glass. Guaranteed rims.* Good tidings for brides: they're in complete services at leading stores everywhere.

LIBBEY GLASS

ESTABLISHED 1818

Copyright, 1950, Libbey Glass, Division of Owens-Illinois Glass Company, Toledo 1, Ohio

decision to leave your child for the day with somebody else is a hard one to make and stick by. You dress him in the morning, and you race home and play with him in the evening; your week ends are happily shared with him. But all the theories in the world can't keep you from wanting to be with him all the time. It's a problem we have, as all people have problems, and it's something we think and talk about a lot. But we doubt that perfect smoothness is ever possible in a truly human existence, or, for that matter, particularly rewarding. If you didn't have any questions, how on earth would you find new answers?"

Anyone who has ever been married knows how it feels to be beginning. As in all beginnings, a sense of discovery goes along, too, which can sting like a ruler on the knuckles, or be delightful as a sudden patch of bluebells hidden in the grass. There are a million angles to be considered, a million new problems to be coped with, and everything doubly important because there are two you. Your big booster is hope, and in t JOURNAL crowd the hope statistics run hig

In future articles, our fourteen coupl will share with JOURNAL readers their ide on specific subjects how-to-do problen like clothes on budget, entertaini on a budget, division labor in housekeepi decorating a hom For they know th solving each of the problems adds con dence and smoothne which are part of t real tissue of a ma riage—and that even greater part its reality comes fr the act of dealing wi problems together. t very doing of it. Ar cles in future issues the JOURNAL will d with topics that are part of the experien of all young couples taking their first ste in married life, all drawn from the acti ties, conditions and philosophies of our o young marrieds.

It happened in New England. A forceful and much-married lady was burying her third husband. On his tombstone she wished engraved the dates of his death and birth. The gravestone cutter, who had known the gentleman as one ripe in years, demurred when, according to the calculations she gave him, he saw that the deceased would have been all of twelve years old. "You got that wrong," he said, "Mr. Hartley lived a sight longer than that."

The bereaved froze him with a glance. "I consider, Mr. Adams, that Mr. Hartley started to live when he married me." —ILKA CHASE.

MODEL PLANS FOR A MATERNITY WARDROBE

(Continued from Page 60)

Also, the hemline never pulls up in the front. (See detailed drawing below.) Make them in flannel, velveteen, crepe, linen, shantung or almost any fabric, depending on the season you plan to wear them. Make sure your tops are adaptable to many changes. Our "Easy-to-Make" tunic has a detachable dickey . . . it has stiffening down the center-front so that it cannot cling to your body. You could even wear a blouse or a sweater under it. Later, you will like the way it looks belted. Make sure that the fabric you select for your jacket is firm and has body, but don't have it so heavy that you will be uncomfortably warm. A black bengaline or rep jacket is good for any season. We have dressed ours up with a fur neckpiece and a red velveteen hat. Cotton tunics are wonderful to wear at home and are very inexpensive to make. (Our gay red print fabric with a border cost $1.50.) A comfortable housecoat is a "must." Ours is a washable cotton damask, and the ballet length saves tripping over a long one. For dressier occasions we picked up an authentic Chinese jacket which Vogue is making available to you in a pattern. It would be equally pretty in velveteen, brocaded satin or even pla taffeta . . . with or without the braid. Be g in your choice of accessories . . . an asso ment of pretty, colored scarves, ribbons, c lars and artificial flowers to keep you fr becoming bored with your jackets. Go grooming and good posture make pret clothes look even prettier!

And here are a few ideas for you choose . . .

Any discarded slim skirt can be cut do in a U-shaped cutout, to wear under jacke

The front panel of a six-gore skirt can folded down 7 inches for a maternity sk and sewn back in place as good as new.

Quilt the jacket-front pieces before sewi up a jacket—gives the fabric more body a is a nice idea.

Wear a dark color slip under a dark co cutout skirt. White is conspicuous if t jacket shifts out of place.

If you make one-piece dresses, wear t belts high—empire style.

Other views and information for Maternity Patterns on Pages 60 and 61

Vogue Design No. 7128. "Easy-to-Make" maternity tunic and vestee; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 7187. Maternity skirt; 35, 37, 39, 41, 43 normal hip measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 7063. Blouse or smock; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 5597. "Easy-to-Make" maternity smock; Small (28–30), Medium (32–34) and Large (36–38). 40c.

Vogue Design No. 6851. "Easy-to-Make" robe; Small (28–30), Medium (32–34) and Large (36–38). 60c.

Vogue Design No. 7155. "Easy-to-Make" coolie coat; Small (30–32) and Medium (34–36). 50c.

Comfortable maternity smock—your husband's discarded shirts with a feminine look. Use rickrack or binding for trim. Shorten the sleeves for easier laundering.

Any six-gore skirt converts to a maternity skirt. Remove waistband, fold under center-front panel 7 inches, add a tape-tie at the waistline.

7128 7063 6851 5597 7187 7155

Printed in U

OCTOBER 1936

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

25 CENTS

The Magazine Women Believe In

PORTLAND PUBLIC LIBRARY

Undiscovered

AMERICAN BEAUTIES

VELMA LEE HALL

San Gabriel, California

"I'd rather be shopping."

Ethel Waters' astoundingly revealing autobiography — "His Eye is on the

"Sweat-Equity" house worth $18,000 cost $9,089.13 to bu

Latest Profile of Youth — The Girl Who Has Everything — Ma

What's it like in Russia? — I Went To Moscow — Gisela K

JOURNAL

CONTENTS

VOL. LXVII, No. 10

OCTOBER, 1950

Velma visits New York.

From time to time the JOURNAL cover features an Undiscovered American Beauty—a girl who has never previously modeled for money. Nominations are submitted by photographers throughout the country.

It's our painful duty to report to any males in the audience that Velma Lee Hall, this month's Undiscovered American Beauty, does not like boys. They are just too silly. "They bore me," she says. "I'd rather go shopping."

Velma is just sixteen this month, so perhaps she can be forgiven. Besides, there are many things which do not bore her—she loves to dance (alone), to sing funny songs, to ski, swim and fish. She began dancing at the age of fifteen months. Two months later she won a beauty contest as Tillie the Toiler (below). At two, Velma got a pair of roller skates and led the grand march at the Hollywood roller rink. It wasn't long before she could hula and tap on skates.

Velma was born in Albuquerque, but came to California as an infant and now lives with her folks, big brother and kid sister in San Gabriel. Her mother admits to spoiling Velma, who is a reluctant cook and dishwasher. Her greatest home triumph is the humble peanut-butter cooky.

By an odd coincidence, Velma Lee Hall was discovered by the Hollywood husband-and-wife team, Theda and Emerson Hall—no relation. The first picture we saw showed Velma with a horse. Next one was of Velma with a kitten. We settled for that—the kitten was undiscovered too.

EASTERN STUDIO

Seventeen months: Tillie.

EASTERN HOLLYWOOD

Three years: Tap dancer.

Book Condensation Complete in This Issue

"His Eye is on the Sparrow" Ethel Waters, as told to Charles Samuels 44

Fiction

Once Upon a Beginning . . . Polly Toland 34
New Girl Summer Night . . . Brooke Hanlon 36
Desperate Couple . . . Dwight Hutchison 38
How Could I Know? . . . Anne Homer Warner 40
Someone to Come Home To . . . Newlin B. Wildes 56

Special Features

United Nations: Shadow and Substance . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
Staying Free . . . Roderick L. Haig-Brown 11
Tell Me Doctor—No. 9 . . . Henry B. Safford, M.D. 31
Our Own Young Marrieds—No. 2 . . . 42
"I Went to Moscow" . . . Gisela Kahn Gresser 48
Belles on Their Toes (Conclusion) Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey 64
There's a Man in the House . . . Harlan Miller 66
If Women Were in Control . . . Judith Chase Churchill 67
Profile of Youth: Ann Harrington—The Girl Who Has Everything . . . Maureen Daly 70
What is Popularity? . . . 72
How America Lives: Homesteaders 1950 . . . Richard Lauterbach 207
Baby's First Year . . . Photos by Wayne Miller 240
Sister Annestasia . . . Vivian Cosby 269
My Wife and the Monetary System . . . Robert S. Lee 274

General Features

Our Readers Write Us . . . 5
Under-Cover Stuff . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
Communities Face Their Slums . . . In Coconut Grove, Florida . . . 23
Other Cities Attack the Problem . . . Margaret Hickey 23
Reference Library . . . 24
Making Marriage Work . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
Formula for Fun (The Sub-Deb) . . . Edited by Maureen Daly 28
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town . . . 33
Bringing Up Parents . . . Dr. Barbara Biber 129
Diary of Domesticity . . . Gladys Taber 134
Ask Any Woman . . . Marcelene Cox 219
Virus Pneumonia—A New "Miracle Drug" Reduces its Dangers . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 252
This is a Halloween-Hoodlum . . . Munro Leaf 254

Fashion and Beauty

Fall's New Look for Beauties . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 46
The Timeless Suit . . . The Timeless Coat . . . Wilhela Cushman 50
5 o'Clock . . . Wilhela Cushman 52
Three-Piece Year-Round Wardrobe . . . Wilhela Cushman 54
Lovely Fabrics Make Beautiful Dresses . . . Nora O'Leary 62
American Beauty's Sweet-Sixteen Wardrobe—$103.70 . . . Cynthia McAdoo 118

Food and Housekeeping

Star Performance . . . Gladys Taber 68
Wedding Special . . . Ann Batchelder 74
Line A Day . . . Ann Batchelder 76
Conversation Piece . . . Ruth Mills Teague 152
Ham Goes a Long Way . . . Louella G. Shouer 214

Architecture and Interior Decoration and Gardens

Worth at Least $18,000 . . . But Cost Only $9,089.13 Richard Pratt 58
Story Book Rooms . . . Henrietta Murdock 140
$500 and No "Make-Overs" . . . H. T. Williams 228 Personality Plants . . . Richard Pratt 266

Poetry

Eleanor Alletta Chaffee 84 • Archibald Rutledge 94 • Louise Owen 106
Maribel Coleman Haskin 116 • Georgie Starbuck Galbraith 126
Winifred Virginia Jackson 132 • Elizabeth-Ellen Long 139 • Elizabeth McFarland 165 • William Stafford 174 • Nacella Young 182
Joseph Auslander 192 • Frances Rodman 200 • Polly Toland 222
Norman R. Jaffray 227 • Burnham Eaton 232 • Marya Zaturenska 244
Robert P. Tristram Coffin 250 • Ann Batchelder 258 • Joan Aucourt 270
Rhina P. Espaillat 278

Cover Photograph by Theda and Emerson Hall

CHANGE OF ADDRESS Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.
Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1950 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published the last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U.S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U.S. payable in U.S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

new

new

!

new brightness

hables!"

e's World famous Boston specialty store

ORY FLAKES

Radiant Action

thrilling ad-washables!"
stores and fine clothes
kes.

ter washing, will take on ness. Your color-bright parkling new fine washrayons—get n you wash

them gently in new Ivory Flakes with "Radiant Action." It's the mildest, safest soap you can buy—the only flake soap with the famous Ivory name!

Longer wear for nylons! Change from strong soaps to gentle, nightly care with Ivory Flakes and keep stockings looking fresh up to twice as long!

Perfect for dishes, too! Gentle Ivory Flakes speeds your dishes clean yet it's so very kind to hands! Get a box of new Ivory Flakes—America's largest selling flake soap—today!

Nightgown, $10.95, Slip, $8.95, Robe, $19.95 Filene's, Boston, Mass.

lovely to wear...it's worth Ivory Flakes care

99 44/100% PURE!

new

new

Only in RED CROSS SHOES ...Medium Heels with such high-heel flattery*

The Regency

The Jamaica

The Manor

lovely, new Red Cross Shoe style living, walking feet . . . to make ful ON the foot. YOUR foot. And riety of smart, young styles and in this famous footwear. See the on your Red Cross Shoe retailer

The Villa

erican National Red Cross

Today, more than ever, America's unchallenged shoe value.

hio. These shoes are manufactured and distributed as Gold Cross Shoes in England by Somervell Bros., Ltd.; in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd.; delels (S.A.), Ltd., in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co., Ltd. Gold Cross Shoes are featured in Canada by leading retailers.

Our Readers Write us

World Without Men

St. Paul, Minnesota

Dear Editors: Just as there is no gaiety for the "gay divorcee," so there is no merriment for the "merry widow." There is frustration, of course. When you are only thirty, you still want the attentions of a man! Sometimes the loneliness is almost unbearable. On the day when Junior spills ink all over the newly upholstered kitchen chair, the plumbing gets plugged, Suzy falls down and skins both knees, and the dinner burns—well, one needs someone to hand out a big hug, a kiss, and a pat on the back! I don't even see a man for weeks on end—except my kid brother and the plumber who came to fix the bathroom plumbing! Now don't get me wrong—I don't want any passes made at me, but after three years of living alone, I would like a chance to marry again. All society is made for couples.

Sincerely,
(Name withheld by request.)

Local Complaint

Philadelphia

Dear Editors: I always counted on the JOURNAL being strictly U. S. A. Seems I have the wrong opinion. June issue carried articles and stories almost 100 per cent overseas; even How America Lives depicted foreign characters. July comes out with almost as much out-of-the-country reading.

Your present standards have departed a long way from the original as set up by Mr. Cyrus Curtis.

Yours truly,
PEARL D. BRYAN

Mrs. Curtis, not Mr. Curtis, originally edited, 1883-1889, the JOURNAL, published by Mr. Curtis. It is doubtful that either would, today, be isolationist.—ED.

New Face Coming Up

Highland Falls, New York

Dear Editors: Your policy of selecting a new face for your cover each month made me want to send in this new face. Here's Anne, Jr.

Cordially,
ANNE FINNIGAN

Profile Faces Life

Dallas, Texas

Dear Maureen: You will never believe all the things that have happened to me since I became one of the JOURNAL youth profiles. Best of all are the letters I have received from six different countries—Germany, Denmark, England, South Africa, Saudi-Arabia and, of course, the United States. And the most thrilling thing—the girl who wrote to me from Denmark came to the U. S. this year and just last month she came all the way down here to Texas to see me. You know, I have learned more about these countries through the letters and books they have sent me than I ever learned in school.

Love and best wishes,
CYNTHIA BARNES

More Important Than Ever

St. Paul, Minnesota

Dear Editor: Wha' hoppen to the "Profile of Youth" articles? I have enjoyed reading them very much. It's been interesting to know what other teen-agers are doing.

Sincerely,
LENORE ROSENBLUM

The JOURNAL's very popular Profiles of Youth are resumed this month to appear occasionally during the year instead of every month.—ED.

Stumps the Experts

Seattle, Washington

Dear Editors: Here's my sequel to Cheaper by the Dozen. About a week after reading and enjoying that book I discovered I was going to have a baby. Since this was to be my first child, I had many apprehensions, but remembering the Gil-

Mitchell, Michele and Michael breths' twelve, I felt confident of my ability to cope with one. Imagine my bewilderment, nine months later, when instead of one baby I had three! Quite a good start toward a dozen, don't you think? I feel sure the late Mr. Gilbreth, an efficiency expert, would envy my efficiency.

Sincerely,
MRS. R. W. WEIR

Men Don't Notice

Los Angeles, California

Dear Editors:
The better I do my work, the less
The man of the house is apt to guess
How much his wife must do.
If dust is never anywhere
How can he know it might be there?
If fragrant smells the stew
How can he know how long it took,
Or how ingenious was the cook
Who brewed the miracle?
Oh, what a pity that true success
Will scarcely cause blithe man to bless
His house that runs so sweetly!
The more the little woman does,
The less it seems to him there was
Some hand that smoothed things neatly.

Sincerely,
SYLVIA L. KINNEY

How You Can Help

Bridgeport, Connecticut

Dear Editors: Three years ago in the JOURNAL, Dorothy Thompson analyzed the weaknesses of the United Nations Charter, pointing out that an enforceable law against war could be established within the framework of the United Nations only when these weaknesses were removed. In response to that editorial, a movement of women all over the world began, called W.O.M.A.N. (World Organization of Mothers of All Nations), with the objective of strengthening the United Nations so Irritated skin. "I have skin allergy problems," says Mrs. V. M. Bratthauer of Miami Shores. "Noxzema helps relieve the itching of the resultant skin irritation. It's my stand-by as an aid to softer, smoother looking skin."

NEW HOME FACIAL

Look lovelier in 10 days with this Quick Beauty Routine —or your money back!

● No need for a lot of elaborate preparations . . . no complicated rituals! With one cream, you can cleanse . . . help protect . . . and help heal! The secret is a marvelous new Home Facial, using only greaseless Noxzema. And it can help bring you lovelier-looking skin in 10 days—or your money back!

Easy as washing your face

Morning—Step 1. Apply Noxzema over face and neck. With a damp cloth, "creamwash" just as you would with soap and water. Rinse well. "Creamwashing" cleanses so thoroughly. Why, Noxzema even smells clean!

Step 2. After drying, smooth on a light film of Noxzema for your powder base. This invisible film of Noxzema not only holds make-up beautifully—but also helps protect your skin all day!

Evening—Step 3. At bedtime, "creamwash" with Noxzema again. How clean your skin looks! How fresh it feels! See how you've washed away make-up, the day's accumulation of dirt and grime—without any harsh rubbing!

Step 4. Now, lightly massage Noxzema into face and neck. Pat a little extra over any blemishes. While you sleep, Noxzema helps heal them—helps your skin look softer, smoother, too. And it's greaseless! No "smeary" face or messy pillow with dainty Noxzema!

A skin doctor developed this new Noxzema Home Facial. In tests it helped 4 out of 5 women to lovelier-looking skin. And you'll be thrilled to see how it can help your skin look lovelier, too! Noxzema is a medicated formula—a unique oil-and-moisture emulsion.

It works—or your money back

Try the new Noxzema Home Facial for 10 days. If your skin doesn't show real improvement, return the jar to Noxzema, Baltimore, Md.—your money cheerfully refunded. But you will be delighted! Get Noxzema today—while you can get the 85¢ jar for only 59¢—almost half again as much for your money as in the Small size! Limited time only—at any drug or cosmetic counter.

No complexion troubles for lovely Betty Jane Hokenstrom of Minneapolis who says, "I use Noxzema every night and morning to help my skin look soft and smooth. I always keep a jar handy in my desk at work."

externally-caused.*

MONEY SAVING OFFER

BIG 85¢ JAR

now only 59¢ plus tax

Limited offer—stock up now!

that an enforceable law against aggression can be established.

The plan supported by W.O.M.A.N. calls for three revisions: 1—Elimination of the veto in matters specifically concerning aggression and preparation for aggression; 2—Control of atomic energy and heavy armaments; and 3—Establishment of an international police force and a world court. Three thousand women's organizations throughout the United States have endorsed our program. Chapters have been established in twenty-one foreign countries. In the Philippines and in Chile, the entire federation of Woman's Clubs, representing a total of 425,000 women, has enthusiastically accepted W.O.M.A.N.'s plan. For those who want to know how to join and how to help in this movement, the headquarters address is: W.O.M.A.N., One Lee Place, Paterson, New Jersey.

Very truly yours,
DOROTHEA DE VAULT
Connecticut State Chairman of W.O.M.A.N.
DOROTHY L. RADDING
President, Bridgeport Chapter

That First Kiss

Springfield, Massachusetts

Dear Editors: Years and years ago, when I was a child, I read in your magazine one of the early stories of Grace Richmond. I do not remember the title exactly—it was something like The Flowing Shoestring. It told of a CARELESS girl (in school we always had to spell CARELESS, if there was a button off our shoes, so I am sure the word should be spelled in capitals!)—a CARELESS girl who dressed hastily to meet her escort, and as she descended the stairs (it would have been impossible simply to come down in those days) she saw her lover gasp with horror. He had observed the Flowing Shoestring she had neglected to tie! It was the beginning of the end. Soon he left her. She mourned, but realized she deserved this desertion, for she was a CARELESS girl, and could not hope to marry a really nice gentleman. Of course she reformed, they met again, were married and lived long and happily ever after.

Now that story influenced me—at least to be sure my shoes were tied (or buttoned). And I have wondered whether there were any similar moral lessons in your magazine today. I found something similar, but oh, how different! Here are some of the examples:

YOU CAN LOSE HIM IN A MINUTE! Never let halitosis nullify your other charms.

A SWEETHEART OF A FIGURE Be glamorous and glorious in ——

THE CLEARER YOUR COMPLEXION THE BRIGHTER YOUR CHANCE OF ROMANCE. Use ——

ARE YOU ALWAYS LOVELY TO LOVE? Suddenly breathtakingly, you'll be embraced, held, kissed! Use ——

The last ad sent me hunting for a certain paragraph in The Honorable Peter Stirling, a best seller of the same decade as The Flowing Shoestring. I found it. But what writer of the present day could produce the following sentences, or what teen-age girl could read them with starry-eyed rapture?

"No young girl, however much she loves a man, is quite ready for that first kiss. A man's lips upon her own are too contrary to her instinct and previous training to make them an unalloyed pleasure."

Sincerely yours,
HARRIET W. MARR

No Secret

Denver, Colorado

Dear Editor: We hear how mother did things, how grandma raised fourteen kids, kept a sixteen-room house, cooked meals for farm hands, and so on, until it gets a little bit old. I think our young female of today also deserves high praise.

I'm not thinking only of my wife, but of others I see every day at the university who are raising kids, keeping house, cooking for papa, carrying ten to fifteen hours of schoolwork, and working outside as well to bring in that extra dough so the kids can have a better home and better food. When a young wife and mother must be a glamour gal, a bookkeeper, a housemaid, slave driver, and still be attractive enough

(Continued on Page 8)

Springfoot Sox
FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY

HEEL 'N TOE
SWING YOUR PARTNER
LET 'ER GO

Step out in fashion-right quality-right SPRINGFOOT SOX with Nylon-reinforced toes and heels—the sox known everywhere for their good looks and darnsaving wear. For smartness and economy—select SPRINGFOOT SOX.

Style illustrated "SQUARE DANCE" Sizes 9 to 13 55c a pair

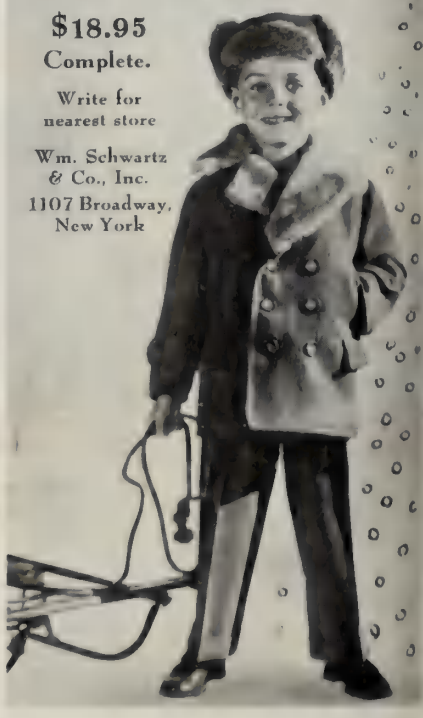
Popular styles in sizes 6 to 13 . . . 39c to $1.00 a pair . . . at leading boys' and young men's departments and specialty stores.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE
THEY WEAR WELL!

For the name of your nearest dealer write:

WILMINGTON HOSIERY MILLS, INC.
WILMINGTON 17, DELAWARE

TWIGS
Brrr! Nippy Togs



Mounty Jacket—a Twigs "Wonder" with rayon plaid quilted lining and real mouton collar and mounty hat.

Sizes 2 to 7.

$18.95
Complete.

Write for nearest store

Wm. Schwartz & Co., Inc.
1107 Broadway, New York

For free reproduction of this painting, write to Johnson & Johnson, Box 1006, Dept. C, New Brunswick, N. J.

"Mommy always says you're safe when you use Johnson & Johnson" ealed in individual envelopes, ed Cross* Sterile Gauze Pads are oft, absorbent, absolutely sterile. leal for First Aid and Baby Care.

New exclusive formula: Now Red Cross* Adhesive Tape gives better sticking qualities and greater freedom from skin irritations.

Red Cross* Cotton comes to you sterile. This long-fibered cotton is the whitest, softest, most absorbent surgical cotton available.

Individually wrapped and sterile, BAND-AID Adhesive Bandages are convenient protection for small cuts, blisters, and abrasions.

New Red Cross* Cotton Balls are sterile and convenient. Have 1000 and 1 uses, in the nursery, for first aid, for cosmetics.

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross.

The most trusted name in surgical dressings... Johnson & Johnson

WHO ME? pay high prices for nail polish and lipstick?

I SHOULD SAY NOT!

No longer need you look in vain for nail polish at any price that won't chip or flake. This tremendous polish discovery guarantees you incredible wear at an incredibly low price. Look into it now . . .

This is the true story of an amazing nail polish discovery...a new miracle-wear ingredient called Enamelon.

It's found only in new low-priced, luxury CUTEX—and it's guaranteed to give incredible wear ...to last longer, chip less than your high-priced polish.

CUTEX with Enamelon stays lovely, day after day after day as no polish ever did before. And, new, miracle-wear CUTEX is so pure...even women with skins so sensitive they cannot use other polishes state that they can safely use new CUTEX.

Thirteen luscious shades. New Cutex 10¢; de luxe Nail Brilliance size 25¢. Prices plus tax.

CUTEX

GUARANTEED*—new, low-price, color-fast lipstick won't bleed, cake or wear off like many high-priced lipsticks

It's the CUTEX Colorgenic Lipstick, the unbelievably new color-fast lipstick that is making cosmetic history.

Made by an exclusive CUTEX electronic process—you know it's a better lipstick on sight. But, wear this new CUTEX Colorgenic Lipstick just once and you'll see the amazing difference.

Yes, it's color-fast . . . with incredible lustre. Won't bleed, cake or wear off like many high-priced lipsticks. Only 49¢. New purse size 25¢.

*Money back if not completely satisfied. Prices plus tax.

(Continued from Page 6)

in a nightgown to keep the old man's eyes from wandering—she is quite a gal.

I'm not writing this to get on the good side of chicken. Though we fight like all get out sometimes, life in general is smooth and comfortable. As a matter of fact, I'm going to mail this in secret, although we have no secrets. Sincerely yours,

D. O'CONNELL

Another Think Coming

Iowa City, Iowa

Dear Bruce: I was both amused and amazed by the following sentences appearing in The Crisis in American Education, by Dorothy Thompson:

"The New York Times has been promoting the study of American history in our colleges and universities. In 1942 it found that only 18 per cent of American colleges required American history as an undergraduate course. Last April the Times, making another survey, rejoiced that now 34 per cent of institutions of higher learning require it. But that leaves 66 per cent of college students who never study one word about the ideas, men, events and developments that have made this nation."

That last sentence contains the most complete non sequitur I've seen in a long time. The assumption that none of the 66 per cent, not required to take American history, actually takes said subject is contrary to all the evidence that I have seen. Furthermore, it ignores the fact that American history can be taught to youngsters prior to their attendance at a college or university. Inasmuch as approximately 75 per cent of our high-school graduates never attend a college or university, it would seem highly important that the requirement be satisfied at the high-school level.

It is interesting that this example of inaccurate thought should occur in an article which is sharply critical of present-day educational procedures for their failure to develop the capacity of students to think correctly. The inference seems to be that what we should have today is education as good as we had in the days of Dorothy Thompson's collegiate experiences. The question I should like to put is this: If the educational process was so much superior in the days when people of our generation and older were being educated, how do we account for the fact that the world is in such terrible shape? Sincerely,

VIRGIL M. HANCHER
President, University of Iowa

Good Way to Spend $5

Elizabeth, New Jersey

Dear Mrs. Gould: Recently in the American Library Association Bulletin I read an article by Miss Margaret Scoggin on the "International Youth Library." It interested me so much that I sent her $5 and asked her to use it for anything she pleased to buy for it. Her letter to me was a real surprise, but a most pleasant one. I quote a paragraph: "Your gift to the International Youth Library means a great deal. I shall see that it is used to best advantage and I have written to ask what would be most useful at the moment. I suspect that a subscription to the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL can be of greatest value. How the girls of Germany do long to know more of women's life here! They are so held down, even yet, to the notion that a girl's mind is something less than a boy's and that girls should do little independent thinking."

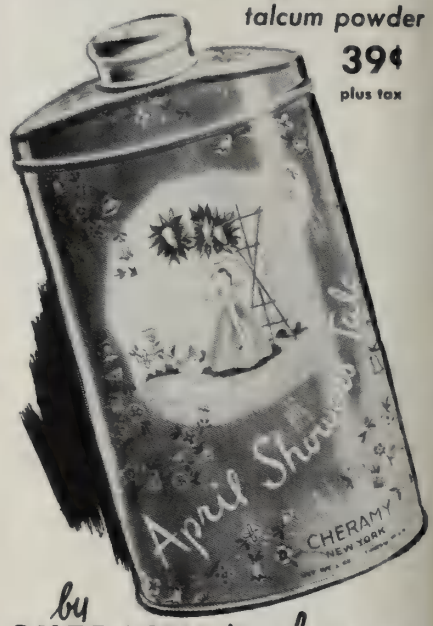
I thought it was a very nice way to use my $5. I cannot imagine any magazine which would bring more understanding of the U. S. A. to all ages than the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

Very Sincerely,
REGINA J. WOODY

Jet-Propelled Journal?

Boise, Idaho

Dear Editors: The LADIES' HOME JOURNAL is a tradition in my family. It came to great-grandmother by mule train, to grandmother by stagecoach, to mother by motor bus, and I buy my copies at the newsstand. Who knows what rapid, modern method will bring it to my granddaughter? Very truly yours,



ETHLEEN A. EVANS

April Showers

Finest imported talcum powder

39¢ plus tax

by CHERAMY perfumer

FINDS BIG CLUE to Better Dry Cleaning!

Discovers How Sanitone Gets Out All the Dirt!

Once you've tried the services of a Sanitone Dry Cleaner you'll never go back to old-fashioned dry cleaning.

Stubborn spots vanish—colors come back to life, garments regain soft, like-new feel. Beautiful press lasts longer! Best for all your family's needs.

LOOK FOR THE NAME OF YOUR SANITONE DRY CLEANER IN YOUR CLASSIFIED PHONE DIRECTORY

Emery Industries, Inc., Cincinnati 2, Ohio

SO THAT WAS IT! Now she understood why people had been avoiding her of late . . . why Bob had become so indifferent. She appreciated over-hearing the truth, brutal as it was, because now she knew what to do . . . Why risk offending when Listerine Antiseptic is such a delightful, easy and extra-careful precaution against simple cases of halitosis (unpleasant breath)? It instantly freshens and sweetens the breath, and keeps it that way, too . . . not for minutes but for hours, usually. Never, never omit Listerine Antiseptic before any date when you want to be at your best. It's the extra-careful precaution against bad breath of non-systemic origin. Lambert Pharmacal Co., St. Louis. Before any date... LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

Capture the look of New Loveliness

WITH YOUR

First Cake of Camay!

MRS. WILLIAM FIELD DE NEERGAARD
the former Cicely Davenport of Chevy Chase, D. C.
Bridal portrait by Maurice

Just when you least expect it, Someone New turns your heart upside down! Then how thankful you feel if your skin looks its glorious best! Remember, it will look softer, clearer, lovelier with your very first cake of Camay. Change to regular care, using Camay alone. You'll marvel at the difference your first cake of Camay makes!

Camay—All That A Beauty Soap Should Be!

Where in the world will you find a finer beauty soap than Camay? It's so mild and gentle—so quick with its rich, creamy lather. And no other soap has ever quite captured the flattering fragrance of Camay. Yes, when Camay's your complexion care, the very first cake can bring a lovelier skin!

THE ROAD TO A ROMANCE

It all began with a blind date at Cicely's Syracuse sorority. But how could Bill be blind to Cicely's complexion? It's wonderfully clear and fresh-looking—soft as a camellia petal. Cicely reports: "There's complexion magic in Camay's creamy lather!"

It led to a flying honeymoon! And Cicely brought home a British sixpence for a charm. But her special charm is her complexion. Cicely says: "Your first cake of Camay can bring a smoother, softer skin. See for yourself!"

TRY THE BIG, ECONOMICAL BATH-SIZE CAMAY

Camay The Soap of Beautiful Women

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
Editors

Staying Free

By RODERICK L. HAIG-BROWN

Twenty years ago the average English-speaking family had little reason to fear any gross interference with its freedom. There might be pressures of one kind or another, through jobs or blacklisting or discrimination; there might be political interferences or mild unfairness of many types. But all these things were slowly decreasing and the mass of law increasingly favored true personal liberty. One felt free and safe in freedom. It seemed that in the western democracies liberty was soundly based, the state powerless against it.

Since 1933 all that has changed. The Germans showed plainly that the twentieth century had the deadliest means in all history of destroying personal liberty. The clearer picture of Russia that has developed since World War II and Korea confirms the deadliness of everything that Hitler did. The world has seen a new series of persecutions, a new succession of martyrs in numbers never before dreamed of. The details of mass killing, mass deportations, mass compulsion of all kinds are given explicitly in the family newspaper and the family magazines.

A whole new morality, diametrically opposed to many of the major concepts of western civilization, is common intellectual currency, given serious consideration and the full weight of the harsh force that has established it. There is no need of a Huxley or an Orwell to diagram it all. And there is no way of disregarding it. If one wants to go on living in ordinary freedom and in the hope of an expanding freedom for one's children, one has to worry.

Down on a family and individual level it seems at first a pathetic effort, funny and hopeless. Surely here is an issue for leaders of men, for orators and great writers, for arms and armies and lawgivers, all the weight and ingenuity of man's organizing and administrative powers. Yet it is purely an issue for families and individuals. No army will ever again win greater freedom for the people that support it; lawgivers spend

(Continued on Page 220)

United Nations: Shadow and Substance

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

QUESTION: What lies behind the idea of a United Nations?

ANSWER: Although since the dawn of history war has been a recognized institution and custom, it has also become increasingly clear to civilized men that the use of armed violence to settle disputes within or between nations or states is an abnormal condition that ought to be entirely eliminated from human affairs, as a source of the greatest anguish and destructive not only of life, but of freedom, culture and material and spiritual progress as well, and a reversal of the processes of nature itself, in which sons normally bury their fathers and not fathers their sons.

It has been amply demonstrated that balance of power and military alliances have utterly failed to prevent war. In proportion as they guaranteed the alliances of a particular group against attack (because of calculations of risk), they tended to stimulate wars between these and unprotected states, and thus more often led to wars than prevented them.

Therefore, progressive minds have based their hope of peace either on some form of world federal union or on an enforceable code of law, binding upon states otherwise sovereign in their internal affairs.

Both the League of Nations and the United Nations were, or are, attempts to realize the idea of states restricted, in their relations with one another, to settling disputes without the use of armed violence.

Q.: Is this a new or strictly modern concept?

A.: No. Definite projects for Leagues of Nations to prevent war have existed for over 200 years, emanating from political philosophers of various schools. The most famous of these early plans are those of the Abbé de St.-Pierre, who advanced his plan in 1713, as a result of the difficulties attending the peace conference at Utrecht, following the War of the Spanish Succession, which engaged all the major countries of Europe. The next clearly outlined plan was advanced in 1789 by the famous British jurist, Jeremy Bentham. Then, in 1795, the German philosopher, Immanuel Kant, put forth the most ambitious plan of all.

Q.: Are there traces of any of these plans in the League of Nations established after World War I, and in the present United Nations?

(Continued on Page 12)

Executive Editor, Mary Bass ▪ Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman ▪ Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Maureen Daly, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Joan Younger, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary • Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey • Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Lily Glendinning, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Jan Weyl, Elizabeth Goetsch, Robert N. Taylor, Cynthia McAdoo, Elizabeth McFarland, Marthedith F. Stauffer, Charles Stryker Ingerman ▪ Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Betty Coe, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Lois Witherspoon, Jeanne Stiles, Elizabeth Crawford, Victoria Harris, Helen Schmidt Kennedy, Miriam Steen Skardon, Helen O'Donnell, Cornelia S. McCook, Rosemary Jones.

CHINESE PAINTING, INK ON PAPER, YUAN DYNASTY (1280–1368 A.D.)
COURTESY METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART

Here's a Treat You'll Repeat!

Make the Cookies with "Buried Treasure" in them!

Recipe on package

Toll House Cookies

are Chock-full of Delicious Morsels of NESTLÉ's Semi-Sweet Chocolate that stay WHOLE in baking!

Try these Tempting TOLL HOUSE COOKIE Variations!

Toll House Squares:
Prepare Toll House Cookies according to recipe on package. Pour batter into a greased waxed paper lined square pan (8" x 8" x 2"). BAKE AT: 350°F. TIME: 35-40 Min. When cool, cut into squares (2" x 2"). YIELD: 16 squares.

Toll House Oatmeal Cookies:
Reduce flour in Toll House Cookie recipe to ¾ c. Add 1 c. rolled oats (uncooked) with the Nestle's Semi-Sweet Chocolate Morsels. Bake as Toll House Cookies.

Toll House Maple Syrup Cookies:
In place of water in the Toll House Cookie recipe, add 3 tbs. Maple Syrup. Bake as Toll House Cookies.

WITH THAT FAMOUS NESTLÉ'S CHOCOLATE FLAVOR

© Lamont, Corliss & Co.

A.: There are, indeed, and it is remarkable also to what extent St.-Pierre, Bentham and Kant reached similar conclusions starting from different philosophical viewpoints. St.-Pierre was a French Catholic believing in the basic unity of Christendom. Bentham, an English jurist, concerned with principles of legislation and juridical abuses, was, like most English and American philosophers, practical, common-sensical and utilitarian in thought. Kant, a German Protestant, was an idealistic philosopher.

Their various nationalities and schools of thought influenced their projects for a United Nations. In St.-Pierre's time the European nations alone counted, in the modern sense, as "powers," and world peace therefore depended on the amicable settlement of their own disputes. (America was to become a "United States" sixty-three years after he proposed a form of European United States.)

The European powers had been perpetually involved in hideous wars, the worst of which had been the religious wars of the previous century. St.-Pierre envisaged the creation of a league of the twenty-four European states based on the common acceptance by all of the Christian ethic. These were to unite in a common body for security against both foreign and civil war, and for the mutual guaranty of the treaties between them. He outlined a system of arbitration and reconciliation to be initiated by all members in case of a dispute between any, and advocated a Senate of Peace, in effect a permanent court, to which disagreements should be referred if such attempts failed. He also provided for enforcement. All members were to band together to suppress a rebellious state, and the aggressor was to be recognized as one that refused to arbitrate.

> On the whole, the globe is anything but a model apartment house. Each family considers itself the only respectable one in the building and they are continually squabbling for the possession of the most desirable rooms.
> —OLIVER HERFORD.

Bentham's plan had five main points: the reduction of armaments of all participating states to fixed quotas; the emancipation of all colonies, possession of which he held to be a prime cause of war; an international court for the settlement of disputes; a legislature of governments to record resolutions agreed to by the member states and to bring sanctions against the recalcitrant; and freedom of press and public opinion in all member states, with total suppression of secret diplomacy and secret agreements.

Kant advocated a general federation of all states, restricted, however, to constitutional orders in which the citizens participated through elected representatives in the exercise of legislative power and especially on decisions of peace or war. These free states should submit themselves to an international order of public law enforceable among themselves.

It is quite apparent that the two modern attempts to substitute the rule of law for the rule of violence have drawn heavily on their eighteenth-century predecessors. Both the League and U.N. incorporated some or all of the principles and procedures set forth by St.-Pierre, Bentham or Kant.

In the U.N., however, there is one glaring difference that must strike the reader of even this extremely summarized description of the U.N.'s spiritual ancestors.

St.-Pierre, Bentham and Kant all saw that order is possible only through law, and that true law must stand on an agreed basis of justice and freedom. They therefore assumed that nations joining in a league to outlaw war among themselves would start with some commonly cherished institutions, and principles of justice. St.-Pierre could not imagine the long maintenance of peace between Christian nations and nations actively hostile to Christianity. From a modern viewpoint he would be considered to have overrated the religious issue. But he recognized that participating members must hold some institutions in common, before they can widen into peaceful commonwealth.

Both Bentham (who spent a lifetime working for the reform of British domestic law) and Kant assumed that member states would have similar, though not necessarily identical, juridical and governmental structures.

They thought it possible, for instance, to form a league, or a limited form of federal union, between states whose legal structure was based on Roman law and states that had the common law of the Anglo-Saxon and North European countries. For in both legal systems the institution of the impartial judge and the supremacy of law over parties and even over kings obtained. A constitutional monarchy of more or less limited powers could thus associate itself with a republic, provided that both had representative legislatures.

But the programs of St.-Pierre, Bentham and Kant clearly assume that no successful League of States for outlawing war could function in an association between absolute despots and representative governments; or between states where law was based on public deliberation and consent, and those whose laws were mere executive edicts; or between states which could move armies at the dictate of an omnipotent ruler, and those which required public consent; or between states in which there was freedom of public discussion and others in which there was none of this freedom.

Since any League of Nations to abolish war must substitute the rule of law for decisions based on violence, it would seem implicit that the participating members agree, basically, on how law should be made and on basic principles of justice.

The troubles that led to the dissolution of the League of Nations and to the emergence of two blocs within the United Nations, which presently belie the very name of the association, both arose, in large part, from the lack of any common principles of justice held by all members. When Mussolini overthrew the constitutional order of Italy, the co-operation of Italy in the League would have become dubious, even if Mussolini had not embarked on an expansionist program. When Hitler substituted one-man rule for representative government in Germany, he quite logically took Germany out of the League. For Germany no longer shared any common juridical principles with the majority of members.

The presence of the Soviet Union in the original League of Nations assumed that postrevolutionary Russia was herself, and internally, moving toward an orderly system of law and away from the lynch court (called Peoples' Tribunals), government by assassination, and the police state (a state in which the police protect the rulers, not the people, and enforce their orders, without reference to law).

Actually, what the Russians call "Revolutionary Justice"—and is, in the view of all civilized peoples, antijustice—has not been mitigated but intensified in Russia since Stalin came to power. It is logically unthinkable that any state would yield to an international body any of the prerogatives it will not yield to its own people or that a lawless state will sincerely cooperate to establish universal principles of international law.

Q.: Did the projects which preceded the foundation of actual leagues provide for the veto?

A.: No. If an order is based on mutually agreed-on law, the idea of a veto is untenable. One cannot accept a law binding on all, and then veto its operation if invoked against oneself. That is a basic premise of law. To have an effective United Nations, governing the relations between t maple-sugaring time folks are drawn to the sugar camp by the aroma of wood-smoke, the promise of "sugar-on-snow."

(Continued on Page 264)

Pancakes and Vermont Maid Syrup

Real Old-Time Treat!

For Vermont Maid Syrup our skilled blenders elect maple sugar that is unusually full-avored; then they blend it with cane sugar. his blend gives you, at moderate cost, real aple sugar flavor that is uniformly rich and elicious—everybody's favorite!

Your grocer has Vermont Maid Syrup in attractive glass jugs, ready for your table. In the big, generous 24-ounce size—your family can pour all they want on their pancakes or waffles. Also in handy 12-ounce size.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc., Burlington, Vermont.

Made by the makers of My-T-Fine Desserts and Brer Rabbit Molasses.

Copyright 1950
Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.

Completely Automatic

MIRRO-MATIC

Electric Percolator

JUST PLUG IT IN!

STARTS PERKING IN SECONDS!

STOPS AUTOMATICALLY WHEN COFFEE IS DONE!

MAKES 4 TO 8 CUPS OF PERFECT COFFEE!

keeps coffee drinking-hot for hours!

$12.95

8-CUP SIZE WITH CORD
Federal Tax Included
(Was 13.95)

MIRRO
THE FINEST ALUMINUM

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE · UL · Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

● First one up in the morning can enjoy a tingling-hot cup of fresh, full-flavored coffee in no time at all. And it will still be hot and satisfying when the latest stay-abed in the family creeps out of the covers.

FILL IT ... PLUG IT IN ... THAT'S ALL YOU DO!

You just put coffee and cold water into your MIRRO-MATIC and plug it in. You don't have to touch it again till you're ready to pour. A hot, 600-watt element powers the perking till it's done. After perking (never boiling!) this high-heat element cuts off and the second element, just 30 watts, takes over, automatically! Its controlled, constant heat keeps the coffee at ideal drinking temperature till the last drop has been poured. That's coffee-making, MIRRO-MATIC-style.

The MIRRO-MATIC Electric Percolator is a MIRRO aluminum utensil. It has the same sturdy construction and fine finish you always expect—and get—in MIRRO. Look for it at department, hardware, and housefurnishing stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum.

MIRRO

THE FINEST ALUMINUM

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY • MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSILS

A pioneer maker of ELECTRIC PERCOLATORS ... millions made under various brand names

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELT

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

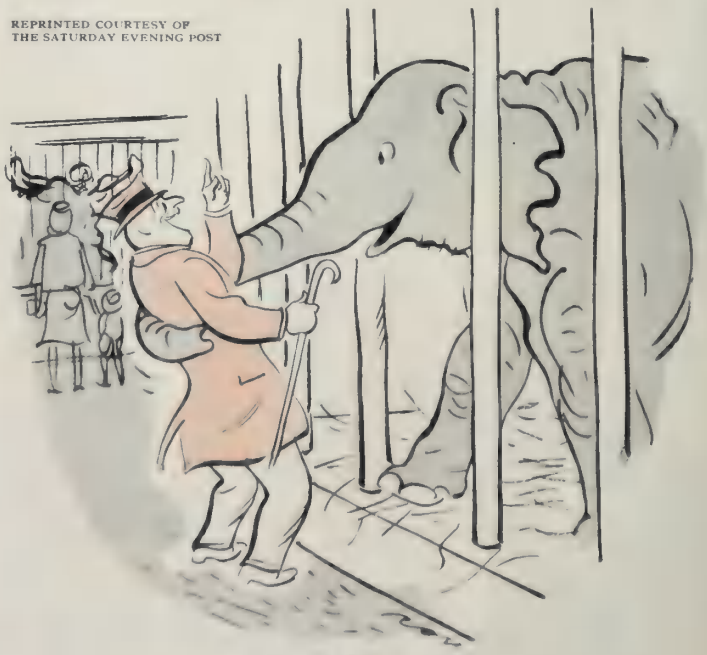
"Zablotzkywisz, play left half; Karenoftzicki, right half; Polkintowitz, quarterback; and you, Smith, Smythe, Smitt, however you pronounce it, fullback."

THERE is a hilarious book about football: PROFESSOR FODORSKI, by Robert Lewis Taylor (of W. C. FIELDS and ADRIFT IN A BONEYARD fame). The girls who scream with delight at the movies over the football plays certainly will like it.

Professor Fodorski is a little refugee engineer with a big reputation for bridge building, who enters this country with $140 pinned to his shirt, and only a vague smattering of scientific English words. Somehow he lands in a Southern college town on the day of the first big football game of the season. He is taken to the game. He sees, he understands, he conquers.

With no knowledge of football, but with a head brimming full of mathematics and bridge formations, the professor gets a slant on the game that is unique. Before the season is over he has been made coach, he leads his team to undreamed-of victories, and his tactics make headline news.

For pigskin addicts who can take humor with their sport, this is a rare find.



■

India may not be Kipling, and Malaya may not be all that Conrad made it, but if you've read Kipling and Conrad in your youth (and we're sorry for those who haven't), the jungle will always be romance. Which brings us to ——

ELEPHANT BILL—the final word on elephants—and such an affectionate,

(Continued on Page 16)

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I know—Africa, 1912!"

Any of 77 dishes from one "make-your-own" mix!

You make it with wonderful Swift'ning*

Swift'ning is the trade-mark for Swift & Company's Shortening.

You make your mix this easy way (in less than 10 minutes!)

A MARTHA LOGAN RECIPE

SWIFT'NING "MAKE-YOUR-OWN" MIX

Yield: About 13 cups

Use standard measuring cups and spoons.

- 2 cups Swift'ning
- 9 cups sifted all-purpose flour
- 1 tablespoon salt
- ¼ cup (4 tablespoons) double-acting baking powder (like Calumet, K-C, Clabber Girl and Rumford)

Combine sifted flour, salt and baking powder. Stir well. Sift into a large bowl (or large pan or onto heavy paper). Add Swift'ning. Use finger tips or pastry blender to distribute Swift'ning throughout dry ingredients until mixture resembles coarse cornmeal. The "Make-Your-Own" Mix is now ready to use, or store in closed canister in pantry.

Martha Logan says: "This 'Make-Your-Own' Mix was developed especially for rich 'quick-mix' Swift'ning. We can't promise success with any other shortening."

STORE IT IN THE PANTRY—You're sure of freshness in your homemade mix!

Martha Logan sums it up:

"Better meals . . . lots less work. Saves money, too!"

ust think of it! An all-purpose mix ou can use in 77 different recipes! nd you make the mix yourself, ith wonderful Swift'ning.

It's the special "quick-mix" in-redient, high shortening power, and chness of the Swift'ning you use iat make this mix so versatile and ve such superb results. Swift'ning the truly all-purpose shortening. here is no other like it.

ives work! Indeed it does. With ly one measuring and sifting of our and baking powder . . . only one measuring and blending of shortening . . . you have enough mix to use for days and days!

Costs less—gives better results! This sensational mix costs very little to make. And no single packaged mix has anywhere near as many uses. The things you bake with it taste better, too, because your mix is fresh and made with Swift'ning.

Free—77 grand recipes! Clip the Order Blank and send it in today. You'll get 77 wonderful recipes to make with your Swift'ning Mix!

Digestible ... and nutritious, too!

You use it (adding other ingredients as needed) to make any of 77 family-tempting treats including:

CAKES PIES MAIN DISHES
COOKIES CREAM PUFFS ROLLS
PANCAKES SHORTCAKES

For instance:

NUT BREAD

Yield: 9 x 5-inch loaf

- 3 cups Swift'ning "Make-Your-Own" Mix (do not pack)
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 cup chopped nuts
- ¾ cup milk
- 1 egg, beaten

Blend Mix, sugar, and nuts. Add combined milk and egg. Beat until well blended. Turn into loaf pan (9 x 5 x 2¾ inches) (bottom rubbed with Swift'ning). Bake in a moderate oven (350° F.) one hour. (12 hours' storage improves flavor and texture.)

CHOCOLATE BROWNIES

Yield: 7 x 11-inch pan

- 1½ cups Swift'ning "Make-Your-Own" Mix (do not pack)
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 cup chopped pecans
- 2 eggs, well beaten
- ½ teaspoon vanilla
- 2 squares (2 oz.) unsweetened chocolate, melted and cooled

Blend Mix, sugar, and pecans. Add eggs, vanilla, and chocolate. Mix thoroughly. Turn into a shallow pan (7 x 11 inches) (rubbed with Swift'ning). Bake in a moderate (350°F.) oven about 22 min. Cut into squares before removing from pan.

Only with Swift'ning—the truly all-purpose shortening—can you make an all-purpose mix that gives such superb results.

GOOD COOKS ARE SWITCHING TO SWIFT'NING

You can get 77 recipes FREE!

Swift'ning, P. O. Box 5985, Chicago 77, Illinois
Please send my free copy of Martha Logan's booklet "77 Recipes with Swift'ning 'Make-Your-Own' Mix." (D)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

In Canada write: Swift Canadian Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Two to Tie to

For every-day use, choose Imperial Cape Cod Crystal—beautiful, sturdy, complete. Authentically Early American, yet equally at home with modern decorative motifs.

For table dress-up occasions, your best choice is Imperial Candlewick Crystal—a unique, distinctive beaded-edge design that is America's most imitated, never-equalled pattern.

Whichever you select, you are assured there is no finer table crystal in all the world. Each is open stock, each is modestly priced. American hand-crafted by skilled artisans of THE IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION, BELLAIRE, OHIO.

(Continued from Page 14)

heart-warming word! The author is Lt. Col. J. H. Williams, who spent twenty-five years with elephants, mostly in the Burma jungle. He trained them in time of peace and war, sometimes having as many as a thousand elephants busily at work under him, each elephant with his "oozie," the Burman who rode him and was directly responsible for him. The elephants were especially good at bridgebuilding, far cleverer than most humans. They were also an important factor in evacuating native villages when the Japs came into the country. The high point of the book is a trek of forty-five enormous elephants and a mass of refugees up over a 6000-foot trackless mountain into India and safety—as great a feat as Hannibal's.

FOLLOW THE SEVENTH MAN, by Robert Standish, is Malay—romantic adventure plus sex and crime, and certain of popular reading.

•

The Bronx Zoo in New York has incorporated a new service that other big zoos throughout the country may or may not have been giving. It's a birthday party—for children of members only, which is fair enough, and at a reasonable price. You just telephone the date of the birthday, say how many children (twelve years or younger) will be there, and the zoo provides two to two and a half hours' entertainment well supervised, including rides on animals, visits to the different zoo houses, and ice cream and cake under colored umbrellas opposite the elephant yard.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHOTO

London zoo's penguins are pets.

And speaking of birthdays, Pete the Hippo has just passed forty-seven, making him the oldest hippo in captivity. Pete's life has been a quiet one, far removed from temptation. He was born in the Central Park Menagerie in 1903, and has never seen another hippo since he left his mother's cage in 1906.

•

An ideal life must be that of Jack Iams, mystery-story writer. After his latest opus, WHAT RHYMES WITH MURDER?, was published and selected by the Detective Book Club, he took off by freighter for Bagdad for a couple of months, to make a fourth at bridge at the U.S. embassy in that onetime fabulous city.

•

Besides a fiction refugee professor becoming football coach, we have a real priest writing novels and advising on problems of the theater. The priest is Father Edward F. Murphy, who lives down New Orleans way and who started writing novels at night be-

(Continued on Page 18)

Fine electric irons

SINCE 1894

American Beauty

ELECTRIC IRON

Wives, mothers and grandmothers who are using American Beauty electric irons acquired in their early housekeeping days—and there are many—will welcome this modern American Beauty adjustable-automatic electric iron. With the new generation too it will find favor because of its light weight—durability—dependability.

It has the thermoscope—which takes guesswork out of ironing. As the speedometer registers speed—the thermometer, temperature—the thermoscope registers at all times . . . Rayon, Silk, Wool, Cotton, Linen . . . the operating heat of the ironing-surface and indicates the right position for the work at hand.

Try the American Beauty. Enjoy a new sensation in ironing.

Your dealer . . .

Your favorite electrical appliance dealer, hardware store or department store will be glad to show you this new and finest American Beauty electric iron.

AMERICAN ELECTRICAL HEATER CO.
DETROIT 2, MICHIGAN

This is stately, gleaming

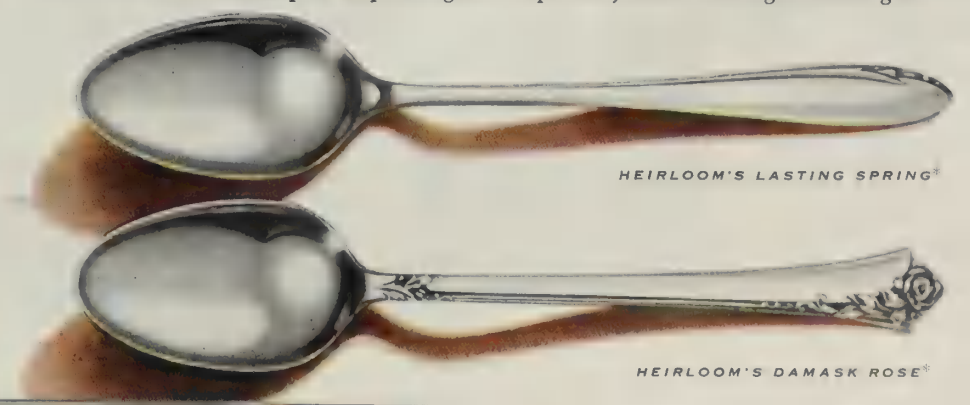
Mansion House



in

Heirloom Sterling

Mansion House—its lines pure, exquisite against deep woodsy brown and bright autumn-gold.

It grows in Beauty — Gone are the days when a bride's silver appeared on only rare, grand occasions! Today's bride has learned that her beautiful Heirloom* Sterling, used and enjoyed every day, actually grows more beautiful with the years! No luxury gives your home such an air of dignity and elegance—yet this handsome solid silver fits even the very young budget. Three greatly loved, young-spirited patterns . . . famous for their freshness and originality. Start your Heirloom Sterling with only two place-settings, add more later—on easy payment terms.

6-piece place setting $24.75 fed. tax included

HEIRLOOM'S LASTING SPRING*

HEIRLOOM'S DAMASK ROSE*

*Trade Mark. © 1950, Oneida Ltd., Oneida, N.Y.

"Look what Sofskin did for my rough DRYSKIN HANDS!"

Wonderful new cream softens 3 Kinds of Dryskin!

Soapy-water chapping . . . Dishwashing makes hands look older. Use Sofskin for a younger look!

Hard-water dryness . . . Hands feel dry, drawn! See how Sofskin softens your dry, surface skin!

Cold-weather roughness . . . Hands rough, red? Sofskin's creamy richness beautifies!

YOUR DRYSKIN HANDS FEEL SMOOTHER, LOOK YOUNGER . . . IN SECONDS!

The moment you smooth on Sofskin Creme, your hands feel the difference! Dry surface skin seems to lap up its creamy goodness. For this amazing cream penetrates . . . doesn't just slick the top! Made with true skin-softeners, it smooths 3 kinds of dryskin . . . cold-weather roughness, soapy-water chapping, hard-water dryness. Suddenly you, too, have 'Sofskin' Hands . . . lovely to his eyes, thrilling to his touch!

So successful, 3 out of 5 who try it, buy it! Available at all drug and cosmetic counters.

Sofskin Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. CREME

GET 21-DAY JAR luxurious Sofskin ONLY 10¢

MAIL TODAY! Send coin—no stamps
Sofskin Co., Dept. LL, Bloomfield, N. J.
Please send me big 21-day jar of luxurious Sofskin Creme. I enclose 10¢ in coin.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State____

(Continued from Page 16)

cause he couldn't sleep, what with the Delta mosquitoes zinging through his screenless windows.

In 1944 he wrote THE SCARLET LILY, about Mary Magdalene (now reissued), and this year he has done the story of Ruth, in SONG OF THE CAVE.

Theatrically he is Eddie Dowling's counselor. Back in the '30's, Producer Dowling put a script in Father Murphy's hands and asked what he thought of it. The next morning the priest said, "Fresh, original, just the jolt a jaded Broadway needs." It was THE TIME OF YOUR LIFE, and it made William Saroyan as a playwright.

Once the priest told Dowling about a girl he had heard sing at a Washington social. "There's a rare talent and personality, as refreshing as a whiff of meadowland breeze." Dowling took his word for it, and Kate Smith made her debut in his musical, Honeymoon Lane.

•

Can anyone learn to write fiction? Probably not. But after reading Elizabeth Bowen's Notes on Writing a Novel, you feel that you might sit down and try. This is one of many essays in COLLECTED IMPRESSIONS, her latest book, made up of prefaces, book reviews

COLLIER'S

"I think it's about time you stop practicing on your autograph and start writing your novel!"

and at-random articles. She speculates, and suggests, and draws unprecedented conclusions. A book for those who like to hear an original mind clicking.

Relevance—the absence of it—says Miss Bowen, is the headache of novel-writing, and the model for relevance is the well-constructed detective story: nothing is "in" that does not tell.

Which brings us to Raymond Chandler and THE SIMPLE ART OF MURDER, a dozen of Chandler's shorter detective novels that are long out of print, some few of them in the best tradition of THE BIG SLEEP, FAREWELL MY LOVELY and THE HIGH WINDOW. They are not all easy to take. You have to like Philip Marlowe, private detective, and to enjoy watching low-down characters engaged in blackmail and stickups in Los Angeles poolrooms, flophouses and night clubs.

"To read him is like cutting into an overripe melon and discovering that it has a rare astringent flavor," says J. B. Priestley. "He reduces the bright California scene to an empty despair, dead bottles and a heap of cigarette butts under the meaningless neon lights, much more than Aldous Huxley and the rest can do."

•

When you see the gorgeous color in the autumn woods, would it spoil things to know that actually the hills

(Continued on Page 21)

"ACHING FEET"

Can make them say:

"My, she's looking old!"

● How can foot-misery add years to your appearance? The answer's simple. When your feet are throbbing with fatigue, your face looks tense and tired. What's more, those little pain-lines, etched into delicate face tissues, can actually be the beginning of tiny wrinkles.

That's why rubbing your feet with famous Absorbine Jr. is such a rewarding routine!

You see Absorbine Jr. has two beneficial actions. (1) It promptly cools and soothes. (2) It counters the irritation that causes the pain with a grand muscle-relaxing effect. Yes, when a refreshing Absorbine Jr. rub has made your feet feel better, you feel better all over—and your face shows it!

Get Absorbine Jr. wherever drugs are sold. Only $1.25 for a long-lasting bottle.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

Absorbine Jr

(Continued from Page 18)

are flaming—that you are looking at a panorama of frozen fire? That's what John J. O'Neill, alert science editor of the New York Herald Tribune, says it is: Nature bringing a cycle to its close, and burning, slowly and safely, in ■ vast conflagration, the materials left unused in her processes.

He suggests looking through a color filter to see the processing going on: where the leaf looks green, you can see the red creeping in, and when the trees seem to be their brightest the leaves will still show green. Finally all the green breaks down (chemically), after that the yellow, till all that is left is a lacy tracery

HERBERT LANKS FROM BLACK STAR

Autumn near Brattleboro, Vt.

of cellulose fibers. The leaves that fall return the mineral residue to the ground, which is used again by the tree in the spring, and the cycle is thus completed.

It's really more fun to read the scientific pages of the paper than the social news or politics, even if—like this department—you don't quite understand them.

■

The Good Old Days mean trouble to one reader and something pretty special to others, if we can judge from the letters which have come in about Clyde Brion Davis' THE AGE OF INDISCRETION.

"Nostalgia," says Davis, "is ■ habit-forming drug, a narcotic. It is ■ refuge of the aged, the rose-scented goose grease on the toboggan slide to senility." But, we add, it is fun.

Especially the nostalgia from old songs. Now that a possible new war lurks over the horizon, we feel a little homesick when we think about White Christmas, or Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition, Coming in on a Wing and a Prayer, The White Cliffs of Dover. After the Crimean War (which we do not quite remember) the British Tommies who had fought in it, and heard about a new war coming up, had a song which ran:

"If you'll excuse me,
We've 'ad some!"

●

Women can keep house and write novels, too, it seems.

"The beauty of housework," says Eleanor Cameron, author of THE UNHEARD MUSIC, "is that she can do her dusting and dishwashing in a dream—the imagination weaves and builds, the dust mop can be tossed into a corner for fifteen minutes and the notebook taken up." It took Mrs. Cameron six years to write her first novel.

Scotties*
are softies!

Scotties are thrifties too!

Scotties are "softies" on your skin and pure white-white. Yet, marvel of marvels, they have the 2-way strength you want for practical use. You don't poke a finger through a Scottie when you "blow." And when you remove make-up, a Scottie doesn't crumble. Scotties are "thrifties" too. See how economical these soft white tissues are by comparing Scotties' value with all others.

* another tissue by Scott that's "soft as old linen"

"Scotties," "Soft as old linen," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

COMMUNITIES FACE THEIR SLUMS...

Other Cities Attack the Problem

By MARGARET HICKEY

THE housing shortage has been acute for all low-income families since the growth of population outdistanced the rate of new building. But the worst-housed people in the United States are Negroes. A complicating factor is the discrimination in the housing market which often forces Negroes to pay far more for decent shelter than do others with the same income. It is not surprising that crowded living conditions and unhealthful, unsanitary dwellings in blighted areas give rise to racial tensions.

Public housing based on need, with no discrimination among races or creeds, is providing a partial answer. Individual groups and corporations also are recognizing that low-rental units yield a sound return and are doubly rewarding in improved civic harmony, health and morality.

New York City Attacks the Problem

The need for housing for minorities is most acute in New York City. At the same time, New York is the city in which most is being done to help remedy the situation. To insure a policy of nondiscrimination, applications for housing in public projects are given numbers. The rental agency is responsible for allotting apartments as the numbers come up. In the Brownsville, Johnson and Marcy Houses developments, white and Negro families are almost evenly divided.

Negro Housing in Other Cities

Many encouraging instances of better housing for Negroes are to be found in the South. In Knoxville, Tennessee, 320 attractive, modern apartment units have replaced shacks that stood before the war in a section near the campus of Knoxville College for Negroes. Austin Homes, with 200 units, is just across the street from the Austin high school for Negroes. When many Negro families faced eviction from Federally sponsored housing units in Tampa, Florida, because their incomes had risen above the permitted level, the local Urban League interested private investors in building fifty low-cost homes of four to six rooms each.

Rockefeller interests are planning the development of a multimillion-dollar housing project for Negroes in St. Louis, Missouri. Dilapidated houses in one of the city's worst slum areas will be torn down to make way for between 1000 and 2500 new low-cost (FHA financed) homes to rent for from $40 to $45 a month.

Baltimore's slum-clearance plan is believed to have put more poor people in better homes faster than any similar project in a large city. It is a realistic stopgap based upon the belief that until private or governmental agencies can build enough homes, the next best thing is to clean up, spruce up, weathertight existing homes. At an average cost to the owner of $500 per house, the city has completed improvements in 90 blocks and is working in 113 others. The real power behind the city's drive for decent housing is the Citizens' Planning and Housing Association, spearheaded by Miss Frances H. Morton, Johns Hopkins social-welfare worker.

In the next fifteen years the American people will need housing equal to one half the present supply. How can we plan for decent homes for everyone, of all races and creeds, in the blueprints for tomorrow? THE END

In Coconut Grove, Florida

THIS is the story of the aroused democratic action of a community of people, white and Negro, working together to make over a filthy, overcrowded, closed-in, neglected and apparently hopeless Negro slum. It is the story of the Coconut Grove Citizens Committee for Slum Clearance which succeeded in helping over 4000 Negro residents to realize that it is a proud and hopeful thing to be living in America.

The story is not finished. Perhaps it can never be finished while human problems lie at the mercy of human carelessness and human greed. But what the committee was able to do and is doing proves again that no private welfare agencies or superimposed plans, however good, can have the strength and the enduring purpose of a self-aroused, self-sustaining, tireless democratic force in a community.

It began to happen in 1948 at the south end of Florida, where the booming city of Miami nearly twenty-five years ago reached out and swallowed up the small, quiet, older town of Coconut Grove. For years the Coconut Grove Negro section had been like a country village of small frame houses and stores, and fences covered with blossoming vines, with gardens and narrow, quiet streets shaded with old trees. Each house had its own well, privy, yard and garden.

When the town acquired a water system, most white people installed septic tanks and running water and proper bathrooms. But Colored Town went on using the same wells, the water of which was now contaminated. With the great increase in population in the whole Miami area Coconut Grove, too, grew crowded. In Colored Town, the same little old frame houses stood as they always had. Other flimsy board houses or shacks were jammed in back yards, sometimes completely filling narrow twenty-five-foot lots. The Miami City Commission passed no ordinance requiring running water, septic tanks and adequate toilets.

At night the city sent out trucks to collect the contents of the can toilets, often dripping and stinking through the streets. (Continued on Page 224)

CARROLL SEGHERS II FROM BLACK STAR

Children in Coconut Grove Colored Town are growing up in cleaner, healthier surroundings. Together, white and Negro residents continue to work for improvements through their two-year-old Citizens Committee.

"I've learned my knitting lessons well...
that's why I stick to BOTANY BRAND
no-dye-lot yarns..."

"I'm smarter at my knitting 'homework' since I switched to 'Botany' Brand No-Dye-Lot Dress Yarn. I made this thrilling dress at a fraction of what I thought it would cost. And my friends tell me it looks twice the price. Also, you can match any color any time—for 'Botany' Brand Yarns are top-dyed. By following the simple washing directions on the skein band I know my dress will never lose its elegant fit." You don't have to be an expert to knit successfully with "Botany" Brand.

This appealing original appears in the November issue of the "Model-of-the-Month."

Join the "'Botany' Model-of-the-Month Club," and enjoy, each month, an exclusive release and instructions on garments you knit. $1 for two years. Send the coupon and receive FREE, Susan Bates' KNITEEZ (Cablestitch Holder, Yarneedle, Stitch Holder, Stitch Measure and Knitting Needle Gauge Card) as a premium for subscribing immediately. This generous offer expires Dec. 31, 1950.

NAME
ADDRESS
CITY ZONE STATE

Look for the "Botany" Brand Label on Products For Men, Women and Children

COPYRIGHT 1950, BOTANY MILLS, INC.

Reference Library

WITH CHRISTMAS IN MIND

Whether for Christmas gifts or for yourself, here are lovely handicraft patterns designed to be future heirlooms.

QUILTS

2340. LOTUS QUILT. An appliqué pattern done in white and three colors. Based on an Egyptian frieze. 25c.
2341. TRUMPET-VINE QUILT. A delicate, all-over appliqué pattern. White background. 25c.
2342. SNOWFLAKE QUILT. A pieced pattern to be done in several shades of one color and white. 25c.
2343. OHIO ROSE. A symmetrical design in appliqué. Three shades of pink, green and white. 25c.
2344. POMEGRANATE. An old Southern pattern. All-over design in squares. To be appliquéd on white. 25c.
2345. ROSE-TREE QUILT. A Swiss design with rose tree in center, roses form border. To appliqué. 25c.
2346. SUNFLOWER QUILT. A bold pattern with large sunflowers forming a deep border. To appliqué. 25c.
2347. IRIS QUILT. An all-over design featuring full-bloom flowers and leaves. To appliqué. 25c.
2348. FRIENDSHIP'S PLUME. A conventional pattern done in one color and white. To appliqué. 25c.
2349. SATURNIA SOUVENIR. A pieced quilt in geometric pattern. 25c.
2350. MARTHA'S VINEYARD. To appliqué. Difficult, but lovely. All-over design. 25c.

PLACE MATS

2489. PLACE MATS. Includes directions for fifteen different designs. Some to embroider, others to crochet. 25c.
2660. CROCHET APPLIQUÉ. Seven patterns including forget-me-not and lily of the valley. 25c.

NEEDLEWORK

2544. TRAPUNTO BEDROOM ENSEMBLE. Includes directions for quilting design on headboard, spread, valance, chair and dressing table. 25c.
2540. CREWEL EMBROIDERY. Designs given for drapes and a chair cover. Not a transfer, instructions must be traced to material. 25c.

HOOKED RUGS

1745. SAMPLER RUG FOR CHILD'S ROOM. Assemble motifs in your own design. Blocks, rabbits, ducks, ball, etc., included in directions. 10c.
2013. OXEN-AND-PLOW SAMPLER HOOKED RUG. A pastoral scene—24 by 40 inches. 10c.
2014. SQUARE-MOTIF HOOKED RUG. Concentric squares in contrasting colors. 24 by 54 inches. 10c.
2015. HOLLY HOOKED RUG. Bright berries and leaves form deep border on neutral background. 27 by 40 inches. 10c.
2016. SCROLL HOOKED RUG. Central floral motif, surrounded by graceful scrolls. 27 by 40 inches. 10c.
2017. FLORAL HOOKED RUG. An elaborate pattern. Quaint in many colors. 22 by 44 inches. 10c.
2018. BOUQUET HOOKED RUG. A bold bouquet on delicate background. Scalloped border. 24 by 40 inches. 10c.

TO KNIT

2435. LONG-SLEEVED CARDIGAN. Classic pattern. Sizes: 12 to 20. 10c.
2559. SHORT-SLEEVED CARDIGAN. Tiny collar, cable detail on either side of opening. Lovely in Angora. 15c.
2436. SHORT-SLEEVED PULLOVER. Classic pattern. Can be made to match No. 2435. 10c.
2499. NYLON SWEATER. Tiny cap sleeves, wide neckline. To be worn over skirt. 15c.
1948. NORWEGIAN MITTENS FOR MEN OR WOMEN. Average-size hand. Skier and fir-tree design. 10c.
2497. ANKLETS. Favorites of the high-school and college crowd. Instructions included for monogramming. 15c.
2498. MEN'S STRAIGHT SOCKS. Ribbed design. Instructions included for monogramming. Can be made long or short. 15c.
2405. KNITTED BED JACKET. Tiny Peter Pan collar, bracelet-length sleeves. Collar, pocket and edge of sleeves accented with narrow lace. 15c.

OTHER FEATURES

Lists are sent free on request. They give the title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.
1695. SUB-DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY.
1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.
2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.
2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.
1571. REFERENCE LIST OF KNITTED AND CROCHETED PATTERNS.
1752. HANDICRAFT PATTERN LIST.

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name _____
(Please Print)
Street _____
City _____ Zone _____
State _____

Don't touch it if you're timid.....it's hotter than you think!

"Where's the Fire?"

It's Revlon's new Fall color for lips and matching fingertips

A sultry, smouldering red—TNT for two! Suddenly your hidden fire's showing, when your clothes, your lips and fingertips* are sparked with the breathless excitement of "Where's the Fire?"!

Matchbox...1.60 plus tax

PHOTO: DAN WYNN. GOWN: NANTY. JEWELS: SCHLUMBERGER. © 1950 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP. *ACCEPTED BY COMMITTEE ON COSMETICS OF A.M.A. COLOR AS ACCURATE AS PRINTING METHODS PERMIT.

Making Marriage Work

Every bride has moments of uncertainty when she asks herself, "Do I love him? Does he love me? Will we be happy together? Did I really want to get married?"

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Bridal Jitters

EVERYBODY knows that girls are subject to jitters on the eve of marriage. Worn out by social activities, enmeshed in arrangements for the wedding, and keyed up with excitement, the bride has little chance to collect her thoughts and feelings. Small wonder if, as the day approaches, she is overwhelmed by apprehension. But in nine cases out of ten she manages to calm down at the last minute, and she goes to the altar serene and confident. Her doubts, once dispelled or forgotten, are not likely to torment her again so fiercely.

But some brides do not emerge from their panic so easily. Every marriage counselor has had the unhappy experience of being consulted by a newly married pair whose honeymoon has been shattered and whose future is threatened by the bride's pervading doubts and worries.

Sometimes the difficulty arises from inadequate preparation for marriage, especially when the engagement has been short. An engagement of less than three months hardly allows time to settle such practical matters as living arrangements and a tentative budget, let alone to begin the subtle psychological adjustment known as identification—the development of that "we" feeling so vital in marriage.

The bride who has not yet begun to identify with her husband feels that she has accompanied a stranger into a strange land. Over and over, she asks herself, "Do I love him? Does he love me? Will we be happy together? Did I really want to get married?" Consider these questions in reverse order:

- The fact is that you are married, that you agreed to the marriage of your own free will, and that you solemnly pledged yourself "for better, for worse." It's childish and self-indulgent now to dwell on the possibility that you made a mistake. Instead of wasting time in idle "might have been" thinking, concentrate on building your marriage "for better."

- You can be happy together, if both are determined to make the marriage succeed. But married happiness is not a blessing conferred by the ceremony: it is a goal toward which you both must work, now and throughout your life together. Your example will largely determine your husband's attitude. It will take time to explore your common interests, to develop a social life pleasing to both, to become accustomed to each other's personal habits and preferences. Ask yourself, not "Am I happy?" but "How can I make my husband happier?" The more you concentrate on the second question, the sooner you can answer "Yes" to the first.

- As for loving each other, evidently you both thought you did, or you would not have decided to marry. No doubt you found in him traits of character and personality which you liked; you discovered interests and tastes in common; you enjoyed his company. If these things were true a few months ago, they are true still, for marriage changes nobody. And such things are the basis of enduring love. Foster them with faith and affection, and it won't be long before you recognize the emotions of your courtship as merely the prelude to the real thing.

Every bride has moments of uncertainty and doubt and introspection. They are a natural reaction to the abrupt transformation in her way of life. But if she allows such moods to continue, it is a sign that the difficulty is largely within herself, and not due to the marriage. She alone can solve the problem. She cannot do it by brooding, or by confiding in her mother, or above all, by telling her husband she's not sure she loves him. But she can do it by getting busy to make her marriage work.

Winning His Praise

SOME husbands show little appreciation of the services their wives perform. These services include the routine household duties of cooking and cleaning, marketing and mending, as well as endless little chores for his pleasure and comfort—a suit picked up at the cleaner's, the newspaper waiting at his favorite chair, a bedtime snack ready in the kitchen. Efficiency in performing routine duties and thoughtfulness in offering extra attentions contribute much of the graciousness to family life, and most wives want to achieve this graciousness. But, too often, they are discouraged in their efforts because their husbands seem to take for granted whatever they do.

True, our research shows that unhappy individuals, married or single, rely far more on praise than do happy persons. But happiness in marriage does not depend on a husband's expressed praise. Nevertheless, women need praise and reminders of affection, for, far more than boys, they became accustomed to such treatment in childhood. Further, a wife's only gauge of her achievement is her husband's reaction. She has no salary raise, or promotion, or bonus, to assure her that her efficiency is increasing, or even that her services are satisfactory.

Some husbands, more perceptive than most, recognize this need and satisfy it—by commenting on a successful dessert, admiring a carefully arranged bowl of flowers, saying "Thank you" for an errand performed. But others, accustomed to the atmosphere of their own jobs, exhibit to their wives the same businesslike detachment they observe at work.

If your husband is like this, it is probably due to lack of understanding rather than to callousness. His early background and his present working environment have not accustomed him to receiving praise, or to giving it. But if you really feel starved for praise, perhaps you can help him acquire the habit of giving it.

- When you perform some little service for him, unasked, point it out to him, and ask his opinion. If you repeat this process often enough, it's likely he will soon comment without prompting.

- Be sure to thank him warmly each time he praises something you have done. He will soon sense how much his approval means to you, and be stimulated to continue.

- Make it a point to praise him. This kind of behavior is contagious; he may pick up the habit.

Though results may be slow in appearing, if you observe this little routine faithfully, he is almost sure to respond in time. But don't expect too much. Men are not accustomed to putting their feelings in words; his smile may express more genuine appreciation than a flowery speech. And don't lose sight of your basic purpose. After all, the main reason why you want to do things for him is not to win his praise but to make him happy.

Are You Impulsive?

Don't answer these questions impulsively! Read them carefully, then think back into the past three years, and answer them just as honestly as you can.

1. Do your moods change very rapidly?
2. Are most of your friends of long standing?
3. Do you overbuy at sales or auctions?
4. Are you almost always punctual?
5. Do you make dates without thinking?
6. Are your purchases usually satisfying to you?
7. Do you often make snap decisions?
8. Is your work usually free from mistakes?
9. Do you now dislike several former friends?
10. Are your health habits uniform and sensible?
11. Can you size up a person at first meeting?
12. Are letters sometimes rewritten before mailing?
13. Do you often wonder what you saw in a person?
14. Do you carefully observe traffic rules?

Since most actions need to be thought through in advance, overreliance on impulse is unwise. All odd-numbered questions should be answered "No," all even-numbered ones "Yes." With a score of 11 or more right, you probably think things through before taking action. If your score is 8 or less, you may be too impulsive—partly explaining any difficulty you experience in getting along with people (or with your spouse).

Do You Agree?

Under the influence of liquor, do people reveal their true selves?

No. Alcohol simply releases the brakes and controls that society has placed upon "jungle" ideas and impulses which are, unhappily, found in all of us.

I got all these pretty notions... ...and change from a $5 bill

...they're made of

Firestone Velon*

Thanks to Firestone Velon plastic film, your housekeeping money goes farther—your household accessories live a prettier, longer, more useful life.

Thanks to Firestone Velon, you have a wide choice of glowing colors and stunning patterns to brighten your home—transparents, opaques, metallics. And the comfort of knowing you can wipe everything, from kitchen curtains to baby pants with just a damp, soapy cloth.

No more washing and ironing heavy tablecloths and blanket bags. Velon shrugs off dirt and moisture—keeps foods and fabrics fresh and clean.

Hundreds of manufacturers have improved their products with Velon plastic film. You can rely on their quality, style and workmanship. Ask for notions made of Velon at variety, drug and department stores.

To be sure that you are getting all the washable, wear-proof, stain- weather- and tear-resistant qualities you need—at the lowest prices—look for the Firestone Velon label on all the plastic film products you buy.

*TRADE MARK © 1950 FIRESTONE PLASTICS COMPANY, POTTSTOWN, PA.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Listen to the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings over NBC

LOOK FOR THE VELON TAG...YOUR ASSURANCE OF FIRST QUALITY MATERIAL

FORMULA FOR FUN

the Sub-Deb * Edited by Maureen Daly

Who Can be a Sub-Deb? Just everybody! And that's why Sub-Deb clubs are fun. You can start a club yourself with anywhere from four to forty members, any group of girls who want something extra-special to do with their time. Get a few gal pals together, discuss with them the good times you can have together as Sub-Debs, and the club is off to a flying start! New members can be added at any time—in fact, in some schools every girl in the class is a club member. There are Sub-Deb clubs, big and little, in every state in the country. There are Sub-Debs in cities the size of Chicago and clubs in small towns like Guntersville, Alabama, and Salem, Illinois. So it doesn't matter where you live. Just remember that "any number can play"—and you can be the one to start things rolling!

Why Have a Club? How would you like to have a square dance on the schedule for this Friday night? Or would you rather be on the guest list for a roller-skating party, with a moonlight wienie roast afterward? Or would a trip into the city for lunch and a show with the girls suit you better? Or a one-night "personality clinic" to analyze smarter clothes, smoother hairdos and all-over grooming ideas for yourself and your friends? Or just an evening of sitting around at a hen party with root beer, a bowl of popcorn and a pile of Frankie Laine recordings? Sounds dreamy, doesn't it? But those are the kind of diary-stuff evenings you just can't have alone. It takes two to make a couple, three to make a crowd and a whole Sub-Deb club to plan and make the kind of fun we're talking about. In high school, it's important to have friends, people you like to both work and play with. And that's why there are Sub-Deb clubs.

What Do Clubs Do? Some clubs are formed just for fun—but most Sub-Debs find they have more fun if they also have some service and community work on the club schedule. Let's pretend we're listening in on your club meeting, five or six months from now. First in the agenda might be a committee report on plans for a Home Team Victory Dance. Or the club might be spending the evening celebrating birthdays of all the members whose Lucky Day fell in the last couple of months. Or this might be a "make-it-yourself" meeting, with everyone working on a sweater, Argyle socks or some bedroom trimmings. Maybe your club will be making plans to do some of the things other clubs have already done. For instance, the Gamma Tau Sub-Deb Club, of Lemay, Missouri, not only cleared $150 at a club-sponsored dance recently, but donated $25 of the money to buy two rocking chairs for the local orphanage. In Salem, Illinois, the Sub-Debs hold an annual Basketball Dinner for the home team, as well as giving frequent Sock Hops at which dancers check their shoes at the door and are charged three cents per inch of foot as admission. The Clinton, Ohio, Sub-Debs hold fashion shows in the school auditorium, and the girls of the BB's Club, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, work part-time as teen-aged nurses' aides, besides sponsoring an open house for the entire junior and senior classes.

When Can We Start? Any time you can get together a group of girls who want to be club members, girls with a lot of enthusiasm and bright ideas. Then go into a huddle to talk over why you think a Sub-Deb club would be a good idea for you, what your general aims will be and whom you can get as a sponsor. (Most clubs have as sponsor either a parent, teacher or older friend who can give advice, act as chaperon for boy-girl affairs and just boost the club along.) At the first meeting, pick one girl to act as temporary president, another for treasurer to keep track of dues (anything from 10 cents to 50 cents a month) and a permanent correspondent who will be faithful in the paper-and-pen department. The club's name is up to you. Call it the Sub-Deb Club, if you like, or dub it something memorable like J.U.G.'s (Just Us Girls), the Debettes or Club Soda—anything that strikes your fancy and will stand for your club alone. In the beginning especially, the permanent correspondent's job is all-important. And that's where we come in!

How Do We Begin? Now that you've made the big decision to form a Sub-Deb club, drop a letter to us here at Sub-Deb Headquarters to have your club enrolled as an official member of the National Sub-Deb Federation. We'll send you a Sub-Deb Club Handbook, complete with a club constitution, plus a lot of fresh ideas to get your group started, and a registration blank. Fill out that blank with the names and addresses of all club members and return it to us. Then watch the mailman for your club's certificate of membership in the National Federation of Sub-Deb Clubs, and individual membership cards to be carried at all times by official members. (The identification cards are in blue and mulberry, and just wallet-sized—you'll love them.)

Your permanent correspondent will receive each month, for the club, a club letter and a copy of the newspaper, The Sub-Deb Scoop, free of charge. Both are full of news of other clubs and special ideas for fun for you. There is no charge for registration or the newspaper. Just drop a letter in the mail to me saying, "We'd like to start a Sub-Deb club ——" and I'll take it from there. The address is Maureen Daly, National Sub-Deb Federation, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Remember, there is fun to go around for everyone—so let's hear from you!

Don't depend on a crystal ball—decide what you want for the future! Modeling, teaching, journalism, nursing, some other career? Let us guide your choice. Send for our free HIGH SCHOOL CAREER series booklet list from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa. We'll tell you everything from how much you'll earn to how to earn it! The list is free!

PHOTO BY MUNKACSI

Tell me, Doctor —PART 9

"I am not sure I am pregnant, Doctor. This one hasn't been like either of my other pregnancies."

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

THE doctor's impression of the patient who had just introduced herself as Mrs. Low might have been summed up in a single sentence: "An elderly woman who has had several children and is again about seven months pregnant—and I'll bet she's mad about it." His greeting, however, was in his usual courteous manner: "I am glad to see you, Mrs. Low. A friend of Mrs. Poe's, I believe."

"That's right, Doctor. I was beginning to get worried about myself, and she said you would know what to do."

"I hope I may be able to help you. What is the nature of your complaint?"

"Why, I should think you'd be able to see that. I've grown so large that I'm very self-conscious about it."

"I don't think the average woman worries much about that, these days," the doctor told her. "We've had so many new babies since the war that it's a common enough sight anywhere."

"But you're talking about young women, doctor, and I'm over forty. Why, I have a son in college—there'll be twenty years' difference between his age and . . . this one."

"That is quite a discrepancy, but I wouldn't worry about it. I am sure you will do very well. Just when did you have your last period, Mrs. Low?"

"It was January fifteenth."

"That should bring your date for confinement to about October twentieth. It seems to me that you are a little late in consulting a doctor—you know we consider prenatal care important nowadays."

"I realize that, but—well, I wasn't entirely sure I was pregnant. This one hasn't acted like either of my other pregnancies."

"In what way has it seemed different?"

"Well—it's a long time ago, but I remember that at seven months they were both very active. This one isn't at all like that."

"But you do feel it move, do you?"

"Oh, yes, I'm sure I do, but faintly."

"There may be some reason for that. Let's see what we can find upon examination."

The doctor appeared to be uncommonly painstaking about that examination, listening long over various areas of the extremely prominent abdomen, first with a stethoscope and then with his ear laid to a towel. There was no question about there being a palpable mass, which he proceeded to manipulate carefully with delicate fingers, concluding with a combined abdominal and vaginal examination.

When he was through, he turned his attention to the patient's breasts, from each of which he was able to express a tiny drop of colorless serum. When that had been accomplished he stood back and said, "H'm!" in a manner that was not so perplexed as his patient interpreted it.

"What is it, Doctor?"

"Are you positive, Mrs. Low, that you have felt life?"

"Why, yes, I think so."

"Recently?"

"Why, yes. Why do you ask?"

"Was it strong?"

"Why, I told you I didn't think it was as strong as with either of the others."

"That's so—you did. Well, I confess that I am unable to find any signs of life at all. I am extremely doubtful as to your being pregnant."

"But I'm positive I felt movements inside, and didn't you just find fluid in my breasts? I always understood that was a sign of pregnancy."

"It could be, but not necessarily in women who have had children."

"What else could cause it?"

"A large tumor of either the uterus or the ovaries."

"But I've told you several times that I have felt life."

"Could it be that you imagined it, Mrs. Low?"

"Indeed, no. I'm not an imaginative person."

"I don't think that you are ordinarily, but this is different."

"I don't understand what you mean, Doctor."

"Mrs. Low, I know this will sound fantastic to you, but I have known a woman to go through the greater part of the time ordinarily allotted to a pregnancy, believing she was pregnant and having all the symptoms which you have mentioned—and more, even including enlargement of the abdomen—when she was not pregnant at all."

"I never heard of anything like that."

"You will find the condition described in any obstetrical text under the title pseudocyesis, or spurious pregnancy."

"And what caused the symptoms?"

"Imagination, mostly—a kind of psychological imagination that in rare instances comes to a woman at a certain period in her life."

"And you think I'm imagining all this—all this big belly of mine?"

"No, I do not. There is no imagination connected with that—it's a reality."

"It's a tumor, then?"

"That's what I think it is—I'm going to find out definitely in a few minutes."

(Continued on Page 242)

Copyright, 1950, by Henry B. Safford, M.D. This is the ninth of a series of articles taken from the book to be published early in 1951 by Renbayle House, Publishers, Inc., New York, N. Y.

Ladies Please Understand

Across the land thousands of independent Stanley Dealers are being invited into 10,000 homes each day to conduct the famous Stanley Hostess Parties. Even so, please remember that more than 20,000,000 housewives are depending upon these parties this year to keep themselves supplied with STANLEY'S QUALITY PLUS Products.

WE ARE constantly receiving letters from women asking how they can be a hostess at a STANLEY Hostess Party, or how they can attend one of these Parties to shop in comfort for STANLEY'S QUALITY PLUS Personal and Household Products. To these and the 20,000,000 other women who depend upon these parties for STANLEY service, we are addressing this message.

The demand for STANLEY QUALITY PLUS Products through STANLEY Hostess Parties is growing so fast that there is real need for new independent STANLEY Dealers in many communities. But these new STANLEY Dealers must be chosen with great care. Each one must be a person of high character, a friendly, reliable, fair-dealing person of the type you are glad to invite into your home.

To such ambitious and hard-working men and women, STANLEY offers exceptional opportunity for an independent, permanent and highly profitable career as a respected merchant in his, or her community. A man or woman who can qualify may work full time, or adjust the work to time available—may work individually, or as husband-and-wife teams. No previous selling experience is necessary, no capital.

If you know of any such man or woman in a "dead end" job, or with time free to add materially to his or her income, you will be doing a service to yourself, to us and to the man or woman in question if you will write his or her name on the coupon below and mail it to us today. Your cooperation will be very deeply appreciated.

Originators of the Famous Stanley Hostess Party Plan

STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS, Inc.

WESTFIELD, MASS.

Factories in Easthampton, Mass., and London, Ontario

STANHOME — A STANLEY HOME PRODUCT

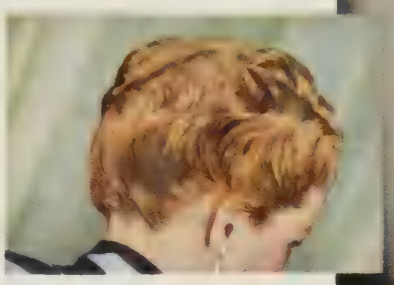
Fill out and mail us this coupon

STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS, Inc.
Dept. 7-J, Westfield, Mass.

NAME OF PERSON YOU SUGGEST .....

.....

STREET .....



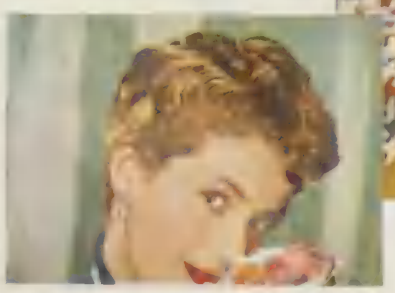
CITY ..... ZONE ..... STATE .....

If you will permit us to use your name in writing the above person, sign your own name here .....

.....

Now your hair can look "Vitally Alive"

PRELL leaves it so Radiant, Soft, Smooth—Younger-Looking!



So radiant . . .
so "VITALLY ALIVE"!

Prell leaves hair more radiant than cream or soap shampoo, in hardest water! After Prell hair actually looks younger and more "alive," because Prell's patented cleansing ingredient gives free rinsing action — leaves no dulling film.

So full of "spring" . . .
so "VITALLY ALIVE"!

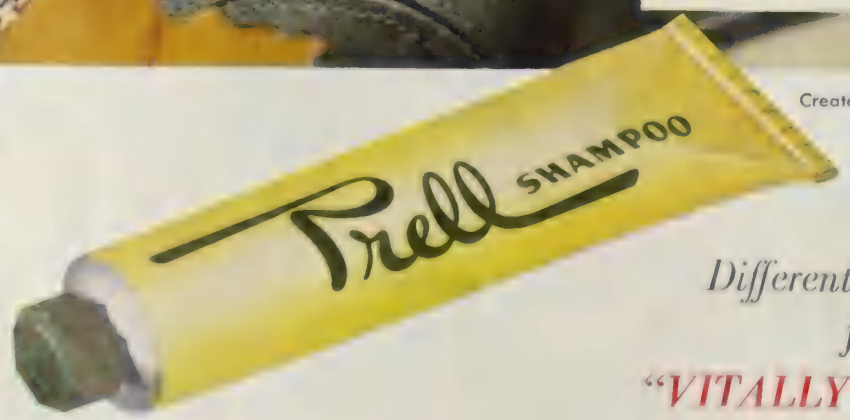
Prell leaves your hair easier to curl and to set in flattering styles. Hair is softer, more manageable—combs out smoothly, beautifully—looks so "alive"!



So youthful-looking . . .
so "VITALLY ALIVE"!

Hair that seems dull and lifeless perks up after a Prell Shampoo . . . it has that vibrant, vital sparkle that looks so much more "alive" and youthful. Try different, wonderful Prell today—you'll love it!

Life is more wonderful when you look wonderful! When everything about you expresses lovely, radiant vitality—there's happiness ahead!

Created by Procter & Gamble

Different! Emerald-clear for that
"VITALLY ALIVE" LOOK!

Journal about Town

Gossip about people you know, editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

IN October, 1900, blind, deaf and mute Helen Keller entered Radcliffe College. The first telegram was sent between Alaska and Seattle, Washington; total time: seven hours. Gov. Teddy Roosevelt was bombarded with eggs by some "hoodlum Democrats" at Elmira, New York, and the Cornelius Vanderbilts rented a mansion in N.Y.C. for the winter season for $50,000.

On the editorial page of the October, 1900, JOURNAL, Editor Bok assails the "atrocious bad taste of Pullman cars," with their "yards of red plush, lambrequins, bronze mirrors and tasseled fringes."

JOURNAL blueprints for A Georgian House for $7000 include parlor, cypress-paneled dining room, a library, sewing room, six bedrooms and two baths.

Prevailing Etiquette for Young Men: "In summer suits of blue flannel or serge are worn, with russet shoes, straw hats and fancy linen waistcoats. For church the well-dressed young man wears a frock coat and high hat."

Menus for the Woman Who Lives Alone: "A sirloin steak will cost twenty-five cents and should make three meals."

"If a young man should meet a lady while he is smoking, he of course throws away his cigar or cigarette before addressing her."

"Simplicity of speech is the fashion. A gentleman speaks of his yacht as his 'boat,' and asks you to go 'sailing' with him, never 'yachting.'"

More Etiquette: "A man never shakes hands when presented to a woman. Naturally he never speaks of a married woman except as 'Mrs.'"

ERNEST LEFEVER

Biggest European attraction for most American visitors: people.

THE largest category of American travelers abroad this year has been housewives; the next largest, students. Our informant: A man we know in the Travel Development section of ECA in Paris, on a flying visit home, who stopped in to see us at the Workshop just as we were going to press. One of his projects, he said, as aide to Col. Theodore J. Pozzy, chief of the section, was to poll travelers on their fields of interest abroad; his list being scenery, architecture, museums, theaters, music and night life, whose popularity was polling in just about that order—until a high-school girl from Des Moines pointed out to him that his list failed to include what was for her and all her friends by far the most important field of interest in Europe. He asked her what that could be, and she said "People," so he put "people" on his list, went on polling, and sure enough, "people" at the finish came way out on top. Also told us American travel abroad is the single largest dollar-earner in Marshall Plan countries, which led us to ask him what most people bought to bring back home from abroad. "Wish I could surprise you," he said, "but it's French perfume."

The Goulds were having dinner with Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt at the two famous actors' little town house just after the house had been most handsomely finished from top to bottom (including the kitchen which you'll see on Pages 68 and 69 in this issue), when Mr. Lunt suddenly looked about him and sighed. "We no sooner get ourselves all wonderfully fixed up here than we have to leave it: all fall and winter on tour with I Know My Love; then to London with it in the spring; and out to our Wisconsin farm next summer to rest. Why, it will be more than a year before we'll be able to really start living here." Mrs. Gould asked why they didn't let one of their good friends have it for the year. "Well," said Miss Fontanne, "it would have to be someone house-proud, like us, and the only really house-proud person we know is Edna Ferber—and she already has a house."

Helen and George Papashvily, whose enchanting and hilarious Anything Can Happen was a best seller a few years back, came in to lunch with Laura Lou Brookman the other day and talked over arrangements for publishing parts of their new book, Thanks to Noah, in the JOURNAL. A large woman herself, Helen was telling Laura Lou about meeting in Sarasota last winter the fat lady of the Ringling Brothers' Circus, with whom she discussed diets; then, moving along to clothes, Helen said she asked the fat lady what size dresses she wore. "Well," the fat lady said, "I generally wear a fifty-four—but in a good dress, a fifty-two."*

A recent survey showed that 82 per cent of the men questioned help with the dishes; 35 per cent demand hot water; 46 per cent prefer the dishcloth as the washing tool; 19 per cent feel they are smarter than their wives; 46 per cent had no suggestions for improving dish-washing techniques—and 3.3 per cent prescribed their wives as the best laborsavers.

If you liked The Search and The Men, two pictures more adult than many, we think you will like Teresa, too, when it comes out this fall—the same director, Fred Zinnemann, did them all. We know we very much liked the two young people who play the leads, the day they visited the Workshop: Pier Angeli, a pretty little Italian girl of eighteen, and John Ericson, who plays a returning GI in the movie, with Pier as his Italian bride. On their way through one of the kitchens here, they spied the very same kind of pressure cooker for which John, in the movie, had been a somewhat troubled salesman. "Just how do they work?" he asked Margaret Davidson. Margaret showed him; but Pier was so much more fascinated than he that when she left she had the cooker—packed up for Italy.

MORRIS ENGEL

Movie star Ericson finds out about pressure cookers.

Some time ago a friend of ours with a six-year-old at the Walt Whitman School, uptown, told us of a movie that was being made at the school in which her child was taking part. Had to do with the attitudes and emotions of youngsters at the advent of new babies in the family; and from what this particular parent was able to gather from her daughter's description of the discussions that took place during the filming, these attitudes and emotions were widely varied, as to both the process of birth and the feelings aroused by new arrivals. All of which was confirmed the other day when, through the kindness of Eddie Albert, the actor, who produced this educational color film that he calls Human Beginnings, we saw the picture—directed with real understanding, and done with great naturalness of dialogue and acting, in the schoolroom scene especially, where we were happy to see our friend's daughter put on a splendid performance.

"And an egg inside the mother——"

In the June JOURNAL, Lillian Gould (no relation to the editors), a housewife and mother, wrote that the only women who can find happiness as housewives are "women with the I.Q. of a moron, the disposition of a cow, a vacuum where most people have a brain, and a vocabulary consisting of two words, 'Yes, darling!'" So far, 340 women have written in to say "Nuts to Lillian Gould"—and the letters are still coming in; not only from the U. S. but from Canada, Cuba, England and Germany as well. The editors don't agree with her either.

. . . and he bent over me so that I don't know or remember what or how . . .

Sometimes it's the sweet aching hurt of moonlight that turns a girl into a woman

The Journal Presents
POLLY TOLAND
FIRST APPEARANCE IN ANY MAGAZINE

ONCE UPO A BEGINNI

by Polly Toland

WHEN I came home from the movies, I went up to my room and locked the door. I got out my diary and wrote in it:

From now on I will not ask any more if I am grown up because I won't have to. Tonight I found out that other people can't tell me, that I have to know for myself. It was childish of me to have asked them and I KNOW I'm not a child any more. The Virginian (and then I crossed that out because I didn't think that The Virginian was an adult example, and changed it to) Elaine of Astolot died of love. I am beginning to understand how and why it could happen.

I put the diary back behind the books on the second shelf and hid the key. Patricia was typing away in the next room; the clatter was very unsympathetic. I wanted to let my hurt soul hurt. If mother had not been downstairs, I would have gone out to walk in the garden or sit on the Big Rock, but it would have been dreadful to run into her carrying bowls of high-grade horse meat to the dogs. She'd have asked me where I was going "at this time of night!" People don't like to talk about what is nearest to their hearts, not under that kind of circumstance.

I put on my best visiting nightgown, turned out the light, and went to sit on my window sill. Moonlight does hurt. Without wanting to or even thinking about it I began to cry, just tears at first and then those big, lifting-shaking sobs. It felt just right to be sitting above a moon-white garden, in one's very best nightgown, crying, on the night one knew one had grown up.

After a while Patty stopped typing and I could tell that she was listening. She started again, stopped, then a moment or two later knocked on my door and asked was I crying? I wanted to be left alone, so I didn't even bother to answer. She tried the door again, called "Sheila?" and then said loudly, "Well, I don't care, you can be certain of that. I was just trying to be nice. Go ahead and cry your eyes out if you want to!" And then she went back to her room and slammed the door. She was trying to be kind, and I knew it, so I started crying all over again, but this time not because of the moonlight and the garden but because people (like families) who love you in such

(Continued on Page 275)

summer night

By BROOKE HANLON

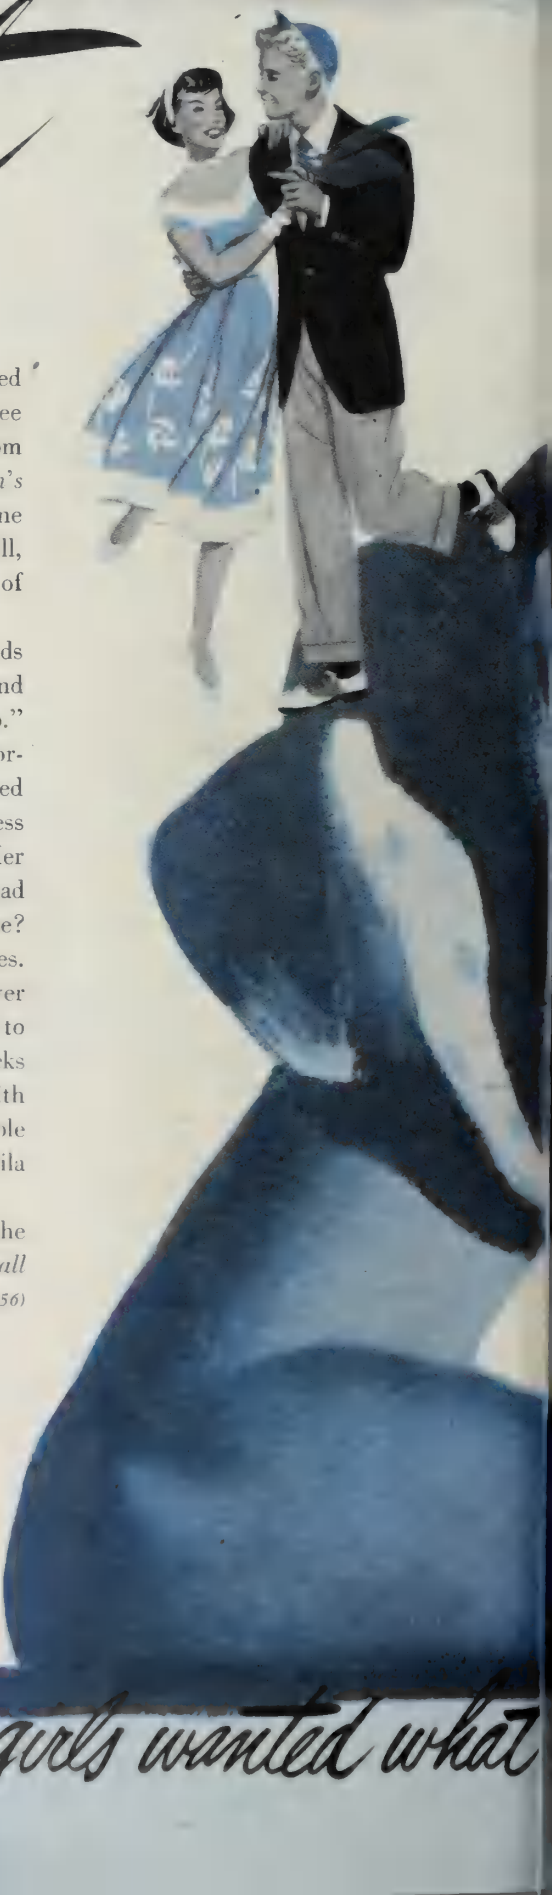
TIM and Myra Weston had been in the Shroon Hill house ten days, and contentment was something for Myra to touch now, moving to straighten a picture, kneeling to unpack the last of her record albums.

It was the American feel of this suburb of an Eastern city that had her biting back runaway smiles, of course. She and Tim had been abroad with their daughter Cathy ever since the end of the European war. Their three years on the Continent had been followed by nearly two years in London, and happiness had rather bowled them over when Tim's transfer back to the States had come through.

A lot of the happiness was centered about sixteen-year-old Cathy. She'd been out of the country from age eleven to going on seventeen. It was high time she learned how to be an American girl again, the Westons felt.

Myra didn't touch the stacks of records, after all, but merely knelt frowning in front of them. There was a shadow on her happiness, and the shadow was Cathy. It hadn't exactly been a home-coming for the Westons' daughter. "Here in America," the child was saying uncertainly. She was prowling about the house much the way she had prowled on the boat, trying to escape from something. Head too high and eyes too bright, she was trying to hide from her parents the extent of her homesickness for London.

Sixteen, and cut off from her friends. Myra revolved the thought helplessly. She went to a window to see whether her daughter might be coming back from one of her lonely walks. If only Muriel Shannon's young Peggy were back from her visit. Myra had one good friend and former schoolmate in Shroon Hill, but her daughter, just Cathy's age, had been out of town ever since the close of school.



Cathy was back then. She was standing with hands thrust into the pockets of her new dungarees and practicing new American words. "Snazzy. Bang-up." In spite of all Cathy could do, the words had a forlorn sound. She sat down at the piano and touched a few chords and she looked thin and defenseless against the long windows. "Oh, mother ——" Her arms crashed to the keyboard suddenly and her head went down on them. "Will the mailman never come? Oh—sorry." She was up, dashing tears from her eyes.

"You've had letters from both Sheila and Oliver this week." Myra said it gently. It wasn't hard to guess that Cathy was missing the young Murdocks most of all. The Westons had shared a flat with widowed Helen Murdock and her two young people during their first year in London. Oliver and Sheila had become like brother and sister to Cathy.

Just wait, darling—Myra moved to answer the phone with her eyes shadowed—there'll be football games and school dances. (Continued on Page 256)

America was a lot of things, Cathy thought uncertainly. It was a girl marooned in a car with a boy who had passed out. it was moon-washed fields and her-self saying, "Link's the nicest boy in America."

Cathy thought all girls wanted what

ILLUSTRATED BY

she'd found—but she couldn't want it herself

"We and I are cleaning it so our mother can live here,"
the twins explained.

The house was a dream—until you tried to live in it.

DESPERATE COUPLE

By DWIGHT HUTCHISON

"DONOGHUE," Trudy Page called. "Let me in. Anthony—Anthony Page, let me in."

Giggles. Identical giggles even.

"Anthony . . . Donoghue, open this door." She rattled the handle angrily and off it came in her hand—the third handle to break this spring!

The door slowly opened. "We and I were just playing lock the door." Then they saw the handle. "You shouldn't do that," they told her sternly, in absurd imitation. "Daddy said we were not to pull the handles off the doors."

Daddy and King What's-his-name, she thought angrily. Telling the tide to stop rising. This horrid little house was falling apart so fast nothing would stop it. Last Saturday they had the Dennison Scotts for dinner. Trudy had hated to have to invite them there for dinner anyway, the Scotts lived in such proud perfection. She planned a superlative meal with that shrimp dish she got in New Orleans and wild rice and lime soufflé with six eggs, and she splurged on flowers to hide the leaks on the west wall. Clean slip covers and a new lamp shade—all the things you kill yourself doing and men never notice. And then, five minutes after they arrived, Dennison went in to wash his hands and crash, bang, the washbasin fell out of the wall, the pipes twisting and water pouring onto the floor.

"How can I ever face the Scotts again!" she wailed to Bill after the guests had left. "I never was so embarrassed in all my life"—studying her soaked slippers.

"They were good sports," Bill protested. "It sort of . . . broke the ice. Dennison reciting, Aprês moi le dêluge. Lydia mopping it up." He imitated Lydia's two-fingered patting and laughed.

"With my best dark-blue guest towels. 'What dandy dinner parties the Pages have,'" she said with bitter sarcasm. "'Do come to dinner and see the plumbing drop out. Watch the ceiling fall in the soup. Never a dull moment at the Pages'.' I will never"—she shook her head with conviction—"I will never invite another person to dinner in this house."

"But, hon, what can we do?" Bill's eyebrows lifted and his forehead wrinkled exactly like the boys' when they were being scolded, but she wouldn't soften.

"We can find another house."

"We've tried."

"Not hard enough. This place is driving me nuts. Today the back door wouldn't close from the inside. I had to close it from the outside and go around the house and in the front door every time I went out. Every single thing in the kitchen is in the wrong place or opens the wrong way or doesn't work. You don't know how hard it is to do anything at all." Of course men don't appreciate how a kitchen like that can get you down. She was much too cross with the twins lately and snappy at Bill evenings. "Anyone—I mean any two—smart enough to produce two such boys ought to be smart enough to find a decent house to live in. 'Foxes have lairs,'" she recited dramatically, "'but the Sons of man hath ——'"

"Holes," he corrected. Bill's father was a minister. "Foxes have holes."

"No such holes as this is," she muttered bitterly. "No coat closet, no linen closet.

(Continued on Page 123)

HOW COULD I KNOW?

By ANNE HOMER WARNER

She didn't know the past haunted her until she looked it full in the face.

GENERALLY, as soon as Jim had left, Linda started in on the dishes and dusting. But today she went back to the dining alcove, poured a third cup of coffee, and tried to think out what had happened. The cream was in a round yellow jug that she'd picked up at an auction because she couldn't resist it; the coffee was in a big gleaming percolator that had been a wedding present two years ago. Both of these were familiar trappings, concrete and reassuring. But on the table, also, was the clipping which Jim had torn from the paper that morning: "Just in case you forget where they're staying."

Now she picked it up and glanced at it again. "Among recent arrivals at the Barberry House are Mr. and Mrs. Philip Garfield Ransom of New York." That was all it said. But somehow she had committed herself, and promised Jim she would ask them to dinner. Now she tried, in a confused, disjointed way, to recall that conversation. "Say, honey, this isn't the Ransom you used to know?" . . . "Yes—yes, it is." . . . "Do you suppose you could ask them over? If I could land a contract ——"

The new development Phil Ransom was promoting, Jim's electrical-contracting business, a nice family dinner—all of it fitted together so neatly!

The third cup of coffee was cool and stalish; and Linda saw that she had wadded the newspaper clipping into a tight little ball. Half mechanically she began clearing off the table, scraping dishes, rinsing them under the clear hot water. But all the time she was wondering how much Phil remembered, and how much it had meant to him. For during that summer on Cape Cod the little blue sailboat had been like a home to them, they'd loved it so. And at night the wind would blow across the sand dunes, and the moon would be half hidden by clouds. She could even recall the things he had said to her, over and over in a low, urgent voice:

"Linda, we belong together. We were made for each other. You know that, don't you?"

And always she would whisper, above the thudding of her heart, "Yes, darling. Yes, Phil."

Now she sighed, rested her forehead against a pane of glass, and watched the dry leaves swirling over the ground. All that had happened four years ago. Philip Ransom was sophisticated; he wouldn't think it at all strange if she phoned him. But of course she would have to see his wife, too, Lorraine Gray—the girl who, all this time, had been just a picture in a newspaper column, lovely, expressionless, daughter of Winthrop Gray, steel magnate, engaged to be married to Philip Garfield Ransom, also of New York.

The picture had seemed to leap out at her, but the names and details had been blurred by panicky tears. Because it just wasn't possible! He'd told her so many times that he loved her, that they belonged together, that (Continued on Page 247)

What was it Phil had said? "You're the loveliest thing that ever happened to me."

ILLUSTRATED BY WALTER M. BAUMHOFER

PHOTOS BY STUART

MENU

Shrimp Casserole
Lettuce-and-Cucumber Salad
Italian Bread
Greengage Plums
Crackers and Cheese

"My husband and I like this exotic-flavored shrimp dish and serve it often, because you just put the ingredients into a casserole, and forget it for about an hour and a half. On the other hand, if your guests are late, it can stay in the oven another hour with no harm done.

"This is a favorite party menu of ours, and I'm giving the recipe in party quantity—to serve six.

"First, shell and clean 2 pounds raw shrimp (or you can use frozen or canned shrimp, if you want it to be really easy). Brown ⅓ cup finely chopped onion in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine with 1 or 2 minced garlic cloves. Into a casserole put the onion and garlic, the shrimp, 1 cup raw rice, 1 large can tomatoes, and 2 cups chicken boullion or canned consommé. The seasonings are the trick here, and remove this dish completely from the realms of the mundane, we think. Add a small piece of bay leaf, 3 tablespoons chopped parsley, ½ teaspoon cloves, ½ teaspoon marjoram, 1 teaspoon chili powder, dash of cayenne, 1 tablespoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Cover tightly and bake 1½ hours in a moderate oven, 350° F.

"Serve with a tossed salad of lettuce and cucumber slices with the green rind left on, buttered chunks of Italian bread; coffee, greengage plums with cheese."

Betty Hoffman

our own young marrieds

In this series' second article, a plan for meals that are easy to prepare and, above all, good.

Betty and Bob Hoffman

ALAN BRADY

Dawn and Bob Norman

HERB KRATOVIL

Betty and John Gray

HERB KRATOVIL

Elizabeth and Dan Hoffman

HERB SHEPHERD

Polly and Todd Cooke

HERB SHEPHERD

NONE of us was ever as dazzled about the business of cooking as one bride who called her husband out to the kitchen—"Look, darling, our first ice cubes!" but we all were faced in the beginning with the same practical problem to solve: how could we schedule our limited time to produce quick, easy meals, with no sacrifice of our standards for good food, which are high? The answer for us all, it seems, is a rule of thumb for menus that goes like this: one hearty hot main dish, a big tossed green salad, a simple dessert of fruit—apples, grapes, pears, any kind—frequently with cheese.

As you can see from the menus above and on the opposite page, we have learned to rely on casserole dishes because they're an easy, inexpensive way to gourmet results, adapt best to an unexpected two or three to dinner, can survive beautifully that waiting period while a few guests linger in the living room.

We've learned that it's a good idea to have a repertoire of dishes based on foods like corned beef, tuna, cleaned and frozen shrimp, that are precooked, may be bought in small quantities, and lend themselves perfectly to casserole combinations (the shrimp recipe above and the corned-beef one across the way are teacher's pets). But we don't hesitate to experiment occasionally with larger items like a small loin of pork or a roasting chicken just because there are only two to feed, and welcome rather than despair over the leftovers; they can be transformed economically into dishes delicious enough to stand on their own (like Betty Gray's chicken-and-broccoli recipe on the opposite page, for instance) and lighten our dinner-cooking chores for at least a day or two after their original debut.

Canned cream soups and consommés make an easy, flavorful, short-cut base for many a good dish, and we substitute them whenever we can where a recipe calls for cream sauce or beef stock.

We've found that the know-how about herbs, once mastered, is invaluable—and that it either should be committed to memory, or pasted in a prominent place on the kitchen wall. Most of us keep on hand small tightly sealed jars of the four basics—basil, marjoram, orégano and thyme. As for garlic—we all consider it the easiest way to make a simple dish into something special; in fact, we appreciate its subtle flavoring properties so much that we're sorry for people who don't (or think they don't).

Most important thing of all, we've had to figure out short cuts in our cooking plans, such as making a recipe in double quantity, and freezing half. (We have found that a refrigerator's ice-tray compartments are fine for this if there is no special frozen-food unit.) Such as baking casseroles for two days at once, so that every other evening will be comparatively free. Such as cooking vegetables like string beans or asparagus in twice the quantity and marinating half in French dressing for the next day's salad. As, setting aside one week-end morning to do the heavy cooking for the week. As, making the weekly shopping list as long as the refrigerator will hold, so that fresh vegetables and salad greens are the only items to buy from the markets that stay open late, on the way home from the office. The yield from these short cuts is the time saved. But the main point here is that whatever the plan, each of us has found for herself a plan that works.

MENU

Veal Sauté
Stuffed Potatoes
Tomato Wedges
Water-Cress Salad
Cherries Jubilee

"Veal sauté in garlic and butter or margarine sauce is a delicious dish, and the cooking of it seems over almost before it has begun. If there is an Italian butcher in the neighborhood, it's a good idea to go to him for the veal. He'll understand perfectly what's wanted. Rub ¼ pound of thin slices of veal scallopini on both sides with a cut piece of garlic, sprinkle with 1 teaspoon salt and some pepper, dust with about 1 tablespoon flour. Sauté in ¼ cup butter or margarine in frying pan for 1½ minutes on one side, turn over and cook for approximately 2 minutes, gradually lowering heat. Add ½ cup hot water and loosen brown bits in the bottom of the pan. Simmer together a few minutes until sauce has thickened. That's all there is to it.

"As for the stuffed potatoes, they go into the oven as soon as we get home, bake for an hour. Then they are split in half, lengthwise, and the insides spooned out into a bowl. Mash with a lump of butter or margarine (we like lots!), 3 to 4 tablespoons cream, 1 tablespoon chopped chives, ½ teaspoon salt and a dash of red pepper. Whip until fluffy. Reseason to taste, return to shells, cover each half with 1 tablespoon grated sharp Cheddar cheese, and return to oven till cheese is melted. When time is especially limited, we serve plain baked potatoes instead, but the stuffed ones are so delicious they're worth the time they take, we think.

"To make the Cherries Jubilee, drain ¾ cup juice from ½ can pitted Bing cherries, and place in saucepan over low heat. When hot, add juice of ½ lemon (1½ tablespoons), and cherries. Stir for a moment and remove from heat. Pour hot over vanilla ice cream."

Dawn Norman

MENU

Chicken-and-Broccoli Casserole
Green Salad
Poppyseed Rolls
Baked Pears with Orange-Marmalade Sauce

"This chicken dish is the easiest thing in the world to make, and although it's an excellent way to transform leftover chicken, my husband and I like it just as much when it's made with canned cooked chicken. You start with a can of condensed cream-of-chicken soup, thin it with ½ cup light cream, add ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon dry mustard and a dash of pepper. When this sauce is thoroughly heated, add about ¼ pound cooked chicken (sometimes we get it from the delicatessen) or a small can of boned chicken. Cook 1 package frozen or ½ bunch broccoli in salted water, drain. Arrange in two shallow casseroles, pour sauce over it, sprinkle the top with grated Parmesan cheese, put under broiler for 3–5 minutes, till it's bubbly and brown. (We like to serve the chicken and broccoli in individual casseroles like these copper ones because it looks prettiest, and cuts down on dishwashing afterward.)

"With this, a mixed green salad, poppyseed rolls, pears baked with orange marmalade for dessert. Here's the recipe for the baked pears: Drain 1 can pears and place pears in a shallow baking dish. Simmer the sirup from the pears with 4 cloves, 1″ stick cinnamon, 4 slices lemon, 2 tablespoons sugar and ⅓ cup orange marmalade for 10 minutes, pour over pears. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 20 minutes. This dessert is really easy, and so good with the chicken and broccoli dish—it has a very piquant flavor.

"This menu is equally good for small parties or dinner for two at home. The chicken casseroles take me about 20 minutes from start to finish."

Betty Gray

MENU

Corned-Beef Casserole
Green Salad
Italian Bread
Fresh Apples—Cheese

"I rarely cook anything but casseroles—and, since many of them improve immeasurably with a day or two's stopover in the refrigerator, I like to do as many as two or three at once, early in the week, and have the remaining evenings fairly free. I freeze the extras if we plan to keep them for any length of time. It's nice to think that you have a bankful of dinners at your command. (I've found that it's a good trick, sometimes, when refrigerator space is crowded, to bake my casseroles in small shallow baking dishes that fit into the ice compartments in my refrigerator and can be heated up when we're ready to use them.

"A favorite casserole of ours involves a can of corned beef (pantry shelf), 4 or 5 potatoes (staples), and a package of frozen Brussels sprouts. Quarter the potatoes and boil until tender, then pile potatoes, thick slices corned beef cut in half, and thawed Brussels sprouts into a shallow casserole. Sprinkle with ½ teaspoon salt, a dash of pepper, a little marjoram, thyme, and 1 cup beef or chicken bouillon or consommé. Bake, covered, in a moderate oven, 350° F., for half an hour.

"This is a hearty dish, especially good the next day, and we always have its ingredients on hand in case we have an unexpected crowd for dinner. With it, we like garlic-buttered Italian bread, a salad of Boston lettuce, chicory and tomato quarters, and fresh apples with Gruyère or Camembert and crackers for dessert. I think the homespun, country types of table accessories look best for serving this meal. We usually use a heavy-woven linen tablecloth, pottery casserole like the blue one here, heavy pottery dinner plates."

Elizabeth McFarland Hoffman

MENU

Poached Finnan Haddie
French Bread with Chives
Asparagus Salad
Grapes and Orange Sections

"I do all my shopping Saturday morning, having made out the next week's menus the evening before. And if, for instance, I expect guests on Wednesday, I like to do the cooking on Saturday morning, after the groceries are put away, for the joy of cooking for me is the cooking itself, and I don't like to rush with works of art. (If a stew should take four hours, I give it four Saturday hours, and glad to.) The means to all this is my refrigerator freezer. The fruit of Saturday's labors is stowed away in the freezer and forgotten until the day it is needed, when I take it out in the morning to unthaw by the time I come home from work.

"This poached-finnan-haddie dish is a great favorite of ours, and we came upon it accidentally, as we were walking through Philadelphia's Reading Terminal Market. Remembering Dickens and his solid English breakfasts eaten to the tune of appetite and salt air, we bought ¾ pounds, and have loved it ever since. Here's how it's done: Soak the finnan haddie in warm water to cover for ½ hour, skin side down. Drain. Place the ¾ pound finnan haddie in a shallow greased casserole and cover with 1 cup hot milk. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for about 40 minutes. Baste the fish with milk occasionally. The liquid will whey, but don't become distressed. Extra milk may be added if milk cooks away. Serve the finnan haddie with a generous amount of melted butter or margarine and a little lemon juice, and lots of chopped parsley or water cress on top.

"We serve asparagus salad with this, with French dressing or vinaigrette sauce, bread spread with butter or margarine and salted chives, and a dessert of small seedless grapes mixed with cut sections of fresh oranges. N. B. We're very pleased, by the way, with our beautiful, soft blue dime-store dinner and salad plates shown in the picture; think them quite a find."

Polly Toland Cooke

MYRON EHRENBERG

"I decided to go back to Chester and look at the house where I was borned. In those alleys I was shaped with all my character, faults and good points."

"HIS EYE IS ON

"It's been such a hard, long road I traveled. I came up from so low down. Others who read what I've done may be encouraged. I want them to say 'If Ethel Waters, a colored woman, could do that, I can too.'"

Ethel Waters, "a thin-structured child with a pretty face," had been married, separated and was on her own at 13.

By ETHEL WATERS

as told to Charles Samuels

Editor's note: Ethel Waters is an artist, and her conquering of poverty, injustice and squalor is a great and heartening story. But so long as there are slums and injustice and squalor, there will be many who will not survive and triumph as Ethel Waters has done, but will go down into the mire of disease, delinquency and crime to become a heavy burden on our society. . . . In this issue (page 23) the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL prints an article on slum homes in the Miami, Florida, area which describes conditions of filth and overcrowding equivalent to those in which Ethel Waters grew up a generation ago.

I NEVER was a child. I never was coddled, or liked, or understood by my family, I never felt I belonged.

I was born out of wedlock, but that had nothing to do with all this. To people like mine, a thing like that just didn't mean much.

Nobody brought me up. I just ran wild as a little girl. I was bad, always a leader of the street gang in stealing and general hell-raising. By the time I was seven, I knew all that there was to know about sex and could outcurse any stevedore, and took a sadistic pleasure in shocking people.

Copyright 1950, by Charles Samuels and Ethel Waters. This is taken from the book soon to be published by Doubleday & Co.

MYRON EHRENBERG

"It's been an ache and a joy both to look over this big shoulder of mine at all my yesterdays. There are no regrets . . . only thanksgiving to the Lord."

THE SPARROW"

My mixed blood explains this partly, I think. My maternal great-grandfather was Albert Harris, a native of India. My great-grandmother was a slave, but very fair, and Albert Harris had to buy her from her owner before he could marry her. That made their five children freeborn, according to the law.

His daughter, Sarah Harris, was my grandmother. When she was eleven a white family that had taken a fancy to her wanted to bring her north, into Pennsylvania, and put her into service there. But the law then read that no person of Negro blood could be taken out of Maryland until he proved himself intelligent and competent. So these white people sent my grandmother to a school and for a whole year paid for her instruction. She passed all the tests, and was taken to Pennsylvania.

When she was only thirteen she married my grandfather, Louis Anderson, who was nicknamed Honey.

Three children were born of this marriage: Viola, Charlie and Louise, my mother. But Honey Anderson was a hard drinker, and he and my grandmother separated when the children were small. From that time on the entire burden of taking care of the three children fell on Sally Anderson. In the years that followed she had romances with various men, and had another child by one of them. This was Edith, nicknamed Ching.

My grandmother was anything but promiscuous. She was hard-working and honest, liked her little nip now and then, but hated drunkenness. She had a fiery temper and there was a terrible pride in her. She wouldn't ask or accept favors from anyone. I am proud of being her granddaughter.

All her life she was puzzled by the four children she had brought into the world. Sally was intelligent but, except for Ching, her children were of the slow-thinking, dumb-animal type. Ching was the brilliant one and had silky hair and copper-colored skin. She was about five feet tall, attractive, and had lots of life and laughter in her. All my life I've dreaded being around people who can't laugh. But I could laugh with Ching always, and have a good time with her.

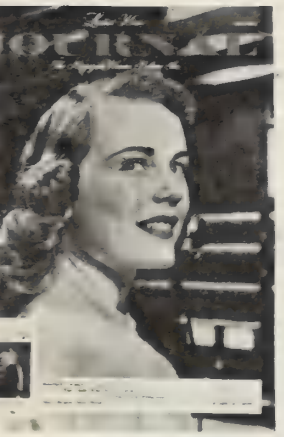
Vi was agitative. She could sing beautifully, like all the women in my family. But she had an insane temper. All the women in my family had tempers too. (Continued on Page 161)

MITCHELL

"They called me Sweet Mama Stringbean because I was so scrawny and tall." In Africana (above) Miss Waters was star.

Barbara Bailey

is the first of our Undiscovered American Beauties to have appeared on a JOURNAL cover. Now, happily dividing her time between keeping house for her new husband and working in an office, Barbara prefers a hair-do which can be quickly, easily and consistently well groomed. Her college-length hair has been trimmed and shaped to this fall's halfway mark. A simple setting of curls rolled toward the face (crown smooth) can be brushed into this up-and-away-from-the-face arrangement.



HAIR DESIGNS BY MICHEL

This fall, hair is longer than short — shorter than long. A halfway mark that enables you — like our JOURNAL cover girls — to combine simplicity with imagination. If you like to keep up with the news, brush the little wisps and half-bangs away from your face as a first step toward

Fall's new look for beauties

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN, Beauty Editor of the Journal

Nancy Davies

believes any girl fortunate enough to have been born with an exquisite shade of hair should underplay its arrangement. If it's the color of your hair that counts, don't overdo a good thing by allowing it to hang in a careless mane— or cheat your would-be admirers by cropping it all off! Nancy's large picture shows how a serene, middle-length arrangement is a perfect foil for bringing out the brilliant copper high lights of her hair. She has a center part, smooth crown and sides, simple curls in back. The dark velvet bows, graduated in size, are purposely planned to follow the line of this new fall hair-do – and to emphasize its lovely color.

Geraldine Dent

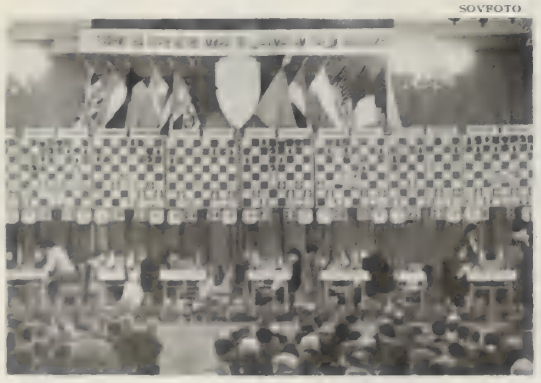
is the Undiscovered American Beauty who spilled a bag of groceries, made a JOURNAL cover and turned to modeling as a result. In one morning, as a fashion model, Geraldine may be photographed in anything from a ski suit to a bouffant gown. This means her hair must be basically simple, becoming, and adaptable to change on a moment's notice. Here she wears a short hair-do with a side part, smooth crown and barely upturned ends. For her afternoon suit she adds two tiny bows. For a tailored look her hair can be quickly turned under into a smooth page-boy, and (for any bouffant gown) veiling, flowers or jeweled pins can be prettily arranged for an evening of fun.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Sally Fraser

whose soprano voice is as pretty as she is, must keep her hair long for future concert and stage appearances. Her shoulder-length hair can be wound into braids, twisted into a chignon, brushed into an upsweep, depending upon the part she is to play. But Sally's personal preference is for a refreshing, natural look suitable to any teen-ager and liked by any teen-ager's beau. In the large picture her immaculate hair wings away from a center part and is caught just above and in back of her ears with bobby pins. The ends are set in large, loose pin curls so that they can be combed under into a soft page-boy. Three tiny rhinestone star-pins add evening high lights.

DRESS BY EMILY WILKENS



"I WENT TO MOS

Russians, with more coaches in tournament (Mrs. Gresser had none), seemed "simple and childlike despite their intricate chess," but took top honors.

Her husband disapproved. Her friends were horrified. And not even the Russians could predict the strange consequences of a trip to Russia.

By GISELA KAHN GRESSER

SOVFOTO

Tournament or clinic? "I could get warm only in bed."

LAST year the Soviet Chess Committee offered to hold an international women's tournament in Moscow in December, and the offer was accepted by FIDE (Federation Internationale Des Echecs). The winner of the tournament would become the new world's champion, succeeding Vera Menchik Stevenson, killed in an air raid.

In Russia, chess is more than a national sport: it is respected as an art, taught in the schools, and encouraged and subsidized by the government. Four Soviet women, two Americans and the champions of each of ten other countries were invited to compete. As co-champion of the U.S., I was one of two Americans invited to participate.

When my invitation arrived, I wrote to our State Department to inquire whether there was any objection to my going. I received the prompt reply that there was none. But the reactions of my husband and friends were different. They suggested so many possible pitfalls and perils on the way that I felt if I survived the expedition to Moscow, I should be as happy as Napoleon might have been had he won and not retreated.

Nevertheless, I decided to go. I had long been curious about that controversial country; and as I am a nervous and timid sort of person, I felt that this trip would be just the thing to counteract my timidity. A kind of exercise for character.

ROBERT CAPA

For breakfast, 35 servings of caviar and tea.

Somewhat hesitantly, however, I made preparations for my trip. I engaged a governess for my little boy, ordered a quantity of woolen underwear (returnable) and wrote to the Soviet ambassador at Washington, applying for a visa to enter the U.S.S.R., "hoping to have an early reply."

Several weeks passed and I heard nothing from the Soviet embassy. It was nearing the end of November; the tournament was scheduled to begin December fifteenth and the last boat that I could

SOVFOTO

Russian ticket agent to author (above): "With the energy that you will spend getting to Moscow, you could build up a business in your own country."

ROBERT CAPA

ou are a sincere, serious person," Russian women told her. "but of course you are very naïve. . . . In a few years we shall be free to do as we like."

possibly take would leave New York on December third. I was playing skittles in the Manhattan Chess Club when the telephone rang; it was the Soviet embassy calling me. An indistinct voice wanted to know my home address, telephone number, and the place of my birth.

"It is already very late," I began to say. "Am I going to receive my visa?"

"We know, we know," said the voice. "We will advise you just as soon as we have information."

Relations were "friendly but feline." Vodka helped.

ROBERT CAPA

As I heard nothing more by December third, I rewrapped my woolens and my new fleece-lined boots (also returnable) and, to the great delight of my family, I renounced the whole idea of going. My husband invited friends to dinner to celebrate.

The telephone rang. Would I come to Washington at once? My visa was ready.

In Washington the next morning, the embassy was quiet and tastefully furnished. I was shown into a pleasant room, very hot, and I began to look through various magazines which showed pictures of scientific workers in the Soviet Union, students attending school, children at play, vacationists in the Crimea. Everyone in the pictures looked well-fed, well-clothed, happy and very busy. I began to feel better in spirits.

The door opened and a tall and extremely good-looking Russian came in carrying a sheaf of papers which he handed to me.

"Good morning. Please to fill out these," he said. They were all written in Russian, and I said that I could not read them. "No?" he exclaimed. "Well, then I translate for you what it says and you write in yes and no. . . . Do you enter the Soviet Union by plane or train?" he asked finally. "And at what border?"

I explained it was now too late for me to take a boat or train and I should have to fly all the way.

"Then I will mark your visa 'Moscow Airdrome,'" he said, "and you must not change your mind. You cross the border at Lwów, because you fly from Prague. You will need a Czechoslovakian visa, but that will be very easy to get once you have ours."

In no time I held that rara avis, a Soviet visa, and we said good-by.

The Czech visa was more troublesome to obtain. When on the following morning I applied to the Czech consulate in New York, I was told that it would be almost impossible to get a visa in a week.

"But I am going to Moscow," I said, and it was my first experience with this open-sesame.

"Of course you will get your visa," the consul said soothingly. "It is only a question of when. [This 'when' I found was always the great question.] Perhaps we could telegraph to Prague."

"And when will you receive an answer?"

"Oh, that I can't tell you. If we do not hear by Saturday [I was to leave Sunday], we can telephone our ambassador in Washington."

"But why can't we do that now?"

"Oh, no! We can't bother him except in emergencies."

Early Saturday morning when I went back to the consulate, the

(Continued on Page 142)

THE TIMELESS SUIT

Now or next year—a suit of flecked beige wool which adapts itself easily and with great style to daily or seasonal changes. Wear it with a rakish fedora or a velours pillbox; with a cashmere sweater, a pale pink jersey shirt, a brown satin or a beige silk blouse. A suit that's every inch a fashion, but not a shred extreme.
Sizes 10 to 18. By Alvin Handmacher, $55.00.

THE TIMELESS COAT

Present and future fashion. This fleecy wool coat with its free, uncomplicated lines is designed for suits or dresses, tweeds or silks.
Its constant wearability is not affected by time or place or circumstance. It is for the slim and the not-slim, for the young and the not-so-young. Red, burgundy, gold, russet, dark brown and navy blue.
Sizes 9 to 15, 8 to 18. By Alvin Handmacher, $55.00.

By WILHELLA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

The timeless suit worn now with dark brown velours hat by Billy Russy, brown fox scarf by Aaron Reiss, pin-grain calfskin bag and chamois gloves.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LEOMBRUNO · BODI

The timeless coat worn with the important new hat fashion—a soft-brimmed velours.

Calfskin bag with a bone handle by Roger Van S, and pigskin gloves.

Black velvet with a pleated gold silk jacket, twin glitter sweaters with rayon satin skirt by Tina Leser, and a two-piece rayon lamé brocade.

5 O'CLOCK

Or after five. . . . Glitter comes in—gold lamé skirts, gilt-threaded sweaters, rhinestone buttons and bracelets, crystal-beaded helmets. Separates take on sophistication in sapphire-blue jersey, black velvet, sweater-top and taffeta- or satin-skirt combinations. Most necklines are low, most skirts short. Look your most devastating . . . that's the fashion. ★ By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

BLACK VELVET DRESS, $39.95; JACKET, $15; GLITTER SWEATERS, $16.95 AND $22.95; SATIN SKIRT, $29.95; BROCADED TOP, $10.95; SKIRT, $14.95; TAFFETA DRESS, $39.95; TO $69.95

Silhouettes in taffeta. A changeable blue silk taffeta, a side-draped dress in black by Ceil Chapman.

Extreme right—black with pale blue satin collar by Ben Barrack.

PHOTOS BY EGNSSAGRIVES

THREE-PIECE WARDROBE

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

A suit is the best beginning for any wardrobe, especially a small one. In any season, the gray flannel is the most wearable fashion, with great latitude for accessories. In the fall, it takes to a velvet scarf or furs; in the spring, to piqué and fresh flowers. It goes with a brimmed sports hat, beret, feathered toque or velvet pillbox, with sweaters or silk shirts. It goes with all colors. Worn here with silk carnations, navy felt hat with feathers by Joe Cohn, $14.95; calfskin bag, $10.95. Suit by Alvin Handmacher, $60.00.

Suit, coat and dress total around $190.00. The lapin stole like moleskin, $49.50.

An idea-provoking dress. Navy-blue wool jersey, for afternoon with moleskin-like fur stole, feather helmet, satin gloves. By Ben Barrack, $39.95. Or, if you prefer, the dress in rayon, $35.00; in silk, $45.00. Hat by Mr. Alf.

Or—wear it with a Roman-striped ribbon scarf (right), or amber beads, or pearls. With a velvet rose or a real one. With all the bracelets you own, or none. Come spring, tuck in a white faille dickey.

YEAR-ROUND

Nothing is more practical than the coat that slips on easily over everything. This oxford-gray wool with its slightly slanted shoulders, ample but not bulky lines, is many coats in one. It is a suit-coat, a dress-coat, a travel, town and country coat. The red velvet under its collar is an inspired fashion touch. Hats—red velvet to gray wool. Bags—gray flannel alternating with the navy calfskin. Gloves—capeskin, doeskin, cotton. By Lo Balbo, around $89.00.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LEOMBRUNO • BODI

The suit changes for the country or a shopping day with mustard leather bag, $12.95; cotton or string gloves, gray ribbed sweater and a knitted hat, $9.95. Or, with a jersey shirt, a red bag, a brimmed felt hat.

'Supposed to carry your bride over the doorstep," he said. "You won't be a bride for a long time, but here goes."

Someone to come home to—

BY NEWLIN B. WILDES

Life doesn't tie up in pink ribbon the things that you really want.

WHEN she awoke she realized, slowly and deliciously, that it was Sunday. Not just Sunday, but the every-other-Sunday. Of course she did not know what an important Sunday it was going to be, but she did know that it was April, and that the air was warm and soft through the open window, and that there was a pigeon cooing contentedly on the sill. It was only seven-thirty, and pretty early in the morning to wake her father, but there were so many special things for them to do that day and she could not wait any longer.

She got up very quietly and put on the felt slippers with the rabbits' heads on the toes, that he had given her last Christmas, and the red wrapper that was getting a little small now because she grew so fast. Her hair was very blond in its two tight little braids that made her neck seem like a slender reed supporting her head, and her brown eyes were very large with the promise of the day. She had waited thirteen days for this day, her father's day off, and she could not wait a second after seven-thirty.

She peered carefully into the combination living room-dining room where her father slept on the day bed. He was very large, stretched out there, and his feet came over the end of the mattress just a few inches, but he had told her that it was very comfortable and that a girl had to have a room of her own once she got as grown up as twelve. His shoulders were huge under the light blanket, and his face was very tanned and red from the outdoors. His jaw was solid, square and strong, and the hair of his brows and lashes was dark like hers, and his hands were great powerful things lying limp at his sides.

She tiptoed out into the kitchen and made the coffee and got the toast and eggs and bacon going on the stove. They made a delicious smell, and after a few minutes she could hear her father stirring lazily, and then there was a great creak and thud and he came on out into the kitchen.

He was even bigger once he was up, tall and very, very handsome, she thought, with blue eyes that looked at her sleepily from the doorway for a second, and then crinkled into that smile that made her smile with it and be all goose pimples because it was going to be a wonderful day.

"Hiya, Patrick," he said, stretching his arms as if they would burst through the building. "What day is it and what time is it?"

She looked at him, very happily reproving, holding the spatula in one hand. "It's Sunday," she said, not able to keep the two dimples from breaking out, "our Sunday. You know it is."

He looked at her as if he hadn't realized, and then his smile faded and he shook his head. "Gee," he said, "so it is—Sunday. But not"—and he shook his head again—"not our Sunday. I have to be on duty today."

She could feel her mouth go open a little from the disappointment, and there was a great limpness that let her arm down at her side, and there were almost the beginnings of tears smarting behind her eyes, tears that she mustn't let go. And then she saw the glint in his own eyes. Her head went up and she looked at him in great and disapproving disgust.

"Joe," she said—he wanted her to call him Joe—"Joe, you're fooling me." And his grin broke away from him and he gathered her in those great thick hands of his and held her way up high to the ceiling, right up where they hooked the flypaper, and she kicked and squealed joyously.

"Sure I'm fooling you, Pat," he said—his hair was dark brown with just enough curl in it to be tight to his head—"I'm fooling you and I shouldn't and it's our Sunday and what are we going to do about it and where are those eggs?"

She gave him his eggs and the toast and the steaming coffee in its thick white mug, and then she said, "We're going out to the country," as if he should have known that—they had talked about it enough—"we're going out into the country and not come back till dark and maybe, maybe, we'll find The Place."

She looked at him very hopefully when she said that, because they had been looking for The Place for a long time now, over a year, since he had been made a sergeant on the police force. Of course they had not found it yet, The Place, but there was no harm in thinking, and you never could tell.

Her father munched his toast and shook his head doubtfully. "I don't know," he said; "things are pretty high still," and she did not say anything to that. She knew that things were pretty high. She did all the shopping. After school.

At first, when her mother had died three years ago, there had been an aunt who came in and cleaned the rooms and bought the food. Then her aunt had moved away (Continued on Page 230)

ILLUSTRATED BY PERRY PETERSON

Window–doors for family use, enter parlor and family room from the arbored terrace; with kitchen, carport in the wing to the left.

Worth at least $18,000.

The parlor is a cozy quiet retreat, with two walls of plywood; one of windows; one of brick.

Since the JOURNAL'S owner-building series opened in April, the whole owner-building idea has been sweeping the country. . . . Here you will find still another astonishing proof that you can build it yourself for half the price—when properly planned and executed the JOURNAL way. . . . Here you will see that previous experience and special skill are unnecessary with the designs and methods the JOURNAL has developed. . . . Even actual building work by the owner is unnecessary: you can save up to one third by merely managing the job yourself; hiring the work done by experts, and shopping for your own materials and equipment—all made plain for people who want a bigger, better home than they can afford to buy.

ONCE again, from another JOURNAL design for owner-building, a young couple has cut housing prices in half. You'll find all the facts and figures when you turn to the next pages, but first let's look at this JOURNAL home that Jack and Virginia made for themselves.

Three bedrooms and bath; parlor, kitchen, laundry, carport, with work space and storage, and a large, long, sunlit family room for dining, parties and play. A big-scale double brick chimney, with a fireplace in the parlor ath leads along enclosed lawn to entrance door.

STANLEY C. REESE, Architect
PHOTOGRAPHS ON THESE TWO PAGES BY EZRA STOLLER

The casual end of family room, with windows from entrance door to bedroom wall.

out cost only $9,089.13

By RICHARD PRATT
Architectural Editor of the Journal

nd a built-in barbecue grill on the dining side. A ull-length storage wall, with sliding doors and commodi- us closets below and above. The whole house high- eilinged and airy; cool in summer, warm in winter; au- omatically heated, and built throughout of materials as ne as money can buy. The lowest bid we've been able to et on this house from any local general contractor is 17,569, without extras.

No wonder that a local architect, when making a pro- essional appraisal, and with an expert's knowledge of eighborhood values, told Jack and Virginia, "Your ouse is worth at least $18,000." No wonder the leading onstruction engineer of the community told them, "I've ever seen anything as nice and smart as this in a small ouse"; or that a real-estate specialist remarked, "If ney're getting $12,000 for those ranch houses over n ——, then this house must have cost you $20,000. Vhy, it's twenty years ahead of any house in town!"

Jack and Virginia have a right to listen with pride. For n the five and a half months it took the former Army flier nd his wife to get the house up, by the middle of May his year, Jack gave it 550 hours of hard work himself, nd Virginia spent 150 hours shopping for materials and quipment, running errands and keeping accounts. That ay sound like a lot of time, but for Jack it averages to

The dining part of family room, with built-in barbecue, separates parlor and kitchen.

Getting the house under cover quick is a first objective, and in three weeks Jack was helping to lay roof planking. Then come insulation panels, then the weathertight coating with its white gravel surface to reflect the heat. A few days' work, lasts a lifetime.

Putting on the sheathing, or inner skin, may look difficult; but after a few pointers from his carpenter, it began to be easy for Jack—partly because of the structural simplicity of the JOURNAL design, with all outmoded construction complications removed.

little more than three hours a day, and for Virginia to less than a daily hour.

It was time well spent, for it did a lot to help them save at least half what a similar house would have cost them to buy. But what helped them even more to get a house twice as good as any they could have bought on their building budget of $10,000 was following the JOURNAL's simplified method of construction and plan procedure.

Here is a breakdown of the actual costs, as carefully kept by Virginia:

Grading (labor)	$ 121.00
Masonry (labor and materials)	913.52
Carpentry (materials)	3278.79
Carpentry (labor)	1434.00
Electrical (labor and materials)	175.00
Electrical fixtures	62.00
Plumbing (labor and materials)	940.00
Heating (labor and materials)	1335.00
Asphalt tile	115.00
Painting (materials)	213.00
Roofing (labor and materials)	185.00
Linoleum (laid)	92.00
Hardware	118.92
Miscellaneous	105.90
Total	$9089.13

As those figures indicate, Jack didn't attempt to do all the work himself, by any means. He worked hard, and often long. But he hired the right kind of men: men who really knew their trades; men who would let him work along with them as helper whenever he had the time; men who would lay out work for him to do week ends and evenings. He figures he has average ability with his hands, and believes the average owner-builder works at about 30 per cent of the efficiency of experienced workmen. Jack is convinced—and after watching many owner-building operations over many years, I am inclined to agree with his conviction—that owners can save more time and money by acting as their own general contractor than by trying to tackle types of work to which they've never been trained. Both Jack and Virginia feel that their remarkable achievement of building an $18,000 house for a little more than $9000 was due first to the house design itself, so simple and clear, and so economical of labor and

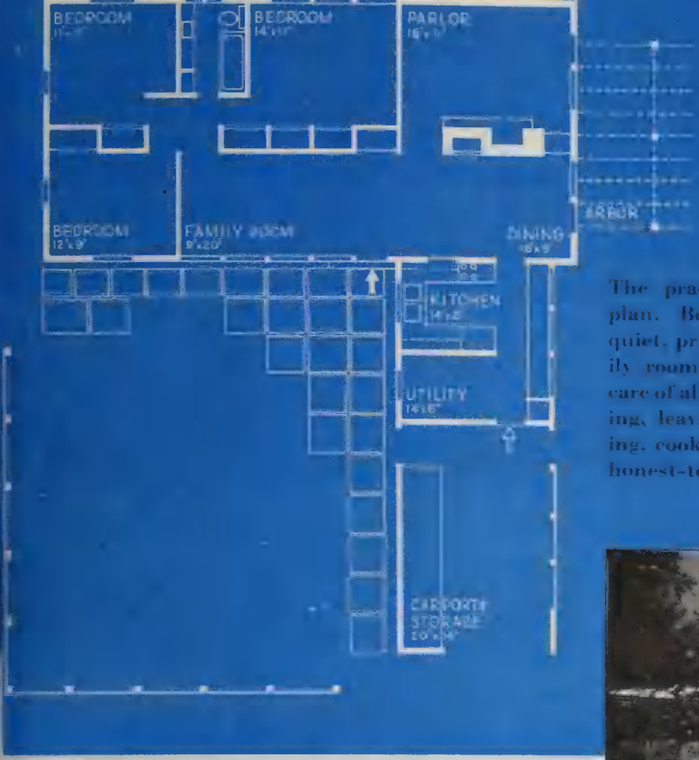
Some Notes on This House and the Journal Owner-Building Program

This is a house from the second JOURNAL design of the series. One or more houses from the third design will appear early next year.

This house as it stands contains 1400 square feet of space, including carport. Average houses for sale at $10,000 contain less than 900.

Designed for an eventual family of four or five, the size of this house conforms exactly to that recommended by the Committee on the Hygiene of Housing of the American Public Health Association for this family size—about double the space indicated in certain "Economy Houses" publicized by Federal housing agencies.

This house can be built with or without a cellar. The pattern indicates the least expensive satisfactory construction, which is slab on grade, hot-water radiant-heated, but any system the owner prefers can be used.



This particular house happens to be painted, except for its figured plywood interior walls, with a silvery gray stain inside and out, but any color can be used—white, yellow, green, red, brown, gray.

A booklet on the JOURNAL HOUSEBUILDING PROGRAM, No. 2639, containing inserts of plan variations for both this and the first design, covers explicitly in detail everything you need to know about building your own house and being your own contractor: how to finance it; how to select the site; how to analyze your own abilities; how to purchase the tools, materials, equipment; and how to figure your costs. It can be secured from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, for $1.00. Use coupon on Page 24.

To build this second JOURNAL house, a separate BUILD IT YOURSELF HOUSE PATTERN, No. 502, contains a complete purchase list of materials, specifying what to buy and where to use each piece; step-by-step directions, written in nontechnical language everyone can understand; assembly illustrations picturing every important step of construction, and full-size templates from which to mark out all angle cuts on rafters, and so on. It can be secured for $5 from the Easi-Bild Pattern Company, 462 Bedford Road, Pleasantville, New York, to whom all correspondence concerning the patterns should be directed.

The family room began living up to its name th minute the house was roughly closed in, whe Jack and Virginia found it to be a large light spac in which to complete their work on the interio

The practically perfect floor plan. Bedrooms and parlor quiet, private and apart: family room and kitchen taking care of all activities, like entering, leaving, work, play, dining, cooking, laundry. Result: honest-to-goodness livability.

The house can be started minus two bedrooms and the carport, easily added whenever possible later.

The economy version reduces bedroom sizes deletes carport, but retains the featured livability.

A handsome fence of Journal design completes the privacy of the outdoor-living-room lawn enlarging the livable space in pleasant weather by one third.

materials. Second, to the carefully planned method of procedure, with its complete list of materials and equipment, all accurately described as to size, quality and kind, which made it possible for them to buy at the best possible prices. Third, to the fact that they were on the job every day, checking the progress of the work with an easy-to-understand housebuilding pattern that described each step of the operation. And fourth, to the work which they actually did themselves, each hour of which played an important part in reducing the final cost of the house.

Here is how the sliding-door storage wall works in Jack and Virginia's bedroom. Wearing apparel in the closets below; seldom-used belongings above.

w when Virginia's at work in her kitchen she n appreciate its many perfections all the ore because she can so vividly remember all e hours of sanding and painting she put in.

One of the jobs Jack's proudest of was the erecting of his house's capacious storage wall closets. He delights in demonstrating the smooth sliding doors which he himself installed.

PHOTOGRAPHS ON THESE TWO PAGES BY TOWNE STUDIOS

Lovely Fabrics

MAKE BEAUTIFUL DRESSES

Rich velvets, beautiful laces, silk slipper satin and lovely lamés... the new luxurious fabrics available to women who make their clothes. A simple design in an elegant fabric is a good investment. It takes to a jewel, a touch of fur... and goes on looking lovely for years. ▪ By Nora O'Leary

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont.
(*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Rich in color, rich in quality . . . green silk velvet in a six-gore skirt. Vogue Design No. 7172. 24 to 34. Worn with a white rayon blouse shot with gold, Design No. 7186. 12 to 20. Skirt lends itself to more formal white lace bodice.

Brown lace over champagne taffeta is never conspicuous, always beautiful. The neckline dips low in the back, the sleeves push up. Vogue Design No. S-4119. 12 to 20. Wear large velvet rose of the same shade at the waistline.

Blue wool jersey of classic design dressed up with a touch of coarse black lace . . . braid buttons. Vogue Design No. 7194. 12 to 20. Also effective with checked velveteen weskit, No. 7168, 12 to 20.

Slim black velvet jumper with jeweled buttons, convertible neckline. Vogue Design No. 7193, 12 to 20. Can be worn without blouse, or as we have shown it, with full organdy sleeves.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LILLIAN BASSMAN

DRAWINGS BY MARGARET SOMMERFIELD

Lovely afternoon-dinner dress in a heavenly shade of silk satin. A circular skirt with unpressed pleats. Vogue Design No. 7207, 12 to 20. Think of it with bands of mink for cuffs.

Back and other views are on Page 260

Belles on Their Toes

Mother Gilbreth had the Cheaper-by-the-Dozen children to raise after Dad's death, his motion-study business to run, all the problems every mother faces—multiplied by eleven. Anne was in college; the baby was still in rompers. And then there was Tom—cook, part-time governess and cross-grained philosopher.

Conclusion

ANNE fell in love with a doctor at the University of Michigan, and this time it was the real thing. She wrote Mother that she had an engagement ring, and that her fiancé expected to go into practice soon. He was a few years older than she. He had to work pretty hard, and she didn't have a chance to see as much of him as either of them would like.

Anne didn't say so, but she wasn't interested in college any more. She was interested only in getting married. But she felt she had obligations to the family, and she didn't want to do anything that would upset Mother.

She was moody and nervous when she returned home for spring vacation. She spent a good deal of time in her room, writing special-delivery letters. And she didn't look up any of her friends in Montclair.

Mother's nose had turned out as handsome as she had predicted, and was back, full-time, on the grindstone again. But now she was concerned about Anne, who didn't seem to want to confide in anyone.

"I know what it's like," Mother said one night, dropping down beside Anne on her bed. "Goodness knows I went through the same thing when I was engaged to your father. I was in California and he was three thousand miles away in Boston."

"No one knows what it's like," Anne said hopelessly. "Nothing was keeping you from getting married."

"Well, I was some older than you," Mother admitted. "I had already graduated from college. But you've only a little more than a year to go."

"We'd like to get married right away," Anne whispered. She threw her arms around Mother. "Oh, Mother, what am I going to do?"

"It'll work out all right," Mother promised.

"It sounds selfish, I know that," Anne said. "But that's what we'd like—to get married right away."

"It doesn't sound selfish at all," Mother told her. "It sounds like the most natural thing in the world. If you didn't feel that way I'd know you'd picked the wrong man. But I think it would be better for you to wait awhile, dear."

"I know it." Anne burst into tears. "I know you'll need me here until the younger children are grown." (Continued on Page 80)

Copyright, 1950, by Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey. The complete book is soon to be published by Thomas Y. Crowell Co.

By Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey

It was a happy wedding,
but we felt sorry for Mother.
How would she get along with only eight children?

there's a man in the house

By HARLAN MILLER

Since my latest glimpse of California's vivacious architecture, I'm determined to pep up our old homestead. Maybe turquoise for the garage doors, chartreuse for the kitchen exit and magenta for the front portal? And yellow awnings?

My wife usually pretends alarm when I put on a bow tie. She suspects a bow tie on a mature man is a sort of wolf call and that when I wear one I'm scheming a frisky evening. (Confidentially, I'm merely trying to stay young.)

"Maybe it'd be easier for my son and me to be pals," muses Peter Comfort, removing five bicycles from his driveway before backing out of his garage, "if we weren't always trying to impress each other. But maybe fathers and sons aren't intended to be chums?"

Our town's smart set is getting so sophisticated they now think it corny to tell sex stories. "It's for the Elks," they say. Anyhow, they don't know any new ones.

Just when I became positive I could recognize a begonia anywhere at twenty paces, I discover there are hundreds of different shapes and colors. They run the gamut from a type faintly resembling a peony to one not too unlike Dutchman's-breeches. (This'll wow my wife, who thinks I don't know from petunias.)

This summer I finally took our two boys on our dream tour to the West Coast. (My consort doesn't like to motor, and remained home with her garden.) By the end of the 6000 miles I was acting their age and they were acting mine. I hope the trip was an antidote for the teen-age "shopping center" viewpoint.

Our youngest has added a winsome new trick to his repertoire when the whole family goes out to dinner: he counts out eeny, meeny, miney, mo to help him decide which delicacy to order. So far no waitress has assaulted him; a few have looked daggers.

"Any male or female," expounds Betty Comfort, wiping marmalade off the doorknob, "who pretends he enjoys a picnic with other people's children for more than two hours is just a sweet phony. Or that others dote on his even that long!"

Our neighborhood's fiercest practitioner of frankness has a cute embroidered motto in his guest room: "On the third day both fish and guests begin to smell." He always makes a big point of taking it down when he ushers a guest to the room, for fear he won't see it.

My consort has kept track of everybody who's entertained us at dinner since we were married, and claims we owe 738 dinners to 415 people. She wants to hire a hall and do the right thing in one vast, terrific blowout. But I'm holding out for 40 or 50 small dinners over a period of years.

Our little group's most cynical matron tells me she always watches what her husband packs when he's going off on a trip. If he packs too many clean shirts and all his most expensive garments, she knows his thoughts are wandering.

Significant example of feminine logic: Even when we have Sunday breakfast at ten-fifteen my wife can't understand why I'm not ready to eat Sunday dinner at one o'clock. (Even if it means hurrying straight home from church or cutting off a golf match at the seventh hole.)

Each year we try to placate the terrifying hordes of Halloween's disguised cherubs with a more tempting tray of cookies and candy. (One of our more solvent neighbors offers 'em sandwiches and home-freezer ice cream!) What puzzles me is that the little darlings never seem to get a tummy-ache.

As I've explained several times to our young, I prefer to lose my temper quickly, like a blast of Jovian lightning, before the scamps have had too much chance to get away with murder. In the long run that's better for 'em than if I come to a slow boil.

We noticed that out west the mirrors in bathrooms hang much higher up on the walls than they do east of the Rockies. I gathered the men are taller but just as vain.

When the boys and I left on our Western trip my consort told me I needn't bring her any souvenirs or presents, if I'd only telephone her every few days. . . . We saved quite a lot of money that way, even though she can't recognize that the three-minute mark is the logical end for any l.-d. conversation.

If I were a great big fat multimillionaire I'd offer a lavish reward to scientists who invented non-fattening bacon and pie à la mode. So far the only sweepingly effective rule of diet is, "If it tastes good, don't eat it."

I'm coaxing my chief dietitian to adopt pizza as one of our household dishes. Around Carmel and Monterey pizza and salad add up to a fashionable dinner; no muttered complaints from guests.

Usually it takes four phone calls apiece each morning for the girls of our town's "coconut wireless" to exchange titbits—whose car was parked in front of whose house, last night's parties to which they weren't invited, such savory items. Now they've discovered they can schedule a "conference" hookup for only $1 and all talk at once.

Our neighbors around the corner, the ones with the uninflated "white-collar" income and the inflated "white-collar" expenses, tell me there's one thing they can economize on: food. "We simply must keep our home attractive, our kids' morale up, and our clothes not too shabby," he explains, "but nobody cares how thin we get!"

When you overhear Junior defending you against mutterings by another offspring . . . and your daughter resembles the woman of your choice more daily, but with subtle overtones of you, too . . . and your ten-year-old treats you as a complete equal, as if you were ten or he were a hundred . . . and your face lights up when you see your wife at a party after a separation of seventeen minutes . . . and she indicates in subtle, feminine ways that you're more distinguished-looking than men beside whom you actually look like a peasant . . . when all these blessings combine to overwhelm you, better phone the partner of your joys and sorrows in mid-afternoon and invite her downtown for dinner.

If Women were in Control

By JUDITH CHASE CHURCHILL

EVERYBODY knows women control a lot of things. They hold three fourths of the country's money and do most of the buying. Usually they run things at home. And sometimes their men too. But we've been getting more and more curious as to what would happen if women were in undisputed control of the country at large—if men had no vote at all and women ran everything finally, completely and without male interference.

What, we wondered, in this radical though far from impossible event, would be the most revolutionary changes—for better or worse?

To get a good cross section of speculation, we posed the point to these 30 well-known men. Here's what they answered. Some foresaw decided improvements. Others were just as convinced of chaos and calamity. A good many more have come up with some amazing ideas you'd never have dreamed of. Maybe you'll agree with them and maybe not. But at least one thing's certain. Their speculations will intrigue you as much as they did us!

We want to make it clear we don't think this is likely to happen. We just thought it would be fun to see how men would feel about the whole thing.—The Editors.

● "Actually I am not at all perturbed about such a state of affairs. I have supreme confidence in the ability of the women to straighten out everything in this troubled world, once they are in full, instead of nine-tenths, control. I have been married for sixteen years and my wife hasn't once been wrong in that time. With such an example, how could I believe anything else?" —Frank G. Slaughter.

● "I am not one of those men who would fear for the future if the women were in complete control. I suspect my optimism is motivated by my certainty there's no danger of such an event's ever occurring.

"There are some trends in American politics, which I think the men of the country should recognize. Voting statistics in many states seem to show more women than men in recent years have actually gone to the polls and voted—evidence women are taking a much more active interest in the affairs of government than are men.

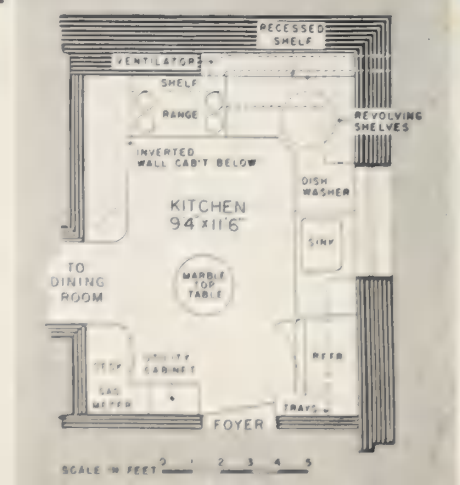
"I have also noticed that questions asked by women at open-forum meetings reflect a wide reading knowledge on the part of the women, in contrast with some of the 'shoot-from-the-hip' prejudiced type of questions frequently asked by men. I think democratic procedures are being greatly strengthened by the growing interest of women in American politics. And I am glad to see more and more of them taking an active interest in political affairs, including running for office." —Wayne Morse.

(Continued on Page 243)

DRAWING BY MARGARET SOMMERFELD

STAR PERFORMANCE

BY GLADYS TABER



PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

Alfred Lunt discussed recipes with us as he kneaded and shaped his Swedish bread. The loaves were baked in the new range, and steaming hot coffee came from the new coffee maker. As the curtain fell on the last act, Mr. Lunt's last line was, "The kitchen is practical, it is beautiful, it is cozy; it is, in fact, a perfect gem."

Designed for cooking, this corner of the kitchen has utensils within reach and the range flanked by counters for food preparation. An inverted wall cabinet fits under narrow counter on the left. Through the grill over the range cooking odors are drawn outside.

"THERE are only two important rooms in the house," said Alfred Lunt, rolling up his sleeves: "the kitchen and the bedroom—well, really only one, the kitchen. In Finland we used to sleep in the kitchen—it was warm there too." He tucked a towel in his apron. "I learned this from a chef," he said; "keeps your apron clean, and your trousers. Wipe your hands any time." He knotted a red handkerchief around his neck and reached for his butter brush. "I've used this for years," he explained. "Best butter brush I ever had. Couldn't bake without it."

So there we were, with one of the greatest actors of all time kneading away at his Swedish bread in the new kitchen while we discussed recipes. "Mrs. Lunt is very fond of a coffeecake I make—it isn't too sweet. I'll give you the recipe. And have you ever eaten Swedish Rotgrot? Delicious! And Tarragon Chicken?"

Alfred Lunt has a way of stopping every few minutes in the midst of his conversation and flashing a dazzling smile and giving an eloquent shrug and saying, "Do I bore you? Perhaps I bore you. Just say so!"

When Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne bought the old red brick house in the Gracie Square section of New York, they bought a lot of apparently insurmountable problems with it. It overlooks a park and the East River, it is a four-story house on a lot 17½ feet wide. It had a small square at the rear where Miss Fontanne plans a garden, beautiful old fireplaces in every room, but a ground floor crawling with old pipes and wires like spider webs running in every direction.

"You have never seen such a horrible kitchen in your whole life—it (Continued on Page 204)

Planned arrangement with equipment measured and fitted in converted a former basement-laundry into a comfortable kitchen. The automatic dishwasher has pull-out racks for easy loading and in the corner cabinet beside it there are revolving shelves of lazy-Susan type.

That extra corner becomes a utility center with desk, shelf, telephone, radio, books. Mr. Lunt named the panel with colored magnets to hold notes the "call board." In cabinet at left, cleaning aids are housed.

Profile of Youth

Parties at Lake Michigan summer home are favorite date fun. Mother surprised Ann and sister with checked swim suits, matching shortie beach coats.

Ann Harrington — the girl who has everything

It takes a good manager to fit family life to schedule of industrial executive and two pretty teen-aged daughters—but Mrs. Harrington once worked on Wall Street.

By MAUREEN DALY

MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN, is a bustling industrial center, set in the wooded lake country like a pint-sized Pittsburgh. It is a prosperous-looking town, with factory smokestacks and coal piles silhouetted on the lake front, a busy downtown section, and many new homes—the sandy soil still broken around them—showing through the trees on private roads. It has been said about Muskegon that "there is no middle class here—just the people who run the factories and the people who work for them." And the Guy M. Harringtons are part of that industrial aristocracy.

Ann Harrington is the older of the two Harrington girls. Dark-haired, pretty and just 16, she was born in the hospital right next to Muskegon High School, where she is now a senior. All Ann's life the family has lived on Webster Avenue, the best "old" street in town, in a rambling white house edged with bridal-wreath bushes. Across the street is the old Hume house and the Hackley mansion, turreted wooden castles built by lumber barons in the late 1800's. At the farthest end of Webster, for a block or so, the neighborhood has been moved into by Negro families, sometimes two to a house, who joined the labor migration north during the Second World War and have stayed on to make their homes in Muskegon.

In a town like this, "where everybody knows everybody," it isn't always easy for "one of the good kids" to become popular, but Ann Harrington is one of the best-liked girls in her school. "When I was in ninth grade I was rather quiet," she explains, "and I thought I'd never go out. But all of a sudden I started to be popular." But to most teen-aged

(Continued on Page 220)

"I've just begun to come out to the country club alone since I learned to play golf—it's fun for dates. Once in a while one of the girls gives a private dance here."

"It was the first time I got something I never even hoped I'd get." Third chair in second violins with school orchestra gave Ann "biggest thrill in my life."

Pale yellow chiffon with appliquéd petals at neckline and hem makes dreamy dance dress. Ann goes to 8 formals a year, learned to Charleston last summer.

Unlike many teen-agers, Ann likes hats, owns 7, with black velvet helmet for dates. Wardrobe of 22 dresses and other items was bought over three-year period.

PHOTOS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Profile of Youth

What is the difference between a "wheel" and a "schmoe"? What really counts in high school? Here teen-agers themselves give the answer.

What is Popularity?

In a Boy

"First off, he has to rate as a good Joe with the other boys." Sense of humor, loyalty to friends rank high among fellows. Independence at home, the right to "go out with the boys," gains respect. "Wolfing" is considered matter of taste, but "Romeos" get the cold shoulder.

"It doesn't matter who you are or what you look like—as long as you have personality." And to all teens, the golden label "good personality" means four things: friendliness, poise, ability to make conversation, and the quality of being "fun to be with." Grooming, physical beauty are extra assets. As one boy said, "It starts when you're a kid; if you've got it then, you've always got it."

■ Photos by Joseph Di Pietro

In a Girl

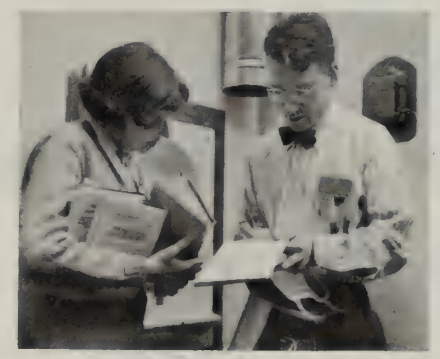
"You can always rate a girl by the activities she belongs to." Paper and yearbook staffs, dramatic and glee clubs, all service groups rank high. "Big wheel" girl usually belongs to sorority, clubs or Y-teen group—whichever guides social life at her school.

"Good grades are important—but the girl better have a good personality to go with it." Few popular girls get below B average; most cram study into school hours, at-home session, are courteous in class, attentive to teachers. Cribbing or carrying "cheat notes" for exams is considered worse offense for girls than for boys.

"It doesn't have to be a big house, but the kids have to fee welcome." Younger teens like planned at-home parties, olde groups prefer more casual visits and elaborate postpron get-togethers. Soft drinks and music are always essential Greatest social handicap: "cold attitude from parents."

"Fellows admire them, girls love them." Letter-sweater athletes, the "musclemen" of the campus, get hero treatment in school and local press. Football honors rate top popularity with one condition: star athlete must always stay modest, avoid snob label "The Head."

"Doesn't have to be new—just four wheels and a driver's license." Family car for dates, or car of his own, is prime social asset for high-school boy. Car may be jalopy or decade-old sedan; "hot rods" rate only with "fast crowd." Car owners must be generous, let others "grab a hop."



"No matter how much allowance, it's never enough." Any part-time job, from clerking to trucking, is suitable for male student "as long as it's not his life's work." Given choice of $10-week "white-collar job" and $15 week for "muscle work," most teen-agers will choose latter.

the Signs of a Schmoe

THE high-school definition of the word "popularity" isn't in the dictionary. For it isn't just a word, it's a way of life. It means a bid to double-date for the prom, a football banner to hang in a bedroom, a chance to make posters for the class play, a half hour's gossip on the phone, a collection of "I'll remember you" messages in the school yearbook. It means the elusive, important but undefinable quality of "belonging."

Teen-imposed standards for popularity are high. Friendliness with everyone and the ability to be nonchalant about popularity after it happens ("Too much popularity kills popularity") are first requisites. Studying too hard, aloofness and snobbishness are cardinal sins.

To be popular, a teen-ager must perform the delicate feat of treating other people as he would like to be treated, gain for himself a friendly response—and still not be dubbed a "social climber." Above all, the need for popularity must not become too evident. For the way to be marked a "freak" or a "floater" is to become an eager beaver about popularity—"And that's for sure. That's for dang sure!"

"Only a deadhead would wear them." Rimless glasses, pencils clipped to pocket, briefcase for books mark the male schmoe.

"Making like a movie star" with pompadour hairdo, fancy clothes and heavy make-up gains girl "hot stuff" label.

For school, high heels, strap shoes are taboo; high tennis shoes "pruney" for gym. Flats and white socks rate as favorites.

Overdressing in drape suit, loud painted tie and colored shirt marks teen as "dude," "cowboy," "cool" or "drugstore gangster."

"One sure way to get left out is to go right home after school." Girls need session at drugstore or soda shop to gossip, make plans, sip anything from soft drinks to "mountain cream" (¾ milk, ¼ cherry extract). Some spots impose 15c spending minimum on teen customers.

Dark broadcloth shirts, cardigans (except letter sweaters) and standard hats find no place in "smooth joe's" school wardrobe.

"Book-crazy" or "cram-happy" students usually rank low with classmates, are often called "brains," "tools" or "I.Q. ickies."

Wedding Special

By ANN BATCHELDER

IT seems to me that next to June—a decent, well-mannered June, I mean—the top-flight month for weddings is October. That, at least, is almost bound to be good, and, if you can count on anything in this unpredictable world, it might well be the cool, crisp, sunny days when autumn is beginning and for a little while the world seems to stand still and wait, unable to turn back, afraid to go forward. And that stillness and beauty is ours to hold to our hearts for only a little while. And so it is a perfect bridal month.

Members of the wedding. Whenever there is a wedding, somebody has the responsibility of providing those special things that every bride deserves at her wedding and every guest expects. So we have joined the party, in a way, and have given you some

(Continued on Page 158)

PHOTO BY STUART-POWLER

LINE A DAY

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 The incredible Rinehart—Mary Roberts—the one and only, must deal on the most intimate terms with the subconscious. Here she is with a book called THE CASE OF THE WANDERING KNIFE, guaranteed not to make you sleep well. This book contains two other hair-raisers too.

2 For the hour when you don't want much but do want something, try this. Grill some sardines, big ones. Put them on toast fingers. Over all turn a good testy rarebit. I said testy. I meant testy.

3 Folks eat apple griddlecakes with soft maple sugar and butter as if they hadn't had anything to eat since they were weaned. Make a good usual griddlecake batter and at last mix in a cup of tart apples chopped very fine. Bake on the griddle and serve hot, one by one as they come.

4 The ideal way to serve and eat griddlecakes is to lure the cook to the stove, arm her with a bowl or pitcher of batter, facing a hot griddle, and start talking. This means eating in the kitchen. As she flips from griddle to plate, help yourself to bacon or sausage and coffee. But let the cook be.

5 A suggestion of ground ginger added to hard sauce adds a nice, unusual touch.

6 For an appetizer, mix equal amounts of cooked, cooled, flaked fish and chopped mustard pickle. Serve on crackers.

7 Don't fool yourself that "white sauce" is anything more than a poor relation to "cream sauce." Their only remote relationship is that the main ingredient of both came from the cow.

8 From an old cookbook: "The young bride in choosing her china should keep in mind that flowers are not in good taste as decoration. Let her keep to plain white with a narrow gold band. As her mother did." Most of those brides listened to grandma!

9 Ever hear of onion soup getting chummy with a clam? Heat a can of onion soup. Thicken slightly. It's a soup you want, not a paste. Now add a can of minced clams, with all the liquor, and then ¼ cup of cream. Heat in the double boiler and serve very hot. With a salad and rolls and dessert, it's a meal. Luncheon or supper.

10 Mix 1½ cups finely chopped celery with 1 cup pecan meats broken up, not chopped. Mix with 1 cup shredded cabbage. A boiled salad dressing is good with this. Serve in a "bowl" of cabbage leaves.

11 Get yourselves a sizzling platter. They're fun and they're handy. Broil fine fresh mackerel and serve sizzling on the platter with Lima beans, stuffed tomatoes and potato croquettes. Don't forget the lemon.

12 Cook 1 tablespoon each of grated orange rind, orange juice, butter, and 2 tablespoons sugar to a light sirup. Put those new partially baked rolls in muffin pans, cover with the sirup and bake.

13 If you like noodles, you'll like this specialty of my house. All you do is boil ½ package medium broad noodles for 9 minutes. Drain them. Then ——

14 Prepare about 6 cups real cream sauce, and in it have quite a lot of Parmesan cheese. Put the noodles in a deep glass casserole, add layers of thin slices of cooked ham and chicken. Add a chopped parboiled green pepper and fill the casserole with the sauce.

15 Lastly, cover with fine cracker crumbs and cheese, butter or margarine on top. Bake until the sauce bubbles and the whole dish is brown.

16 How about puff-paste shells, about the size of an old silver dollar, filled with deviled crab meat for the bite-size tray?

17 Baked apples are good but like a hood on an old-fashioned mackintosh, not very intriguing. But core, fill the centers with cooked cranberries and cranberry juice, and bake. You'll be surprised. I was.

18 A very delicious omelet is made as usual, only—creamed crab meat or oysters, pretty well seasoned, is folded in when the omelet is almost done. Potato puffs, hot rolls, a salad and a frozen-strawberry shortcake—and what more do you want? The moon with Venus to boot?

19 Here's a salad straight from a famous chef in the heart of France. Take crisp white endive, wash, dry and chill. Add a little celery seed, a teaspoon of anchovy paste to French dressing. Put a crust of bread rubbed with garlic in the bowl. Toss salad and dressing together well. Remove crust, and serve. Cheeses go with this, and bread sticks (hot).

20 Old-fashioned apple turnovers are worth a thought or two. Make green-apple sauce with sugar, cinnamon and nutmeg to taste. Cook until thick.

OCTOBER REVERIE

Now is the fall of the year,
Though the sun is as bright,
And the moon as seductive and clear,
As on an August night.

The wind in the sycamore trees
Is all the music we hear:
Gone are the birds like a breeze,
Gone in the fall of the year.

21 Roll out and cut out large squares of chilled rich flaky pastry. On one side put a large spoon of the sauce, fold the pastry to make a triangle, wet the edges, press down firmly with a fork, prick the top and bake in a 450° F. oven until brown and flaky. Serve with plain cream.

22 Try a toasted doughnut. Split the doughnut, toast and butter it. Eat along with good coffee.

23 Make up a packaged butterscotch pudding, cool slightly, and fold in ½ cup cold cooked rice. Chill. Serve topped with brown sugar and chopped nuts. Easy—and good.

24 Once in a while some small town does something in the way of a wonderful dish which gets to be known by the name of the place where it originated. Of such is a dessert called "Colebrook Cake," from Colebrook, New Hampshire. And so it has been known for a great many generations of good cooks.

25 Colebrook Cake isn't a cake, isn't a pie, isn't a shortcake. Any sliced or cut-up fruit, berries or jam may be used. Sugar the fruit well, and put in a deep pie plate. Cover with a rich biscuit dough; bake until the crust is brown and the fruit cooked.

26 Now loosen the crust around the edge and turn the plate over quickly on the serving plate, like an upside-down cake, you know. It's cut like a pie and served with plain or whipped cream sweetened and flavored with nutmeg. I've eaten it there and eaten it here and shall again. It's Colebrook's bid to fame.

27 Pears, cut in two, hollowed out, filled with cream cheese and mint jelly, are quite a snappy garnish for a roast of lamb or lamb chops.

28 For stuffed mushrooms, use deviled ham, chopped chicken or chicken livers. Whatever you use, no matter how fine it may be cut, give it another chop. You can't get mushroom stuffings too fine.

29 Spread slices of bread, buttered of course, with chutney. Cover some with slices of ham, very thin, and some with chicken, white meat. For the top another slice of brown bread spread with cream cheese. Cut out in sandwich shapes to suit yourself.

30 Frozen tomato-juice concentrate is news—good news. And you'll find dozens of uses for it aside from serving it as a beverage.

31 It seems to me the leaves are more reluctant than usual to leave the trees this year. As if they knew their little day was done, never to return. As we all must know it one day, believing that the empty places will all be filled—better, maybe. But anyway, filled.

HOW to get the most out of a can of tomato soup

BY Anne Marshall

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

OF course you serve tomato soup—once or twice a week probably—for it's "the soup most folks like best." But are you, I wonder, really getting the most out of those familiar cans of tomato soup that you, like most American homemakers, have on your kitchen shelf? May I respectfully say you're not—unless you're using it also in your cooking and as a pour-on sauce.

New life for "Old Reliables"

For instance, in addition to the tomato-glorified beef stew—which we show below—by cooking with tomato soup you'll marvelously improve such homey dishes as meat loaf, pot roast, meat pie, stuffed peppers, meat balls and other favorite dishes. Delicious, too, as a base for spaghetti sauce. Dishes take on "new meaning" . . . your leftovers will be enlivened . . . your family recipes will have a finer-than-ever flavor when you add the richness of condensed tomato soup.

Adding Character, Color and Zest

And then, of course, you'll not overlook the added temptation, the enticement you lend to meat patties, frankfurters, fish cakes, omelet, boiled halibut, grilled cheese sandwiches—to name but a few—with tomato soup used as pour-on sauce. Just everything you pour it over becomes smoother, livelier, brightly attractive . . . in short, has more "character".

So you see, tomato soup in your meal-planning life can well be a multiple thing . . . something to keep on the shelf in good supply.

1 A Dish for All Occasions

Naturally, you think of tomato soup as the most versatile of all soups. You build family lunches and suppers around it, for instance; you serve it when company comes; you let the children have it often—for school-day lunches and early-to-bed suppers, preparing it with milk; you serve it to perk up convalescent appetites; you "lunch alone" with it; you combine it with other soups. No wonder women say of tomato soup: "It's the handiest thing on my kitchen shelf!"

2 Tomato-glorified BEEF STEW

Do try this: To your favorite beef stew recipe, add 1 can of condensed tomato soup. That's all! But my, what it does to that stew. If you've had compliments for your stew before, you'll have cheers for it now!

3 Tomato-enlivened HAMBURGERS

Broiled hamburgers take on new interest when you do this: As you lift them brown and sizzling from the pan, pour over them a can of tomato soup (heated just as is). Rich, red, velvety-smooth—what a tomato sauce it makes!

Belvoir Castle—founded by a standard bearer of William the Conqueror—now the home of this lovely modern Duchess.

The Duchess of Rutland

The captivating charm of this slim, young Duchess glows out from her exquisite face—a face of enchanting individuality, and bright with promises of the gay, delightful woman that is her Inner Self.

Hidden within you is an enchanting other self

WAITING TO UNFOLD A NEW YOU

MANY, MANY WOMEN are enveloped in unhappy self-consciousness...needlessly hampered by imagined shortcomings.

Actually—no woman has any right to keep on feeling insecure about herself. You can win a new possession over yourself and your life. You can unfold a new and lovelier you.

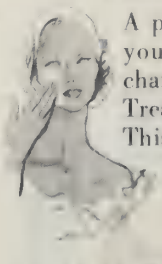
A wonderful power, deep-felt within you, can help you. This power grows out of the fascinating inter-play between your outer self and your inner self—the way you look and the way you feel.

Surely you have noticed the exciting difference it makes to know you are looking charming, "just right." It electrifies you with happy confidence that glows out from you to others. But, when you are not on good terms with your looks, a shadow of self-doubt eclipses you. And there you are—standing right in your own way!

Start now to like yourself better!



Perhaps what you need most is a new liking for yourself. So, why not start this very day to cultivate a new belief in YOU!

Set yourself an over-all goal of that charming person you want to be—and plan how to make her come true. Use the well-tried laws of health and beauty. Stretch, limber, rouse your body to bring circulation up, to firm your muscles, ease your nerves. Breathe deeply in fresh air. Eat wisely. Drink plenty of water. Get relaxing sleep. And of course—be absolutely meticulous about cleanliness.

How well is your face expressing you?

Don't ever forget that the You that other people see first is your face. Does your face show the very nicest you there is? It can. It will—if you give it a little loving attention each day. Your skin, especially, really hates to be forgotten—and tells you so by taking on an uninviting, dull look. So make your first beauty essential clean, clean skin. And, make it a forever habit always to cleanse your face with cream!

"Outside-Inside" Face Treatment

A particularly rewarding way to give your skin fresh-out-of-the-bandbox charm is the "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with Pond's Cold Cream. This treatment acts on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—soft fluffy Pond's Cold Cream cleanses and softens your skin as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this delightful treatment stirs up beauty-giving circulation in your face.

Always at bedtime—for day face-cleansings too, be sure to give your face this beauty-wise Pond's care. This is the way:

Hot Stimulation—a quick splash of hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl light, fluffy Pond's Cold Cream

The Duchess of Rutland says: "I am just devoted to Pond's Cold Cream. It is perfection for cleansing." Her complexion has the fresh, sweet look of a damask rose.

all over your face to soften dirt and make-up—sweep them from pore openings. Tissue off.

Cream Rinse—do another Pond's creaming to rinse off last traces of dirt, leave skin immaculate. Tissue lightly.

Cold Stimulation—a tonic cold water splash.

It's quick, it's easy—and how pleased you'll be by the difference in You! Your skin feels so soft—looks so glowing, so very clean!

The Duchess of Rutland says: "My face looks ever so much fresher after this treatment with Pond's."

If your skin is dry

After 25 many women notice their skin is beginning to have a dry look. The reason is that from 25 on, the natural oil that keeps skin soft starts decreasing. Before 40 skin may lose as much as 20% of its own softening oil. And skin without enough oil will seem to shrivel, begin to look dry—begin to look older.

A truly remarkable job of helping to re-oil drying skin is done by Pond's rich Dry Skin Cream. This special cream is very rich in lanolin—most like the oil of the skin itself. It is homogenized to soak in better. And, it contains a special softening emulsifier. Work this rich cream in thoroughly for extra night softening after your regular cleansing. You'll find your dry skin seems to "drink it up"—feels softer, immediately.

If heavy make-up doesn't suit you

Choose a powder base that is greaseless, colorless, sheer. Pond's Vanishing Cream is perfect. Misty white in the jar, completely greaseless, it suits all skin tones. Smooth on a thin film before powder. The cream disappears—leaves skin with a velvety quality that keeps make-up exquisite.

And, when you want to "pretty-up" fast, treat your face to a 1-Minute Mask with Pond's Vanishing Cream. Cover face (except eyes) with the cream. After only 1 minute, tissue off clean. See the fresh, new brightness of your skin!

Be an "Angel Face" always!

Foundation and powder all-in-one, Pond's wonderful Angel Face smooths on with its own puff and stays. No water, no greasy fingertips, no spilly powder. Angel Face brings you heavenly flattery in six angelic shades.

And—BIG NEWS! Pond's Angel Face make-up now comes in a charming new mirror case (as well as the sweet blue and gold boxes)! This new mirror case is sleek as polished ivory, etched with golden tracery, smoothly clasped and hinged. It's very slim for your handbag—and very handsome. Flip it open, you find a full-view mirror, a satin-back velour puff . . . and marvelous Pond's Angel Face! It's quite the sweetest, most convenient make-up a girl can find anywhere!

• • • • •

Lips bright, lips a little daring—fashion says. Perfect on both counts is Pond's "Lips" Rascal Red—vivid as a cardinal's wing . . . or Pond's "Lips" Heart Throb, stunning garnet blue-red! You'll find eight Pond's "Lips" shades—in the new, improved formula that stays on even longer!

It's such a wonderfully lifting, happy thing to unfold a charming NEW YOU. So never, never neglect the big, little details that can do so much to make you look lovelier!

To help you become your loveliest self—these world-beloved Pond's aids to beauty.

Remember—it's not vanity to develop the beauty of your face. Beauty and happiness go hand in hand. When you look lovely you come a-light with a most charming, happy confidence—and other people are drawn to the real Inner You.

Write for Free Leaflet: "Clues to Thrifty Towel Buying" • "Neuday" Bathroom by CRANE

DUNDEE MILLS, INC., Griffin, Ga. • Showrooms: 40 Worth St., New York City

Other Dundee Fabrics: DIAPERS • FLANNELETTES • DUNFAST ALL-PURPOSE COTTONS ③

BELLES ON THEIR TOES

(Continued from Page 64)

"Lie down, dear, and let me rub your back."

"I know it, and he knows it," Anne sobbed. "We know it's out of the question."

"Why, the children won't be grown for fifteen years," Mother said. "You don't think I mean for you to wait that long! I don't need you to help run the house. I just want you to wait until you finish college."

"But it wouldn't be right. It wouldn't be."

"Of course it would be right. Ernestine helps run the house now, just as well as you used to. And Martha will do just as well as either of you—even better, I suspect—when Ernestine goes off to Smith this autumn."

"Go ahead and rub," said Anne, lying on her stomach and drying her eyes on the pillowcase.

"You don't think I want a bunch of spinsters around the house, scolding me because the dusting isn't done properly, do you?" Mother asked, rubbing.

"You really don't?"

"And you don't think I want to support you forever, do you?" Mother teased.

"Well, naturally, I thought you'd want me to get a job."

"If you had a job, you wouldn't be any help running the house," said Mother, emphasizing her logic by slapping her where she sat down. "Why, I'll be tickled to death to get rid of you."

"I wouldn't blame you if you were," Anne sighed. "I honestly wouldn't."

"But I do think it would be best to wait until you graduate. Just to set an example to the other children, for one thing."

Anne said that waiting a year wouldn't be anything. It was waiting fifteen that had her worried.

"I wouldn't even ask you to wait that long, but you know how much your father wanted all of you to finish college," Mother explained. "I guess it's something I promised myself I'd do for him."

"And you're sure you're not going to need me at home?"

"It's a mistake ever to think of yourself as indispensable," said Mother, rubbing, and slapping her in the same place again. "Why don't you telephone him and ask him if he can't spend the rest of the holidays with us? We'd all like to meet him."

ANNE leaped from the bed. "I sure will," she shouted. "Why, he'll pack up in a minute and —— Wait a minute. You're not trying to give him the Al Lynch treatment, are you?" she asked suspiciously.

"Not unless he brings a ukulele."

"He's not like that. You'll see."

We called him Doctor Bob, to distinguish him from our own Bob. We couldn't decide whether we liked him or not, at first, because he was quiet until you got to know him. He had a conservative black Ford coupé, with Michigan license plates, and he dressed like a businessman rather than a college boy.

Frank and Bill had moved out of their room again, and doubled up with Fred and Dan. When Doctor Bob found out about that, he made Frank move back with him.

"For the last ten years I've been living in fraternity houses and hospitals," he said. "I wouldn't feel at home in a room all by myself. And there's no need for you four to be crowded up like that."

The bathtub maneuver, with Frank masquerading as a girl, had worked so well on Al that the boys had considered trying it on Doctor Bob. But after he relieved the congestion in Fred and Dan's room, they decided to drop the whole idea.

"It wouldn't work on him anyway," Bill explained. "If anyone walked in on him, he wouldn't mind. He'd probably say, 'Hi, sis,' and go right on washing."

Tom stood in some awe of Anne's fiancé, since he was a doctor, although a young one. But the awe was not sufficient to prevent Tom from giving him a piece of his mind one night, when he found Doctor Bob sitting on his kitchen table.

NOREEN really does what you' always wanted a color rinse to Noreen colors are safe, natural-appeari yet non-permanent. They give new, and chanting beauty to your hair.

A COLOR Additive, Noreen adds fre bountiful, temporary color that will be tify and glamorize any shade of hair.

To blend in UNWANTED gray in gray hair, Noreen will effectively blend in the gray in g ing hair without "that dyed look." With Noreen you now achieve rinse results you never believed poss

Beauty for gray and white hair, too! No enhances the natural beauty of white and gray with light, medium or dark tones of pure, silvery

And remember... longer-lasting Noreen le the hair soft, lustrou so easy-to-manage.

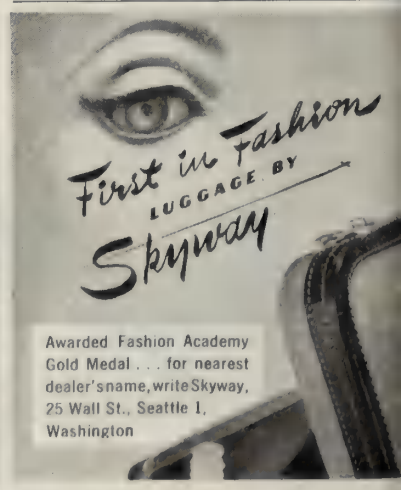
FOR YOUR ADD CONVENIENCE

...Noreen Rinse ca applied smoothly, ev and conveniently in 3 Minutes by using Noreen Color Applic

at LEADING COSMETIC COUNTERS

14 Colorful Shades
15¢ - 30¢ - 60¢ Sizes (PLUS TAX)
Noreen Color Applicator, 40¢
Satisfaction Guaranteed

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN



© 1950

Until the applicator is available in every store will accommodate by direct mail. Send 40c to

NOREEN, 446 Lincoln Street, Denver 9, Color

BERLOU
GUARANTEED
MOTHSPRAY STOPS MOTH DAMAGE FOR 5 YEARS or Berlou pays the damage

Get BERLOU at Drug, Department, Hardware, Furniture, Rug and Carpet Stores. BERLOU MOTHPROOFING SERVICE is available at leading Laundries, Rug and Dry Cleaners. Write Dept. 26 for free booklet: "How to Stop Moth Damage." BERLOU MFG. CO., Marion, O. Also: The Berlou Co., Ltd. London, Canada.

Tom was particular about the table. It as his office, and it symbolized something iat was exclusively his. He ate off it, kept s tools on it, and maintained a bed for ourteen under it. Although Tom often eaned chickens and skinned squirrels on s table, none of us was allowed to place ıything unsanitary upon it, particularly ırselves.

Anne was preparing a midnight meal after ıe movies, and Doctor Bob was watching om the table, when Tom came down from s room to get a pitcher of ice water.

"My table," Tom gasped. "Get your ıey offen there."

"Don't pay any attention to him, Bob," nne blushed. "He does that to everybody."

"I have to eat my food offen there, you ıow," Tom screamed.

"You're not dealing with children any ıore," Anne told him furiously. "You go ack to your room and be quiet."

"I quit," Tom shouted, reaching behind im in a familiar gesture to untie his apron, ut finding only the rear of his bathrobe. Let your mother find someone else to do all ıe dirty work around here."

"Wait a minute," said Doctor Bob, sliding ff the table, "I'll sit in a chair. There's othing to get excited about."

Tom seized a dishrag and a bar of soap, nd scrubbed the table officiously. "I wouldn't ıind if I didn't eat offen here," he kept mumling. "It's bad enough having members of ıe immedjate family sitting on it."

"I don't blame you," sympathized Doctor ob, who had heard from Anne about Tom's leas concerning his own illnesses. "A man ho's been through what you've been through ın't be too careful about erms."

"That's right," Tom greed, somewhat mollied. "But nobody around ere don't consider that. ow did you know?"

"Come over here in the ght." Doctor Bob spread pen one of Tom's eyes and peered into . "Now open your mouth and say 'ah.'"

Tom opened his mouth and said it.

"Clear history of pleurisy. You're in good ape now, but watch the germs. If you ever el an attack coming on, there's an old edicine on the market that's better than ıy of the new things. It's called ——"

"Quinine Remedy," Tom beamed.

Doctor Bob nodded sagely.

"Yes, sir," said Tom, sucking in his omach, and spreading newspapers over his ble. "You can sit up here now, doctor, if s more comfortable."

"I'm all right here in the chair."

"Come on, sir," Tom begged. "Make urself comfortable."

Doctor Bob climbed back on the table.

"For Pete's sake," Anne said incredously. "You're the first one he's let do at since Dad died."

"I don't mind when there's papers on the ble," Tom explained patiently. "I used to read out papers for your father too. I got eat offen there, you know."

"You can't be too careful," Doctor Bob reed.

Y the second day of Doctor Bob's visit, l of us had decided we wanted him as a ember of the family. So much so that we gan to take precautions to make certain nne wouldn't lose him.

Frank, Bill and Fred drew up a schedule d stood watch in the mornings, so that no e would make any noise and awaken octor Bob. Frank had the duty on the cond floor, Bill on the first, and Fred outde his window. Tom fixed special desserts r him, and was always sending milk and ndwiches up to his room.

Some mornings, when he was up before nne, he'd play baseball with the boys or ke the girls riding in his car.

"Are you sure you're having a good time?" e'd ask him. "Would you like us to call nne now? She's slept long enough. Ordirily, she's up with the birds, doing all the ousework."

"No, that's all right. Let her sleep."

"And, boy, is she a good cook!"

"I'll bet," he'd grin.

"Is there anything we can get you? How about another cup of coffee?"

"No, thanks. I'm doing fine."

Anne finally complained about it to Mother. "He's going to think they're all dying to get rid of me," she moaned.

"He's got more sense than that," Mother said.

"It used to be, when I had a fellow over, that I couldn't get rid of the kids. They'd be all over me, or hiding under the sofa, or peeking through the keyhole, or making loud sounds of kisses every time anyone tried to hold my hand."

"I know it," Mother sympathized. "And your father used to egg them on. I used to speak to him about it."

"I KNOW you did. I'm not blaming you. But I'll swear all that was better than what they do now. When we walk into a room now, they all nudge each other, when they think we're not looking, and then get up and leave. It's almost indecent."

Mother shook her head and tried not to smile. "They're the limit," she agreed.

"They invent all kinds of excuses about why they have to leave. The lamest you ever heard—and they expect him to swallow them. Like it's high time they taped the handle of their baseball bat. Or they'd better go check and see whether Fourteen has had kittens. Or they promised Tom they'd help him sift the ashes."

"It's hard to be the oldest," Mother agreed.

"If Bob and Jane don't get the hint, the others pick them up bodily and carry them out. And then Frank and Bill mumble something about saving electricity, and go around switching out the lights. My shins are all barked up from bumping into things in the dark."

"It just means the children like Doctor Bob," Mother said. "It's a compliment to him, really, dear."

"But suppose," Anne groaned, "he gets the idea that all that business of turning off the lights has been going on with every boy I've ever had over here before?"

Doctor Bob liked children and knew how to talk with them. Bob and Jane started following him around the house, and wouldn't go to bed at night unless he'd come up and tuck them in. Although we tried to keep them out of the way, they started begging to be taken along when he and Anne went out in his car in the afternoons. Bob would sit between Doctor Bob and Anne in the front seat of the coupé, and Jane would sit on Anne's lap. We were horrified, but the two youngest wouldn't listen to reason.

"I give up," Anne told her fiancé on one such afternoon excursion. She adjusted Jane on her lap. "Either they're in our hair, like right now, or they're tiptoeing around turning out lights."

"I don't mind it either way," her Bob chuckled. "Except I never saw a house where they had more baseball bats to tape or more ashes —— Look, Bobby," he said, pointing out his window. "See the choo-choo train?"

"Where?" said Bob, leaning across him. "Where, Doctor Bob?"

"We just passed it. Look out the back window, and you'll see it."

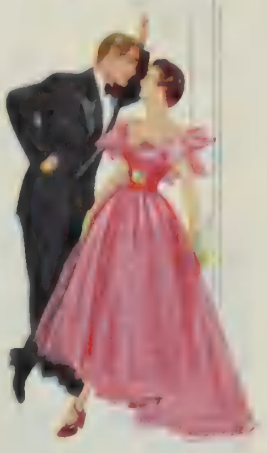
Bob stood up on the seat and then, so he could get a better view, stood on Doctor Bob's thigh. "Choo, choo, choo," he said. "Big son of a gun, isn't it, Doctor Bob?"

"It sure is. One of the biggest."

"At one time," said Anne, "I was silly enough to think that by the time I was engaged I might occasionally ride in an automobile without holding children in my lap. I used to have dreams, when I was a little girl, of sitting up front and having a whole half seat all to myself. I used to dream —— Look, Janey, see the horsy?"

"Where, Anne? I don't see the horsy."

"We just passed it," said Anne, holding her up so she could look out the back window.



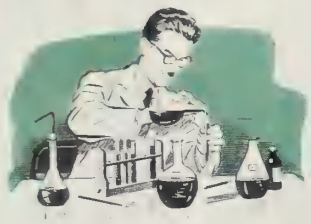
Socialism will be possible only when we are all perfect; and then it will not be necessary. —BISHOP CREIGHTON.

And—

New tests by leading skin specialists PROVE the amazing mildness of Cashmere Bouquet on all types of skin!

Yes, in laboratory tests conducted under severest conditions on normal, dry and oily skin types . . . Cashmere Bouquet Soap was proved amazingly mild! So use Cashmere Bouquet regularly in your daily bath and for your complexion, too. It will leave your skin softer, smoother . . . flower-fresh and younger looking! The lingering, romantic fragrance of Cashmere Bouquet comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes, far costlier than you would expect to find in any soap. Fastidious women cherish Cashmere Bouquet for this "fragrance men love".

Cashmere Bouquet



—In a New Bath Size Cake, Too!

New weapons help fight

ARTHRITIS

RECENT MEDICAL discoveries have brought new hope to the seven million people in our country who have arthritis and other rheumatic diseases.

Medical science is definitely on the march against these afflictions. For example, experiments with many new substances have shown great promise in test cases, even though they have not as yet been completely verified on a broad scale. These substances, however, are very scarce and at present are available only for research purposes and for limited use in treatment in certain hospitals.

Even without such substances, doctors today know more than ever before about arthritis and how to treat it. They also know that one of the big problems is to get people to have prompt medical attention in the early stages of the disease.

Too often those with arthritis rely on so-called "sure cures" which may temporarily relieve pain but generally do little or nothing to correct the fundamental situation. According to the Arthritis and Rheumatism Foundation, if proper treatment is started early, about 60 percent of the arthritis patients can be greatly helped and in some cases completely relieved.

There are many different forms of arthritis. The two most common are rheumatoid arthritis which usually begins before age 40, and osteoarthritis which is found most often in people past middle age. Using approved diagnostic methods, including a complete physical examination, the doctor can usually determine what type of arthritis is present and prescribe the treatment best suited to the patient's individual needs.

Among other things, the doctor may recommend bringing the weight down to normal. Even as little as 10 or 15 pounds of extra weight may appreciably increase the pain of arthritis, especially in the weight-bearing joints. He may also suggest following a nutritious but moderate daily diet, maintaining proper posture, and paying careful attention to daily hygiene.

While great strides have been made in treating the disease, medical research is continuing its efforts to develop more effective weapons against the many forms of arthritis. Today, doctors believe that the future holds real hope for the millions of people with this condition.

For other helpful information about the disease, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, entitled "Arthritis."

COPYRIGHT 1950—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
1 Madison Avenue,
New York 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of the free booklet, 100J, "Arthritis."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Doctor Bob reached over and squeezed Anne's hand. Her diamond solitaire picked up a piece of the sun and sparkled.

They were married in September of the following year, after Anne had received her diploma. The wedding was at our house. At Anne's insistence, Mother herself gave the bride away. The minister of our church in Montclair, who was to officiate at most of our weddings and a dozen or so christenings of Mother's grandchildren, performed the ceremony.

The minister had children of his own, and a good deal of poise. He wasn't upset when Lillian and Fred blundered into the room that had been assigned to him, while he was slipping into his vestments. And he chuckled, along with everyone else, when young Bob jumped onto Anne's train and brought the wedding procession to a faltering halt.

It was a happy wedding, but we felt sorry for Mother. We thought we knew what was running through her mind. Anne was the first to leave the fold. Ernestine and Martha would probably be next. How would Mother get along with a family of only eight children? How would she feel when all of the children, even Jane, had married and left home?

Poor Mother, we thought. Poor, poor Mother.

Tom watched the ceremony from the back of the crowd, occasionally producing a none-too-clean handkerchief to dab at his eyes. When it was over, he pushed his way up to Anne, fished in his pocket, and handed her twenty crumpled one-dollar bills.

"If he ain't good to you," he said, "I want you to buy a ticket and come home."

Anne looked for a minute as if she might lean over and kiss him, but Tom went into his fighter's crouch, weaving and making fierce faces.

"If he don't behave hisself," said Tom, "let him have the left like I learned you, and follow it with the right, like this."

He feinted twice at Doctor Bob, who made believe he was baffled and completely helpless under the onslaught.

"If I find him with so much as an elbow on my kitchen table," Anne promised, "I'm sending for you."

IT wasn't until Anne and Doctor Bob got their suitcases and started for their coupé that Jane and Bob realized the newlyweds were going away on a trip.

"Take us with you, Doctor Bob," they begged, lunging for his legs. "You haven't taken us for a ride all day."

He lifted up Jane and kissed her, and looked helplessly at Anne.

"No, sir," said Anne, trying to disentangle them. "Not on our honeymoon. On that I positively draw the line."

Martha had contacts, although she never went out of her way to develop them. She knew the mayor, the mayor's secretary, librarians, store managers, motormen, policemen, delivery boys and firemen.

With Anne married and Ernestine at Smith, Martha took charge of the household when Mother was away on business, and stretched the budget farther than it ever had gone before. Without spending any more money, she saw to it that each of us got a few more of the things he wanted.

MARTHA ran the house in the same manner that she performed her schoolwork—effortlessly and efficiently, but without pretense of perfection. She saw to it that the necessary and important things got done. And she refused to allow the unnecessary or unimportant ones to cause her any concern.

If she could settle for a B or a C in a school subject, she saw no point in slaving for an A. Of course, if an A came naturally—and occasionally one did—so much the better.

Likewise, if we swept and dusted the house in the mornings, she saw no reason to nag if we sometimes forgot to wipe our feet or hang up our overcoats when we got home from school in the afternoons. Besides, sometimes she wasn't too careful about wiping her own feet, or hanging up her own overcoat.

Martha's contacts in Montclair made things easier for all of us. She'd get the grocer's delivery boy to stop by the hardware store to pick up something we had bought. She'd ask the men who drove the city's snowplows if they'd mind taking a few minutes to clear our driveway. If Tom were sick, she'd get the milkman to help Frank and Bill carry the furnace ashes from the basement to the yard.

People seemed to like doing things for her, and Martha didn't mind helping them. She knew whom to call if a streetlight were broken, or if the garbage man had forgotten to come by our block, or if a rabid dog were reported in the neighborhood. Mother, and even the neighbors, began to depend on her when they wanted something done in the city.

Once when Mother was out of town, a sleet storm broke the power lines and the utility company said service couldn't be restored for twenty-four hours. Martha called the fire chief and asked him what to do.

"With all the children we have in the house," she told him, "I thought it might be

(Continued on Page 84)

you can SEE the difference

The fog lifts . . . the strain vanishes . . . you see a different world! One simple stroke sweeps away the frowns, wrinkles, headaches . . . the fumbling and fretting . . . the snubbing of friends you just couldn't see.

How many of us stumble through life taking our seeing for granted! We simply do not know the difference between the way we see now, and the way we could see, if we gave our eyes a chance to see with all the sharpness and brilliance of which they are capable.

That is why an eyesight examination is of such immense value.

It is a golden key to a new world of vibrant beauty, health and achievement . . . a shining pathway to the knowledge, culture and enjoyment in books, movies, television.

All eyes change with age . . . weaken with time. Keep an eye on your eyes. See your ophthalmologist, optometrist, ophthalmic dispenser (optician) regularly. It pays.

The effort is small, the reward immeasurable... Better Living through Better Vision.

BETTER VISION INSTITUTE, INC., 630 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 20, NEW YORK

MOTION PICTURE . . . the Institute's new 16mm, two-reel, educational, color-sound film: WONDERLAND OF VISION . . . available for bookings without charge to educational, civic, business, industrial, fraternal and social groups. Write for particulars.

EYE CARE

Nothing you buy gives you so much, yet costs you so little

BVI

© 1950 Better Vision Institute Inc.

hing is too good for the only eyes you will ever have... From 2000 lbs. of "glass ck," emerge only 45 lbs. of finished first quality lenses... Employing 363 technical and professional skills plus over 200 painstaking operations to make a flawless mounting... rigid quality control that means... insurance for your precious vision!

Eaton's famous Highland Linen in 5 fashionable tints—all in one limited edition box

Highland Linen has always been Eaton's most famous paper. Your grandmother probably used it in Always-Correct-White. Now YOU, who love personality and color in your letter paper can have it in fashion's dress . . . delectable tints . . . all five of them in this one special, beautiful box. Imagine! Five tints of this altogether perfect writing paper, fabricked as to surface, perfect as to size, and in the most luscious tints: Dawn Pink, Mist Blue, Tender Green, Kitten Grey, Pure White.

Mix or match, pick your favorite . . . you'll always be able to get more of Eaton's Highland Linen in the color you love best.

NOW in Stationery Departments everywhere . . . this special box. But hurry! . . . at $1 this limited edition won't last long!

Eaton's fine Letter Papers

PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

A good gift for Anyone at Anytime

(Continued from Page 82)

a fire hazard to have them stumbling around in the dark striking matches."

A fire truck pulled into the driveway a few minutes later with six electric lanterns, on loan to Martha. She had a vacuum bottle of coffee ready to send back to the station to the chief.

Martha studied the budget periodically to see just where the money went, and to see if she could fix it so that less of it went there. If she couldn't figure out a way herself, she'd call the person who was getting the money, and ask him.

For instance, there was the matter of haircuts. As Martha pointed out, it was a relatively small item, but one that recurred. She telephoned the owner of the barbershop frequented by the boys, and explained her problem. She pointed out that, since we had six boys, we had to spend more money on haircuts than most families—that it usually came to at least three dollars a month. She wondered whether there was any way he could give us a special rate. And if it wouldn't pay him to make us a rate, did he know anybody who was just opening a shop, and needed the business, who might be willing to do so?

The barber said he never had given special rates before, but that he wouldn't mind doing it provided the boys didn't come on week ends or after five o'clock in the afternoons, when business was heaviest.

Money saved on transactions such as that was available for luxuries. If any of us wanted anything badly enough, and it didn't cost too much, Martha would try to get it, and still keep within the budget. If she turned us down, we could always go to Mother, who usually would see that we got what we wanted whether the budget could afford it or not. But Martha, ordinarily easygoing, became furious when any of us worried Mother about money matters. And we found it was advisable, if we were going to expect favors from Martha in the future, not to go over her head.

Whenever possible, and if the price were right, we did business with the United Cigar Store, which gave out coupons and certificates with each sale. The cigar store had a catalogue of premiums that included almost everything any of us wanted.

There were such items as a Genuine Cowhide, Jet Black, Positively Guaranteed, Big League Catcher's Mitt, for 415 certificates. And the catalogue said that in addition to the mitt, a regulation baseball would be given away absolutely free, for a limited time only, to boys taking advantage of this amazing offer.

FIVE yellow coupons equaled one green certificate, and we kept them in separate cigar boxes on Martha's dresser. Every couple of weeks, she'd call us into her room and we'd count what we had, putting rubber bands around each hundred coupons and each twenty certificates, and then figuring how long we'd have to wait until we had enough of them to redeem.

Tom was a chain smoker, and usually bought his cigarettes by the pack, at whatever store happened to be handy. He was continually running out of them, and borrowing from the men who were taking Mother's course, or smoking butts he found in the ash trays.

Martha started buying cartons of his brand, at the United Cigar Store, and leaving them in the pantry. Whenever Tom took a pack, he'd put an I O U in the carton, and settle up with Martha on payday.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Country Cemetery

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

Quiet lies the town
Where all men go to rest;
The blue sky clear above them,
Good earth about them pressed.

The old, the child, the lover
Have all found peace at last.
Against the heat of living
The gates of time are fast.

This is the place where pathways
Are printless night and day,
And all the silent footsteps
Go gently, all one way.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"I never thought you'd try to make mo off of me, like in a company store," grumble as he paid his bills.

But Martha pointed out that she was ing him the cigarettes at cost—and tha was saving money by getting the carton r All she wanted was the certificates.

Tom really was pleased by the convenie of Martha's "canteen," but he went ou his way to check and recheck her addit and to question the authenticity of I O U's.

"That don't look like my writing," say. "Where's that magnifying glass a Then, after he had paid with seeming luctance and twice counted his change, add, "Give me them I O U's so I can them up. I think some of these were the s ones you charged me for last week."

MOTHER'S students found out about supply of smokes, and began patronizing pantry. Later, Martha started stock razor blades, another item Tom usually got to buy.

The first premium we obtained with certificates was a Mother's Day present ornate bedside lamp with a bright-and- switch. Mother used to say that Moth Day was a ridiculous occasion, and that a one who felt he had to give his female pa a special present, day a year, must trying to atone for days of previous lect. We thoug though, she was tel us that so we woul feel bad because couldn't afford p ents.

It took 650 cer cates for the la Mother was star when we presente to her. But when found that we ha spent our allowa for it, or dip into the budget, was as pleased a she had inver Mother's Day her

"When I think you children sa those certificates months, just so y have something give me ——"

"You don't believe we're atoning for o days of neglect, do you, Mother?" Lil asked her anxiously.

"No, I don't think that, dear," Mother, and her voice broke. "I know long you've been saving those certifica and counting them at night, and . . . we don't think there was anything to atone f

After that we got the catcher's mitt electric toaster, ice skates and skis, a c rette lighter for Tom, and a bottle cap

Martha decided on the bottle cappe that the younger children could make t own soft drinks. The budget, in the p hadn't been able to include root beer or ger ale. But Martha knew the children w fond of soda pop, and would like to have the icebox to serve their friends. It still out of the question for us to buy soft dr at a store, because a case would have dis peared in a single afternoon. But if the c dren could make the drinks at home, the would be negligible.

Old gin, rye, White Rock, sirup and blu bottles were rounded up from the neighb basements, washed thoroughly, and t boiled in a tub on the kitchen stove. Som the labels wouldn't come off, but we figu the bottles were clean on the insides.

Sugar was added to root-beer extr which in turn was poured into a vat of s mering water. Then a little yeast was add and the mixture poured into the bott After the caps were applied, the bottles w stored in the basement for a week, and t were ready to drink.

The children thought, and so did t friends, that the root beer was the pee

(Continued on Page 87)

Be Happy Go Lucky!

I like to throw a tricky curve,
But this I'll tell you straight –
The strike that I like best of all
Is Lucky Strike – it's great!

Enjoy your cigarette! Enjoy truly fine tobacco that combines both perfect mildness and rich taste in one great cigarette – Lucky Strike!

Perfect mildness? You bet. Scientific tests, confirmed by three independent consulting laboratories, prove that Lucky Strike is milder than any other principal brand. Rich taste? Yes, the full, rich taste of truly fine tobacco.

Only fine tobacco gives you both real mildness and rich taste. And Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. So enjoy the happy blending that combines perfect mildness with a rich, true tobacco taste. Be Happy—Go Lucky!

L.S./M.F.T.–Lucky Strike Means Fine Tobacco

COPR., THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

Luckies are my favorite brand
At home or on the range.
When she finds a smoke like this
A gal's a fool to change!

I carry letters all day long
As happy as can be.
But the letters that I really love
Are L.S./M.F.T.!

Here's the girl who has tried almost every home permanent that ever was. "And the others are good, too!" says Mary Martin. "Only I found that a Rayve wave really does leave my hair softer . . . shinier . . . more naturally curly looking. My hair couldn't be healthier, either. Rayve is really very, very easy on your hair."

This is Mary Martin (privately, Mrs. Richard Halliday) and her 8-year-old daughter, Heller Halliday. Heller wears pigtails—sometimes up, sometimes down. But on top, there's always a fluffy bang of Rayve curls.

MARY MARTIN
of the all-time hit "South Pacific"
says:

I've found me a wonderful wave

"Have you seen 'South Pacific'? Then you've seen for yourself how naturally curly my Rayve wave acts!" says Mary Martin. "Remember my shampoo on stage? Yet ten minutes later, my hair and I are both dressed for the party scene! There are only seconds for a brushing!"

You'll find that a Rayve Home Permanent leaves your hair soft, too—"naturally" curly. And as shiny and healthy-looking as if you'd been using a hair-conditioner!

Do her 8 on-stage shampoos every week take out Mary Martin's wave? "Heavens no!" she exclaims. "You can't wash Rayve curls out! Mine last—just like new—until I cut them off!"

"I have to cut off practically a half inch a week, my hair grows so fast. So every 3 weeks we start work with a Rayve Refill," says Mary Martin cheerfully. "Yet with all these permanents, my hair seems to have every bit as much natural oil as ever." Once you see Mary Martin's pretty hair close up, you see it's true.

Mary Martin says, "Heller's hair is very fine. As every mother knows, it's hard for any little girl to be kept looking neat with straight, fine hair. Without Rayve curls, loose ends would appear! But, Rayved, Heller goes to school and comes home hours later, almost as neat as when she left!"

Rayve Refill, $1 (use any plastic curlers)

Complete Rayve wave kit, $2 (with 60 plastic curlers)

Money-Back Guarantee! Yes, your money back if you don't agree with Mary Martin that a Rayve Home Permanent gives the softest, most natural wave you've ever had at any price.

(Continued from Page 84)

y that came from the store. A new batch as made every couple of weeks, and finally sort of assembly-line technique was deloped, with two children washing bottles the basement, two boiling bottles on the ove, and two mixing the brew. The empty ottles then were lined up around the stove, nd the mixture siphoned into them through rubber tube. We could make a couple hundred bottles of root beer in less than rty minutes, and from that time on the asement always contained a batch that as ready to drink, and another batch that as aging.

Fortunately, Tom liked root beer, so there as no objection from him about dirtying up s kitchen. But as the weeks passed he said was getting mighty tired of the same old avor.

The next time we made root beer, he sugested that we leave about a gallon of the ixture on the stove, so that he could change e flavor to suit his taste. Tom added a ackage of prunes, a cup of sugar and a whole east cake to the brew. Then he boiled it for alf an hour, before siphoning it into the reaining bottles.

"I'm putting my name in chalk on these re bottles," he told us. "Don't nobody uch them, because don't know how 's going to turn it. I'm going to ave them stand x months, and see ow the flavor is."

"You're sure ou're not trying make yourself me kind of homerew?" Frank anted to know.

"Who, me?" om asked piously. There's a law ainst that."

There was a law ainst it, all right. it after a day off West Orange, om in the past had metimes returned the house smellg strongly of someing that wasn't ot beer.

Cousin Leora wasn't really a cousin, which as something to be thankful for. Her family d Mother's had been close friends and ighbors in Oakland, and she had married d moved east about the same time that other had.

She was plump, soft, bejeweled and insitive. None of us liked her, and Dad had spised her. He said she was a bloated one, and that if the Bolsheviks ever took er—which wouldn't surprise him—she'd be the top of their purge list.

Cousin Leora's husband wisely had given the ghost within a year of their wedding y. It was an action we felt sure he never gretted, although his worldly goods had en considerable. Left a widow with a able fortune, which flowed through her gers like flypaper, she lived by herself an apartment in New York.

ER visits to our house had become fairly quent since Dad's death. Since she liked quiz us about family affairs, she usually me when Mother was out of town. Invarily she arrived while we were eating supper. d, almost invariably, it would happen to the one night of the week when we were ying on leftovers.

Once she had written Grosie, Mother's other in Oakland, that she doubted if we re getting enough to eat. As a result, other had had a series of anxious telephone lls from Grosie asking if everything was right, and if we needed money. The calls d upset Mother so much that all of us ed to act particularly well disciplined and ll fed when Cousin Leora came to call.

A few months after we started to make our n root beer, Cousin Leora dropped in one night just as we had sat down to the table. Tom saw her chauffeur wheel the limousine into our driveway, and rushed into the dining room to spread the alarm.

"Everybody quiet down and behave hisself," Tom shouted. "It's the fat old snoop from New York."

"Not," gasped Martha, clutching her head, "Cousin Leora! How could she know this is hash night?"

"I think she likes my secret receipt," Tom said proudly. "I believe Old Snoop can smell my hash all the way acrost the Hudson."

"OPEN some cans of vegetables," Martha hollered as she dashed into the front hall to hang up overcoats and to kick arctics and ice skates into a closet. "And everybody pick up his dishes and put on a Sunday tablecloth."

Cousin Leora entered the hall without ringing the bell.

"Why, look who's here," Martha cooed. "Cousin Leora! What a lovely surprise. I do hope you'll stay for supper."

Cousin Leora would stay, provided she wouldn't be depriving the dear children of their food. Martha took her things, and by the time they entered the dining room the table was reset on a linen cloth.

Mother had spoken that afternoon in Philadelphia, and still hadn't got home. But we were expecting her shortly, and Tom was keeping her dinner warm. Cousin Leora didn't seem displeased by Mother's absence. In fact, we thought we detected a gleam of satisfaction in her eyes.

"Your dear mother's hardly ever home anymore, is she?" Cousin Leora began as Frank helped her into her chair.

"She's here almost every day," Martha said. "She has her motion-study course right here in the house, you know. I think this is the first time she's been away in a month or more."

"I see," our guest nodded, setting in motion a series of chins which broke like waves on the expansive beachhead of her bosom. But she pursed her lips and made it plain she didn't believe a word of it.

"I'm afraid," Martha stumbled, "we're having hash again tonight. You always seem to have the bad luck of picking a hash night."

"Hash seems good to me, after all that rich food we've been having," said Frank, trying to help out.

"There, there, dears," Cousin Leora comforted us. "You don't have to make excuses to me. I'm practically one of the family. I know things have been difficult since your father passed away."

"Not that difficult," Martha smiled weakly, trying to remember that she mustn't act undisciplined. "We had roast pork last night, and meat loaf the night before that."

"I'm sure you did, dear." Cousin Leora pursed her lips again.

"If she's sure we did," Fred whispered to Dan, "why does she make an ugly face like that?"

Cousin Leora had good ears, and she didn't miss much. "Gentlemen don't whisper at the table," she reproved Fred. "I said I was sure you did, and I was not aware that I made an ugly face."

"I'm sorry," Fred apologized. "But we did. Ask anybody."

Martha wanted to side with Fred, but even more she wanted to prevent Mother's being upset by any new telephone calls from California.

(Continued on Page 90)

NEXT MONTH

IT wasn't that Charis was lonely, exactly—she had grown up on the island and she loved the lush scented acres that went down to the sea. But now, at twenty-one, her father was the only white man she had ever seen, and a restless, insistent ache inside of her would not let her be. That was before the plane bearing the two strangers came down in the bay . . . the plane that changed everything—even her father. Read

A BREATH OF AIR

By Rumer Godden

first of three parts, beginning in the November JOURNAL

Small wonder more women use Dorothy Gray creams than any other salon creams in America! For at Dorothy Gray, not the whim of a single cosmetician, but the combined know-how of many beauty scientists creates cosmetics you can trust.

Trust Dorothy Gray

For skin as lovely as yours can be... follow this famous "Rule of Three"

1. Cleanse. Dry skin? For you, wonderfully effective Dry-Skin Cleanser. For normal skin there's luxurious Salon Cold Cream. If your skin is oily, it needs the beauty-cleansing ritual of Cleansing Cream (Liquefying). Priced from $1 to $4.

2. Stimulate. Both dry and normal skins take on a glowing, younger appearance from patting with Orange Flower Skin Lotion. Oily skin gets the same stimulating "lift" from Texture Lotion. Priced from $1 to $3.75.

3. Lubricate. If skin is either dry or normal, coax it to a more perfect softness and smoothness with Special Dry-Skin Mixture. $2.25 to $8. If oily—yes, oily skins do need lubrication—smooth in that very special Suppling Cream. $1 to $2.75.

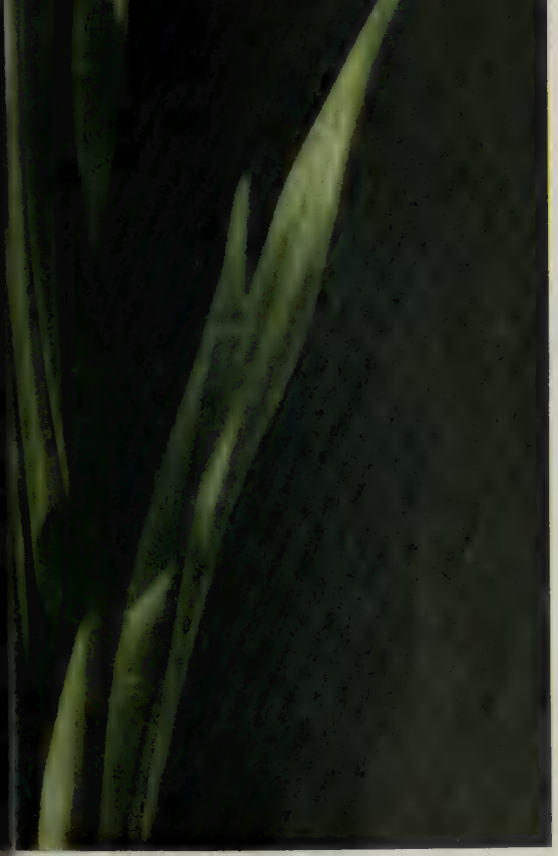
All prices plus tax

If you are over thirty . . .

Madame, are your birthdays showing? Then it's time for you to discover Dorothy Gray Cellogen Cream . . . with its natural hormone content of 10,000 international units per ounce . . . with the quicker results that make it an every day "must" for so many women! It's revelation-ary! Try it.

CELLOGEN CREAM. Thirty-day supply, $3.50. Large, 4-oz. economy size, $5. CELLOGEN LOTION, 4-oz. (for neck, arms, elbows) $5. HORMONE HAND CREAM, 4-oz. $2. All prices plus tax.

Theatre Suit by Pauline Trigere



1847 Rogers Bros. brings you a joyous new pattern—

To the young in years—and the young in heart—1847 Rogers Bros. presents "Daffodil." A new pattern with a lilt, a grace, a fresh, singing enchantment that will win you on sight!

Look at it—feel it—balance it. Did you ever see such slender, curving beauty in flatware—such charming perfection in tea set, tray, or bowl?

Actually, though "Daffodil" is new, it reflects more than a century of splendid silver craftsmanship. And like all proud 1847 Rogers Bros. patterns, it boasts a perfection of detail and balance, an enduring loveliness.

See this newest 1847 Rogers Bros. triumph! You'll love it. You'll want it. And every time you set your table gleaming with "Daffodil," you'll fall in love all over again!

YOUR TABLE WILL BLOOM... with "Daffodil," in these graceful pieces. 3-pc. coffee set, with waiter, $125.00. Well-and-tree platter, $18.50. Vegetable dish, $15.00. Gravy set, $15.00. Buffet tray, $10.00, Plus Fed. Tax.

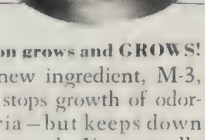
52-pc. set—complete service for 8. Includes 8 knives, 8 forks, 16 teaspoons, 8 soup spoons, 8 salad forks, 2 tablespoons, 1 butter knife, 1 sugar spoon. Only $69.75, with mahogany tarnish resistant chest. No Fed. tax. Easy terms at your silverware retailer's.

COPYRIGHT 1950, THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO., MERIDEN, CONN.

1847 ROGERS BROS. America's Finest Silverplate

Good, Good, GOOD... this Deodorant News!

New finer Mum more effective longer!



NOW CONTAINS AMAZING NEW INGREDIENT M-3—THAT PROTECTS AGAINST ODOR-CAUSING BACTERIA

New Protection! Let the magic of new Mum protect you—better, longer. For today's Mum, with wonder-working M-3, safely protects against bacteria that cause underarm perspiration odor. Mum never merely "masks" odor—simply doesn't give it a chance to start.

New Creaminess! Mum is softer, creamier than ever. As gentle as a beauty cream. Smooths on easily, doesn't cake. And Mum is non-irritating to skin because it contains no harsh ingredients. Will not rot or discolor finest fabrics.

New Fragrance! Even Mum's new perfume is special—a delicate flower fragrance created for Mum alone. This delightful cream deodorant contains no water to dry out or decrease its efficiency. Economical—no shrinkage, no waste.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Mum's protection grows and GROWS! Thanks to its new ingredient, M-3, Mum not only stops growth of odor-causing bacteria—but keeps down future bacteria growth. You actually build up protection with regular exclusive use of new Mum!

Now at your cosmetic counter!

New MUM cream deodorant

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

(Continued from Page 87)

"Whispering isn't polite, and Cousin Leora certainly wasn't making faces," she told Fred. "If you can't behave yourself, you'll have to leave the table and go without your supper."

"Goodness, don't take the food away from the poor child," Cousin Leora protested, in a tone indicating our rations were so scanty that missing a meal might bring on pellagra. "Perhaps it would be better if we change the subject. What do you hear from your grandmother, dear?"

"She's just fine," said Martha, welcoming the change and clinging to it tenaciously. "Yes, sir, just fine. Grosie is fit as a fiddle. She sure is."

"I've known your grandmother ever since I was a little girl. She's a lovely person, isn't she?"

"We certainly think so," Martha agreed. "We certainly do. They don't make them any sweeter than Grosie."

"And quite well off financially, isn't she? I suppose she's very generous."

"She sends us lovely presents," Martha nodded.

"But I know she must be generous in other ways too. Generous in making things easier for your Mother."

"She's certainly offered to make things easier," Martha nodded again.

"I thought she must have," Cousin Leora smirked. "With two girls in college and this big household to run . . . I suppose your Mother has had to rely on her rather heavily, hasn't she?"

"I guess you mean," Martha said as civilly as she could, "does Mother rely on her for money?"

"Of course, it's none of my business," Cousin Leora tittered nervously, "but your mother is such a dear friend of mine."

Fred leaned over when he thought no one was looking, and whispered something else to Dan, this time so quietly that no one at table heard.

"I saw that," Cousin Leora snapped. "What was that you said, young man?"

"Nothing, I guess," Fred mumbled.

"I want to know what you said. Speak up!"

"Do I have to tell her?" Fred asked Mart. "It's going to make her mad."

"I guess you'd better tell her." Martha nodded sympathetically.

"I said," Fred stuttered, looking at his plate, "if you're such a good friend of Mother's, why don't you ask her?"

Dan decided to give Fred what moral support he could. He made up his mind that since Cousin Leora was already convinced we didn't get enough to eat, he might as well give her something interesting to put in her letters to California.

"If Fred has to leave the table for whispering," Dan asked, "can I have his hash? I've lost more weight than anyone else this year."

Fred bared his teeth and growled in mock ferocity. "If you touch it, I'll bite you," he snarled.

"Goodness," said Cousin Leora.

"That's enough, boys," Martha warned sternly. "And if anybody gets the hash, I'm going to be the one. I'm the oldest, so I need the nourishment more than anyone else."

We heard Mother coming up the front steps then, and ran out to meet her. Bill took her coat and hat, and Tom brought in her plate from the kitchen. Mother said the speech in Philadelphia had gone fine, and that she was so glad, this time, not to miss Leora.

"I love hash," Mother announced enthusiastically, and partly for Tom's benefit, as she sat down at the table. "And I love to get home after a train ride. Well, what were you talking about when I came in?"

"Nothing much," Martha put in hastily. "Just chatter."

"As a matter of fact, Lillie," Cousin Leora told Mother darkly, "we were discussing whether this one"—she pointed a diamond studded finger at Fred—"should leave the table."

"Why, Freddy!" Mother said softly. "What did you do, dear?"

"I whispered," Fred admitted. "I didn't think anybody was looking."

"It's not polite to whisper," Mother announced, relieved that the offense hadn't been something more serious. "You know when I was a girl, and we whispered at the table, my father used to make us say it out loud. Sometimes," she laughed, "it was mighty embarrassing too."

"That's what Cousin Leora made me do," said Fred.

It all sounded rather gay to Mother—not serious at all. "And what were you whispering about?" she asked, laughing again.

"Harumph," Cousin Leora cleared her throat noisily.

"Well," said Fred, "she wanted to know if you got money ——"

"What group were you speaking to in Philadelphia, Lillie, dear?" Cousin Leora interrupted.

But Mother was listening to Fred. "Who wanted to know if I got money, Freddy?"

"Harumph, harumph," said Cousin Leora.

"Cousin Leora wanted to know if Grosie sent you any money, and I whispered that if she wanted to know that, she ought to ask you."

Nobody said anything for a minute. Our guest looked as if she had swallowed some of her hash the wrong way, and Mother stared at her with something that was part wonder and part contempt.

Mankind are very odd creatures: One half censure what they practice, the other half practice what they censure; the rest always say and do as they ought.

—BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

"I'm going to answer your question, Leora," Mother said finally. "I haven't been getting money from California. They've offered, of course. But so far I've been able to handle things by myself. And I think the worst of it is over."

Cousin Leora glared defiantly. We knew she never had liked us, and now we knew she didn't like Mother either. "You haven't been able to handle it," she spat out spitefully, "when your children don't even get enough to eat."

If she had sat down and rehearsed that speech from the day she had learned to talk she couldn't have come up with anything that would have made Mother any angrier. But Mother decided she wasn't going to lose her temper in front of her children. She felt around with her foot for the bell under the carpet, pressed it, and asked Tom to bring in the dessert. The left side of her mouth was twitching, or trembling—we couldn't be sure which. It was the first time we had ever seen it act that way.

Tom came in, heavy laden with a tray of chocolate blancmange. Perhaps it was the vibration of his footsteps; perhaps it was chance. At any rate, there was a booming house-shaking roar in the basement, followed by a metallic ping as something hit the basement ceiling directly below us.

Cousin Leora jumped out of her chair in terror, and even Mother dropped her fork.

"Earthquake," croaked Leora, who had been through the San Francisco one. And then much louder, "Earthquake!"

There were four more window-rattling roars, each followed by a ping, and then we heard something flowing and dripping, down below us.

"Listen at that," said Tom. "It ain't no earthquake. It ain't nothing to get excited about."

"What in the world is it then?" Mother demanded sharply.

"It ain't nothing but the children's beer."

"Mercy Maude," sighed Mother. "It gave me a start."

"The children's what?" shrieked Cousin Leora. "Did he say the children's beer?"

"Root beer," Mother explained, and the left side of her mouth was vibrating again. "They make it themselves."

(Continued on Page 92)

HERE'S EXCITING NEWS!

The first new kind of Girdle in 11 years!

Playtex® FAB-LINED Girdle

FABRIC NEXT TO YOUR SKIN

Slimming you naturally, smoothly, THE PLAYTEX FAB-LINED GIRDLE caresses you to new slenderness, keeps you cooler, more comfortable

With amazing Playtex figure-slimming power and freedom-of-action plus—fabric next to your skin!

You've never seen a girdle like this, never felt a girdle like this, never enjoyed such comfort in any girdle. It's a triumph of science—to fuse this new cloud-soft fabric lining to a natural latex sheath, in one smooth piece.

It's another secret Playtex process, accomplished without using a single seam, stitch or bone—without losing in any way the amazing Playtex all-way stretch or power-control.

Next to your skin, you'll say it's smooth as a veil of powder, airy as a cloud, soft as the touch of an angel. Yet miracle latex goes right on trimming the inches away as only latex can do—combining wonderful figure-slimming power with complete freedom of action.

It's years ahead of any other girdle in the world!

In SLIM golden tubes, PLAYTEX FAB-LINED GIRDLES . . . . . $4.95 to $5.95
In SLIM shimmering pink tubes, PLAYTEX PINK-ICE GIRDLES . . . $3.95 to $4.95
In SLIM silvery tubes, PLAYTEX LIVING GIRDLES . . . . . $3.50 to $3.95

Sizes: extra-small, small, medium, large: Extra-large size slightly higher
At all department stores and better specialty shops everywhere

INTERNATIONAL LATEX CORP'N.
Playtex Park ©1950 Dover Del.

Throwing a luncheon for the three-wheeler set? Give them a gobble-up, ask-for-seconds dessert and your party's a howling success. Serve real, genuine Minute Tapioca—creamy-rich and luscious, full of the milk-and-eggs wholesomeness so important to growing boys and girls. They'll love this:

Small-fry delight

Quick to fix...dreamy to eat...made the real Minute Tapioca way!

PEPPERMINT TAPIOCA CREAM

1 recipe Minute Tapioca Cream
½ cup crushed peppermint candy
Chocolate sauce or syrup

Prepare Minute Tapioca Cream according to package directions, adding peppermint candy to egg-yolk mixture before cooking. Cool pudding as directed. Serve with chocolate sauce. Makes 4 or 5 servings of the yummiest-tasting dessert ever dreamed up for pint-size guests. (No trouble getting them to eat milk and eggs with this peppermint delight—they'll scrape the bowl and beg for more!) It's thrifty and easy to prepare, too. For "country-kitchen" goodness no ready-made dessert can match, buy a box of real, genuine Minute Tapioca today!

REAL TAPIOCA! MINUTE BRAND TAPIOCA

FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS!

FREE! Wonderful New Recipe Book! Over 50 recipes for delicious Minute Tapioca dishes—creamy desserts, omelets, and soufflés that stand up, meat loaves that slice without crumbling, juicy fruit pies that don't run over, and many other chefs' secrets. Get your FREE copy—send your name and address to Minute Tapioca, Dept. V-5, Box 815, New York 46, N.Y.

Offer expires April 1, 1951. Good only in U. S. A.

A product of General Foods

(Continued from Page 90)

"Root beer," said the visitor, edging toward the hall, "doesn't explode. Only something with alcohol in it explodes. I don't think it's safe in here."

She opened the door to the hall, and an unmistakable aroma of alcohol permeated the dining room.

"So you've even let your children do that, have you?" she called over her shoulder as she went to get her wraps. She grabbed them and started for the front door. "I'm going to write your mother about you, Lillie Gilbreth."

The door slammed and two more bottles exploded. We heard gravel spatter as the limousine rolled out of the driveway.

Mother was simply furious. Psychologist and doctor of philosophy she might be. But now, just for once, both her psychology and her philosophy deserted her.

"Let her go ahead and write her, then," Mother mumbled. "See if I care. My folks have more sense than to believe anything like that. Let her go ahead and write a whole book. See if I care."

"Don't let her upset you, ma'am," said Tom. "She ain't nothing but a fat old snoop."

"Fat old snoop," Mother repeated, as if that was what she had been looking for. "Fat old ——" She glared at Tom, who started nervously dealing out the blancmange. "Let's hear from you," she said, and we had never heard her talk like that before. "Where did that alcohol smell come from?"

"All right, ma'am," Tom conceded, and he was gaping like the rest of us. "It must have been one of them bottles I put prunes in. Just to change the flavor, of course."

She asked Tom to step into the kitchen with her. She closed the door behind her, but we could hear the rise and fall of her voice. And then we heard Tom gasp and sob, and go up the back steps toward the attic, where his room was.

When Mother returned, she was pale and shaking. She wasn't furious any more. "I had to do it," she told us. "I had to let him go. I know how you feel about him, but that's simply the last straw. I have enough on my mind, when I leave you children alone, without worrying about something like that."

No one felt much like eating dessert, or talking. We knew it was Mother's decision to make, and we didn't blame her. But we thought there'd be an empty place in the house without Tom.

He didn't have many things to pack, and pretty soon we heard him come downstairs again, and then descend into the basement.

MOTHER looked around the table miserably, but we avoided her glance. "I told him to get rid of the bottles with the prunes in them, before he left," she explained.

We still didn't say anything.

"After he gets rid of the bottles," Mother sighed, "you go down there, Frank, and ask him if he wants his job back. Tell him that, just this once, I changed my mind."

Within the next few years, Mother became accepted as an industrial engineer, and motion study began to play an increasingly important part in the mass production of the 'twenties.

The fight had been uphill, but many of Dad's former clients—and a good many new clients—finally had conceded that Mother knew her business, and had hired her firm as a consultant. The family finances, while not in a state of great prosperity, were immeasurably improved. Mother still rode in busses and upper berths. But she was able to start paying off her debts and to make a dent in the mortgage on the house.

Mother's goal of sending all of us through college now seemed more than just a possibility. Martha was enrolled at New Jersey State College for Women, and Frank at the University of Michigan. That meant there were only Bill, Lillian, Fred, Dan, Jack, Bob and Jane to usher into the halls of higher learning. Mother was sure it was goin a breeze.

While Mother's nose was healing, s started writing The Home Maker a Job, published in 1927. Living Wit Children was published the followin She continued to teach her motion course, served on the New Jersey Board of Regents, and was a delegate World Power Congress in Tokyo.

She also became a Girl Scout.

Mrs. Herbert Hoover was responsi Mother's original interest in sc Mother had known the Hoovers for many years; socially, since they were Californians, and professionally, sin Hoover was an engineer.

AFTER Mr. Hoover was inaugurated dent, Mother sometimes visited th Washington and at their fishing camp Rapidan River. Mr. Hoover appoint to his national advisory committee ployment. And Mrs. Hoover, who w tional president of the Girl Scouts, her to head up the personnel division organization.

Mother wasn't sure she could spa time. But Mrs. Hoover invited her to which a delegation of ladies in unifo present. In a surprise ceremony, Hoover announced she wanted t Mother into the Girl Scouts right th there. With the other ladies smili couragement, Mother arose to rec oath.

None of our girls had been scout Frank and Bill both had joined th Scouts some years before. Mother had them memorize the and pass their ten tests.

> We live in the present, we dream of the future, but we learn eternal truths from the past.
>
> —MADAME CHIANG KAI-SHEK.

Standing in the House, she raised fingers of her right Mrs. Hoover nod assuringly. It was emn moment. started to recite:

"On my honor, I will do my best to duty to God and my country, to ——

The ladies snickered.

"That's fine," Mrs. Hoover smile Mother finished. "That means you're fledged Boy Scout. Now would you join the Girl Scouts?"

Mother said she would.

"Girl Scouts try," said Mrs. H "Their oath starts like this. 'On my h will try to do my duty.'"

Mother raised three fingers again an to try. Later on, she even got a u When our older girls teased her about kept asking her to give her scout's every time she made a flat statement she'd threaten to buy khaki shirt an sers and a campaign hat.

"I can always switch to the other if you don't like this uniform," she'd took both oaths, you know."

On one of Mother's visits with th vers, the President urged her to bring to a formal afternoon reception at the House. The affair was to be held w few days, and was for the Cabinet, Su Court and the Diplomatic Corps.

"I'd like to meet all the Gilbret dren," the President said cordially.

Mother was grateful for the invi But she knew we didn't like appear masse at anything. Besides, she had of railroad tickets and new outfits for body.

"They'd all love to come," she said I'm afraid they'd strain the seams the White House."

"Nonsense," said Mr. Hoover. love to have them."

"Suppose," said Mother, who tho compromise was in order, "I just bri six boys."

"The boys will be fine," Mr. agreed hospitably. "Why don't yo phone them right now? Come on. take no for an answer."

A phone was thrust into Mother's and she put in a call for Montclair.

(Continued on Page 94)

Tonight—let an Armour Pantry-Shelf Meal make you a lady of leisure!

You'll be just as proud of these meals you can fix in a hurry as of any meal you'd slave to prepare!

Because of fine Armour meats and home-like cooking care you'll always find that Armour Pantry-Shelf Meals taste like your own good cooking.

So make life easier for yourself! Get several Armour Pantry-Shelf Meals today. There are more than 25 to choose from. Every one tastes so good. And every one will save you so much time and trouble. For free recipe booklet, write MARIE GIFFORD, Dept. 437, Box 2053, Chicago 9, Illinois.

Barbecued Treet with Onion Rings!

Eat Treet tonight—served a new way! Cut the meat—Armour's delicious blending of tender pork and sugar-cured ham—into 10 slices. Cover with MARIE GIFFORD's barbecue sauce—4 tsps. sugar, 1 tsp. dry mustard, ⅛ tsp. pepper, ¼ cup catsup, 3 tbsps. vinegar, 1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce, heated to boiling. Then bake the Treet at 350° F. for 15 minutes—garnish with parsley and onion rings!

Tamales 'n' Chili Double-Feature!

Make a good, easy dinner doubly good—serve Armour Star Tamales topped with Armour Star Chili! MARIE GIFFORD says the success-secret is to serve them together but heat them separately! Keep wrappers on the delicately spiced Tamales—chock full of chopped beef and pork—while heating them in their sauce in double broiler. Remove wrappers before you pour on plenty of the rich, meaty Chili—piping hot in temperature and flavor, too! Wonderful with green salad and French bread.

Tune in STARS OVER HOLLYWOOD
On Radio—CBS Saturday Daytime
On Television—NBC Wednesday Evening

ARMOUR Pantry-Shelf Meals

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

(Continued from Page 92)

who was home from the University of Michigan on a holiday, answered the ring.

"I have great news," Mother said, while the Hoovers beamed. "The President has been kind enough to invite all of you boys to a reception at the White House." She put her hand over the mouthpiece and turned to the Hoovers. "I can just see their faces, can't you?"

"For crying out loud," Frank groaned. "See if you can't get us out of it, Mother."

"I can't," said Mother. "I tried, but I can't. I can't believe it's true, either."

"I don't want to bring all those kids down there," Frank complained. "Besides, I've got a date for almost every night of my vacation."

"You'll have to break it, dear. You'll have to break the news gently so the other boys won't take the roof off the house when they hear the glad tidings. The Hoovers are right here, just think of that."

"Good night," said Frank, only much quieter. "I'm sorry. We're trapped then, eh?"

"You certainly are," said Mother. "We all are. It's not something that happens every day."

Mother told Frank she had business in Washington and wouldn't be able to return to Montclair to supervise the boys' preparations. They were to wear their best suits and of course white shirts and black shoes. If they took an early-morning train from Newark, they'd get to Washington about lunchtime. Mother would be waiting for them at her hotel, and they could come to her room and wash up, before the reception at the White House.

Bill, who was now a senior in high school and currently in charge of the checking account, withdrew enough cash from the bank to cover the cost of three full and three half tickets to Washington and return.

It seemed like a lot of money, and both Bill and Frank thought it would be cheaper to make the trip by car. They felt sure that, once they had arrived in Washington and had explained to Mother about the saving, she would approve too.

The two oldest boys and Martha were the possessors of a Model T touring car. The vehicle was an antique when they had acquired it the year before for twenty dollars, and it had aged perceptibly under its new ownership.

The car had neither top nor fenders. The body was painted airplane silver. A six-inch red stripe, none too expertly applied, ran waterline fashion around the hull at a point equidistant from the running boards and the top of the doors.

STARTING the motor was a two-man proposition, with one person turning the crank and jiggling a wire-loop choke which protruded from the front of the radiator, and the other sitting in the driver's seat to retard the spark as soon as the engine coughed. But the three owners had done a good deal of work on the motor; it was reliable and purred like a kitten, only louder.

There was no doubt in anyone's mind that the car could make the trip to the Capital. As a matter of insurance, though, a pump, tire patches, spare spark coils and miscellaneous tools were stowed under the seats. And the boys decided to start the journey before dawn.

The day before departure, Frank held a dress rehearsal to make sure that the delegation had the proper clothes. All of the boys, with the exception of Frank, owned blue serge suits. Frank had handed down his blue serge to Bill that autumn, and had replaced it with a collegiate number purchased at the Campus Toggery Shop, in Ann Arbor. The suit had padded shoulders, wasp waist, twenty-three-inch cuffs on the trousers, and a double-breasted vest with lapels. The color was something between tan and yellow, without many of the best features of either. The material was as heavy and hairy as an Army blanket. It had cost twenty-eight dollars, and Frank was immensely pleased with it.

From the consistency of the cloth, it was apparent that the suit would wear forever. It was this aspect that appealed least to the other boys, when Frank appeared at dress rehearsal.

"GOOD grief, what's that?" Bill whinnied when Frank walked into the parlor. "I hope you didn't throw away the sales slip. Take it off quick, before you muss it up."

"What's the matter with it?" Frank asked with hurt feelings.

"If it's going to be a party like Halloween," said Bob, who was nine, "can I wear my cowboy suit?"

Bill felt the material. "It's your own business what you buy when you get something thin that you can wear out yourself," he complained. "But when you pick out a heavy suit like that, you're supposed to have me with you."

"For something as heavy as that, he's supposed to take all of us with him," Fred added. "That one will go all the way down the line to Bob."

"What's the matter with you kids' taste?" Frank marveled. "How far behind the times is this town, anyway? This color is the latest thing at Michigan."

"It looks," said Bob, "like what happens to the mustard jar when you forget to screw the top back on."

"It does not," Frank told him, "and you keep out of this. It just happens I've had a lot of compliments on it at Michigan."

"You mean you've worn it before?" asked Bill, deflated. "Then you can't take it back?"

"I wore it all last autumn."

"How come I didn't see it in your closet after you unpacked?"

"Because I know you," Frank said, "That's why. Every time I get a new suit, the first thing I know you're borrowing it and spilling things on it."

"If he spilled mustard," Bob insisted, "you wouldn't have to worry, once it dried."

"It sheds, too," Bill said accusingly, picking nap off the sleeve of his blue serge, where it had brushed against Frank. "You're going to leave yellow hairs all over Mr. Hoover."

"I don't intend to be brushing up against anybody," Frank replied. "It sheds a little, I'll admit. That's because it's still comparatively new."

"Don't think I'm going to walk through the reception line with you," Bill warned. "I'm not going to watch Cabinet officers and the Diplomatic Corps tiptoeing through great piles of nap that you've deposited all the way from the South Portico to the Blue Room."

"Do you think all the nap will be gone by the time it's handed down to me?" Bob asked.

"I doubt it," Bill replied. "I promise you one thing. I'll never help get rid of any of it."

There were two flat tires between Montclair and Philadelphia, but the boys patched them and the car ran well. Frank tried to make up some of the time they had lost in fixing the tires. Shortly before they reached Baltimore, a motorcycle patrolman came up behind them and waved them down for speeding.

"I congratulate you for bringing that heap all the way from New Jersey," he said, copy-

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Compass

By Archibald Rutledge

Regard this compass:
How veeringly the needle turns,
Yet ever northward yearns,
And at the last will come
Fatefully home.
Even so my love
Resembles
The needle; for it turns to you
And trembles.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Your skin

is twice as clean... twice as lovely!

A Fabulous Double-Cleansing treatment; part of the famous Elizabeth Arden Basic Beauty Ritual. Leaves your skin immaculate and camellia-soft in a matter of minutes!

Ardena Cleansing Cream, 1.00 to 6.00
Liquifies instantly into searching, soothing oils; seeps into the pores to cleanse with a swift magic. Apply it with cotton dampened with Ardena Skin Lotion.

Ardena Skin Lotion, 1.00 to 9.50
Contains refreshing, bracing herb waters. The combination of cream and lotion cleanses and tones the skin with glowing effect!

Finally, smooth with Ardena Velva Cream, 1.00 to 6.00

prices plus taxes

Elizabeth Arden

691 FIFTH AVE., N. Y. 22, PLAZA 9-2940

ing the license number into his ticket book. "If I didn't see it with my own eyes, I'd never believe you could get sixty miles an hour out of it."

"We can do seventy on the hills," Bob volunteered proudly. "Frank and Bill did something to make the engine run faster."

"Shut up," Bill whispered, leaning forward and beaning Bob with his knuckles. "Do you want to get us all sent up the river?"

"Sent up the river?" Jack sneered. "They can't do that to us. We don't take nothing from nobody, understand? Nothing from nobody!"

Bill beaned him too.

"Seventy, eh?" said the policeman, making a note of it. He looked at the patched, treadless tires and shook his head. "What are you trying to do, kill all those kids?"

At that point, Frank thought killing them was a pretty sensible suggestion. But he shook his head, gulped, and wondered how Mother would explain to the Hoovers that her sons couldn't attend the reception, on account of being sent up the river.

"Where do you think you're going, anyway?" the policeman asked, thrusting his face up near Frank's.

"We're going to Washington, officer."

"And what are you going to Washington for?"

FRANK thought that one over, and concluded that if he knew what was good for him he'd better come up with a more convincing explanation than the truth.

"Why, nothing in particular," he said. "Just to sight-see, I guess."

"Go ahead and tell him," Jack said contemptuously. "Don't let him buffalo you like that."

Bill beaned him again.

"Yeah, tell me," the policeman ordered.

"All right," said Frank. "We're going to see President Hoover."

"I love wise guys, particularly in suits like that one," the patrolman leered. "I suppose the President invited you, personal, to drop in and have tea with him at the White House? Sure he did."

Frank nodded sheepishly.

"Nothing from nobody," Jack repeated from the back seat, putting his hands over his head to try to stave off Bill's knuckles.

"That's right, honest," Frank said desperately. "We've had some flat tires, and we're late."

"You," said the policeman, pointing to Jack. "Is that right? Are you going to see the President?"

"Not just the President," Jack told him. "Mrs. Hoover and some judges from the Supreme Court too. Why don't you shove off, buddy?"

The patrolman surveyed the car, the airplane-paint job, the red waterline. He looked at us individually. Frank, Bill and Fred, greasy from changing tires; Dan, pale and about to be carsick; Jack and Bob, wrinkled and dirty.

"I guess you're telling the truth," he said. "The President doesn't get many laughs, and I ain't going to be responsible for his missing this one. Go ahead. But not more than forty-five miles an hour."

The weather had been fair when the boys left Montclair, but it was cloudy in Baltimore, and between Baltimore and Washington it started to rain. The boys were wet through by the time Frank pulled up in front of Mother's hotel.

Even the Joad family never received a more wrathful reception from a doorman. He wouldn't let the boys alight until Frank promised to park the car down the street, a block away from the hotel.

Mother was sitting in an armchair, reading and knitting, when the boys entered her room. She had already changed clothes, and was ready for the reception.

"Oh, my," she said.

"It's my fault, Mother." Frank told her. "I thought it would be cheaper and easier to drive."

"I don't mean that," Mother said. "Come here, Dan. You're pale as a sheet. You don't feel at all well, do you, dear?"

(Continued on Page 99)

Are you in the know?

If your beau brings his Mom and Dad to the game, should you—

☐ Consider him a "Mama's boy" ☐ Make with the green eyes ☐ Hang onto him

Begrudge having your football date turned into a family foursome? Not you! You appreciate a steady Freddy who's considerate of his parents. The way he treats them is the way he'll be treating you, someday. And a good man is worth hanging on to. Wherever you go—on "difficult" days—you can defeat discomfort with Kotex. Made to stay soft while you wear it. Kotex gives softness that holds its shape. You spare yourself embarrassment, too, for this napkin has a special, exclusive safety center. It's an extra safeguard that wards off worry; gives you Grade A confidence!

What to do about "mousy" hair?

☐ Keep it under your hat
☐ Try catnip tea
☐ Take a capsule

A Jeanie with dull, drab hair can "sparkle" tired tresses with a color rinse (not a dye) that comes in capsules—washes out with the next shampoo. Harmless! Dreamy shades! Choose the one best for you—slightly lighter than your natural locks. To give you the protection best for you at "problem" time—Kotex comes in 3 absorbencies (different sizes, for different days). Choose Regular, Junior or Super. Whichever suits your particular needs.

When asked where you'd like to go—

☐ Have a plan or two ☐ Pick the town's top nitery
☐ Shrug your shoulders

If that New Man leaves the doings up to you—the "I don't care" routine's no help. Have a plan or two. But don't insist on dinner at the Plush Room. Make several suggestions and let him choose whatever's in line with his financial bracket. You can gallivant confidently even on "certain" occasions . . . with Kotex. There's no sign of a telltale line, because those flat pressed ends prevent revealing outlines. Won't betray your secret.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

How to learn your social P's and Q's?

☐ The hard way ☐ Via charm school ☐ Get "In The Know"

Want quick answers to dating dilemmas? Hints on etiquette, grooming, fashions? Send for the new, fascinating booklet "Are You In The Know?"—it's free! It's a collection of the most important poise-pointers selected from "Are You In The Know?" magazine advertisements (without "commercials")—reprinted in booklet form by special request. So, to owl up fast on how to rate in the style, beauty, men-and-manners departments, get your free copy! Mail the coupon!

Address P. O. Box 3434,
Dept. 1410, Chicago 11, Illinois

Please send me the free booklet, "Are You In The Know?"

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

A NEW simplified Betty Crocker recipe for Angel Food

- Difficult Steps Eliminated
- Even Beginners Succeed
- New Electric Mixer Directions Included

WONDERFUL Chocolate Angel Food with a delightful new spun sugar taste! It's your favorite cake in your husband's favorite flavor! And we guarantee* success to anyone who follows exactly this new, simplified recipe developed by Betty Crocker and her staff.

Betty Crocker perfected this recipe—and the other glamour recipes mentioned here—for Softasilk Cake Flour only. For Softasilk, milled for cakes alone, gives you higher, finer, more delicate cakes than ordinary flour. Such high, fine, delicate cakes, in fact, that Softasilk is known as Betty Crocker's Angel Food Cake Flour and America's Chiffon Cake Flour.

General Mills

Fresh Orange Chiffon

LIGHT AS ANGEL FOOD...
RICH AS BUTTER CAKE...AND SO EASY TO MAKE

(See folder inside Softasilk package.)

Banana Nut Cake

FAMOUS DOUBLE-QUICK METHOD...
NO EGGS TO BEAT...NO SHORTENING
TO CREAM...MIX IN 4 MINUTES

(See folder inside Softasilk package.)

NEW Betty Crocker's Picture Cook Book

- SHOWS YOU HOW • SIMPLIFIED METHODS
- COVERS THE MAJOR PHASES OF COOKING

Contains 2161 tested Betty Crocker recipes plus information on meal planning, table service, measuring, carving, nutrition and other food helps. 449 pages with hundreds of step-by-step pictures to show you how.

BOOK STORE PRICES

Regular Case Bound Edition $2.95
De Luxe Ring Bound Edition (as shown) $3.95
(Slightly higher in Canada)

Even Chocolate Angel Food is easy this New Betty Crocker way!

Betty Crocker of General Mills

Betty Crocker Chocolate Angel Food Cake

THIS RECIPE DEVELOPED FOR USE WITH SOFTASILK ONLY

Preheat oven to 350° (moderate). Have egg whites at room temperature. Sift an ample amount of SOFTASILK CAKE FLOUR onto a square of paper.

STEP 1

Measure and sift together 3 times . . . . . { ¾ cup sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour; ⅞ cup (¾ cup plus 2 tbsp.) sugar; ¼ cup cocoa

STEP 2

Measure into large mixing bowl . . { 1½ cups egg whites (about 12 whites); 1½ tsp. [illegible] of tartar; ¼ tsp. salt; 1½ tsp. vanilla

Beat with wire whip until foamy throughout.

Gradually add, 2 tbsp. at a time . . .
¾ cup sugar

Beat about 10 seconds after each addition. Continue beating after the last addition until meringue is firm and holds stiff straight peaks when wire whip is gently lifted out of meringue. (This requires considerable beating.)

STEP 3

Place flour-sugar-cocoa mixture in sifter and sift about 3 tbsp. over the entire surface of meringue. Fold gently with wire whip or rubber scraper until flour-sugar-cocoa mixture disappears using about 8 to 10 complete folding strokes and turning the bowl a quarter of a turn with each stroke.

Repeat this folding process until all of the flour and sugar and cocoa is folded in. Then scrape down the sides of the bowl with rubber scraper and fold 8 to 10 more strokes or until mixture is completely blended. This mixture will be very thick.

Carefully, with a rubber scraper, push the batter into ungreased tube pan, 10 x 4-in. Lift the last portion lightly from the bowl into the pan, being careful not to stir it.

Carefully cut through the batter going around the tube 5 or 6 times with a knife or steel spatula to break large air bubbles. Be sure to even up batter so it is level and touches the sides of the pan. Bake 35 to 45 minutes in moderate oven (350°) or until top springs back when lightly touched. Deep cracks in the top are typical of this cake.

Immediately turn pan upside down, placing tube part over neck of funnel or bottle. Let cake hang in pan until cold.

To remove cake, loosen from sides and tube with spatula close against pan. Turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen. Split cake crosswise in 3 even layers with a saw-toothed knife. Spread Chocolate Fluff (recipe below) between the layers and then over top and sides. Keep in refrigerator until serving time.

TO USE ELECTRIC MIXER

STEP 1 and 2 . . . Follow the above directions. Use medium speed (middle of the dial). After last addition of sugar, turn to highest speed. Continue beating until meringue is firm and holds stiff straight peaks. Scrape sides of bowl constantly with rubber scraper.

STEP 3 . . . Fold by hand as in STEP 3 above. BUT make sure to bring rubber scraper or wire whip down through center of batter and up at the side, turning the bowl a quarter of a turn with each stroke. This will insure thorough blending.

When mixer is used, the volume will be slightly less and the texture will be finer.

CHOCOLATE FLUFF

Mix together in chilled bowl: 3 cups heavy cream, 1½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar, ¾ cup cocoa, dash of salt. Beat mixture until stiff enough to hold a point.

If you live at an altitude over 3,500 feet, write Betty Crocker, General Mills, Minneapolis 1, Minnesota, for recipe adjustments. Specify recipe wanted.

Guarantee

FULL COST OF INGREDIENTS USED REFUNDED

If any cake made with a Betty Crocker recipe and Softasilk Cake Flour is not superior to any similar cake made with any other recipe, simply itemize cost of ingredients used and explain how results failed to better similar type cake. Send your letter to General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis 1, Minn.

The Secret of these Wonderful Cakes is Softasilk

SO GOOD IT'S BETTY CROCKER'S ANGEL FOOD CAKE FLOUR

Record-Playing Confusion—a Nuisance of the Past!

New Zenith Cobra-Matic

Plays any speed record now made or yet to come—10 R.P.M. to 85 . . . and . . . any size record—7, 10 or 12 inch—with two simple controls a child can operate.

Here—at last—is the radio-phonograph you so wisely waited for! With the first and only changer that automatically plays all records of any speed now made or yet to come . . . from 10 to 85 R.P.M.—7, 10 or 12 inch!

It's all done with two simple controls a child can operate. Just dial one control for record speed . . . 33⅓, 45, 78 or any other speed the modern world may dream up, from 10 to 85! Dial the other control for record size. THAT'S ALL THERE IS TO IT! One Super-Cobra Tone Arm plays all records, reproduces tonal beauty like no other method you have ever seen or heard—on a Radionic® Wave. No needles, parts, spindles or weights to change or adjust!

In addition, you enjoy the finest in static-free radio reception with Zenith's Super-Sensitive FM, plus Zenith's famous Long-Distance AM. Made better than ever in tone by a new speaker 2½ times more sensitive than any Zenith has used before!

Truly, here is an instrument combining the ultimate in musical pleasure from records and radio. You enjoy it supremely confident that you have the last word in tone quality, trouble-free performance and exquisite cabinetry. See your Zenith dealer and see and hear for yourself!

Above, New Zenith "Tudor" Console Radio-Phonograph. "Cobra-Matic" record changer. Super-Sensitive FM, Long-Distance AM, Radiorgan® Tone Control. Period cabinet in rich Mahogany veneers.

New Zenith "Carleton" Table Radio-Phonograph. "Cobra-Matic" record changer. Long-Distance AM radio. Super-size DialSpeaker permits larger speaker and larger dial. New type continuous tone control. Cabinet of smart, durable leather grained finish, in Mahogany or Blonde color.

©1950

ZENITH
•LONG DISTANCE• RADIO and TELEVISION

THE ROYALTY OF RADIO AND TELEVISION

Zenith Radio Corporation, Chicago 39, Illinois • Over 30 Years of "Know-How" in Radionics® Exclusively • Also Makers of America's Finest Hearing Aids

(Continued from Page 95)

Dan explained that he had been carsick, that he felt all right now that he was on land again.

"You had me worried for a while," she iled, kissing the boys. "You mean you ve all the way from Montclair in that y thing? Won't Mr. Lindbergh be jeal-!" Frank said he was sorry that, because y were wet, they wouldn't be able to go the reception. But Mother said they had go, and that she thought she could dry m out on time.

"Everyone will look fine once they're ," she added, "except —— What's the tter with your suit, Frank? Did the rain e it?"

"That's the way it looks all the time," l said resentfully.

"There's nothing the matter with it," nk pouted. "It's the latest thing."

Mother said she was sure it was. She pped her bed and gave each of the boys a et or blanket. They went into the bath-m, took off their clothes, and then sat und in bedwear while they waited their ns to get baths.

Mother called the desk and made arrange-nts for an iron and ironing board to be t up to her room, and for the boys' shoes e taken down to the boiler room to dry.

"Oh, yes," she added as an apparent rthought, "and send up a newspaper, if you will."

After the board had been set up, Mother rted pressing the boys' underwear, socks, ts and suits until they were dry. She ed Frank's suit until the last. When she l finished with his coat and vest, and was he middle of his pants, stopped long enough phone the desk again l ask that the shoes be rned.

A musty odor of burned and scorched wool meated the room.

"Hey," shouted Frank. ly pants!"

Mother put down the phone quickly and to the board. "Now look what I've done," reproached herself. "I've burned a hole nt through your beautiful trousers."

"Hot dog," Fred gloated.

"Ruined," Frank choked. "I'll never be e to match them."

"There's no argument there," Bill said.

"I don't know how I could be so stupid," ther complained, looking at her watch. 've still have fifteen minutes, though. We'll k up a new suit for you. I'll take along a dle and thread, and hem the cuffs so y'll do for the time being."

"Do you think we can find one with that vy kind of material?" Frank asked.

"I hope we can. Say, it's lucky I had them d up a newspaper! Look through it and if anyone's having a sale."

"Wait a minute," Frank said accusingly. hat business of ordering a newspaper. Are sure that was just luck? You didn't burn se pants on purpose, did you?"

"For goodness' sakes," Mother laughed. o you think I like to buy you boys new hes? Do you think I'm naturally de-ictive?"

E shoes arrived from the boiler room. ch Frank self-consciously holding down coat, to hide a wedge-shaped hole in his sers, Mother and the boys walked to a partment store that had advertised a hing sale. Frank found a suit of heavy terial, not unlike his old one, except that vas conservatively cut and dark blue in-ad of yellow-tan. Even Bill admitted it s handsome. The coat and vest fitted well ugh, and Mother basted in the cuffs. They stopped in a barbershop for shoe-nes, and then hailed a cab.

"To the White House, please," Mother d. She looked as cool and unruffled as she ll when the boys first arrived at her hotel. The boys were on their especial good be-vior as they waited to go through the eiving line. But when Bill saw an im-nsely dignified, bearded figure, he stage-ispered excitedly to Mother:

"Say, isn't that Charles Evans Hughes?"

The Chief Justice, who had heard his name, turned toward Bill and bowed formally from the waist. "Good afternoon, sir," he said, "and madam."

If that was the way you behaved at the White House, the boys weren't going to be outdone. All six of them bowed from the waist, and said, "Good afternoon, sir."

The President and Mrs. Hoover were cordial and hospitable.

"They look just as if they'd stepped out of a bandbox," said Mrs. Hoover. "I never thought young boys could look that pressed." She turned to Frank. "You're the oldest, aren't you?"

Frank said he was, madam.

"Then I guess you were the one who looked after everybody on the trip down. I guess you're the one I really ought to compliment about stepping out of a bandbox."

Frank said thank you, madam. The boys bowed from the waist, and moved along the receiving line.

MOTHER had planned to return home by train that afternoon. Although she had always before avoided the Model T, she allowed herself to be talked into making the return trip in the car.

The skies had cleared and the weather was mild. Frank held the Ford at a dignified forty-five, and there was no tire trouble. They stopped at Baltimore for supper, and when they emerged from the restaurant the stars were out and it was still and peaceful.

"Why, this isn't bad at all," Mother sighed contentedly. "I ought to let you boys drive me on all my trips after this."

They started to sing some of the songs Mother had taught them when they were younger: Old Black Joe; Clementine; Backward, Turn Backward, O Time in Thy Flight.

Half an hour out of Baltimore, a siren sounded and a motorcycle policeman pulled up alongside. "How was tea at the White House?" the officer hollered over the roar of two exhausts.

"Fine," Frank shouted back.

"How's the kid who was sick?"

"I'm fine," Dan assured him.

"And the one who don't take nothing from nobody?"

"Okay," Jack grinned.

The policeman gunned his motorcycle up the highway.

"Good gracious," Mother marveled. "I don't know how you boys do it."

They asked her what she meant.

"The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court bows to you, the President and his wife hold up a receiving line to chat with you, and you make friends with policemen all the way from Montclair to Washington. I'm certainly lucky to have such fine sons."

The boys had the grace to think there was a slight possibility Mother might be prejudiced.

Those of us who were away at college usually saw Mother three or four times a semester, as her lectures and business engagements took her across the country.

Sometimes she'd be delivering a speech at the college itself, and would arrange her schedule so she'd have a free day to visit. Sometimes her speech would be at a city near one of the colleges, and it was possible to cut classes, hear her lecture and then visit with her at her hotel.

Mother knew most of the presidents and many of the professors at the various colleges we attended. Usually, too, she knew the location of all the campus buildings, their nicknames, and the geography of the town.

It was somewhat disillusioning for a wide-eyed freshman, importantly taking his female parent on a sight-seeing tour of an institution which he was sure would overwhelm her with its unique traditions and maze of modern complexities, to discover that she knew more about his university than he did.

(Continued on Page 101)

Recipe for having food taste like that which mother used to make: Walk five miles before dinner.
—ELBERT HUBBARD.

AMAZING INVENTION MAKES THE LEWYT VACUUM CLEANER A CARPET SWEEPER TOO!

WITH THE LEWYT, it's the world's first high-suction Rug Nozzle with a revolving brush! Its pick-up of embedded dirt, threads, even dog hairs will astound you! So much lighter, quieter, easier rolling, too! Self-cleaning; self-adjusting — perfect for "highs-and-lows" in sculptured carpets!

WITHOUT THE LEWYT, it's the world's most amazing carpet sweeper! Crumbs, tobacco, bits of paper — nothing escapes it! Never needs emptying! It empties itself when used as a vacuum cleaner! Lower slung...streamlined for wall-to-wall cleaning...and just about half the weight of ordinary sweepers!

WORLD'S FIRST HIGH-SUCTION RUG NOZZLE WITH REVOLVING BRUSH

*Outcleans conventional vacuum cleaners! Outcleans old fashioned carpet sweepers! It's a 2-in-1 work-saving, space-saving miracle! (Optional Equipment. Present Lewyt owners can purchase at nominal cost.)

NO DUST BAG TO EMPTY

DO IT with LEWYT

Listed by Underwriters' Laboratories

NO DUST BAG! SIMPLY THROW OUT LEWYT'S NEW PAPER "SPEED-SAK" A FEW TIMES A YEAR!

It's quiet—no annoying roar! ■ Allergy-proof filter system! ■ Neat, compact storage ■ 10 light, easy-to-use attachments that dust... sweep floors... clean drapes... spray paint... wax... de-moth! ■ Costs no more than conventional cleaners!

SEE THE NEW LEWYT TODAY! DEALERS EVERYWHERE!

LEWYT CORPORATION, Vacuum Cleaner Division, Dept. 10, 66 Broadway, Brooklyn 11, N. Y.

☐ Without obligation, rush me FREE copy of Lewyt's brand new 16-page full color book "Home Cleaning Made Easy"!

☐ I want to see Lewyt's Vacuum Cleaner-Carpet Sweeper Invention perform on my own rugs!

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____

COUNTY _____ STATE _____

IN TUNE WITH FAMILY FUN!

"fresh up" with Seven-Up!

BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

It's fun when the whole family gathers around Mom at the piano . . . singing and playing their favorite tunes. And cheerful, crystal-clear 7-Up joins right in because its lively sparkle and fresh, clean taste appeal to all ages.

The all-family drink—that's 7-Up! So pure . . . so good . . . so wholesome, all ages, including toddlers, can "fresh up" with 7-Up often. Always keep plenty of 7-Up in your refrigerator and see how it adds to family fun. It's a regular part of happy living in millions of homes. Buy a case today where you see those bright 7-Up signs.

Advertising Association Publications

Commended by the Consumer Service Bureau of Parents' Magazine as advertised therein

Copyright 1950 by
The Seven-Up Company

You like it... it likes you!

BUY A CASE TODAY!

(Continued from Page 99)

he home-economics building? The "Home " building certainly was one of the most dern in the country, Mother would agree. d it would develop that she had made a ech in the building last year, and had n on the program the year before when y dedicated it.

he stadium? "Old Horseshoe" was ghty impressive, she would nod. Under ss-questioning, she might point out that had received an honorary degree in cere- nies in the stadium a few years before. Ve chose our own colleges, but in most es Mother had preceded us in the com- ncement parade.

She had degrees from a dozen or more in- utions, including Michigan, where Anne, nk and Jane were graduated; Smith, nestine and Lillian; Rutgers, the male half Martha's college, New Jersey State Col- e for Women; Purdue, Bill; and Brown, d.

o finish calling the roll, Dan received his loma from the University of Pennsyl- ia, Jack from Princeton, and Bob from University of North Carolina.

Mother never sent tuition checks directly ur colleges. At the start of each year she'd over to us, in one lump sum, enough ey for our tuition and all other expenses. en you took out your own checkbook and the registrar your tuition, you realized were supposed to get something for your ey. All of us did all right in college.

THER spoke most often at Purdue, in ayette, Indiana, where Bill was en- d. Purdue was opening a motion-study ratory, and Mother was going to become ofessor of management there. She in- ed to take the new job in addition to all ld ones, and to commute from Montclair e campus once a month, for a week or so aching.

n one occasion when Mother was at lue, she was asked unexpectedly to k before a large lecture class in which was enrolled. Bill didn't know about the ation. It was an eight-o'clock class, and icked that particular morning to over- .

ll's professor told the students they were nate in having a distinguished engineer eir midst. She was Dr. Lillian Gilbreth, it was gratifying to him that one of or Gilbreth's sons was a member of that class, and doubtless intended some- to follow in his mother's footsteps. He ed his throat and started to call the roll. he way from the A's down to the G's, her's eyes roved the auditorium, search- or Bill. She was sitting on a platform, in air next to the professor's table.

Gibbes," said the professor.

"Here."

"Gilbert."

"Here."

"Gilbreth."

There was an awkward pause, while Mother blushed and stopped searching. The professor looked up, cleared his throat again, this time with disapproval, and repeated loudly:

"Gilbreth?"

A number of Bill's friends sensed the situation simultaneously, and thought they had better come to the rescue. "Here," a dozen voices answered from all corners of the room.

The professor put down his roll book and looked bleakly at Mother. He didn't say so, but she gathered the look was intended to convey that he had to put up with a great deal, not the least of which was having Bill as a student. He glared at his audience, seeking to find the offenders who had answered to Bill's name.

"There seem to be," he said sarcastically, "a good many Gilbreths here today."

"The whole family," Mother announced brightly, regaining her poise and favoring him with her warmest smile. "That's nice."

The professor, who hadn't seen as much of Bill that semester as he thought he should have, didn't think it was nice at all. He licked his pencil and made a show of marking a zero in his grade book, opposite Bill's name.

"Goldsmith," he said precisely, continuing the roll.

Bill spent the afternoon and night with Mother, so didn't see any members of the class during the remainder of the day. Mother didn't mention to him that she had spoken to his group, or that she knew he had cut the class. She thought he was old enough to make his own decisions, and that it wouldn't give him a sense of responsibility if she seemed to be checking up on him.

She did spend a good deal of time, though, telling him how she was studying the motions of physically disabled persons, so as to help them find jobs in industry. Bill was interested, and he and Mother looked over her notes and her photographs and diagrams of the project.

Bill was a little late, but present, for the lecture class the next morning. He slid into his seat just as the professor finished calling the C's in the roll book, and he was well settled by the time the professor reached the G's and finally Bill's name.

When the professor had run through the list, he told the class he was going to give a written quiz. "I'm sure all of you must have learned a great deal from our visitor of yesterday," he said. "So today I'm going to ask you to write a little summary giving the high points of the talk."

Bill squirmed uncomfortably, and wished he had cut class again. He nudged the boy sitting next to him. "Who," Bill asked out of the corner of his mouth, "did the old fool drag over here yesterday?"

"Are you kidding?"

"No, I wasn't here yesterday. I overslept."

"You overslept," the boy mimicked. "It was your own mother, you stupid jackass."

"Awk," Bill grunted, sinking down in his chair and wishing he could continue through the floor.

Everyone else in the room was writing. You could hear the pens scratching and papers rustling as pages were turned. Bill hoped no one would notice that he alone was sitting there doing nothing.

He nudged his neighbor again. "Would you mind telling this stupid jackass," Bill apologized, "what my mother talked about?"

"Motion study of the disabled."

"Thanks," Bill grinned. He started writing too.

ALMOST every year there was a graduation from high school, a graduation from college, and a wedding. By the middle 1930's, all of us through Lillian were married and had homes of our own. Most of the married ones had children.

Fred and Dan were in college, Jack and Bob were in high school, and Jane was about to enter the ninth grade—the first year of high school under the system then standard in Montclair.

There was a New Deal in the country, and a New Deal at our house, where Jack was in charge when Mother was away.

The New Deal at home was brought about principally by Tom's absence. He was in a hospital, suffering from a heart ailment, and the warmth and excitement had evaporated from the kitchen. All rules about feeding and playing with Sixteen, his current cat, and about keeping out of the kitchen, except on Tom's special invitation, had been suspended.

An energetic colored woman now did the cooking, and as much of the housework and dishes as Mother would allow.

Mother always has been convinced that anyone who works for her is terribly imposed upon. So much so that sometimes it is difficult to tell who is working for whom.

As a result, it was a race between Mother and the energetic maid to see who could make the beds first and sweep the upstairs in the mornings. Since both were early risers, the race often ended in a dead heat, with Mother handling one side, and the maid the other, of a bed that was still warm.

"You have enough to do without making the beds," Mother would say when the maid urged her to sit down and relax for a few minutes. "This leaning over is just what I need. I like to get a little exercise before I leave for the city."

At suppertime, Mother would whisk away a dish as soon as one of the children had taken his last mouthful, and take it out to the butler's pantry to wash and dry it, while the maid was finishing her meal in the kitchen. When the child would go to put his fork down, there wouldn't be any place to put it except the tablecloth, so he'd have to hold it in his hand until Mother came back.

"The maid may want to go to a movie or something," Mother would explain, while she collected the silverware.

Between the colored woman and Mother, the children were relieved of all the chores that the rest of us had had to do in the past.

Now that there were no young children in the house, there was no need for the system under which each child was responsible for a younger one, or for the process charts in the bathrooms. The German and French language records had worn out or been broken, and Mother never replaced them.

When the married members of the family dropped in to visit, they didn't hesitate to tell Mother that they never had had things that easy when they were growing up, and that the three youngest ones were being spoiled.

But Mother, bouncing a grandchild on her knee and playing peekaboo, would reply that she wasn't sure this little fellow was being

(Continued on Page 103)

"Get a load of the nurse holding Bixby's new kid."

Savory Supper

SURPRISE CASSEROLE

1 cup cooked ham	2 teaspoons salt
2 cups canned tomatoes (solid)	⅛ teaspoon French's Pepper
1 egg, beaten	⅛ teaspoon French's Onion Seasoning
1 cup cracker crumbs	½ cup grated cheese
2 tablespoons French's Mustard	2 tablespoons butter

Dice ham, mix with tomatoes. Beat egg, blend with ½ cup cracker crumbs, mustard and seasonings. Add to ham and tomatoes. Mix cheese, butter and remaining cracker crumbs. Sprinkle over top of mixture. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 30 minutes or until browned. 6 servings.

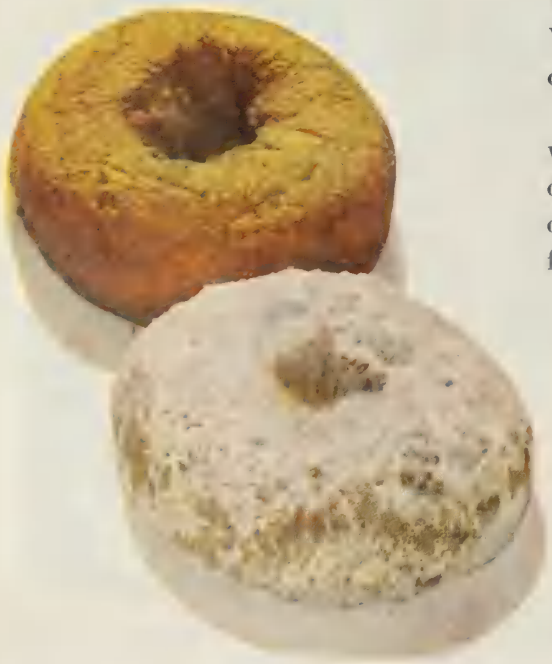
with that special

French's flavor!

GREEN SALAD with Hot Dan's dressing

4 tablespoons French's Mustard	2 tablespoons sugar
3 tablespoons light cream or evaporated milk	3 tablespoons vinegar
	¼ teaspoon salt

Beat with rotary beater until light and fluffy. Makes ½ cup. Pour over salad of crisp lettuce and tomato wedges—or your favorite mixture of salad greens.



FREE! New recipe book—"Dining Delights" Send name, address to The R. T. French Company, 1628 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.

Largest selling prepared mustard in U. S. A.
(Also made in Canada)

Pass the DONUTS - and your party's a success!

Yes, pass the donuts . . . everybody loves 'em! Young or old, teen or tot—when they see a tray of donuts your party's a success.

And it's all so easy! Your baker does the work, while you concentrate on fun. Get some donuts now—several different kinds, all of them delicious—at your bake shop, your grocer's or from the baker who calls at your door.

They're good, wholesome food—donuts ar And they taste so good, so many different way With coffee, milk or soft drinks; at breakfas for snacks, for dessert.

Remember, your baker uses the same hig quality ingredients in baking donuts for you th you would use yourself; bakes them fresh—ever day—with the same care you would take.

Party time or any time . . . enjoy yourself with DONUTS!

© 1950, American Bakers Association, Chicago

HIGHEST NUTRITION FOR AMERICA
Bakers of America
SEAL OF ASSURANCE
PUBLIC SERVICE COUNCIL
MOST DELICIOUS ECONOMICAL FOODS

(Continued from Page 101)

d just right, either. He had on too many es, for one thing, and she didn't think iked his color. Those new formulas t be all right, but ——

e knew it was an act, because Mother lf always laughed at meddling grand-ers, and she really believed that the new ulas were resulting in bigger, stronger
s. But she managed to get her point s.

e began to suspect, while watching how ier was raising her three youngest, that ever had entirely approved of many of s systems of regimentation. Some of had been necessary because the family so large. Perhaps she had allowed the s to remain in effect until they stopped ir own accord, because she didn't want errule Dad.

other seemed, if possible, to grow closer ever to her three youngest children. But ought the house must seem empty of ren to her. She was bound to realize Jane would be away at college in a little than three years, and that after that would be no one left at home.

wondered what she'd do in the big,
y house that held so many memories.
ouldn't stay there by herself, of course.
ve felt sure she'd never be willing to sell nd she had said repeatedly that she dn't live in anyone else's home—even ome of one of her children.

ankly, we were worried about Mother.

e four youngest boys wanted to be sure would be a social success when she en-high school. The last of the Gilbreths, thought, should set a record for popu-that would stand at until the grandchilcame along.

e bobby-sox era was ng its debut, after a e of formal afternoon
es, spike heels and
permanent waves.
epcat and the square
about to take their places at opposite of the terpsichorean scale, and it was ble to cut a rug without having either t or scissors.

e boys wanted to be sure that Jane was g the first on the bandwagon.

many respects, Jane was Martha all again. She was tall for her age, didn't e she had developed a figure, and was nt to wear Lillian's hand-down dresses hoes. Also, she had a habit of flopping ly into chairs and spreading her knees le as a chestnut tree.

she was beginning to be interested in and she listened willingly to the sugns of Fred, Dan, Jack and Bob.

d and Dan, who as college men spoke some authority, were the first to start ning Jane for high school. During the er, they began telling her what sort of s she should buy for her fall school obe.

"hose things you wear are all out of
" Fred said. "Only sad apples wear any more. You want to get saddle sweaters and skirts, and those socks ust come to your ankles."

"m not going to dress like a little girl," complained. "I can dress up more than when I go to high school, can't I,
er?"

"he boys usually know what they're g about," Mother said doubtfully.

LILIAN has a silk dress she said I can and I thought I'd get some others like
," Jane pouted.

"ou listen to what we're telling you," ordered. "Those silk dresses are out.
ollege girls are wearing what Fred says, ou want to be one of the first in high to dress that way."

"he first impression you make in high decides whether you're popular," agreed. "The boys from the upper s come down by the front door and give w girls the once-over."

Je also was to let her blond hair grow x it page-boy. She was to stop that business of flopping into chairs as if she were playing a game of statues, and she wasn't to use any make-up except lipstick.

Fred studied her face critically. "Dark red lipstick," he said. "That's the color for you. Right, Dan?"

"Dark red," Dan agreed. "Not too much of it."

"But Mother said I could wear all the make-up I wanted to when I got to high school," said Jane. "I don't know about all this little-girl stuff. Did Mother put you boys up to this?"

"I didn't have a thing to do with it," Mother protested. "I don't approve of make-up, but everyone I've seen in high school paints like an Indian. If that's the way you want to look, it's your face. See if I care!"

"What everyone else does in high school is old stuff," Fred explained. "That's what we're trying to tell you. Do you want to be a sad apple?"

Jane said she guessed that if she had to be any sort of an apple, she'd rather not be a sad one.

DAN then showed her how she should sit down. He walked mincingly but with assumed nonchalance to a chair, turned around with a swing of his hips, rose on his tiptoes, sat down daintily with his knees together, and flounced as he adjusted an imaginary skirt.

"It's that kind of jump you give at the end that gets them," he explained. "You see, you act and dress casually, as if you didn't know men existed. But really you're on the ball all the time. And little things like that jump at the end emphasize all a girl's best assets."

Jane tried it, but the boys were far from satisfied. She tried it again, with no more success.

"Don't jump like someone left a hatpin in the chair," Dan winced. "I'll swear, I believe you're hopeless. Don't you know how to do a simple feminine flounce?"

"I did just like you did," said Jane, beginning to lose patience. "You jumped like something was in the chair, too, didn't he, Mother?"

Mother, sitting in a corner, pretended she was absorbed in a book, and didn't answer.

"I'm not supposed to know exactly how to do it," Dan shouted. "All I can do is give you the general idea. For goodness' sakes, don't girls have any natural instinct about how to do things like that?"

"If they do," Jane said hotly, "it's the first time I ever heard about it. And I'm not going to listen if you holler at me. And I'm not going to dress that way, either."

She stalked across the room, picked up a magazine, sat down by Mother, and—there was no doubt about it—flounced as she angrily adjusted her skirts.

"That's it, Jane," Fred shouted. "Just like that."

"Just like what?" Jane sulked. "You give me a pain in the neck, all of you."

"What you did just then," said Fred, "when you fixed your skirts."

"I didn't do anything," said Jane, "except this." She flounced again.

"Solid," Dan agreed.

"Well, why didn't you say so? Anybody knows how to do that." She flounced a third time. "The way Dan showed me, you'd need a built-in pogo stick. I thought you were supposed to see light between me and the chair."

Somewhat pleased with herself, she rejoined the boys for further instruction.

Jane already knew most of the new dance steps, so the boys weren't worried about that. But they spent a good deal of time teaching her dance-floor behavior.

The boys thought that the most important formula for popularity at a dance was knowing how to act when someone cut in. They said they had seen many a girl who was good-looking and a beautiful dancer, but who was stuck most of the night because she had given the impression she didn't like to be broken.

(Continued on Page 106)

My mother—when my patience was at an end, hers had just begun.

—DAVID WESLEY SOPER.

Cheese Festival
RITZ
RITZ
RITZ
KRAFT
KRAFT
KRAFT

Have a Good Time Eating!

CHEESE SOUFFLE'

Gorgeous main dish . . . fairly bursting with tempting goodness! Every forkful a tantalizing, zesty CHEESE morsel. Made with sharp Cheddar.

CHEESEBURGER

A smacking good quick snack! Made with aged, sliced, wedged or loaf Cheddar and hamburger patty. Can include sliced onion or tomato for all-out taste appeal.

MACARONI and CHEESE

Main dish stand-by that never grows old. Taste-tempting, made with grated Parmesan, Cheddar or Provolone CHEESE and sliced, stuffed olives, parsley, pimiento.

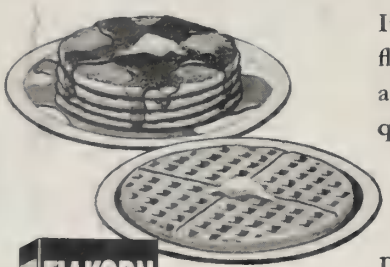
CHEESE and CRACKERS

Always a feast! Choice of CHEESE provides big variety of enticing tastes. Prime favorites for cracker and CHEESE tray—Bleu, Cheddar, Swiss, Gouda.

It's FLAKY because it's FLAKO®

No other pie crust mix, however fine, combines quite the same qualities of flakiness and flavor that have won so many friends for Flako. This is simply because Flako is a special combination and blending of ingredients that no other pie crust mix has been able to match. Precision-mixed for sure results every time. You just add water. Insist upon Flako.

A FULL 9 OUNCES and A FULL PACKAGE. Makes a big, 2-crust 9 inch pie.



FLAKO APPLE PIE

HOW TO DO IT

Prepare crust as directed on Flako package. Fill pie shell with 6 cups of canned or fresh sliced apples. Mix ⅔ cup sugar, ¼ tsp. nutmeg, ⅛ tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. cinnamon, 1 tsp. lemon juice—sprinkle over apples, dot with 1 tbsp. butter. Cover with top crust. Cut slits to let steam escape. Pinch edges. Bake at 425° F. for 40 min.

Good Morning!

It's always a good morning when waffles or pancakes made with Flakorn appear on the breakfast table. Easy, quick and perfect every time. Superior quality ingredients, precision-mixed, make Flakorn waffles and pancakes extra light and flavorous. Don't settle for less. Get Flakorn.

FLAKORN WAFFLES AND PANCAKES

FLAKORN® also makes 12 to 18 CORN MUFFINS

Upside-Down Cake— in a hurry

Just mix an egg and milk with Cuplets and pour over your fruit. It's as easy as that. Also makes delicious single 9 inch layer cake or 12 to 18 cup cakes—just as easily. Buy Cuplets now.

CUPLETS®
CUP CAKE MIX

FLAKO PRODUCTS CORPORATION, NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

(Continued from Page 103)

"It boils down to this, and I'll admit it's an art," said Dan. "You've got to make the boy you're dancing with think you're sorry that someone is cutting in; and you've got to make the boy who's cutting in think you're glad."

Jane said that sounded insincere to her, and she believed a girl always should be sincere, didn't Mother?

Mother thought that one was safe enough. "Yes indeed, dear," she said, coming out from behind her book. "It's a mistake to be hypocritical."

"Of course you should be sincere," Fred agreed. "But you can be glad and sorry at the same time, can't you? Like when you graduated from junior high?"

"Sorry to leave those infants?" Jane laughed condescendingly. "I was only glad then. But I guess I see what you mean."

"Sure you do," Fred soothed her. "You're a smart chick."

"Okay. How do you do it, then?"

Fred and Dan, both six feet and none too graceful, started to dance, and Jack and Bob, not far from six feet and even less graceful, prepared to take turns cutting in.

Mother now gave up all pretense of reading. Her book lay face down on her lap. She had that what's-this-generation-coming-to look on her face, and she seemed tensed, as if ready to make a game try at catching the vases and lamps, in case the boys should bump into them.

"Now I'm leading," Fred told Jane, "and it's up to the girl to make small talk—about anything at all."

"The only small talk I'd make if you were my partner," said Dan, "is to warn you that if you didn't put your right hand up higher, I'd leave you in the middle of the dance floor. You wolf, you!"

Jack stepped up, tapped Fred's shoulder.

"Remember, Jane, I'm playing your part," Dan explained. "Up to now, you've been following your partner. Now you lead just enough so you swing him around, and your back's to the boy who cut in." Dan swung Fred around.

"Only it's not absolutely necessary to kick him like that when you swing him," said Fred, rubbing his shins.

"Now," Dan continued. "See, my back's toward Jack. He can't see what I'm doing. So I look at Fred and I frown a little; I'm disappointed our dance had to end."

He wrinkled his forehead and nose, and made a hideous moue at Fred.

"See?" Dan asked Jane. "Now he thinks I hate to see him go. And he'll be pretty sure to come back and dance with me again."

"Like fun I would," said Fred. "After that last look, I believe I'd run to the locker room and see if anyone had a drink."

"Then"—Dan ignored him—"you separate from your partner. But notice you still hold his hand. Just before you let it go, you give it an intimate little squeeze, like this."

Dan and Fred both squeezed, with all their might. They were always testing their grips, Indian wrestling, and putting their elbows side by side on a table to see which one could make the other bend his arm. The handshake ended in a tie, and they let go.

"Now you turn around," said Dan, somewhat red of face but still intent on his instruction. "Your back's toward your old partner. Now you face your new partner, and your eyes light up. You've been rescued. You've been looking forward all night to this particular dance. You glide into your new partner's arms"—he stumbled into Jack's—"and you say ——"

"Not yet you don't," Mother interrupted, and she was so intent her book toppled to the floor. "You've got to be careful to dance away a few steps from your old partner, first. You don't want him to hear what you say, do you?"

Dan let go of Jack, and all of them turned with new interest to Mother.

"How did you know that?" Fred asked. "You're completely right, but—why, they didn't cut in at dances when you were a girl."

"They didn't cut in," said Mother, "but they came up to your chair where you were sitting with your old partner. I always danced away a few steps from the chairs, and then I said ——"

"Who's being hypocritical now?" Fred hooted.

"What was it you said, Mother?" Jane giggled.

"Nothing, I guess," Mother said primly, leaning over to retrieve her book. "Nothing that would interest this generation."

"Aw, come on, tell us," Jane insisted.

"Well"—Mother blushed—"when it was your father, I guess I said something like; 'Why, Mr. Gilbreth, imagine finding you here. Where have you been keeping yourself all evening?'"

"Was that before or after you were married?" Jane asked.

"Oh, both," said Mother, now apparently intent on her reading.

"And where had he been keeping himself?" said Jane, refusing to let the subject drop.

"What's that, dear?" Mother asked, as if she hadn't been paying attention.

"Where had he been?"

"Your father? Never very far away, dear," Mother smiled. "Not down in the locker room."

Jane's debut at high school was a success, and Jack and Bob informed her she had passed the opening-day scrutiny. Besides Jane, only a handful of seniors had worn bobby-sox clothes. But the handful was composed of girls who admittedly set the fashions, and there was no doubt that the new style would take hold.

Fred and Dan returned to Brown and Pennsylvania, respectively, and Jack and Bob continued the grooming of their sister.

She was to be friendly with everybody, including sad apples and teachers. She was to learn the names of everyone in her classes, and to speak to them by name when she passed them in the halls. She was to be a good student, without giving the impression of studying too much. And she was to keep her face, hands and nails clean, even if it meant going to the girls' room after every class.

"There's nothing worse than a dingy-looking girl," Jack told her. "So don't think

(Continued on Page 110)

You Might Put in Some Candy Too

By Louise Owen

My children, like so many others
Who write but seldom to their mothers,
Have satisfying explanations
For their unkind procrastinations.
Still, twice or thrice a year, or better,
I'm sure that I'll receive a letter
From each of them, when they've been home
And gone again.

e.g.

"Dear Mom:
Vacation was just wonderful.
School seems a little slow and dull.
The weather's fine, I'm glad to say.
I'm working hard. Oh, by the way,
Soon as you can, will you please find
Two or three things I left behind—
My camera . . . brush and comb . . . a pair
Of old brown shoes . . . some underwear . . .
My French book, and my Physics too . . .
And Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue.
Much love. I think that's all today.
P.S. Please send them right away."

Let's have something extra-nice for dinner!

Let's have sweet, spring peas, for one thing—so tender they all but melt in your mouth. DEL MONTE Early Garden Peas—something quite special—

No immature peas here, too young for flavor. No oversize, starchy ones, either. But the best of all the rest—

—all the flavor-filled "middle sizes" in between—the tenderest, tastiest peas of each size selected and packed together, the sweeter blending with the richer-tasting, for full, natural flavor.

One taste tells why it pays to insist on DEL MONTE Brand Early Garden Peas. Why not try them yourself?

Quality-selected from all the FLAVOR-FILLED "middle" sizes

Leftovers go fancy in these pretty pasties!

PEA-PATCH POCKETBOOKS

- 1¾ cups diced leftover roast meat
- ⅔ cup leftover gravy (or white sauce)
- 3 tbsps. sliced green onions
- 2 tbsps. minced parsley
- ½ tsp. celery salt
- ½ tsp. Worcestershire sauce
- 1½ cups pastry mix
- 1 #303 can DEL MONTE Early Garden Peas
- Additional gravy

Simmer meat in the ⅔ cup gravy 10 min. Stir in onions, parsley and seasonings; cool. Make pastry as directed on package; roll out into 10″x16″ rectangle. Cut into four 5″x8″ strips. Place ¼ meat mixture on one half of each strip. Fold pastry over filling; moisten edges with water; lap under edge over top edge and crimp to seal. Prick tops; brush with milk. Bake on cooky sheet in hot oven (450° F.) 15 to 20 min. or till golden brown. Garnish with pimiento, if desired; serve with hot, seasoned DEL MONTE Peas, and pass additional gravy.

Del Monte BRAND Early Garden TRADE MARK Peas

—the brand that puts flavor first

FISHING AROUND for economical protein main dishes . . . but insist on taste and quality, too? Then the best "catch" you can make is DEMING'S Salmon . . . for it's not only salmon at its tempting best, but DEMING'S has stood for "Quality Always" for many, many years. The plump, firm salmon they take from Alaska's icy waters are famous for flavor, texture and color . . . and DEMING'S advanced packing methods bring them to your table at peak o' goodness. Still it's amazingly budget-wise . . . ready to serve in so many ways in your favorite recipes. So don't just ask for "salmon" when you shop . . . treat yourself to the best by specifying DEMING'S. In addition to DEMING'S Red and DEMING'S Recipe Pink, packed in the conventional way, DEMING'S have developed the amazing new salmon with skin and backbone removed, under two labels: DEMING'S Sirloin Salmon (that old favorite Alaska Red Sockeye) and DEMING'S Sam-o-lets, a different kind of delicately flavored light meat salmon you'll love. Serve DEMING'S tonight!

TAKE A TIP from Mr. Squirrel . . . fill your storeroom with delicacies to "tide" you over the winter. How? By putting up homemade jams 'n' jellies . . . for there's nothing more delicious or easier when made with CERTO, America's favorite liquid pectin product. Requires just a one-minute boil . . . which saves precious juices and gives you about 50% more glasses with more fresh fruit color, flavor and fragrance. Try this Grape Jelly and see:

Stem about 3 lbs. fully ripe Concord grapes; crush thoroughly. Add ½ cup water; bring to boil and simmer, covered, 10 mins. Place in jelly bag and squeeze out juice. Measure 4 cups juice into very large saucepan. Add 7 cups sugar; mix well. Place over high heat and bring to boil, stirring constantly. At once stir in ½ bottle CERTO. Bring to full rolling boil, boil hard 1 min., stirring constantly. Remove from heat, skim, pour quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about ten 6-oz. glasses.

One taste and you'll agree . . . there's magic in the word "homemade".

WAKE UP to a breakfast treat that's delicious, nutritious and wonderfully healthful, too . . . a dish of prunes for every member of the family every morning. If you do, you'll find you go to sleep at night feeling better . . . because

Six or seven prunes a day
Are good for you in every way.

But besides being "gems" of health, prunes are taste-enticing, too . . . especially SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Prunes. I think you'll agree they're better than any other kind . . . for they're fully tree-ripened. The extra days of ripening insure extra sweetness, extra flavor . . . as well as the extra "plus" that makes the pulp-bulk extra effective. In addition, they're "Tenderized" (so tender and sweet, they're as good raw as they are cooked!), sealed in foil . . . then packed by the growers themselves. It's good to feel good . . . so serve SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Prunes regularly.

YOU'LL HEAR A CHORUS of praise when you serve this Pineapple Super Chiffon Pie . . . but to "guarantee" a true chiffon texture and the rich, natural flavor of all the ingredients, be sure to make it with KNOX, the real unflavored Gelatine. Here's how:

Soften 1 envelope KNOX Unflavored Gelatine in ½ cup cold water. Stir into 1 cup (9-oz. can) very hot undrained crushed pineapple until thoroughly dissolved. Blend thoroughly 1 can Ten-B-Low, 4 teaspoons lemon juice, 2 teaspoons vanilla, 3 egg yolks, slightly beaten. Combine with gelatine mixture; cool. Beat 3 egg whites until stiff, gradually adding ⅓ cup sugar while continuing to beat. Gently fold into gelatine-Ten-B-Low mixture. Turn into 9-inch baked pastry shell (or pie plate with bottom and sides lined with small chocolate cookies). Chill until firm.

For a prize package of other luscious recipes send for this new booklet . . . "The KNOX Illustrated Guide to Modern Gel-Cookery" (J4)! It's FREE . . . see OFFER #2 in box, top of next page.

QUEEN IT AT YOUR OWN PARTIES . . . by having as much fun and as little worry about refreshments as your guests. How? Why "page" WALTER BAKER, of course . . . for the maker of Premium No. 1, America's favorite cooking chocolate, brings you new 4 in 1 Instant Sweet Cocoa Mix. This means you get 4 luscious treats all out of 1 package . . . and all with that world-famous WALTER BAKER flavor you've known and loved for years.

1. Better Instant Cocoa than any sweet milk cocoa mixes I've ever used . . . delicious steaming hot or in cold milk. 2. The smoothest, creamiest Frosting ever . . . made jiffy-quick. 3. Gorgeous Chocolate Sauce . . . a rich, glistening "crown" for ice cream, cake and puddings. 4. Heavenly Fudge that requires no boiling or testing . . . yet is better flavored than chocolate fudge mixes I've tried.

Easy directions for all 4 on the package, and I can assure you they're fit for a Queen . . . because everything chocolate tastes best when it's BAKER'S! Want to know more? Then see page 2.

BUY-LINES

SEEMS impossible to believe that I've been grinning at you from these pages for one whole year . . . yet today BUY-LINES celebrates its first birthday in Ladies' Home Journal! So let me thank you for WANTED FOR ROBBERY . . . that "villain" who makes his rounds at night, stealing sleep and making many of us feel miserable! His name is "Mr. Coffee Nerves" . . . and he may be robbing you of sleep without your even knowing why. So let me urge you to find out by switching to INSTANT POSTUM . . . then see if you don't sleep better, feel better and look better! I'm sure you will . . . for both coffee and tea contain caffein, a drug and nerve stimulant. And while many people can drink these beverages without ill-effect, others, who are caffein-susceptibles, suffer jangled nerves, indigestion and sleepless nights. So protect yourself from "Mr. Coffee Nerves" by switching to POSTUM . . . 100% caffein-free! You'll feel so much better . . . as well as enjoy the hearty, grain-rich flavor of this drink that's made from healthful wheat-bran. And it fixes "instantly" right in the cup.

WHEN IT'S "TRICK OR TREAT" on Halloween night, give the little ghosts, witches, pirates and other masqueraders who ring your bell a treat like this . . . big bowls full of hot, buttered pop corn. How can you be sure it will be so good your "visitors" won't resort to tricks? Pop JOLLY TIME Pop Corn, of course . . . for unlike most pop corn for home use, it always pops tender and crisp, light and luscious . . . with no hulls or hard centers. But that's only natural . . . because JOLLY TIME is grown from special seed and sealed air-tite in metal tins to keep it fresh, flavorful and perfect for popping anytime. I think everyone loves to pop this best-for-popping corn . . so why not let the "small-fry" fix their own? Takes only a few minutes . . . and you can use any kind of popper or pan. P.S. Since the grown-ups will want to join in on the fun, I'd get from your grocer several cans of both kinds . . . JOLLY TIME White and Giant Yellow.

THE WISE OLD OWL notes that October is National Cheese Month . . . and suggests you celebrate in style. How? By keeping lots of cheese around for snacks and parties . . . by serving it for meals and using it in cooking. And I second the motion . . . for few other foods give so much zest to eating or are so high in healthful nourishment. But one reminder . . . when you shop for your favorite processed and natural cheeses, buy them in CELLOPHANE. Then you can easily spot the kind you want . . . see the color and texture right through the transparent wrapper. And, if you're as finicky about flavor as I am, you'll find cheese protected by CELLOPHANE tastes better. It seals in moisture to preserve the flavor at its tangy, delicious best . . . right down to the last nibble and crumb. And last, but not least, you can be sure it's clean . . . because DU PONT CELLOPHANE protects it from dirt, dust and handling. So when you buy cheese, buy it in CELLOPHANE.

EVERYBODY WILL JUMP at the chance to attend your parties . . . once they know TRISCUIT Wafers are "invited", too. That's no exaggeration . . . for even the nicest parties become nicer when TRISCUIT Wafers "make an entrance". Why? Because they're made purely for your pleasure by National Biscuit Company . . . with a just-right-for-crunching texture and hearty, tangy whole-wheat taste . . . then salted to a "T" and crisped to a golden brown. Whether your party is for a couple or a crowd, TRISCUIT Wafers will keep all your guests "tray-bound" . . . so serve 'em always and all ways:

Canapes Sliced Meats Spreads Cheese
Drinks Soups Salads Appetizers

You'll find that these tangy, tasty TRISCUIT Wafers are such good "mixers", your family will want their "company" at meals and snacks, too . . . but be sure you get the one and only TRISCUIT Wafers . . . made only by NABISCO.

DON'T HURRY . . . the toast will "keep"! That's just one of the many blessings you'll enjoy with a new, streamlined GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster . . . for it promises you piping hot toast when and how you want it. Let's talk about "when" first and let me tell you about its remarkable timing control . . . you just set it to keep your toast down until you, Friend Husband, and the eggs are ready . . . or you can set it to pop up your toast if you wish. And now for "how" you want it . . . light, medium or dark. Again you set the control . . . it won't matter if you're toasting one slice or twenty, you'll still have toast to your taste every time. The Snap-in Crumb Tray is another blessing of the GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster . . . simply snap it out, brush it off and snap it in again. It's as quick and easy as that! So don't hurry for the toast anymore . . . but do hurry to your G-E Dealer's and see this wonderful Toaster. The cost? Only $21.50!

by Nancy Sasser

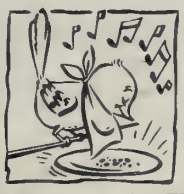
AN ADVERTISING PAGE

our interest in the products e've featured in the past 12 onths . . . for without your ooperation we coul ' t't be elebrating so happily today.

Write Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:
#1 ☐ Cavalier Pin, Dept. L, 25¢ plus 2 CAVALIER Cigarette package fronts.
#2 ☐ KNOX Modern Gel-Cookery Recipes (J4).
#3 ☐ VINYLITE Brand Plastics Make-It-Yourself Booklet.

NCE I ENVIED AN OSTRICH . . . because y hair was so dry, brittle and unruly om using drying shampoos that I wanted bury my head in the sand. But I'm lding my head high now . . . for I've itched to new KREML Shampoo with natural oil base. And I urge you to do e same . . . particularly if you have a new ort hair-do which requires more fre- ient shampoos . . . and use it as often you like. Wait 'til u see the beauti- l difference . . . ny it not only aves your hair glo- ously soft and an gel to manage, but tually encourages e natural curl that drying shampoos de- oy so quickly. And as if that weren't ough to be thankful for, there's still mething else . . . KREML Shampoo's agic new ingredient, "Folisan"! It has ecial cleansing qualities that bring out ur hair's natural highlights . . . giving it lovely gloss and silky, sparkling sheen. t words just don't do it justice . . . so try REML Shampoo yourself.

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS . . . offering you a FREE booklet chock-full of time, work 'n' money-saving ideas to make your home more beautiful! Called "It's Easy to Make-It-Yourself of VINYLITE Brand Plastics", it's a GIFT from Bakelite Division, Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation . . . and contains suggestions "galore" for useful things you can make of beautiful, wear-defying VINYLITE Brand Plastics. I tried it and found sewing these "miracle" materials as ABC-easy as stitching any good fabric . . . so in hardly any time at all I was making: Slip Covers . . . Shower Curtains . . . Table Cloths . . . Draperies . . . Aprons . . . Chair Cushions . . . Bedspreads . . . Bibs . . . Garment Bags . . . Dust Ruffles. And don't forget . . . things made of VINYLITE Brand Plastics need no washing or ironing! Just a swish of a damp cloth keeps these smooth, non-porous materials spotless . . . and they stay new and fresh for "ages"! See OFFER #3 in box above!

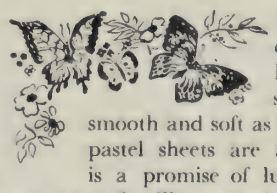


DON'T MISS THIS OFFER . . . FOR I DOUBT IF YOU'LL FIND SUCH A BIG BARGAIN AGAIN! It's an exquisite Cavalier Pin, one of the loveliest pieces of costume jewelry I've ever seen . . . and it's yours almost as a GIFT from CAVALIER, the distinctive new, king-size cigarette. Let me see if I can describe the pin for you . . . the Cavalier figure is beautifully designed and richly colored in deep red, black and gold. It's Hamilton gold finished, too . . . then high y polished and lacquered to prevent tarnishing. You won't lose it easily, either . . . "thanks" to a full safety catch that's ever dependable. Want one? Of course you do . . . but you won't be able to buy one anywhere else for any price. So: ACT NOW! Send two CAVALIER Cigarette package fronts, with 25¢ for each pin. See offer #1 in box. And if I were you, I'd get several . . . they make wonderful gifts. Stock up on CAVALIER Cigarettes and send for your Cavalier Pin today.

YOU SHOULD BE PRETTY AS A PEACOCK when you go out . . . but if you're careless about your beauty "treatments", you'll look plain as a pigeon. So let me recommend my favorite "aid" to perfect grooming . . . CO-ETS, little fluted cotton squares that are wonderfully soft, smooth and absorbent. That's why a CO-ET is your best bet for top-to-toe loveliness . . . for everything from applying powder, rouge, astringents, foundations and the like to removing nail polish, creams and excess make-up. But right now, with so much emphasis on sheer nylon hose, let me remind you that ankles, heels and insteps must be kept smooth and soft . . . and they will be if you do this: Saturate a CO-ET with your favorite creamy lotion and rub over entire ankle area. Remove excess with a clean CO-ET and lo! . . . flaky, coarse patches are smoothed away in "no" time. Do it regularly. CO-ETS cost only 29¢ for the large economy package with 80 fluted cotton squares . . . at all Drug and Cosmetic Counters.

GOLDEN-THROATED CANARY with ong in his heart . . . what a joy at can be! But remember . . . alth and happiness are the first o essentials of beautiful singing. don't trust an ordinary mix- e of a few common seeds . . . ur canary needs a complete diet. And the st answer to that is the 12 tested ingre- nts in FRENCH'S Bird Seed and Bis- it . . . for this appetizing combination d merry variety provides the perfectly lanced nourishment his system "de- mands" for glorious singing. Actually, the sweetest notes are in the Biscuit which contains the elements he would seek in nature . . . and there's a Biscuit in every package of FRENCH'S. With all these advantages, it's easy to see why FRENCH'S Bird Seed and Biscuit has been favored for generations. Let me urge you to try it for just 10 days. I think you'll be rewarded . . . with a happier, healthier canary and, very likely, the loveliest songs he's ever given you.

YOU'LL PURR LIKE A KITTEN the moment you slip a pair of DR. SCHOLL'S AIR-PILLO INSOLES into your shoes and feel their heavenly pillowing ease. You see, they're made of Latex Foam (actually 90% air!) . . . they're air-ventilating air-cushions that pillow your feet from toe to heel in airy softness you'll never forget. That's why DR. SCHOLL'S AIR-PILLO INSOLES perform all kinds of foot-comforting "miracles" . . . like relieving pain, callouses, burning, tenderness and sore heels . . . as well as give arches a soft "bed" to rest on as they ease pressure on nerves in the feet and make walking a real joy. The amazing thing is this . . . DR. SCHOLL'S AIR-PILLO INSOLES cost only 60¢ a pair . . . at your Drug, Shoe, Dept. and 5—10¢ Store. Come in practically all sizes and colors, too . . . white for men, and in white, red, black, brown, gray and green to harmonize with women's open-toe and open-heel dress, sport and casual shoes.



E NEW FALL STYLES are lovely . . . but n't forget that ir whole appear- e can be spoiled dirty grease ots on your thes. That's why reminding you ain to keep 'em an with ENERGINE CLEANING UID . . . for it makes the stubbornest ase spots go wink-quick right before ir eyes. And, as I've told you before, it ntains neither acids nor caustics . . . you use it on even such delicate fabrics as s, laces and velvets. And I don't need remind you that when you keep things an they stay new-looking longer . . . so ENERGINE at your Drug, Grocery 5 and 10¢ Store today and give your ire wardrobe a thorough going-over. I an everything, too . . . your dresses, ts, blouses, skirts, sweaters, hats and all er wearing apparel. Once you try it sure you'll agree . . . ENERGINE EANING FLUID is the best "insur- e" you can buy for your clothes and ir appearance.

MAYBE IT TAKES A MAGICIAN to pull a rabbit out of a hat . . . but a TONI Home Permanent performs an even greater "miracle". For example, I find that my TONI feels as soft as naturally curly hair, looks as lovely and lasts as long as a $20 permanent . . . but my TONI costs only $1. What's the secret? TONI'S exclusive gentle-action formula . . . for it was especially created to give you feather-soft, frizz-free curls the very first day! And don't think I'm prejudiced . . . TONI is the only permanent that has given over 93 million lovely, long-lasting waves. And it's even more popular these days when short hair-dos are the fashion . . . because TONI Midget SPIN Curlers give you neckline curls that are as darling and "durable" as the rest of your TONI Curls. They make it twice as easy, twice as fast, too, and you get 6 of them in the new Combination TONI Refill Kit . . . a $1.50 value for only $1.33. So don't be a "put-er-offer" . . . try TONI today.

PRETTY SOFT . . . sleeping on butterfly wings. And that's exactly what it's like when you drift off to dreamland on Lady PEPPERELL Superfine Muslin Sheets in "personality" colors. They're exquisitely textured . . . as smooth and soft as butterfly "down" and just as bright and lovely. Think pastel sheets are a luxury beyond your budget? Well PEPPERELL is a promise of luxury colored sheets at moderate prices, and I can assure you they'll wear and wear and wear. In fact, recent tests prove that Lady PEPPERELL Superfine Muslin Sheets are 33% stronger crosswise than regular muslins . . . and, of course, it's always the crosswise threads that are first to "go". Come in Aqua, Pink, Misty Yellow, Hyacinth Blue, Ashes of Roses, Spring Green and Peach Bloom . . . the subtlest of compliments for both your family and guests. And treat yourself to some Lady PEPPERELL Fine Combed Percales in exquisite pastel colors, too!

THERE'S NO SUBSTITUTE for personal daintiness . . . so let me remind you again to use LYKETTE Liquid Cream Deodorant and be liked. It's the most effective way to check unpleasant perspiration I've ever used . . . yet is much safer for clothing. But the most wonderful feature of all is its applicator . . . truly the handiest, gentlest self-applicator ever invented. In fact, LYKETTE outmodes all other methods of application—and gives you the nicety of a cream with the effectiveness of a liquid. Yes, just a simple "tip and touch" of the golden sponge-top bottle keeps you fresh and sweet all day. Your hands never touch the liquid . . . and there's no mess, no waste and NO dribble. The surprising thing is this . . . it not only assures your daintiness and is quick, easy and neat, but wonderfully thrifty, too. Costs just 69¢ . . . at all Drug and Toiletry Counters. I know you'll like it . . . so get LYKETTE today and be liked.

The dream chicken that came true!

It's tender-grown Swift's Premium

HERE is chicken at its finest—specially fed for quality meat, specially raised to give springtime flavor every month of the year.

Planned just for eating, this chicken is a sensational example of the research and development going on in the poultry industry today.

Look for fresh tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken with the tag on the wing or Quick-Frozen in the blue and white picture package.

"A Tisket, A Tasket," serve

CHICKEN-IN-A-BASKET

- 1 tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken, cut for frying
- 1 cup flour
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- ½ cup Swift's Brookfield Butter
- Shortening
- 2 teaspoons salt

Put flour and seasonings in paper sack. Shake 3 or 4 pieces of chicken at a time in sack to coat. Heat butter and enough shortening in a heavy skillet to make ½ inch layer. Brown chicken on both sides in hot fat. Cover tightly. Reduce heat and cook 30 to 40 minutes. Serve hot or cold in napkin-lined dinner basket.

(Continued from Page 106)

I'm minding your business if I see you in school and tell you to go wash yourself. I'll just whisper it."

"How about dingy boys?" Jane protested.

"Why, Bob and I always look just like we stepped out of a bandbox," Jack smirked.

"I don't know about that," said Jane. "But if you did, you must have been playing the drums."

"Nobody notices how boys look," said Jack, cuffing her fondly. "And nobody cares whether boys are popular in school."

Sometimes Jane thought it was more trouble than it was worth, especially when the two boys said she might begin to put on weight, and so started taking her desserts away from her. But she had to admit they had been right about the clothes, and she suspected they knew what they were talking about on other things too.

She started having movie dates at night, on week ends. Mother didn't disapprove, and Jack and Bob were elated. The boys wanted to make sure, though, that no one got the wrong idea about what sort of girl she was, so they always told her just what time she was to be home. Usually, to make sure there was no misunderstanding, they told her date too. When the date saw the size of her older brothers, and was informed that they'd be waiting up for Jane, there was little or no argument.

"Even Cinderella could stay out till midnight," Jane would complain to Mother. "Jack and Bob make my dates bring me home by ten-thirty."

"Your father wouldn't let Anne go out at all at night, unless he went along as a chaperon," Mother comforted her. "You don't know how lucky you are to have such liberal-minded men in the family."

"Good night, that was a generation ago. Times have changed!"

The first dance of the school year was a junior-senior-alumni affair, held during the Thanksgiving holidays. It was unusual for girls in the ninth grade to be invited—in fact, none of our girls ever had been asked until they had become juniors.

A man ought to be thankful for little children if for no other reason than that it is so easy to make them happy.
—DOUGLAS MALLOCH.

But Jane's special popularity course had brought results. She had invitations from a junior and two seniors. The boys told her to accept the junior, since he had asked her first. The word always got around, they said, if you turned down an early invitation to accept a later one.

Fred and Dan were home for the holidays, and they and the younger boys agreed to go stag to the dance, to make sure Jane wasn't stuck on the dance floor. Each of the boys also enlisted the aid of four or five friends, all of whom seemed willing, even eager, to cooperate.

RIGHT from the start, Jane was cut in on more than any other girl. Her hand squeezes as she left one partner, and her pleased smiles as she started off with another, apparently became important factors as the night wore on. Because even without her claque, she was undeniably getting a rush. Then Dan cut in, and found Jane near tears.

"He kissed me," she whispered indignantly. "I slapped him as hard as I could, and he just laughed and kissed me again."

Dan roughly shoved away two boys who were trying to cut in.

"Beat it," he growled. "She doesn't want to dance with you."

"Those weren't the ones," Jane whispered as the boys retreated.

"I don't care," said Dan. "You're not going to dance with anybody until we teach you some more."

He signaled Fred, Jack and Bob, and then guided Jane out onto a porch.

"Who did it?" Dan asked. "I'm going to show him whose sister to make passes at."

"A boy named Ned Morris," Jane told him. "He's a senior. I hope you fix him good."

Fred, Jack and Bob joined them on the porch, and Dan explained the situation.

"He's in my class," said Jack, "so I ge whip him. Right?"

Dan and Bob said that was right, but F disagreed.

"We spent a whole summer teaching to be popular," he warned, "and now y want to undo it all. Nobody'll take her ou he thinks he'll have to end up by fighting in case he gets romantic."

"It's really our fault," Bob conced "We taught her how to be attractive, we didn't teach her how to turn it off."

"I slapped him good," Jane said. thought that would turn it off."

"Worst thing you could do," said Fr shaking his head. "It's our fault, all rig We'll keep a close eye on things for the rest the night, and don't you let anybody e take you off the dance floor."

MOTHER was asleep when Jane and t boys returned home from the dance, but s heard them and came down in her bathro to help them raid the icebox. Jane wasn't u set any more, and she told Mother with co siderable detail about the rush she had ha

"You're lucky to have so many brothe to help you get started," Mother said, loo ing proudly at the boys. "You boys ha been mighty sweet to her."

"I'll say," Jane agreed excitedly. "A what do you think, Mother, tonight they' going to teach me about kissing."

"I think that's fine," said Mother, "a it's not every girl —— They're going to tea you about what?" she shouted.

"About kissing," said Jane.

"I won't have it," Mother announc flatly. "I try to be modern. I didn't say word when you were sho ing her about har squeezes and things lik that — things most gir don't know until they' in their twenties." S raised her voice agai "But I won't have an lessons in that. Th very idea!"

It took a little explaining to get across th notion that the boys were planning to teac Jane how not to be kissed. And after Moth had heard what had happened at the danc she agreed that the instruction wasn't takin place a minute too soon.

She poured herself a glass of milk whi Fred fixed her a peanut-butter sandwich, an she got plates and cut apple cake for every one. Then, after looking around self-co sciously as if she wasn't sure but what To would return unexpectedly from the ho pital, she perched on his table.

"School's in session," she declared.

The boys asked Jane how and where happened.

"We were dancing, and he asked me ho I'd like to go out on the porch and look at th moon," she said. "I squeezed his hand, ju the way you showed me, and said I wouldn mind."

"No wonder you got kissed, you sap you, Dan moaned. "What did you do that for?

"You told me to," Jane replied angril "Don't try to put the blame on me. You sai I should try to make all of them like me. Ho was I supposed to know he didn't want t look at the moon?"

"Jane's right," Mother agreed. "It's n her fault."

The boys said that from now on Jane wa supposed to shun parked cars and porche and was to view with suspicion any conversa tion about planets, satellites, constellatio or the need for a breath of fresh air. The showed her, too, how to sit far over on h own side of the car, coming home from date, and how to lean forward, or twis around so her back was to the door, if an one tried to put his arm around her shoulde

"Now if a boy kisses you anyway," sai Jack, "the best squelch you can give him to act like a dummy. The kiss doesn't affe you one way or the other. You're bored wit the whole business."

"That usually gives them the idea," Bo agreed. "If it doesn't, you can wipe your lip with the back of your hand, and look as

(Continued on Page 112)

Cowboy Jim isn't riding today!

IF YOUR "COWBOY" IS TOO FRAIL TO KEEP UP WITH THE OTHERS
PERHAPS HE NEEDS THIS SIMPLE HELP your young "buckaroo" is too frail to "keep o," it may well be due to faulty nutrition.

Often, thin, nervous children are "well-fed," ut ill-nourished. They may get lots of food, ut not always enough of the right kind. Such ildren obviously need special care in the lection of the foods they eat.

A mother should always remember that every ild needs, proportionately, 2 to 3 times as uch of certain food elements as an adult. hese food elements include protein, calcium, on, vitamins C, B_1, niacin and riboflavin. hese may be called the "spark plugs" of ro- ist health and vitality and a child needs plenty them. A lack of one or more can cause a mp. And—please note this—they are the very es most apt to be deficient in average meals.

In theory—an adequate family diet can be ovided by serving a wide variety of carefully lected foods, thereby obtaining all the essen- al elements. And this every mother should rive to do.

In practice, however—this is hard to do, be- use of the many problems of food buying, asonal shortages, storing and cooking, and e wide differences in individual tastes and utritional requirements within the family.

And so, today—busy, intelligent mothers employ a sound and simple method in approaching this problem. They use a supplementary food like Ovaltine.

Ovaltine is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes that may occur even in "good" meals. Ovaltine, mixed with milk, contains practically all the vitamins, minerals, and high quality protein necessary to bring ordinary meals up to the full requirements of a growing child.

So why don't you join the host of other mothers in this program for better health through better nutrition. Give 2 to 3 glasses of Ovaltine daily in addition to regular meals. Then you can be sure you have done just about everything you can do to insure proper nutrition for your child.

NOTE: Ovaltine has a remarkable appeal for children who refuse to drink plain milk, and it is especially processed for easy digestion.

OVALTINE

THE PROTECTING SUPPLEMENTARY FOOD-DRINK

READ WHAT FOOD-VALUES

YOU GET IN OVALTINE

MIXED WITH MILK

HIGH-QUALITY PROTEIN—essential in building body and nerve cells.

HIGH-ENERGY FOOD—needed for keen vitality.

IRON—necessary to maintain good red blood.

VITAMIN B_1—required for good appetite, digestion and healthy nerves.

VITAMIN C—necessary for healthy gums and all connective tissue throughout the body.

VITAMIN D, CALCIUM & PHOSPHORUS—all needed for straight, strong bones, good teeth.

VITAMIN A—a deficiency prevents normal growth—affects vision—may cause night blindness.

NIACIN—for normal functioning of nervous system and digestive tract.

VITAMIN G (Riboflavin)—essential to normal growth—and health of eyes and skin.

Truly, drool-y delicious
...if you use SIOUX BEE honey!

● Now you try Sue's Honey Butter! It's a happy blending—irresistible on piping-hot pancakes, waffles, biscuits, or French toast—or in sandwiches. And so easy to make—and to keep awhile, if there's any left over!

For a delectable treat always, choose Sioux Bee Honey. Use it in cakes and cookies, to keep them tender-fresh longer. Sweeten grapefruit with it. Serve it on cereals at breakfast. And remember—this sweetest of sweets is a calorie miser!

Ask for Sioux Bee Honey because you want the best—the quality-controlled product of the world's largest honey packers. Ask, too, for Sioux Bee Honey Spread—crystallized, to spoon, not pour. In every way, if it's Sioux Bee—it's truly, drool-y delicious!

NEW FREE BOOKLET contains a treasure of unusual honey recipes. Write for it, to Sioux Honey Association, Dept. L-1050, Sioux City, Iowa.

For finest honey, say "Sue Bee"

(Continued from Page 110)

there's something there that their best friend ought to tell them."

"Never slap them," said Fred. "A slap just makes them mad. And they still don't know whether you really object to being kissed, or whether you're playing hard to get."

"You boys," said Mother disapprovingly, "seem to know a great deal about it. Where'd you find out about things like that?"

"It's information," Fred grinned, "that's handed down from father to son."

Tom died a few months later, convinced that pleurisy was the old enemy that finally had laid him low. While he was at the hospital, some of us went to see him almost every day. Sometimes he'd beg to be taken home, where he felt sure he could cure himself in a few days with his Quinine Remedy. But the doctors wouldn't allow him to be moved.

On several occasions we smuggled bottles of the remedy into the hospital, hoping that his faith in its curative powers might make him well again. It didn't seem to affect him, one way or the other.

Tom always had been suspicious of hospitals. He had often told us his belief that doctors sometimes gave the "black bottle"—poison—to patients who didn't have plenty of money.

Toward the end, when he recognized us less frequently, he refused to take any medicines, even the remedy.

It could be said that Tom was a man who never amounted to much. By some standards, perhaps he wasn't even a very good man. He swore a good deal, and in later years he drank more than he should have. But the day he died, twelve people wept for him. That number may be more than par for the course.

PARENTS

It probably takes more endurance, more patience, more intelligence, more healthy emotion, to raise a decent, happy human being than to be an atomic physicist, a politician or a psychiatrist.

—M. R. SAPIRSTEIN.

The raising of eleven children had taken a far heavier toll on our house than it had on Mother. Mother still was slim, quick and erect, but the house was tired and sagging.

The stairs were grooved, and spokes were missing from the banisters. The furnace, never too efficient, now could be coaxed to breathe heat into only the central rooms. The floors had been scuffed beyond repair, and initials had been carved in some of the woodwork. One of the columns of the porte-cochere had begun to rot, causing the roof to angle downward like the tilt of an old rake's hat.

The year Jane was to go to college, Mother agreed with us that it was time for her to move out of the house. We thought she'd try to sell it, but she didn't like the idea of other people living in it, and she knew it wouldn't bring much money. Besides needing repairs, it was built primarily for a family with ten or twelve children. People who could afford to run such a large house didn't have families that size any more.

Mother called for bids and had the house torn down. She supervised the demolition herself. If she felt any pangs as the workmen stripped off the walls and laid open the interior, she kept them to herself.

The motion-study equipment, the files, the double desk she and Dad had used to perfect their original timesaving experiments, went to the laboratory at Purdue. The mahogany furniture she had had since her wedding was sent to a cabinetmaker to remove the scars and stains of a generation of children and several generations of dogs and miscellaneous livestock.

Mother's finances had improved immeasurably as more consulting jobs were offered her. And now she also came into an inheritance from her family's estate. With Bob partly through college and only Jane to go, Mother could retire, if she wanted to, and relax for the rest of her life. After years of working and scrimping, she could have fur coats, a maid to bring her breakfast in bed, even a limousine and a chauffeur, if she wanted them.

Mother didn't want them, and she had no idea of stopping work. She and Jane moved into a middle-priced apartment in Montclair. The old furniture gave a familiar appearance to Mother's new living and dining room except that everything was tidy, polished and reupholstered. She started using the best silver and china, that she had packed away years before, when Anne was starting to walk and pulling things off tables.

A cleaning woman came twice a week, but Mother and Jane did their own cooking. With unrestricted use of her own kitchen, Mother soon became a good cook. If Jane had let Mother have her way, Jane would have been the one who had breakfast in bed. As it was, no matter how early Jane got up, her eggs and toast appeared on the tray about the time she walked into the dining room.

When Jane left for college, and Mother was alone. None of us liked the idea of that. We thought that anyone who had raised eleven youngsters always needed children in the house. Besides, it seemed only right that, after all the years she had looked out for us, we should start looking out for her.

We hadn't had a meeting of our Family Council for years, but when Anne next came to Montclair from Cleveland for a visit, she called a meeting of the Council to discuss Mother.

The Council had been one of Dad's ideas, and he had patterned it after employee boards in industry. The Council had decided matters of policy, such as the use of the children's allowances and the apportionment of household and yard work.

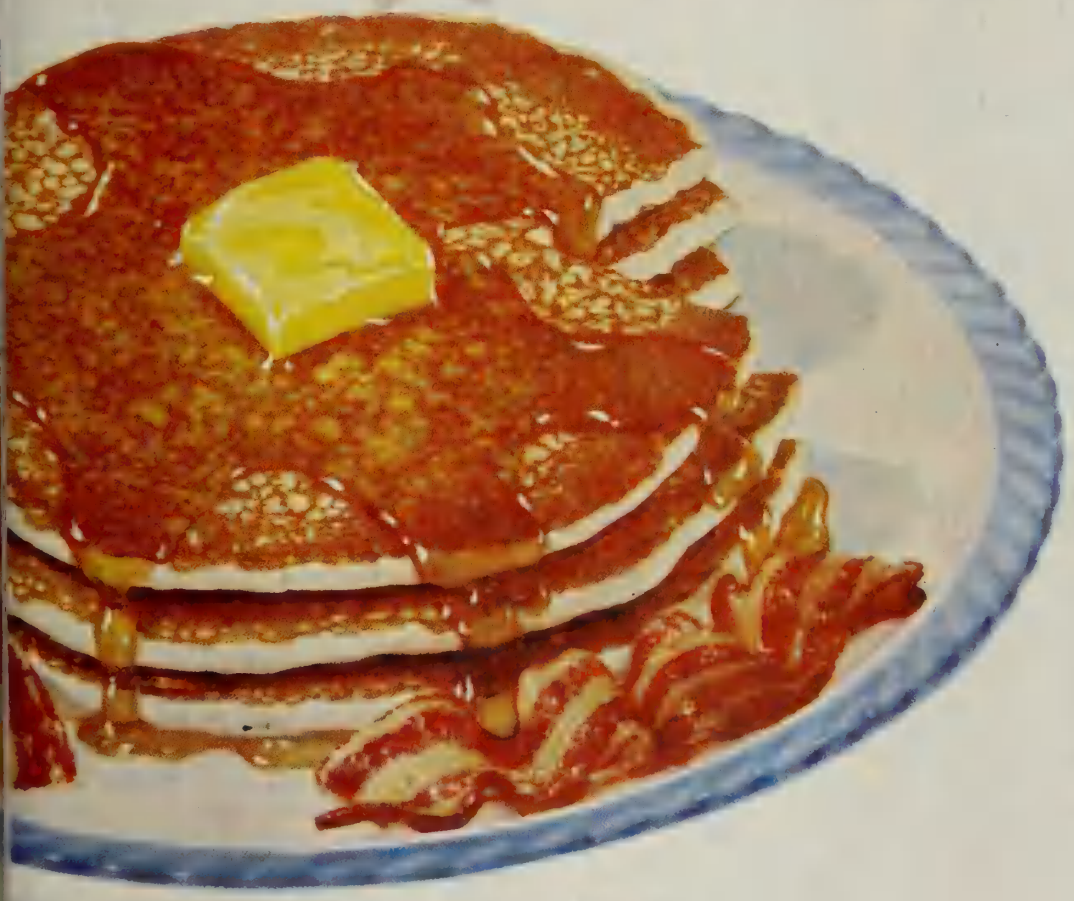
Dad, as self-appointed chairman, had his own set of parliamentary rules, and he wasn't above launching a one-man filibuster when bottling up appropriations bills in committees. But for the most part, the majority ruled.

We didn't want Mother to know about the meeting to discuss her, so we held it at Ernestine's house. It wasn't a formal session—no one presided with gavel in hand and a pitcher of ice water at his elbow, as Dad used to. But we did sit in our old positions around Ern's dining-room table. We studied Anne, now a matron in her late thirties, as automatically in charge when she was home. She sat at the head of the table.

We agreed, first of all, that either Mother would move in with one of our families, or one of our families would move in with her. We felt that what had kept Mother going through the years was the goal of sending each of us through college. When that goal was achieved, there might not be any incentive to keep going, and that would mean Mother would have to make an adjustment.

We thought we'd better start preparing her, in advance, for the adjustment. We knew that many women in their sixties have had years of experience in taking things easy. They played bridge, they talked about movies and their friends, or they sat on rocking chairs with cats on their laps. Mother didn't know how to do any of those things, but we thought that perhaps we could help her learn.

There was something else that all of us took into consideration, but hesitated to put into words. Suppose Mother should want to keep working, but as she got older the invitations and lecture offers should become less and less frequent. There was a rule at Purdue that faculty members had to retire when they reached seventy. That wasn't too many years in the future.



The Council appointed Ernestine to talk with Mother about moving in with one of us. If we could get Mother to do that—to forget about the idea that she might be imposing on someone—she would become interested in helping to raise another generation. The

(Continued on Page 114)

Wake Up to — Aunt Jemima Pancakes

So light-So tender they melt in your mouth!

You can shout "wake up!" or merely whisper it. But nothing brings 'em running like the tantalizing aroma of golden Aunt Jemimas . . . rising to fluffy goodness on your griddle.

You'll have your eyes opened, too. By the magic ease and sureness of Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix. By the lightness . . . the tender flavory lightness no others give you.

And—your first fork-full will tell you too . . . why more homemakers prefer Aunt Jemimas than all other brands put together!

How about pampering your folks with America's favorite pancakes tomorrow?

Get Both Kinds!

The red box for fluffy Pancakes—the yellow box for taste-tinglin' Buckwheats. Remember, both kinds make extra light, crisp Waffles, too!

See for yourself why...

More Women Prefer

AUNT JEMIMAS

than all other brands combined!

So fresh...
so lovely...
so sparkling clear...

the face that's cared for with
TUSSY CLEANSING CREAMS

More than a perfect cleanser, your Tussy Cleansing Cream is a beauty prescription, developed for your own kind of skin, by skin care experts. There's a special cream just for you.
Exclusive Tussy purifiers reach into your pores, searching out impurities, leaving your skin radiant, sparkling clear.

FOR OILY OR NORMAL SKINS: Tussy Pink Cleansing Cream. A light, thorough refreshing cream that whisks away every trace of pore-clogging grime, leaves your skin sparkling clean.
$1, $1.75 and $3, plus tax.

FOR DRY SKIN: Tussy Emulsified Cleansing Cream. Rich in emollient oils...the kind your dry skin is hungry for! Helps smooth away flakiness and dry skin lines, as it does its sparkle-cleansing job. Leaves your skin soft...dewy...fresh. $1, $1.75 and $3, plus tax.

See your complexion improve...with daily Tussy Cleansing Cream care. Start today. At better cosmetic counters.

TUSSY cleansing creams

(Continued from Page 112)

Jane's graduation would be just another incident.

But when Ernestine put the proposition up to Mother the next day, she might as well have saved her breath.

"I can't tell you how much I appreciate it, dear," said Mother. "But I couldn't do that."

"Of course you can do it," Ernestine told her. "There's no use being stubborn."

Mother may have thought that was the pot calling the kettle black, but she realized the intentions were good, anyway.

"As long as Bob and Jane are in college," she said, "I want them to know that we—just they and I—have our own home. That's something that all of you other children had, and I think it's important for them. For me too."

"How about when they're out of college and married?" Ernestine asked.

"I've been thinking about that. And I don't know. Your father's mother lived with us for quite a few years after we were married. I was fond of her, and I think she was of me. But I don't think either of us really liked the situation. I don't know."

So Mother continued to live alone, except when Bob and Jane were home on vacation. And we were still worried about her.

World War II came, then. Five of the boys were in it, and overseas. Mother was older, suddenly, and sometimes she was tired.

She wrote each of the boys every day, and waited mornings for the mailman before she went into New York. She never talked about the war or how battles were going. Telegrams made her nervous; she held them up to the light before she opened them.

There were new demands on her time. We could see there wouldn't be any question about her not being busy as long as the war lasted. She was working with the War Manpower Commission. The Government was using her studies on motions of the disabled to help rehabilitate amputees. War industries wanted the latest timesaving techniques. Many of the graduates of her motion-study courses, which she had discontinued some years before when the engineering jobs started to come in, had important production jobs, and sought her out for consultation. Walt Disney made a training film, in Technicolor, of the process chart.

She journeyed to Providence to help christen a Liberty ship named for Dad. She went to Chapel Hill for Bob's graduation. Finally the day arrived when she boarded a train to Ann Arbor, for Jane's.

That was a special occasion for Mother. She rode in a lower berth. From that time on, when the space was available, she rode in lowers.

SHE and Anne sat together with the spectators when Jane received her diploma. It should have been a happy occasion, because it symbolized the fulfillment of something Mother had promised herself. But when Anne thought about the sacrifices Mother had made to keep that promise, a lump settled in her throat.

Mother's youngest, handsome with her mortarboard cocked debonairly over an ear, bounded nonchalantly across the stage. She took the hand of the man who presented it—possibly giving the hand a parting squeeze—and rejoined her class.

Anne dabbed at her eyes with a handkerchief. Jane doesn't appreciate what Mother's done for her, she thought. None of us appreciate it. I didn't appreciate it at the time either. I thought I did, but I didn't, really.

Jane turned around in her seat, spotted them, and waved the diploma triumphantly aloft.

"I guess Dad would be proud," Anne said, turning to Mother.

Mother didn't answer. Her eyes were closed. Her face, in repose, hadn't changed much through the years. There was the new nose, of course. Anne waited a moment, a nudged her slightly.

"I declare, you're a great one," An teased. "Work a whole lifetime to send yo children through college, and then go sleep when the final great moment arrive

Mother opened her eyes. "I wasn't aslee she said softly. "I was saying thank yo

Jane and Bob were married in a year so—all of us married young and soon h children of our own. And then the war v over and the boys began to come hor Mother seemed to shed some of the ye that had piled suddenly upon her.

She thought it would be a good idea hold a family reunion, so that all of us co see the boys and so that the three new grandchildren could be christened toget in our church in Montclair.

We converged from various parts of country. Some of us from out of town a our families stayed at Mother's apartme and others moved in with those who lived or near Montclair.

EXTRA leaves were put back into the dini room table, and Mother's icebox was full baby bottles again. The good china v taken out of circulation and put on h shelves.

As Mother bathed and powdered our c dren, and gave them their bottles, seemed gayer and happier than we reme bered seeing her since Dad's death. Whe came time to do the dishes at night, sh take three or four of the older grandchild back into the kitchen and they'd dry wh she washed. We'd hear a lot of giggling, a know Mother was telling them stories ab when we were you Sometimes they'd sing old songs that Mother h taught us and we h taught them.

Justice is what we get when the decision is in our favor.

—JOHN W. RAPER: What This World Needs (World Publishing Company).

We whispered to another that we could understand why, sin Mother seemed to en our visit so much, wouldn't move in with one of us.

On the day of the grandchildren's chr tening, we assembled at the apartment walked the two blocks to the church. Besi Mother and the eleven of us, there were husbands and wives and fifteen of children, including the three babies w were to be baptized.

Two pews had been reserved for us at front of the large, Gothic church. We walk down the center aisle as quietly as we cou But there were so many of us, and Moth knew so many people, that our entra created a good deal of attention. Moth ramrod straight and immensely dignified, the delegation. We thought she looked a she were proud of us and proud of her gra children. We hoped she was.

The service started. The organ mu rolled out loudly, and then there was a hu and the opening prayer. Three of our bo and their wives stepped forward with th babies.

The clock turned backward for some of

When we were young, there was a christ ing in the family almost every year. And though Dad had much more experience w baptisms than the average man, they ways made him nervous and irritable.

It wasn't just the christenings that objected to—he objected to going to chur for any reason. He kept saying that he wa religious man, and had nothing agai churches; that he thought it was fine Moth and all of us went regularly. But he ne went himself unless there was a reason, su as a christening. And even then Mother h to prod him all the way.

Few martyrs ever looked more persecut as they approached the stake than did D when, with a baby under his arm, he left t house for a christening.

"This piecemeal business of christeni them one at a time is the height of ine ciency," he'd storm to Mother. "It's a h jingoed indignation, by jingo."

(Continued on Page 116)

Romance of the Sea

THE NEW WALLACE "THIRD DIMENSION BEAUTY" PATTERN IN STERLING SILVER

Dynamic and thrilling as it unfolds the true beauties of the mood of adventure found in Nature's fascinating symbols of the sea.

Fully sculptured in "Third Dimension Beauty," the mermaid silhouette is the exact body outline for this enchanting pattern.

And deeply down the silver stem
The motif is the ocean's gem
Gay flora flows in rhythmic swirl
Rich setting for the lovely pearl.

The majestic shell, the scrolling wave, the delicate spray and the sparkling bubbles complete the imaginative accomplishment.

"Romance of the Sea" is shown wherever fine sterling silver is sold. Also Mr. Warren's Grande Baroque, Sir Christopher, Grand Colonial, Stradivari and Rose Point. Prices for Six-piece place settings: $27.40 to $37.50.

WILLIAM S. WARREN
Creator of "Romance of the Sea" and other Wallace designs sculptured in full-formed "Third Dimension Beauty"... beauty in front, beauty in profile, beauty in back.

COPYRIGHT 1950 WALLACE SILVERSMITHS

WALLACE STERLING Silver

WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, WALLINGFORD, CONNECTICUT
Since 1835

America's Smartest Walking Shoes

Edith $9.95

Sally $9.95

Saucy $9.95

All over the country quality-minded women are asking for ENNA JETTICKS, "America's Smartest Walking Shoes." With their famous invisible "it" factor —fit! With their clearly visible good looks! See your local dealer this week for these nation-winning, nation-walking shoes!

Some ENNA JETTICK Styles are made in sizes 1 to 12 widths AAAAA to EEE

$7.95 to $9.95

A few at $10.95

ENNA JETTICK SHOES, INC.
AUBURN, N. Y.

THOSE COMFORTABLE

Enna Jettick

America's Smartest Walking Shoes

"Maybe so, dear," Mother soothed him, "but I don't want to raise a houseful of heathens. One in the family is enough."

"Me a heathen?" Dad yelped. "You know I'm a religious man. But this is my final piecemeal christening. After this one, we're going to wait until the last of them is born, and then get it all over with, in one efficient ceremony."

"We can talk about that when the next one arrives," Mother smiled.

"That's what you always say. And I wind up in church with a new baby on my hands!"

Dad never had much confidence about holding babies when they were small. He was afraid he might hurt them, so he didn't grasp them firmly, and they'd wiggle until their dresses were up around their heads. When this happened, Dad would try to straighten out their clothes and get things so twisted around that Mother would have to come to the rescue.

When he stood with Mother at the front of the church, he always looked as if he wasn't quite sure whether he was holding the baby right side up. And he seemed worried that he might cause the minister to make an embarrassing blunder.

We older children would be sitting with our various Sunday-school classes, in the galleries on each side of the altar, dreading what we knew we were going to do, and yet knowing that we couldn't help doing it.

We always disgraced ourselves at the christenings of our younger brothers and sisters. As the baby squirmed in Dad's arms, while he kept peering down into the dress to make sure the head was still on top, the situation would seem more and more ludicrous to us. We'd think about how Dad had stormed beforehand, and how he was going to storm afterward at Sunday dinner.

THEN it would happen, and we would disgrace ourselves again. Suddenly, one of us would explode in a snorting giggle. You couldn't hold it back—it was embarrassing, but it was just too funny, and there wasn't anything you could do about it.

Another one of us, sitting with another class and vowing that this time he could control himself, would hear the snort, and he would explode too. Finally, all of us would be giggling, and people down in the congregation would crane their necks to see what was causing the disturbance.

Since Dad went to church only for the christening of his own children, he comforted himself with the thought that a few jackasses in the balcony always giggled whenever a child was baptized. Although this belief was completely erroneous, we did our best not to dispel it.

"Worst-mannered congregation I ever saw," he'd complain afterward. "They seem to think a christening is like a vaudeville show."

Bob's baby was a wiggler. As Bob and his wife and the two other couples stood in front of the minister, the dress of Bob's daughter started to slide over her head. With considerable concern, Bob looked down. Just for a minute, it was Dad all over again. Just for a minute, the older ones who were sitting with Mother were little children again, up in the galleries with their Sunday-school classes.

Ernestine had a horrible thought. Suppose she should suddenly start to giggle? It was

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Lost Return

By Maribel Coleman Haskin

The snowball bush is rough and gaunt
With years of random growing;
The house has peeled to a silver gloss
And the fields have forgotten sowing.

The woven chair in the window bay
Begins an aimless rocking,
And I hear the echo of dusty words
In the dim, old corners . . . mocking.

The sun is bright on tangled space
With a warmth I can't be doubting,
But the wind in the willow tree is loud
With lost young voices . . . shouting.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

pose an adult, herself the mother of t children, should do it? It was out of t question, of course. Adults could cont themselves. They simply didn't make scen like that.

Bob's daughter wiggled some more, a Bob looked down again to find her head.

Ernestine snorted. She put her hand ov her mouth, but the giggle came out throu her nose. You could hear it all over t church.

ERNESTINE'S husband and children look at her with amazement. Mother hunched h shoulders instinctively, and kept her ey straight ahead, as if Ernestine were somec else's daughter who had got into our gro by mistake.

Ernestine tried biting her lips, but it w no use. She sat there and giggled. So did t rest of us, in a series of moist explosions. S although she s denies it, did Moth There are witnes to prove it.

So did the cong gation and so did t minister — he h been at the chur for years, and recal the old days. For nately the christeni service hadn't qu started; he stopp everything a laughed until he h to dig under his ve ments to get a han kerchief.

Finally there w quiet again, and t three babies were ba tized. The minis climbed back into t pulpit, and look down at us. V weren't too hap about the way we h behaved.

"I don't know I'd want to go throu it all over again a have the eleven you up in the b cony every Sunday he began. "I'm not as young as I used be. But it's good to have you here or visit. It's good to see you together aga Mighty good!"

We glanced at Mother to see how she w taking it, and for the first time we knew certain why she lived alone. We knew th glad as she was to have us home, she liv alone because she liked it.

For Mother was nodding agreement. S didn't want to go through with it all ov again either. One generation was enou Mother looked as if the minister had tak the words right out of her mouth.

Mother still lives in the same apartme She retired from her teaching at Purd when she reached seventy, but she is bus than ever today.

Not long ago, the American Society Mechanical Engineers and the Americ Management Association awarded to her, a to Dad posthumously, the Gantt medal "pioneer work in management and the d velopment of the principles and techniqu of motion study." And the Americ Women's Association named her Woman the Year.

Even those of us on the West Coast see h four or five times a year, because she has good many lectures there. Those who live or near Montclair drop by the apartme fairly often after dinner when she's hon and to sort and forward her mail when sh away.

Before she leaves town on business tri Mother makes out an itinerary listing t hotels and the persons' houses where she w be stopping. At the bottom of the itinerar it says:

"I know you'll call me, if you need me

Stockings so good they're signed with the label
that won't wash off

Berkshire's Nylace 15s the lovelier 15 denier, 51 gauge Kantrun Nylons with the dainty new lingerie top...now so sheer you can hardly see them. Full-fashioned, dull textured...in Berkshire's Beautiful Blends, the season's newest colors in stockings. And like all Berkshires, Nylace 15s are permanently identified with size, length, and sheerness information to make your additional purchases easier. Stocking color—Tawny Blend.

sheer...
sheer Berkshire
Stockings

Costume by Kiviette
Shoes by Evins

MADE TO FIT YOU BY THE WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF FULL-FASHIONED STOCKINGS

AMERICAN BEAUTY'S

Sweet-Sixteen Wardrobe — $103.70

VELMA LEE HALL, sixteen this month, lives in San Gabriel, California, where her days are taken up mostly with school, week-end movie or dancing dates, and parties. Perfect for school days or football games is her plaid wool dress: her beloved velveteen skirt with varied tops takes her to the most casual get-together, or to a very dressed-up party: over everything goes the fitted tweed coat, informal for its rough fabric, yet dressy in its silhouette and velvet accents. • By CYNTHIA MCADOO Braid-trimmed plaid wool, pleated skirt, $17.95; side-brimmed felt cloche, $6.95.

Bare-necked top in velveteen to match her skirt for week-end parties. Top, $6.95.

Velveteen skirt, $14.95; crisp velvet-trimmed jacquarded cotton shirt, $5.95.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LEOMBRUNO · BODI

Grège mixed-tweed fitted coat with velvet collar, $45.00. Worn with head-hugging helmet of gray velveteen, $5.95.

"I think we've all been wanting just exactly this!"
Mrs. George Jay Gould, Jr.

"There's never been such a wonderful 'take-it-with-you' make-up as Pond's Angel Face! And now—in this lovely new Mirror Case—we're all going to love it more than ever!"

New! Angel Face by POND'S "Mirror Case"

That divine foundation and powder—all-in-one... now in a slim, lovely case for your handbag!

Now—your beloved Angel Face comes in a beautiful new case! Sleek as polished ivory . . . with golden tracery. Smoothly clasped and hinged—it's slim, enduring, very handsome. Inside—a full-view mirror, a dainty puff . . . and heavenly Angel Face! Sweet-tinted glamour that smooths on with a puff . . . but stays on much longer than any powder, and can't spill. Because Pond's Angel Face is foundation and powder in one! Angel Face "Mirror Case" with choice of 6 heavenly skin tones, only $1 PLUS TAX

In the much-loved blue-and-gold box, too!—89¢, plus tax.

"Do NYLON pleats stay in?"

THIS IS ONLY ONE OF THE QUESTIONS ANSWERED IN THIS ISSUE OF THE

DU PONT NYLON INFORMATION SERVICE

"Is nylon warm or cool?"

Surprisingly enough, it's both! In summer you can ask for nothing cooler than sheer, lovely, porous nylon lingerie, airy nylon tulle evening gowns! Come colder weather and you'll appreciate the comforting warmth of spun nylon sweaters and socks! Nylon fabrics can be warm. Nylon fabrics can be cool. What makes a fabric cool? Thinness and the ease with which air passes through it. What makes a fabric warm? Thickness, yarn construction, thousands of tiny insulating air pockets.

"Why do some nylon blouses cost more than others?"

There is as much variation in products made of nylon as there is in products made of other fibers. Du Pont makes the nylon fiber. Your satisfaction with a finished garment depends not alone on the fiber, its strength, its long wearing, its abrasion-resistance, but on how well that fiber is woven or knitted into a fabric. Your satisfaction also depends on the skill with which the fabric is cut and fitted . . . on honest workmanship, good construction. One product made of nylon may cost a lot more than another—and be worth every penny. Worth it—because you are paying for better design, better styling, better detail of tailoring and construction.

"Do nylon pleats stay in?"

Pleats to marvel at, pleats that fall knife-sharp after washing, are yours when the pleats in your nylon gown have been properly heat-set by the manufacturer. When nylon pleats go through the right heat-setting process, you can wash them again and again without a single worry about the pleats coming out.

"Will nylon sweaters stretch or shrink?"

Here's one more way easy-living nylon saves you time and expense. When spun nylon has been properly heat-set, your sweaters and socks won't stretch, sag or shrink out of size or shape. No more blocking sweaters—forget about sock stretchers!

"What affects the wear of nylon stockings?"

The life of your nylon stockings depends on many things—construction, proper fit and length, care in handling, care in fastening garters in the heavier welt part of the stocking . . . and denier.

"What is denier?"

Denier is the weight and thickness of each thread in nylon stockings. You can buy stockings in 15, 20, 30, 40, 50, and 70 denier. The higher the denier number, the stronger the thread. A 15 denier thread is only half as heavy as a 30 denier thread. Before 1948 most stockings were of the heavier 30 or 40 denier. Today, however, because of their sheer, leg-flattering beauty, many women prefer the filmier 15 denier stockings.

"Does Du Pont make nylon stockings?"

No! Nylon stockings are made by hundreds of manufacturers. Some of them may mark their stockings "Made of Du Pont Nylon" to inform you that they have used the raw material, nylon, made by Du Pont, but Du Pont does not make the stockings.

"How can I avoid runs and snags?"

Gentle care means longer wear. Keep hands and nails smooth. Remove rings when handling stockings. Dry stockings over a smooth rod. Keep them in hosiery cases or wrapped in facial tissue. Remember, too, the right size for your foot and right length for your leg is important for long wear. If stockings fit too tightly, the fabric is strained. If they fit too loosely, they snag more easily.

"What is spun nylon?"

Popular spun nylon products, such as sweaters, socks, mittens and inner linings, are made from "spun" nylon yarns. Like other spun yarns, spun nylon is made by twisting together nylon fibers that have been cut in short lengths. Some of the short fibers project from the yarn, making it soft, fuzzy—but above all, it's wonderfully warm.

"What is the best way to iron nylon?"

Lady, you're lucky! Many easy-living nylon fabrics don't need to be ironed at all! Others look a little trimmer for a light pressing with a cool iron—275°—or set at the "rayon" or "nylon" control. Nylon's easier to iron if you hang each garment while wet, and smooth wrinkles out with your hands.

"WHY DO YOU HAVE A NYLON INFORMATION SERVICE?"

As a service to you who buy and use nylon, we are running this series of advertisements aimed at answering some of the eager questions you've been asking about nylon.

Du Pont does not make nylon sweaters, socks, curtains, stockings, dresses—or any finished nylon product. Du Pont does, however, make the basic nylon fiber, from which all these things—and many more—are made.

FREE! Learn more about nylon! Send for new leaflet, "Care of Nylon." Write to Dept. J., E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Nylon Division, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING...THROUGH CHEMISTRY

For nylon . . . for rayon . . . for fibers to come . . . look to Du Pont

Delicate flower clocks on June's sheer nylons flatter her slim ankles . . . make a wonderful conversation piece.

"My nylons always get gentle LUX care!"

SAYS

JUNE ALLYSON

Nylons last longer, colors stay lovelier

Diminutive June Allyson started her career as a dancer on Broadway . . . collects classical records . . . gets record wear from her dancing stockings.

"I wouldn't trust my nylons to anything but Lux," says June. "I always insist on it. Even my sheer nylons last unbelievably long. I hardly ever get runs!"

Scientific strain tests prove Lux Flakes really do wonders for wear. Stockings rubbed with cake soap or washed with a strong soap go into runs much sooner. Luxed stockings last twice as long!

No other soap, no other washing product known can make stockings last longer. These extra-gentle suds make nylons fit better, too. Colors stay truer!

No wonder Hollywood's loveliest legs wear nylons washed with Lux Flakes! Try this washbowl magic to make your nylons last longer . . . give all your nice washables gentle Lux Flakes care for that lovely Lux look.

LUX Flakes for that lovely LUX look

JUNE ALLYSON
Co-Star of
"RIGHT CROSS"
A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Production

DESPERATE COUPLE

(Continued from Page 39)

room upstairs, bathroom downstairs. Hot ummer, cold in winter. Roof leaks, cellar s."

You thought it was wonderful when we nd it," he reminded her.

he did, she had thought it heaven. A e white house with lilacs, a darling little se all their own after two years of living n Bill's sister. But they had outgrown it, of course they hadn't realized how badly as built. They had saved some toward ing a place, but there wasn't a house in n under twenty-five thousand. And no als. Every so often Olga Reade, their -estate friend, phoned with something, it was always on the main street next garage, or twelve miles out.

Bill wanted to move as badly as she he would find something, she thought. e had to move we'd find a place. He loves the lace and he gets sentimental because it was first home, and moving is a bother.

ne stopped her mental grousing, the knob still in her hand, to realize there curious hilarity from the boys' room. hat's happening in there, men?"

Nothing." That always had to be the answer.

What's happening?"

The window fell out the window."

Not all of it. Only one."

ne went in. A pane had let go and slid n into the grass. All the panes were put ith what seemed like brown-sugar frost- The three of them went outside and she naged to hold the pane in place with a few s, but made the mistake of putting the mer down. Anthony gave the tacks an a whack and the pane was no more.

s usual, worse than the crime was the blem of punishment. "Hold out your ds, Anthony. You know that was naughty."

n but not angry.

It's my turn to be punished," Donoghue ed. "He was punished the last time." Both hold out your hands then." Four ds got slapped.

Now I can break a window." Donoghue med and picked up the hammer and e she was trapped. He had a right to e crime for his punishment. She fastened a piece of glass up and let him whack at it, but there was something synthetic about it. "Am I as naughty as Anthony was?" he asked, suspicious.

"Yes, you're very naughty."

"But you said I could hit it." Donoghue told her.

"Oh go play in the sandbox." She was fed up with their adamant logic. Twins are not just two children; they are a conspiracy. "Go on—go play. No more punishment for either of you. Scoot."

She suddenly realized they were being watched.

"Are you friends of ours?" Donoghue called out.

The girl looking out of the car spoke to the boy with her and then both came through the gate. "We heard how this place was for rent," the girl said, "and we wondered could we see it."

Trudy was quick to size people up. She liked the girl—wide face, clean skin, shiny hair, honest, amused eyes. Peasant type. The boy, hanging back slightly, was dark, thin and shy.

"Come in," Trudy said, smiling, and they followed her through the porch to the living room, Anthony and Donoghue bringing up the rear.

"Have you come to a party? Because the cake is all gone."

"But too much cake might make you sick."

"Boys—down to the sandbox."

"Gee, they're cute," the girl said. "Imagine having twins!"

"It is one of life's experiences that cannot be imagined," Trudy told her. "You mean you two are looking for a place to live?" They were so appallingly young.

"Yes, we want to be married, you see. I'm Stella Durgin and Bud is Bud Spooner. You see, we can't get married because we can't find anyplace to live. I suppose we could get a room, but you know how it is; I want my own place, get dinners, and all that. I'm giving up my job—we both work at the Bayside Mill. We've looked and answered ads—it's just awful here in town. So when we heard about this place—we been by lots of "Humph! If that's what they want, I can drop mine off the shoulder too!"

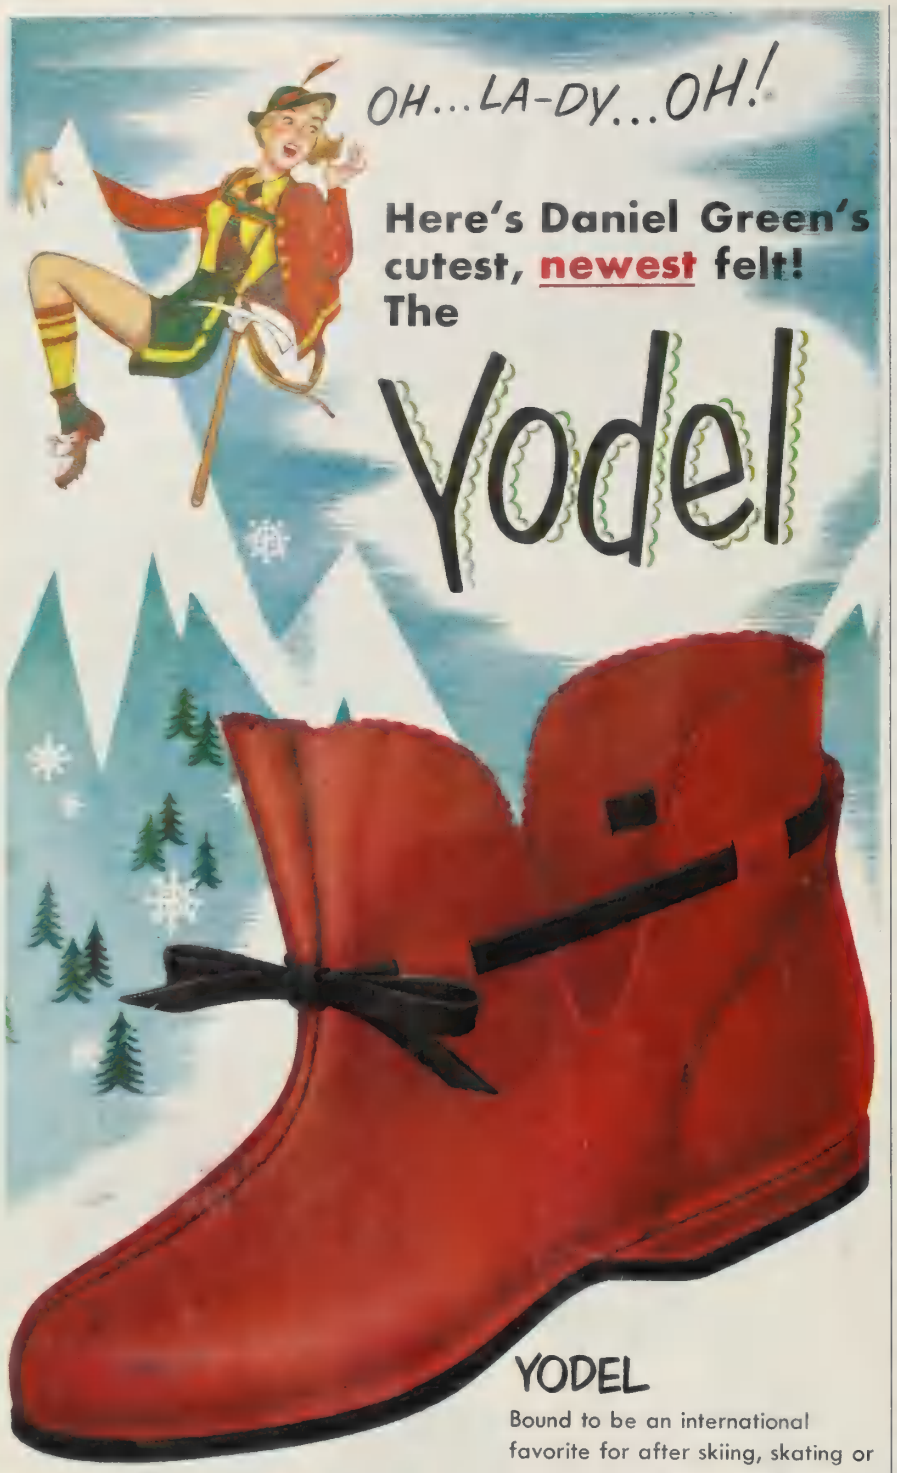
ONLY

PERMA·LIFT girdles

have the Magic Inset

No Bones About It—



Stays Up Without Stays

Whether you're on a social spree or a workaday whirl, you're the picture of fashion with a new "Perma·lift"* Girdle. Here's the brightest, lightest, smartest, smoothest girdle you ever wore and oh! so comfortable. Not a bone or stay to poke or pinch—just the lasting stay-up smartness of the Magic Inset delicately designed in the front panel. Your dainty "Perma·lift" Girdle can't roll over, wrinkle or bind—it stays up without stays. Select the style just right for you at your favorite corset department—$5.00 to $10.95.

Also enjoy a "Perma·lift" Bra—America's best loved bra with "The Lift that never lets you down."

*"Perma·lift" a trade-mark of A. Stein & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

Look for the Magic Inset

Here's Daniel Green's cutest, newest felt! The Yodel

YODEL

Bound to be an international favorite for after skiing, skating or just plain lounging around the house. In vivid felt with contrasting ties. $6.00

WAHOO

Sleek, streamline Indian moccasin 1950 style. $5.50

POW-WOW

Daniel Green's tried and true felt ghillie has become a "must" for all ages.

$5.50

All three slippers come in red, green, royal blue, sand or black Velvafelt, exclusive with Daniel Green.

• Daniel Green has felt slippers for men, too!

Daniel Green COMFY SLIPPERS

Made by Master Craftsmen Since 1882

times and always said how cute it was. . . . They'll be plenty after it all right."

Bill would have a good laugh at that, Trudy thought. It was sad really. That was just the way they had been, afraid someone else would get it first.

"It is a cute house," she agreed. "But it's awfully small. There's only one bedroom upstairs; that back room you can use as a bedroom, but it's tiny. The bathroom is quaintly put *down*stairs."

"Gee. Two bedrooms. Think of that, Bud."

"And it's in very bad condition. It wouldn't be fair not to tell you. You see that broken doorknob and that floor board. It's like that all over the house. The owner built it himself, of cardboard and glue, I think."

"Oh well, you can't expect everything. Bud's good at fixing things. He can do anything."

"My husband is good too." Trudy felt she had to say it. "But he says the only way to fix this house is to tear it down and start right over."

"Nice fireplace," the boy said. "Does it work?"

"Yes, it does." What wonderful fires they had had there! These two would have her thinking she and Bill were crazy to move.

"I never thought we would have a house with a fireplace. When do you expect to move?"

Trudy faced her, ashamed—she should have explained sooner. "I'm afraid we aren't moving right away. You see, we haven't found a place ourselves. We're dying to get out ——"

Screams, and in rushed Donoghue and a shamefaced Anthony. "I was only scalping him," he protested.

"He wasn't either. He was cutting off my nose. He had a very sharp knife."

She never learned. "Anthony Page!" She grabbed him. He held up an empty clenched fist.

"See it. It's all baloody."

"Well, wipe the blood off and put it away," she said calmly. "You make-believe screaming at make-believe knives, Dono."

"Say," Bud exclaimed. "Do you know what? I just remembered. My father was a twin. I never thought about it much because my Uncle Leo died before I was born. Well, what do you know!"

"Gosh." Stella laughed and flushed. "You'd better think about it. What am I letting myself in for?"

Trudy thought they might as well see the house while they were there. It took only five minutes with an absurd dialogue like opposing attorneys.

"You see how badly the cellar needs pointing. It's wet all the time."

"An oil burner! What d'you know? Gee!"

"There should be storm windows."

"What a wonderful view of those trees."

"You'll need lots more shelves in the kitchen and the stove should be moved and the door opens wrong—when it opens."

"A fine sink!"

"WELL, there it is," Trudy said. "We'll let you know the minute we find anything. It can't be too soon for me."

"Yes, but we've got to make our plans," Stella said, sitting on the couch again. "Bud has to get time off for a honeymoon and I got to give notice. And planning the wedding and all—letting my girl friends know. I'm going to have six bridesmaids. They all keep asking." She sighed and smiled at Bud pathetically. "We was hoping it could be next month."

"I wish it could. I'll write the owner that you want it when we leave. I'm sure it will be all right with him."

"Everyone knows Bud's father," Stella said. "He had a milk route for years. Maybe you know the old Spooner place—some Poles rent it, they sell apples. Bud's father lives with Len now."

"Oh, yes, the good old apple barn ——"

"Mom," Anthony said, behind her, "you know that cellar door ——"

"Just a minute, Anthony. We'll keep in touch with you, Stella. I'm terribly sorry for you. I know what it is to be engaged. We waited two whole years."

"Mom." Anthony pulled at her skirt. "Mom."

"Good-by," Stella said. "Good-by, Anthony. Where's Donoghue?"

"Oh, he's asleep. When the cellar door fell in he went to sleep."

They pulled him out of the wreckage, his chin covered with blood, one eye swollen. Bud was wonderful, felt him all over before moving him, got him onto the couch and went for cold water.

Trudy knelt beside the couch. "Dono—Dono darling. Dono —— Oh, I think we ought to get a doctor."

Dono opened one eye. "Hello," he said weakly.

TRUDY wiped her eyes and then she stood up. "This house!" she exploded. "You can have it. I'm through. Take it—any time you want."

"Aw, no, Mrs. Page." Nice, honest Bud. "You're just saying that because you're mad. You'll be sorry later. And your hubby wouldn't like it."

"No, I won't be sorry. I mean it." She spat it out violently. "I won't live here. I hate it." She took a long breath and calmed down. "I'm perfectly serious; you can count on having it the first of next month. That gives us three weeks to find something. You can count on it, really. Go right ahead with your plans."

Stella looked up, started to speak and hesitated. "You've been so swell, I ought to tell you. We never heard it was for rent. We just brazened in."

The only war I ever approved of was the Trojan War; it was fought over a woman and the men knew what they were fighting for.

—WILLIAM LYON PHELPS.

She never told Bill anything important, either good or bad, until he had eaten. With Dono's banged-up face, the story of the fall had to be covered. She let the boys do it.

"Who's this Bud?" Bill asked.

"Oh, you know," she said vaguely. "Bud." The boys were always imagining people and it passed.

Bill took the last spoonful of the soufflé and the time had come. What could she say? She had done a perfectly outrageous thing, she should have talked it over with him sensibly. But of course then it wouldn't have been done. Now they had to find something.

She looked across at Bill and smiled sweetly. "We're moving the first of the month."

"Fine." He lit a cigarette and turned on the radio.

"I mean it," she protested. "This house has been rented. We have to move."

"Don't be foolish. Kodiak can't turn us out unless he wants to live here himself. And then he has to give us two months' notice."

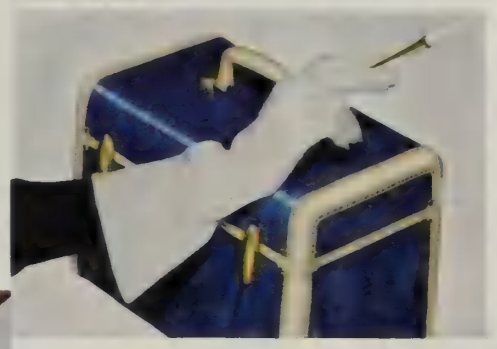
"It's rented to a young couple who are getting married. I told them they could have it." Out came the whole story.

He pooh-poohed her explanation. "It doesn't mean a thing," he said. "You didn't sign anything and the lease is in my name anyway. They can't hold you to it."

"My word is as good as any document," she asserted hotly. "I told them we would be out on the first, absolutely and positively. They are counting on it. I wouldn't think of taking it back."

At that Bill was so mad he could hardly sputter. Two kids wanted to be married, so she gave up her home. The whole family turned out into the street so two young kids could get married. Of all the sentimental, idiotic impulses. Did she think life was just a soap opera? Lots of people want to get married.

"Sentiment had nothing to do with it," she snapped angrily. She prided herself on not being a sentimental person. "That was the final straw, that cellar door. There was I not wanting the house, there were they wanting it so badly—it was obvious that



(Continued on Page 126)

Seasoned Travelers—Smart Shorties that go wherever Samsonite goes

THE SMARTEST HANDS CARRY SAMSONITE FASHIONTONE

White Gauntlet gloves accent Admiral Blue Samsonite

Travel in any direction, at any season—and count the smartly dressed women carrying Samsonite's Fashiontone luggage. They choose this luggage for lots of reasons. For the very good and feminine one that its colors are fashion right—and when they carry Fashiontone they're ladies right down to their fingertips! • For the practical one that the features of the luggage itself are beyond compare. Its better-than-leather, dirt-proof, scuff-proof covering. Its "strong enough to stand on" construction. And such niceties as solid brass locks, luxurious linings and shock absorber handles all make Samsonite America's outstanding luggage buy! • You'll love this luggage, too. And remember! Two pieces cost less—yes, less—than you'd expect to pay for just one piece of such quality! And you can add to your set anywhere, any time!

ink Copper Samsonite takes a k brick colored classic pull-on cent Beige Clay Samsonite—ry gloves with pigskin palm

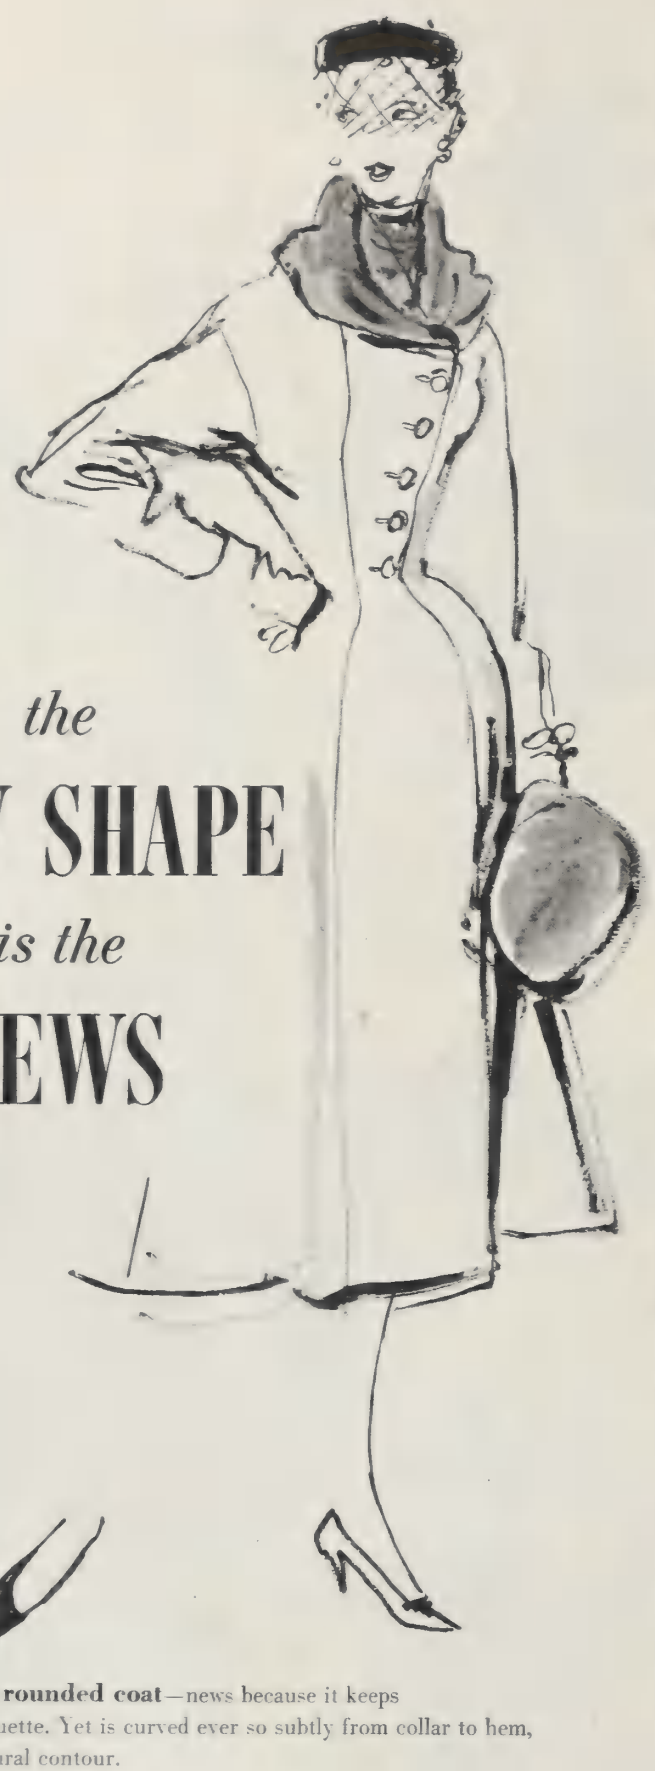
With Bermuda Green Samsonite . . . oatmeal pigskin slippers—a happy match for the binding

In Fashiontone's Natural Rawhide Finish

a. Train Case	$17.50	d. Ladies' O'Nite (convertible)	$22.50
b. Vanity O'Nite	17.50	e. Ladies' Wardrobe	25.00
c. Ladies' O'Nite (regular)	19.50	f. Pullman	27.50*

*ALL PRICES SUBJECT TO EXISTING TAXES

lso in these other attractive Fashiontone Finishes
nk Copper • Bermuda Green • Beige Clay • Admiral Blue



Samsonite

Fashiontone Luggage

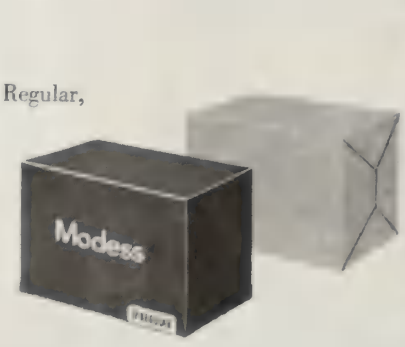
er Bros., Inc.—Luggage Division—Denver 9, Colorado
kers of Samson Folding Tables and Chairs—
Furniture Division—Detroit 29, Michigan.

FLIGHT PROVEN
AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS

es by Wear Right—Hat by Mr. John

the

NEW SHAPE



is the

NEWS

The new-shape rounded coat—news because it keeps the new slim-silhouette. Yet is curved ever so subtly from collar to hem, to flatter your natural contour.

The new-shape Modess box—news because it, too, is designed with a subtle silhouette. The box is cleverly shaped to look like so many other kinds of boxes, you'd never guess it held Modess! Another discreet feature—Modess is now pre-wrapped even before reaching your store!

Same number of fine napkins. Same price. Regular, Junior, and Super sizes.

Only Modess comes in the new-shape, secret-shape box...pre-wrapped!

(Continued from Page 124)

Fate had rigged it up. Any fool could see it was the obvious thing to do."

"Intuition, I suppose," he said sarcastically. "Women do some perfectly asinine thing and then look mysterious and psychic." He put one finger to his brow and rolled his eyes absurdly.

"Don't you see, honey, if we have to move we'll find something."

"That's the silliest thing you've said yet," he countered. "Lots of people just have to have a thousand dollars. Do they all go out and pick it up in the gutter? You can't find a house that doesn't exist." Eventually he stopped being mad and phoned Olga. "Hi, Madame Petrova, I'm calling to invite you to a housewarming. Haven't you heard? I'm buying our new house tomorrow—at Macy's. A nice little tent." He made sense and explained. "It's my fault, I suppose; I married her. But you see the mess we are in. Dig up everything on the books, will you?" He came back looking glum. "She has five rentals," he reported. "One is for four hundred a month and you have to take over the servants. One is that cobblestone nightmare in the swamp. One is a guesthouse with one bedroom—I forget the others. Equally desirable. And there isn't a house for sale we could touch. I wish you had used your head. Intuition—women's excuse for brains!"

The next day she had a plan. She dressed the boys in their cutest rigs—plaid shorts, blue jackets. "You look very k'tish," she said, adjusting Anthony's Eton cap. Their heads were yellow as dandelions.

"Do I look as k'tish as Anthony?" Donoghue asked.

"Indeed, yes."

"Do I look as k'tish as I do?" Anthony asked.

"Enough, enough. We're going to find us a home."

She was about to do a Stella—drive about until she found the perfect house and then go in and say, "I hear this house is for rent." Bill had persuaded her that feminine intuition was such hot stuff she would now use it. And if they should find a house that was to rent, who would refuse a home to two such adorable boys?

She drove around and around, up a street, turn right, down that, turn left. She studied every house. Paper-doll colonials, moderns like boathouses or Adirondack camps, a caricature of Mt. Vernon, big houses, little houses, all belonging to someone, all lived in by lucky people. But none that said, Here I am. There seemed to be sunspots on her intuition that day. She finally settled on a gray-and-white colonial, not too large, nice flat play space outside the kitchen windows, not too much lawn to cut or too much drive to shovel.

A boy by each hand, she went to the door. She thought she saw someone looking from behind a curtain and then the door opened.

"I am Mrs. William Page," she began, smiling, but wanting to run. She had chosen badly. The woman was an awful-looking creature, not the kind that lived in their town at all. She glared at Trudy's smile. "We heard that this house was for sale and we are so crazy about it—we always have been. And of course there will be so many after it. So I thought the only thing was to stop and ask you. Houses are so scarce and we need to move. On the first. However, if it isn't convenient . . . I mean to see it——"

"You can come in." Horrid voice. Hor manner. She hadn't even smiled at the identical faces upturned at her so appealing

They followed her into a large stuc living room: Donoghue and Anthony climb up onto the couch beside their mother, th eyes not leaving the hostile face.

THERE was a silence and then the wom said, "Go ahead, search the house if y want to. Under the beds, anywhere you li You won't find anything. How much do y get paid for this?" she wanted to know.

Trudy's mouth hung open. "What d you say?" she asked.

"I think bringing the kids is pretty low I suppose you hired them from a mo place. I saw them in an ad once. You can t my husband for me I think he is a che skunk. Go ahead, look around, but dor you go trying to plant any pajamas in n closet."

Trudy was on her feet. "I don't kn anything about your husband. These a my own children."

"We are not," Anthony piped up, shaki his little blond head violently.

"I've got a bo about a stunk," fered Donoghue.

"I came for ju what I said, looki for a house."

"But this hou isn't for sale a never has been."

"I'm sorry. I m have the wro house." Great digni "I'm very, very sor to have bother you." She opened t door and left, t most innocent woma in town, two sm things running besi her holding onto the caps with identic gestures.

"We're not yo children," Anthon offered in delayed e planation. "We' your boys."

"I wanted to s her stunk," Do oghue wailed.

She tried no mo houses. Obviously was not the day.

That night after dinner Bill said, "Loo I have an idea; why don't you drive aroun pick out a house the way Stella did, say yo heard it was for sale? It worked for her

"I wouldn't do that," she said frigidl

"Why not? It wouldn't do any harm. Y could say you had the wrong house. With t demand for houses what it is, Olga says n half the houses ever get listed. Someo hears about it before they get a chance tell the agents. You can't tell what mig happen."

"No, you can't. They might think I wa thief, casing the joint!"

"Take the boys; that ought to make it right."

"I wouldn't do it, Bill," she told him wi outrage. "Not for anything."

The boys screamed for a drink.

"They can't have it," Trudy said. "Y know what happens if they do. They aren really thirsty; they just want to be sure w are real. Take an empty glass in and try t put over a delicious make-believe drin Mocko-Chocko."

She listened to the conversation. Bill w good. "Drink a little more. Don't take it al leave some for Dono. Empty the glass, Don Hurry up, your mother's waiting for me t help her with the dishes."

"Why don't you just make-believe he her with the dishes, dad?"

Boys as smart as that with parents t dumb to find them a home!

The days passed. Every friend and a quaintance was questioned. They answere

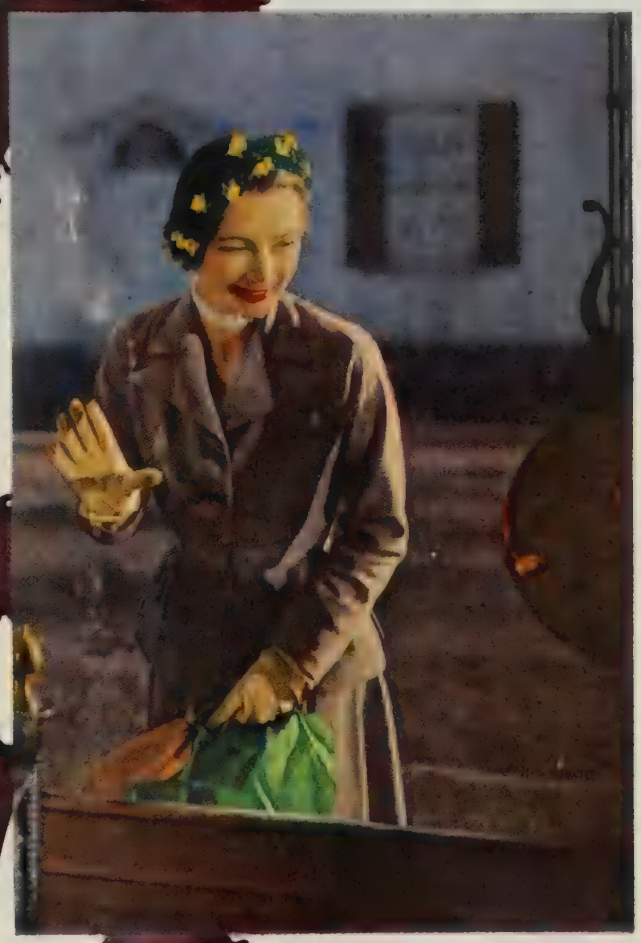
(Continued on Page 129)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

My Love is This

"What is thy beloved more than another beloved?"—Song of Songs.

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith



What is my love that he is more?
His presence makes no thunders roar
Nor lightnings flash. No mountains crawl
To lick his feet. He holds no thrall
Of tides and rivers. At his glance
No planets falter nor advance.
What special merit is my liege's,
That thus my heart's his willing aegis?
My love is this: that any place
Where he is not is endless space,
And where he is, let space unroll;
Infinity's an easy stroll.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS TO
H. M. QUEEN MARY.
YARDLEY, LONDON

very day...
et the fragrance
Lavender be yours

Live in Lavender, and know the joy, the lighthearted assurance, this delicate fragrance brings throughout the day. Begin with Lavender Soap, so richly scented that its fragrance never fades, and with its quick, creamy lather that gives your complexion beneficent care. Add a fragrant, smoothing film of Lavender Dusting Powder. Then, and most important, use Yardley English Lavender to spread delight. Use it generously, make it a part of you.

No other soap in all the world is like Yardley English Lavender Soap. Made according to a unique, traditional formula, it's generously and skillfully perfumed so that it never loses its fragrance. Because its creamy lather comes freely, you use less of it, and it lathers down to the last tiniest sliver. It's double-wrapped to treasure the fragrance.

YARDLEY

English Lavender

Yardley English Lavender, from $1.75, plus tax

Dusting Powder, $1.50, plus tax

Yardley English Lavender Soap, $1.35
(box of three)

Bath size, 75c a tablet

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U. S. A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

Backboon! At last . . . a halterbra! A tiny halter circles your neck to hold you in suspended animation in the loveliest lace-on-nylon bra you could imagine. Two long, light straps hook in front . . . baring you to be beautiful! White. $5.00. Bra #2210

Lacybones! A bareback beauty for sleeveless blouses and dresses. Exquisitely embroidered white nylon marquisette. Two tiny sidebones to keep it snug. It stays down . . . you stay up! $3.50. Bra #2231

Best seller! Millions love it! Nylon tissue taffeta with filmy French stitching under the cups. Small elastic gores give you breathe-easy comfort. White only. $2.50. Bra #2195

Tops in taffeta! We have an idea you love the wispy sheers but like a little firmer control. Here it is . . . white nylon tissue taffeta with French-stitched undercups. $2.50. Bra #2146

Vanilla frosted! Whisper-weight white nylon tissue taffeta topped with embroidered marquisette for a lovely rounded lift. Comes in ice-cream pink and black, too. $3.50. Bra #2299

Lovely, give yourself the once over...lightly!

In Warner's fabulous new sheers

Misty loveliness . . . so delicately detailed in design . . . so elegantly iced with lace . . . just to keep you feeling secretly frothy and feminine. They're Warner's newest nylon bras and those you love are yours alone in your very own 3-Way-Sizes.

1. Your Warner's is your cup size . . . true-to-the-letter, perfect cup-sizing A to D.
2. . . . and your band . . . no bands, narrow bands, deep bands or elastic bands . . . every one with the snug-hug you love.
3. . . . and your uplift . . . whether you like a little lift or a lot, you can have your own way in Warner's lovelies. At finer stores.

WARNER'S*

3-Way-Sized

Foundations and Bras

WORLD FAMOUS FOR ELEGANCE* · A'LURE* · STA-UP-TOP* · "FREE LIFT" · WARNERETTE*
*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off., The Warner Brothers Company, New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

(Continued from Page 126)

ven ran one. Young couple (plus 2) y need small house. Will buy or rent. zero.

Bill came home with a smug smile. ear you say you wanted a house?" ne quick."

no ounce of intuition I have man- et us a little maisonette, three acres, ns, brook, barn, two fireplaces ——" an't afford it."

ık we can. It's a rental. You know guy I've told you about? We do the gether mornings. He's been away, w him today and mentioned our dicament, due to my wife's extraor- ıtu—— Well, never mind that." ed with splendid forgiveness. "Old calmly announced that we could house if we wanted it. He's retiring nth, going back to Vermont—he ister. He doesn't want to sell—isn't won't find Vermont changed, I he will rent to us. The rent would igh for us, but—here's the trick. a barn, sort of crude but with a n and fireplace. If we could live in for four months in the summer we ıt the house furnished—you know people pay to get out here—and ıld bring down our annual rent.

"Oh, Bill! I've always wanted to live in a barn. Think how the boys ——" She stopped and narrowed her eyes. "Why aren't you more excited?"

"Well, there's just one out."

"Clunk!" she said, hitting the bottom of an elevator shaft. "They don't want any children. Sorry, I like them. I'm not giving them away."

He looked at her admiringly. "How did you know? Only it's his sister. He says she's crazy and he doesn't mind putting it over on her. So you are to go look at the house tomorrow—but don't mention the kids. He will give her the impression—which you must carry out—that we are just married so she won't ask if there are any children."

"Not interested," she said airily. "I wouldn't want a house on such a slimy basis. How does she propose to continue the human race? With hardwood cuttings? And I have completely forgotten how to act just married."

"That's odd," he said, "because I was just thinking last night you look exactly the same as the day you walked down the aisle. Only younger. And prettier."

She laughed. "O.K. So I look at the house and then what?"

"Sign a lease," he told her. "Pay the rent. Move in."

"Daddy, you forgot to say our prayers."

(Continued on Page 131)

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

WHAT spoils a child? Most of us have got over the idea that it is sparing the rod that does it. But some parents also spare the praise, because they are afraid their child will become a different kind of spoiled child—a conceited child. That idea is wrong, for by praising the right things a child does as much as we point out the wrong things, we help him to learn in a positive way. Praise can also give a child pleasure in himself. Not only does he enjoy being approved, but he also gains more secure feelings of attachment to adults. He doesn't have to wonder where he stands with them—he knows. (Parents too often say nice things about their children when the children are asleep and can't hear them.) Of course, the wrong kind of praise can have negative results. When a child becomes so dependent on praise that his actions are governed by whether or not he will be praised, he loses his own sense of judgment. Sometimes, too, parents use praise of the child to praise themselves. (What good parents we are to have such a wonderful child!) When they do that they are projecting their own conceit onto the child, and forcing him to think of himself as an ideal child at all times. In other words, they are making him conceited. But it isn't the praise itself that does it. It's what's behind the praise that counts.

"She's pretending not to like our carving— 'cause she's afraid we'll get conceited!"

New Airborne Way to Walk

AVENUE

You're actually airborne in these Easi-Gaits. An invisible layer of springy air-foam-rubber lifts your step. And cushions the jolts of city pavements and country pebbles.

Walk-Over EASI-GAITS®

TOSCA

Unlike any shoes you've ever worn. Exclusive Vel-Flex construction. Completely flexible soles plus firm, friendly support at your arch.

AVENUE: brown bucko, tan calf binding.
TOSCA and SONNET: each polished cognac calf.
CAVALIER: black bucko. WING: black calf.

Geo. E. Keith Company, Brockton 63, Mass.

SONNET

WING

CAVALIER

Your sewing machine dollars buy MORE when you choose a SINGER!

MORE Stitching Perfection! Beautiful sewing is easiest ever with brand-new, smooth-stitching SINGER* Sewing Machines! The machine above goes forward and backward, sews over pins to save basting, handles any fabric from organdy to corduroy.

MORE Dependability! Never a worry when you buy a SINGER. Every one is built to last a lifetime, built by the company that's been making the world's favorite machines for 99 years. Queen Anne, above, is one of the most popular models.

MORE Beautiful Cabinets! Fine woods, handsome finish, sturdy construction. Wide range of styles from modern to colonial. No other make offers such a lovely choice of living-room-quality pieces. Above: new fluted console with matching stool.

MORE Purchase Extras! With your new machine you get a course in home dressmaking or decorating—lessons under personal instructors at your SINGER SEWING CENTER. Also: basic set of SINGER* Attachments at no extra cost!

The wool coat dress above is made from McCall Pattern #8172.

See the new models today!
prices from $89.50

BUDGET TERMS
LIBERAL TRADE-IN ALLOWANCE

Yours with every new machine

- Basic Set of SINGER Attachments
- Famous SINGER Course in Home Dressmaking or Decorating
- SINGER Warranty of Manufacturing Perfection

MORE Reliable Service! Wherever you move, whenever you need them, you'll always be able to get parts and service from any of a thousand SINGER SEWING CENTERS, coast to coast. Above is SINGER SEWING CENTER at 305½ W. Fourth St., Santa Ana, Calif. Remember . . .

For your protection, SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade Mark and the "SINGER SEWING CENTER" emblem on the window, and never through department stores, dealers, or other outlets.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

*A Trade Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY Copyright, U.S.A., 1950, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO. All rights reserved for all countries.

(Continued from Page 129)

"Make it a double order," she said. "This is going to be touchy."

She phoned for a sitter the first thing in the morning, and even told the boys they were going to live in a barn. They went around neighing and butting each other all over the place. Barns are inhabited by goats, it seemed. Five minutes before it was time to go—she had made the appointment with Miss Cooley—the sitter phoned that she had a killing toothache. Trudy sat down and thought it out. She had to see the place. The sitter couldn't come for three days.

"Look, boys," she said. "We are going to play cops and robbers. You are two desperate bandits."

"Desperate Band-aids?"

"Ban-dits. Robbers. Thugs," she explained. "I'm the cop and I have captured you. I tie you all up with rope and put you in the back of the car—you have your guns but you can't escape. And then I go on some serious business and leave you in the car all tied up. I won't be long. Then I come back and we drive home and have a big cops-and-robbers party with ice cream and cookies."

If that wasn't inspiration! They agreed, suggesting the slight change that they tie her up instead, but she got around that and they were dressed up like robbers, which included a good many Band-aids here and there—ideas persist. They wore guns and holsters, cowboy shirts and leather boots. She parked down the road from the Cooley drive and with her perfectly good clothesline tied them, winding the rope round and round, leaving their hands free to look at comics, brought to keep them absorbed.

There was the house, there was the barn, back in pine trees. She heaved a sigh of the-promised-land-at-last. Miss Cooley was what she expected, sharp-nosed and pursy-mouthed. The house was a bit of a blow; she just couldn't see the four Pages living in it. But it was the furniture that did it, she argued. Heavy baronial oak, Oriental rugs, dark draperies. A big kitchen, an honest-to-goodness dining room with a bell button under the table for the maid. (A week she gave that bell.) A bell button in the bedroom to summon Bill to bring up her Sunday breakfast.

"It's just perfect for us," she gushed. "It's so cozy. Bill—Mr. Page—and I have very simple tastes and live very quietly." Keeping the family desperadoes tied up. "No, we have no cat or dog. No pets. Now could I see the barn?"

"I'd better give you the keys and let you go by yourself. It's perishing cold in there." Miss Cooley was warming up a degree, herself. "You can bring the keys back."

The barn was just far enough from the house to be away from those charming but slightly noisy summer tenants. And of course newlyweds do like privacy. She looked up at it. How the boys would love it! She was anticipating their delight when the upstairs hay door flew open and a fusillade of shots came out. "Bang . . . bang . . . bang . . . bang." Then it slammed shut.

SHE looked quickly back at the house and then rushed to unlock the door. The key wouldn't even go in the lock. "Anthony . . . Donoghue," she called loudly, but softly at the same time.

The door opened again. "Bang . . . bang . . . bang." Their high baby voices sounding as little as possible like gunfire. She ran around to the back and found the robbers' entrance—a box, an open window, but too small a window for her to get in.

"Boys," she called. "Come down here this minute. If you don't come down right away we can't live here." Could she explain the philosophy of child haters, screaming through a window? "Quick, we have to go home before those ice-cream cones melt." No answer. "Boys, the game is changed," she called frantically. "I'm the robber now. Come capture me quick, before I escape." What fools adults make of themselves beating against the blunt sense of children.

"We're going to live here right now," they called to her. "We're cleaning it for you."

A crash from the front confirmed it. She ran back. A large carton of magazines had come out, burst and emptied. At that moment the front door opened and Miss Cooley, in a fur coat, hat with veil, and gloves, came down the path, keys in hand.

I'll run—abandon them, Trudy thought. I don't know whose children they are—some neighborhood rascals.

"I found I gave you the wrong key," Miss Cooley said precisely. "I usually hang the barn key on the second hook in the pantry, over the silver safe, but I fancy my brother —— Why, what has happened?" She stared at the catastrophe.

SHE got her answer. The ban-dits appeared at the hay door—surely the most awful-looking pair that ever lived. Dirt had been added to the Band-aids. Anthony had torn his shirt. Dono's pants were falling off. Another box of magazines came sailing out, just missing the old lady. They saw her and stood, very superior, up above adult heads.

"It's terribly dirty up here. You ought to be ashamed." Heads shaking with indignation. "We and I are cleaning it up so our mother can live here." They proved their industriousness by kicking another box out.

Miss Cooley would doubtless never speak again. She stood and stared, her mouth opening and closing like a fish's mouth. Her hands rose and fell, but there were no words to express her thoughts about such horrors.

"If you will give me the key I will get them," Trudy said calmly. "You'd better go back to the house. We'll clean up here, don't worry." Then, as she realized they had lost their house — and barn—the pity she had felt for the barren old lady changed to anger. "Children have a right to live," she announced loudly. "You were a child once." Obviously untrue. "And they have a right to a home. Foxes have lairs, but the sons of man hath only a hole ——" She stopped, it was too funny.

If God gave me my choice of the whole planet or my little farm, I should certainly take my farm. —EMERSON.

Bill laughed his head off, his roaring guffaws bringing the boys running. "Trust a woman to tie boys up and not expect them to escape." It seems she had depended more on the psychological effect of the ropes and she hadn't wanted to chafe their hands and ankles.

"You don't think my quoting the Scriptures might win her over?" Trudy asked sadly. "They are mad about that barn. They'll never be happy in a house now."

Bill didn't think there was a chance. If they had worn sashes and curls and said, "Yes, ma'am" and "No, ma'am" she wouldn't have had them.

But it was the scolding which Miss Cooley minded most, her brother reported. That barn was certainly not dirty. Anyway, they had decided to lock the house up and not rent it to anyone.

"Such a day," Trudy raved. "Why should anyone want a roof over their heads?"

They drove to the train, the boys left with Bea next door. The days had passed and nothing had turned up. Everyone who owned a house was holding onto it tight. No one cared that the Pages were being turned out into the street.

"Ten days from today," Bill said. "Ten days from today," repeated louder to make her understand, "we have to walk out of that house." She murmured agreement. "Did you write your mother about going up to stay with her?"

"Oh, Bill," she pleaded, "I don't want to go to Boston. You know that house of mother's—all wax and polish. It's don't . . . don't . . . don't to the boys all day long. It isn't so bad for a few days, but we might have to stay weeks and weeks." Bill gestured the absence of any alternative. "Would you

See it! Prove it in your own home!

SINGER gives you greatest dirt-getting action!

Dual Suction is the secret! The new SINGER* Vacuum Cleaner is the first to bring you two fans . . . for the greatest suction, the greatest dirt-getting action you ever saw!

SO EASY TO OWN!

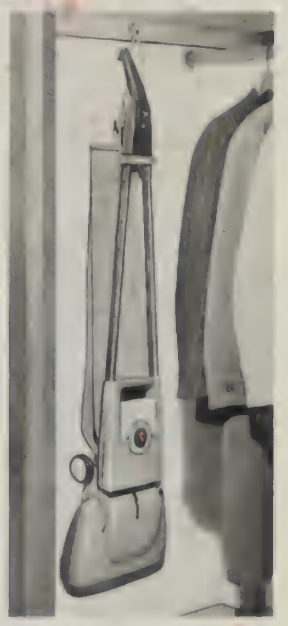
Small down payment. Balance on monthly budget terms. Liberal allowance on your present cleaner.

Plus the world's easiest to use vacuum cleaner!

Magic Handle! A completely new vacuum cleaner design that puts all controls at finger-tip reach.

No unwinding of cord! Gives you extra cord as needed—gets it out of the way as you clean.

More cleaning power when you need it! Two-speed switch for heavy and light cleaning.



No more foot-pedal acrobatics! Touch the trigger —and adjust handle to any position.

Exclusive "floating" brush gently loosens deep imbedded dirt. Adjusts automatically to most any rug thickness.

Easy to carry with Midway Handgrip. Soft Vinylite bumper cannot mar furniture.

Gets under furniture —easily. Housing unit is only 5 inches high.

So easy to store! Hangs flat against wall. Ideal for small homes.

For your protection SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade Mark and the "SINGER SEWING CENTER" emblem on the window, and never through department stores, dealers or other outlets.

SINGER* Vacuum Cleaners are sold only through your...

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U. S. A., 1949 and 1950, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.

*A Trade Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

"Home-Planned" Furniture Helps Dreams Come True

You're doubly smart to plan the home of your dreams around Old Colony. Thanks to its "Home-Planned" designs, you can be sure (just like buying from open stock) that later additions to living, dining and bedrooms will retain the authentic traditional American atmosphere of your present purchases. Better department and furniture stores proudly display Heywood-Wakefield Old Colony furniture. Do see it soon. Heywood-Wakefield, Gardner, Mass.

Old Colony by

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD EST. 1826

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Both these trusted symbols assure the quality of all Heywood-Wakefield furniture.

MAKES PLANNING EASY—Gladys Miller, decorating consultant, has packed this book with 16 colorful pages of smart ideas for your home! Mail coupon with 25¢ for your copy today.

Heywood-Wakefield Company, Dept. LH-12, Gardner, Mass.

I enclose 25¢ for my copy of your decorating book, "Old Colony Furniture," by Gladys Miller.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

CITY & ZONE ..... STATE .....

promise to come up every week end?" she asked him.

"I couldn't. I'd have to come out here week ends looking for a place. What do you suggest if you don't go to your mother's?" His patience was on its last legs.

"I don't know. I just feel . . . I feel sure—I mean something is bound to turn up."

"Look, Trudy, we have to have a house. H-o-u-s-e. Made of brick and wood and concrete. Walls—floor—roof. Now snap out of your dreaming. I'll have to call the movers today. I don't see anything for it but to put the stuff in storage."

"Our lovely things in storage?" she murmured. "And you'll stay at the club? You'll hate that—eating in restaurants."

"What . . . do . . . you . . . suggest?" Trudy was no fool, she was a smart girl, quicker than he at puzzles and shrewder about people and abstract ideas. But on this house business she had certainly gone cockeyed.

"Well, I just think something will turn up." Had she said that before? She pulled in to the post office. "Maybe there will be something in the mail," she announced cheerily.

He laughed in spite of himself. "A darling little house, parcel post."

She came out, holding a square white envelope. "Stella's wedding invitation. 'At home after June fifteenth, Lilac Cottage, River Road,'" she read. "Sounds nice, doesn't it?"

"Sounds very nice."

Stella phoned that afternoon to ask if Trudy had found a house.

"We're deciding between various things," Trudy said brightly. "We don't want to sign a lease until we have exactly the right thing, you see. I'll probably visit my mother for a while. Now don't worry about us, just think about your plans. We'll be out on the first." That gave Bud three days to paint and fix the place—his brother and best man would help, and the bridesmaids would hang the curtains and do things like that so everything would be ready for them to come to after their honeymoon.

The phone rang as soon as Trudy hung up—a telegram from her mother: Leaving for trip to Williamsburg and the Smokies. Will stop on way back. Trudy tore up the letter she had not mailed. Boston was out, thank heavens. She and Bill would stay together. But the only thing remaining was the inn in town—ghastly expensive, and the worst possible place for children.

Three nights later Bill came home and the curtains were down, the slip covers were off and four sugar barrels filled the floor. "Hi," said a head popping from one barrel. "Hi," from another.

HE said "Hi," expressionless, and walked out. Trudy remembered that when his mother died the home was broken up, everything sold, and he and his father went to live with an aunt. Any moving was upsetting to him, and to have no home ahead, to feel that their life together was disintegrating—What a terrible thing she had done to him. She watched him standing staring at the rose bed, not seeing it, seeing only his home being broken up.

"Bill," she called. "The boys are waiting for you to hear their prayers." She grabbed the two. "Quick, into bed, and for heaven's sake be funny or bad or something." She turned off the stove, leaving the dinner half done. "I'll be right back. I'm going over to Bea's for five minutes."

Quick, before she had a chance to think about it, she would do what she had sworn she wouldn't. I just hate to ask this, Stella. I swore I wouldn't, but could you two possibly stay in a hotel for a month, or with your family or something? Bill feels so awful—you see, we have nowhere to go. Surely in a month we can find something. But could they? Wouldn't it be just as bad in a month? And Stella's wedding spoiled. She dialed Stella's number. Busy. And still busy. And still busy. On the fifth attempt she got it.

"THIS is Trudy Page, Stella. Look . . . I just hate to ask this, but ——"

"Where's your husband?" Stella asked, interrupting. "He just hung up. He yelled so loud that he about split my ear."

Bill had called Stella! To ask her to let them stay! That wasn't like him, not a bit. She wrinkled her brow trying to figure how he could have done such a thing.

"You can thank those twins," Stella said. "They certainly got Bud; he went nuts over them and of course he's thinking what should we have twins! So when his father decided—this real-estate operator has been after him for ages. . . . You know, thirty-five acres inside the town limits. . . . So Bud said, 'Now look, pop, they get first chance at the house,' and of course pop remembers growing up there with his twin brother. But Bud said, 'Keep the price reasonable,' because he's cashing in on the land ——"

Trudy broke into it. "I don't know what you're saying; you'd better begin at the beginning and give it to me straight."

But at that moment the door behind her burst open and in came Bill, a boy on each shoulder.

"A barn . . . a barn. . . we're going to live in a barn." A slide, a kick and a pirouette.

"Call you right back. Bedlam," she shouted into the phone. "Now explain." She faced the three laughing dandelion heads.

"Bud's father is selling the farm. We can have the house and two acres. The rest goes into a development." He grinned. "The finest old salt box in this part of the state. We'll want to fix it up, but it's perfectly habitable this minute."

"And the barn?" she asked, breathless.

"And the barn and the old wellhouse and the sheds."

"And we can afford it? There's no out?"

Bill had put the boys down and they had reverted to the bleating and butting that went with "barn." Bill put his arm around his wife. "We're going to have a wonderful place, and obviously we never would have got it if you hadn't handed our house to Bud and Stella. If you are going to think it was intuition that did it and go around intoo-ing all over the place, it could be pretty awful." He kissed her. "Promise me, no more."

She laughed and pulled his tie to choking and molded his chin into a button. "Something tells me . . . I have a feeling"—she put one finger to her brow—"that I shouldn't promise that, mister." THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Haying

By Winifred Virginia Jackson

She, too, could swing a scythe and cut a swath
Of ripened grass as evenly as he;
But knowing how it was with him, how wrath
Would kindle in his eyes and flame when she Did work he thought a man should do, she set Herself the lighter task of raking when
His lusty yoo-hoo rode the air and met
Her longing to be near to him again.

With jug of sweetened ginger water, rake
Upon her shoulder, she would smile her way
To him across the curing grass and make Believe she was a lady, mincing, gay.
The neighbors said he spoiled her, yet a charm
Did seem to further work upon their farm.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A DISTINGUISHED diplomat, a leader of Capital society, Mrs. Harriman's dignity, charm, and good taste is nowhere better exemplified than in the simple beauty of her new Washington home.

The television set she has selected for her living room is this beautiful Contemporary Georgian Philco model 1875. It has a 150 square inch picture on a 17 inch gray filter-face tube, with AM-FM radio and 3-way phonograph that plays all records automatically, with what experts agree is the finest tone ever achieved in recorded music.

FOR HER CHARMING NEW WASHINGTON, D. C. HOME

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman

CHOOSES PHILCO BALANCED BEAM TELEVISION

PHILCO MODEL 1208, 97 sq. in. true-focus picture on a 12½" gray filter-face tube, mahogany veneer cabinet . . . Philco 1951 table models with 97 to 145 sq. in. picture, 12½" to 16" tubes, range from $169.95 to $289.95*.

• 17" BALANCED BEAM TELEVISION in striking blond console Model 1836-L. 150 sq. in. picture, 17" gray rectangular tube. Philco 1951 consoles, 97 to 215 sq. in. picture, 12½" to 20" tubes, range from $229.95 to $575.00*.

The First True Focus Picture in Television History . . . in Cabinets of Surpassing Beauty

How gracefully, how charmingly this beautiful new Philco complements the informal elegance of Mrs. Harriman's lovely living room!

Yet — to an engineer — the inside of this magnificent television receiver is even more beautiful than the outside is to a decorator.

For today, with the invention of Balanced Beam Television Philco has found a way to balance the electron beam that "paints" the picture on the tube face . . . to lock it in positive focus over the entire picture area.

Yes, Philco has ended picture blur and smear forever; has created the first true-focus picture in television history.

There's new and finer performance too in these great 1951 Philcos. The sensational Philco Custom-Duplex Chassis gives a vast increase in sensitivity, amazing freedom from "snow" and "ghosts," and other interference . . . with performance in "fringe" and local areas that television has never known before.

And, of course, the 1951 Philcos have the now famous Philco Electronic Built-In Aerial that outperforms all others by as much as 3 to 1. In 8 out of 10 locations no installation is needed.

These brilliant new Philco Balanced Beam Television sets are at your dealer's now — magnificently styled in blond, mahogany or walnut . . . at prices that make Philco far and away the outstanding value in television today.

*Tax and warranty extra on all models. Prices slightly higher in South and West. Prices subject to change.

PHILCO

Balanced Beam Television

the LESTER
Concert Grand Piano

Built in the Quality Tradition

Since 1888, the same family has been building Lester Grand Pianos to the highest standards of performance and durability. Each superb instrument is the proud result of skilled craftsmanship combined with the world's finest materials.

The tone of the Lester Grand Piano is perfection itself . . . with its permanency assured by the exclusive Tone Stabilator. Sensitive touch that responds to every demand makes playing a true pleasure for professional and amateur pianists.

There is a size for every individual or institutional need in the complete line ranging from the 4 foot, 7 inch model at $1325.00 to the 9 foot Concert Grand pictured at $4700.00 . . . f.o.b. Lester, Pa.

Your dealer will also gladly show you the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc.

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

ONE name quality price

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., Lester 13, Pa.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name

Address

City

Zone No. State LHJ 5P

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. R. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William St., New York 5, N. Y.

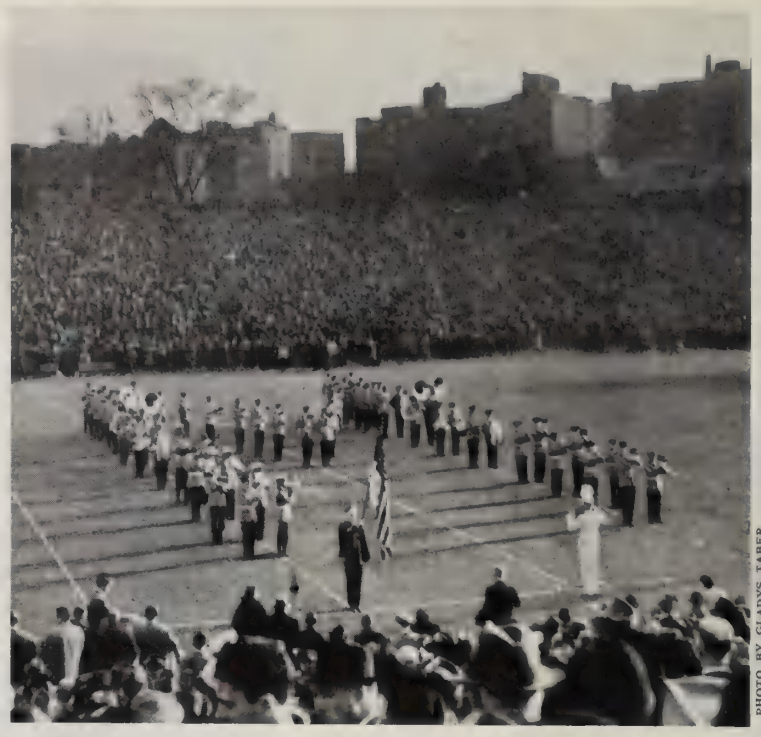

PHOTO BY GLADYS TABER

October is an exciting month with the sound of football songs in the air, winter to be prepared for and an Indian pudding in the oven.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

BLANKETS blowing on the line give me such a nice feeling as the October sun and wind give their lovely freshness to them. The blankets have their stories. There are the two fragile homespun ones which Grandma Raybold had. They are pale honey-colored now, and the timeless moth once nibbled the edges before the days of spray, and yet I love them. Next to them hangs the bold bright modern pair that Jonquil scalloped so neatly just while I went to baste the chicken.

There are two dark angry-green camp blankets that Don used all the years when he was a thin, leggy boy. The name tapes are still on them. I remember as I pin them up that awful first trip to camp. He was timid and so small and it all seemed like a horrid mistake. Why not keep him right at home, if he never learned to swim or sail or develop any social consciousness? And then the camp, with Mrs. Mac and Mac and the horde of bright, small, tadpole boys, and the feeling that it was worth it. The Macs were so patient with the emotional families who brought their darlings plus tons of luggage.

Now as I look at all six feet of Don, I wonder if he ever remembers that day when he explained that the water held him up, he was the kind that couldn't sink, so the two pairs of water wings could just go to some sinkable child!

There is one purple blanket which is a mystery. I simply cannot think where it came from; it has always been around, and it does not go with any bedroom colors we ever had at Stillmeadow. I feel fond of it, however, just because it has worn so well, and I like things that wear well, from cooking pans to friends. I re-bound it this season. It is wonderful what a fresh binding will do for a tired blanket. And even though I cannot sew, I can hem on one of those bindings that are already bent in the middle fold. I once tried to put on a plain length of satin ribbon, and the edge of that blanket was as wavy as an ocean beach.

While I was hemming briskly along, n two stitches the same, I thought of mamm with such a sudden quick apperceptio that I stopped, and dropped the needl Mamma's lovely small hands could simpl fly along with a needle and the fine delica stitches were as skillful as a work of art.

How many hours mamma spent sewin for me! I expect all the stitches she mad would have gone round the world!

But the days the dressmaker came wer gala days, for she was a charming frien and it was like a party. The sound of th sewing machine and mamma's laughter a they chattered away and the smell of chicke simmering on the gas range—it was a good. I think it is a little sad that the day of the home dressmaker have gone.

Alma, the dressmaker, never used an patterns. She looked at a magazine. "I think I'll make the neck like this," sh would say, "and the skirt like this one ove here—and how about raglan sleeves? Then her long, slim scissors went snip o the soft silk and there we had it.

My favorite dress was rose satin, caugh up with rosebuds and full of flounces an with lace garnishes. I must have looke pretty awful, but I felt like a queen. No body could be happier in a Worth gow than I was walking along Main Street wit my beau on the way to the football dance

So I think, as I take that purple blanke and fold it, that it is a pretty valuable piec of property, for look at the memories i brings back to me.

Very few things, actually, have any rea value in themselves; the value is in wha they evoke. And how nice it would be if could pass along my best memories t Cicely together with the old teaspoons an the blue monkey pitcher!

Every season has its own glory in New England, for every month has its own iden tity, a separate personality, and sensing it i forever a fresh and new joy. October is the ex citing month, the month of brilliant drama

(Continued on Page 139)

Figures prove it!

A genuine Bigelow is in your price range!

Choose Yours Now at Your Bigelow Dealer's!

Are you planning to spend about $90 for a living room carpet? Or $100? Or $200? Here's a happy eye-opener—you can afford a world-famous Bigelow, outstanding in style and wear, for the very figure you've settled on as the price you'd like to pay! And have a wide, wide choice at every price level!

Do you want lovely carpeting to stretch luxuriously from wall to wall? Or carpet cut to the shape of your room, say 12′ x 13′? Or a standard-size rug? Suit your needs with a Bigelow—the carpet with more "extras" for your money!

These Bigelow Carpets are a blend of 100% imported wools—"lively" wool with unmatched springiness and life to it. Every one offers you years of the greatest style-satisfaction and wear-satisfaction your carpet dollars can buy!

Corday 2030-4640, at right. One of the exclusive Bigelow favorites, with interesting modern texture. Specially processed against snagging. Only around $11.95* a sq. yd.

Corday 2030-9218; about $11.95* sq. yd.

Carillon 1200-1104; about $11.95* sq. yd.

Beauvais 1040-1806; about $11.95* sq. yd.

(Right) Fervak 1020-9436; about $9.25* sq. yd.

Serenade 402-91070; about $17.50* sq. yd.

Carillon 1200-1102, at left. A new classic by Bigelow, luxuriously sculptured in wool. Looks far more expensive than it is—only about $11.95* a sq. yd.

Send 25¢ for decorating booklet!

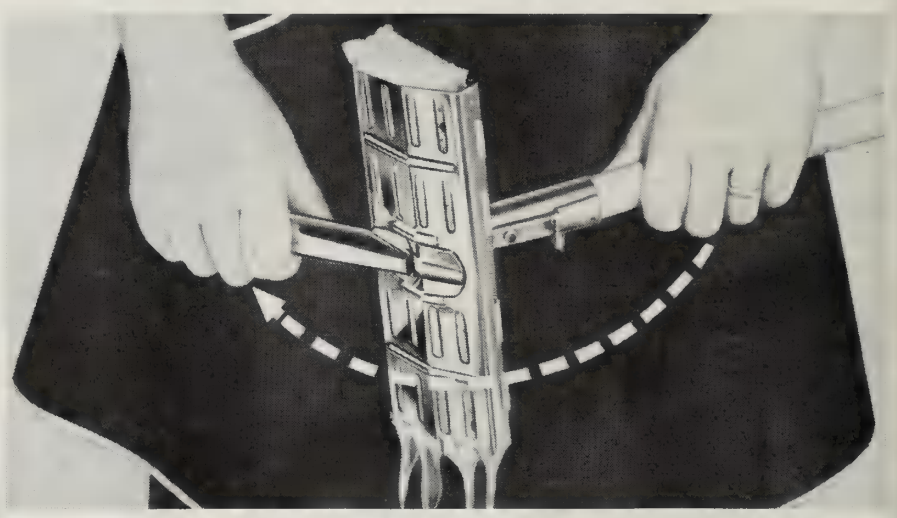
New ways to make your rooms sing with beauty, keynoted by Bigelow Carpets! Consult the booklet, "Bigelow Home Decorator." Page after page on color harmony, styles of decorating. Get it from your Bigelow dealer or send 25¢ to Home Service Bureau, Box 821, New York 46, N.Y.

*Prices subject to change. Slightly higher in the West.

Bigelow
Rugs and Carpets

Beauty you can see . . . quality you can trust . . . since 1825

AT YOUR FAVORITE HOUSEWARES DEALER NOW:



O-Cedar's 1950 fall

★ FEATURING THE REVOLUTIONARY

New wet mop that keeps hands dry!

No more wringing! You just press the O-Cedar Sponge Mop dry with its handy built-in squeezer!

Your hands stay clean and dry with the new O-Cedar Sponge Mop because they don't get wet. You press the water out of the mop with its handy built-in squeezer.

You clean floors faster! O-Cedar's exclusive "wonder working angle" forces sponge head to grip the surface, flood the floor, scrub out stubborn dirt—leaves floor dry enough to wax only minutes after mopping.

Your hands stay lovelier looking The hottest water, the strongest soap cannot harm your hands, cannot rui your manicure because your hand stay dry! (Won't harm sponge head either. Easily sterilized by boiling.)

Does Dozens of Household Chores!

Scrubs floors! Soaks up spills! Washes walls!
Shampoos rugs! Cleans screens! Soaks off wallpaper!
Cleans steps! Spreads wax evenly! Scrubs tile!

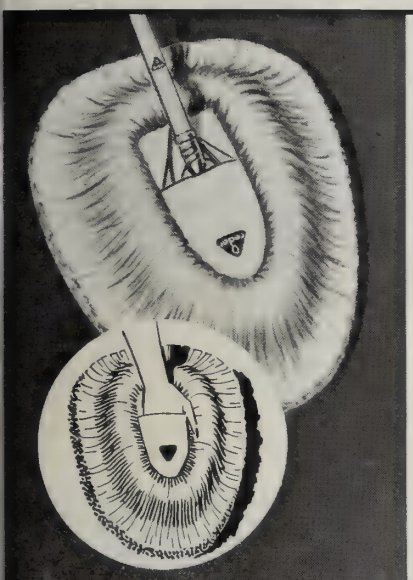
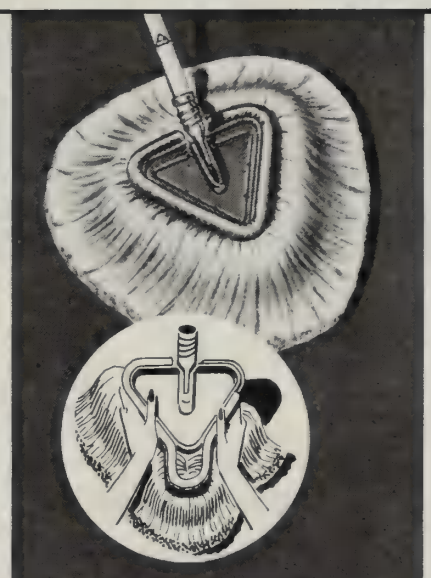
WRITTEN 5 YEAR GUARANTEE with every O-Cedar Sponge Mop. Your dealer has details. (Covers everything but the replaceable sponge head.)



O-Cedar Sponge Mop $3.95 complete

Extra sponge heads—$1.49

housecleaning festival



Two Money-Saving-Offers on the Dust Mops that are "Must Mops" in every home!

Save 58c on this Mit Mop Combination

On its handle or on your hand the O-Cedar Mit Mop is wonderful for dusting walls, floors, ceilings, furniture. Now, for a limited time only, you can get an O-Cedar Mit Mop with handle plus one extra, interchangeable, washable Mit for only $2.98. (This combination regularly worth $3.56—you save 58c.)

Save 45c on this Dust Mop Combination

The O-Cedar Triangular Dust Mop really cleans in corners. Padded centerplate can't scratch furniture, floors, woodwork. For a limited time, you can get a complete O-Cedar Triangular Dust Mop with handle plus an extra, interchangeable pad for only $2.69. (This combination regularly worth $3.14—you save 45c.)

★ America's favorite furniture polish!

O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish—used by more housewives than any other. Cleans, polishes and protects furniture, floors and woodwork in one easy application. Safe for the finest furniture finish. You'll love its fresh cedar aroma.

★ America's finest cream polish!

O-Cedar No-Rubbing Cream Polish—jiffy quick and easy to use. It cleans as it polishes. Wipes away finger marks fast. Leaves a lovely lustre on furniture, porcelain and all enameled surfaces. Ideal for venetian blinds.

It's so easy with O cedar "The greatest help in housekeeping"

O-Cedar Corp'n Chicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd. Toronto, Canada

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

For more glorious sleeping comfort, General Electric brings you a beautiful new kind of Automatic Blanket which has been use-tested in over 200,000 homes.

The proud result of G.E.'s experience in making over one million automatic blankets, it offers you a new, superbly engineered circuit. You enjoy a fluffy, luxurious beauty never before possible! You get ultra-dependable sleeping warmt —all night, every night.

Before you buy any blanket—compare! You'll love the advantages of the ne G-E Automatic Blanket! General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticu

For your automatic sleeping comfort—

GENERAL ELECTRIC'S NEW KIND OF AUTOMATIC BLANKET!

Enjoy sleeping bliss at its newest and best!

Summerlike warmth from corner to corner! That's the blissful sleeping joy you get with the downy new G-E Automatic Blanket. No more icy sheets...no more mounds of covers. Just set the Bedside Control for the sunshiny warmth you want. It adjusts automatically to all normal "ups" and "downs" in room temperature. So no matter what the weather does—you get the same coziness all night long!

So light! So downy! You'll delight in the luxurious softness of the new G-E Automatic Blanket. And you'll be so snug under a mere 5 pounds!

Count your savings! New G-E Automatic Blanket costs only a few pennies a night. Takes the place of three ordinary blankets. Cuts laundry bills . . . saves storage . . . washes beautifully. Simplifies bedmaking, too. Comes in warm shades of rose, cedar, green, blue. One- and Two-control models for twin and double beds. See your G-E retailer today!

New G-E Automatic Blanket costs more than some makes —and worth it!

Over 1,000,000 G-E Automatic Blankets now in us

Read what delighted owners say

- "It's wonderful to keep deliciously warm with only one blanket." Mrs. Alfred Buell, Winnetka, Ill.
- "It's swell! Cozy, restful sleep al night!" Clifford Smith, Roslyn, N. Y.
- "It's wonderful to slip into a pre warmed bed!" Mrs. Jack Titus, Los Angeles, Cal.

G.E.'s new kind of Automatic Blanket costs more because it's the best! You get more for your money! The new G-E circuit is designed to outlast the fabric!

AUTOMATIC BLANKETS

FIRST IN SLEEPING COMFORT—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

(Continued from Page 134)

he early morning is all gold and blue and crisp as broiled bacon. The cockers make wild games, Linda and Sister and Jonquil d Susie and Flyer Junior scramble themlves like eggs over a bitten boot. Maeve is in the fields, hunting chucks and birds, d comes home always via the swamp so at she is plastered with gray mud to her d eyelashes. It is the month of the Irish, for r color is maple leaves and sumac and anberries and sunset. And her voice says Hi" to the hunter all day long. Poor Maeve, e is frustrated, for we do not hunt. Jill kes her tracking, and what does she get? glove or a folded magazine or a woolen sock. ut we just cannot bring ourselves to kill. here is too much killing in the world.

Cooking is fun in October, for the kitchen bright and comfortable and there are so any good things in the cellar from the last rvesting in the garden. We have gone back the kind of meat dishes we had during the ortages in War Two. Barbecued hamrgers are good, and a dinner of baked acorn uash stuffed with our own country sausage about the peak of eating delight.

Jill loves the squash filled with creamed ied beef or finnan haddie. With this, we ve chopped-cabbage salad, and the addion of raisins in the salad makes it much tter than plain coleslaw. I like the color of r red cabbage, and r this we use a sharp rench dressing.

Gone, now, the ght summer desrts. Indian pudding just right. I suppose ere are fifty recipes r Indian pudding, it there is only one ay to make it for e, the way grandma d mamma made it: Boil 4 cups milk in double boiler, then r in ⅓ cup corn eal and cook 15 inutes. Stir in 1 cup rk molasses and ok 5 minutes longer, en remove from heat and add ¼ cup tter or margarine, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 aspoon ginger, 1 beaten egg. Pour the tter into a greased baking dish and pour er it 1 cup cold milk. Bake in a slow oven 00° F.) for 1½ to 2 hours. Serve with cream vanilla ice cream. Best with cream, I think.

Apple cobbler is another favorite of ours. make it, I pare and core 4 apples and cut em into eighths. I melt 3 tablespoons but- or margarine in a spider and add the ples, ½ cup seedless raisins, ½ cup nut eats and ½ cup brown sugar. I stir till the gar is melted, and pour into a greased loaf n. Next I mix and sift ¾ cup flour, 1 teaoon baking powder, pinch of salt. I beat 2 g yolks until light and stir in ½ cup sugar, d 3 tablespoons water and stir into the ur. Then I beat 2 egg whites stiff and fold o the batter. I pour the batter over the ples and bake in a moderate oven (325° F.) about 40 minutes. I serve with a simple ice or cream.

ANNED fruits in sirup usually have extra up after the fruit is used. This sirup makes good sauce for puddings and cakes. It saves gar, for it is sweet. I make peach sauce, instance, by mixing 1 tablespoon of the up with 1 tablespoon flour, adding a scant cup sirup, 1 tablespoon lemon juice and a nch of salt. I cook this 1 minute, add ½ teaoon butter or margarine and serve hot. is is the amount for two servings. Sometnes I add grated lemon peel or a dash of namon. Plum sirup makes a pretty sauce.

This is a good way to use up leftover canned ups; vegetable juice goes in soup or gravy.

Jill and I make a game of using up every ap of food, and sometimes it takes quite a of thinking. One day this week, I offered turn supper over to her. Plenty of lefters, I said innocently. All need to be used right up. The catch was that there were two frankfurters and three fillets of flounder, a couple of pickles, a cut onion, one half a cucumber and one small tomato.

She came up with a delightful supper! She used a can of green-pea soup, sliced the frankfurters and browned them and added them to the soup. First course, with crackers.

Then she had a salad bowl for each of us, with the cucumber, tomato and onion sliced paper thin and arranged in rings on lettuce. On one side was flounder salad—and she simply poached the fillets in boiling salted water, cooled them and whipped them up in a fluffy mixture with tartar sauce (left over from the first flounder dinner). In the center of each bowl were the pickles, and a couple of olives. She used sharp French dressing on the cucumbers, and mayonnaise on the tomatoes. Wine vinegar dressed the onion slices.

THE fish salad was delicious, just about as good as crab would be. We topped the supper off with plenty of hot coffee, and the refrigerator was ready for a new start in menu making! One reward of keeping house is that you never stop making small discoveries.

The hills are flaming with color, wide shimmering expanses of it pinned down here and there by the sober green of the evergreens. We like to ride slowly when we go to the village, and savor the ecstasy of reds and cinnamons and yellows.

We have added to our dark hours the meaning of a foreign word, Korea, only a piece on a map before. When I think of that day in June when we faced the prospect once again of our Army moving into combat, I wonder how we had the courage to go on. Oh, not again! cried the despairing heart. Not again! And selfishly, Not again in our time!

Now I look at the autumn colors, blessed promise of spring another year, and I say, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help ——"

Truly, our help does come from the hills, from the strong upthrust of indomitable peaks against the kind sky, from the green tide of summer, the white parchment of winter, the rosy prints of spring. And now from the triumphal trumpet colors in October we may gain a new assurance, a new hope in the future. Nothing good can be lost, I feel as the car swings along the quiet country road. Nothing lovely really dies. For us, in the valley, the white spires of the village churches have a new meaning. God is still with us, no enemy can take Him from us.

The white house at the end of the road could, I know, be exploded to smoke, but the essential meaning of the word "home" would not be assailed at all. And in the end, I have faith to believe, the shadow of the little homes of the world will blot out the massive walls of the dictators' keeps. And all the children on earth may grow up unfrightened.

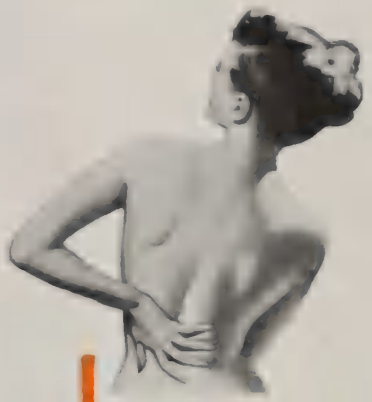
When the moon comes up on these October nights, there is a warm color that she has, as if she caught some of the glow from the great sugar maples beside Stillmeadow. And all the stars are like a drift of gold leaves in the meadow of heaven.

The air is as cool as an old coin teaspoon, and a faint tang of blue wood smoke sweetens it. While Sister and Jonquil take a quick nip about the yard to be sure the rabbits are all abed, I stand on the worn doorstep and watch the moonlight walking along the flagstone path.

Then we go inside and put an apple log on the fire and consider whether it is too early for a little popcorn. Sister says popcorn any time at all. But especially now on a cool October evening!

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



Blackbirds Before Rain

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

To weigh the sky's gray evidence
Now they retire to tree and fence,
A jury dressed in every feather
For a verdict like bad weather!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

face the facts about morning

back-ache

Now...for you...revolutionary relief from this painful nuisance...with a Sealy Firm-O-Rest Orthopedic Mattress to provide the "posturized" firmness and the supple support that truly healthful sleep demands. Accepted for Advertising in the Journals of the American Medical Association, awarded the "Good Housekeeping" Guarantee Seal, the Sealy Firm-O-Rest is the "world's largest selling orthopedic mattress." Select the superb Sealy Orthopedic ...to support you in the style to which you should be accustomed! $69.50

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ADVERTISED IN AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PUBLICATIONS

Sealy

FIRM-O-REST

ORTHOPEDIC MATTRESS

HERE'S THE CULPRIT!...the too soft, sagging mattress that lets the "heaviest third" of your body sink into dangerous muscle strain. You wake more exhausted than when you retired, another "morning backache" candidate!

THE SOLUTION...SEALY FIRM-O-REST ...scientifically "pre-built" for resilient support, consistently healthful comfort. Firmer ...more relaxing...it's SEALY-engineered for proper sleep posture, as so many doctors advise!

10 YEAR Registered GUARANTEE

© SEALY, INC., 1950

666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE, CHICAGO • FACTORIES IN PRINCIPAL CITIES

STORY Rooms BOOK

Little Women Room for Girls takes its theme from the appliqué quilt showing scenes from the beloved Louisa May Alcott story written almost a century ago. All the fabrics, as well as the rug, are washable cotton.

Any girl would love this Victorian bedroom with our Little Women quilt as the theme. All the beloved scenes and characters are delightfully worked out in appliqué in the quaintest cotton prints imaginable. Best of all, materials for the appliqué are rag-bag scraps; remnants with tiny rosebuds, dots and figures are perfect for the dresses. Of course if you haven't old prints, similar designs are found on every cotton-goods counter today and a half yard each of several kinds will serve you nicely. Be sure the colors look harmonious together. If your family runs to boys, the circus quilt will be most appealing. All the daring circus feats, the clowns, the animals, even the

(Continued on Page 142)

BY HENRIETTA MURDOCK Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

PHOTOS BY HAROLD FOWLER

Fifteen memorable scenes from Little Women designed especially for appliqué by Marion Cheever Whiteside. A delightful way to preserve treasured bits of material with family sentiment: great-grandmother's sprigged muslin, and scraps from your own and your children's most historic frocks.

Circus Room for Boys

Marion Cheever Whiteside's gay circus figures pose themselves happily on the appliqué quilt. Use scraps from the children's own clothes for the animals and figures and embroider your own name and the date in a lower corner.

Never have you seen such a luxurious candlewick! The background is that wonderful, smoothlying cotton. BUT—the tufts are made of a special rayon woven tightly into the cotton fabric. Each one glows with a new color brilliance and stays as firm and plump as the center of a daisy—even after laundering. (See them in actual size below.) And there's practically no lint!

See "Radiant Heiress" today at your favorite store. This super-size candlewick comes in white and many lovely colors.

MORGAN-JONES, INC.
58 Worth St., New York 13, N. Y.

ringmaster and the fat lady, are gaily designed and appliquéd in true colors.

To do these charming quilts justice, decorate the entire room around them. Use blue instead of pink in the Little Women quilt if you like and then carry the blue or pink over into your walls, your rugs and the upholstery. . . . A circus theme, of course, should always be red, white and blue, with blue predominating.

To do a Story Book room, first send for your quilt pattern in which every figure is carefully outlined to guide your appliqué cutouts. Then plan your colors and carefully choose the right print for each spot. Sewing on the appliqué with 90 or 100 thread keeps the stitches from showing or, if you prefer, you can match your threads to the colors of each fabric. Keep your thread short.

The original quilt has delightful touch such as a tree with red apples, a bit of la edging a petticoat, a little shawl real folded, and an embroidered handkerchief.

All the Victorian furniture pieces in th Little Women room are fine reproductio manufactured today. The rug is a comme cial one, but as tightly braided and sewn you could do it yourself. The lamps, also, a today's reproductions of Victorian ones, ine pensively priced. Even the glass dome ov the flowers and the sampler pattern are t day's merchandise, authentic and modera in price.

Order CIRCUS QUILT, No. 2659, an LITTLE WOMEN QUILT, No. 2652, from th Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNA Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania. Send 25c fo each pattern. Use coupon on Page 24.

I WENT TO MOSCOW

(Continued from Page 49)

permission to grant the visa had not yet come from Prague. I waited until noon; the consulate always closed at noon.

At twelve o'clock the consul said, "I suppose we should call our ambassador." He picked up the phone, said a few words in Czech, replaced the receiver, and chose a folder from his desk which he began to engrave and stamp with various seals. I waited impatiently for the call to come through from Washington.

"Can't you try them again?" I said at last. "I have really so little time now."

He looked at me very surprised. "But here is your visa. I have only to fasten it into your passport."

"But the ambassador ——"

"He was in New York today. Upstairs." He smiled brightly at my amazement. "Quite a coincidence. By the way, you know that you may take into Czechoslovakia only five hundred crowns in denominations not over fifty. I am clamping the instructions into your passport with the visa so that everyone can see that I told you." I had just bought 1900 crowns in 100's on Fifth Avenue, and wondered ruefully what I should do with them.

At noon on December eleventh I left via Air France for Paris. The flight was uneventful. We were in Paris in time for breakfast. Having survived the first leap, I began to worry about Prague. I decided to go to the Soviet embassy in Paris to see what arrangements could be made.

Free advice is the kind that costs you nothing unless you act upon it. —ANON.

The French woman champion had left the day before by train for Warsaw, where she was to be met by the Intourist, the remarkable organization which has charge of all facilities of travel (transportation, tickets, hotels, and so on) in the Soviet Union. An attaché at the consulate told me that he himself knew nothing about the tournament, but assured me that I would have no difficulty at all at Prague. The Intourist would meet me.

"Will you send a telegram to Prague advising the Intourist I am coming?"

"No," he answered, "we can't telegraph directly to Prague, but I will telegraph to Moscow and Moscow will telegraph to Prague. But you really must not worry. There is always a member of the Soviet embassy at the airdrome in Prague, and also a man of the Intourist. You will have no trouble."

IT surprised me to learn that there was always a member of the Soviet embassy and a representative of the Intourist at the airdrome at Prague, but I felt reassured. I thanked the attaché and went out to spend several hours in an unsuccessful attempt to sell or barter my 1900 Czech crowns.

I took another Air France plane to Prague. There was only one other passenger in the cabin, a French businessman. Luckily we had a tail wind and were soon descending at Prague.

At the airdrome I looked about for the Intourist and the member of the Soviet embassy, but neither was there. Although onl two passengers had arrived by plane, the were many border police in the station, a very dour and forbidding.

What money have you? . . . Have you any thing to declare? . . . Why are you here? . . How long are you going to stay? . . . If yo are taking a plane tomorrow, then you don need any baggage with you today. . . . If yo insist on taking your baggage, then we mu examine it.

I EXPLAINED as well as I could in Germa that I was en route to Moscow for the tourna ment. When I said "Moscow" the inspecto quickly shut my bag and seemed to lose in terest. He took away all my 1900 Czec crowns, however, saying that they would b returned when I left the country. Even th allowable 500 went the way of the rest b cause they should have been 50's and were i denominations of 100. And prices are hig in Czechoslovakia. I went to a cashier window and changed $10 into 500 crown then I got into the air-line bus with my ba gage and waited. After about three quarte of an hour, the bus driver materialized fro nowhere, and we started for the city.

It was raining and dismal; the roads had deserted look. Lining the sidewalks of the ou skirts of the town we billboards with large pi tures of Stalin alternatin with large pictures of Got wald. Stalin was alway smiling, but Gottwal looked sleepy and irr tated.

I went directly to the agency of the Airflo the Soviet Airline and the only one which fli over Soviet territory at the present tim There I met Mr. Georg, a pleasant, energet young man, who spoke English and sol tickets for the Soviet plane. I explained tha my place on the Airflot was reserved for th following morning, but that as all my e penses in the territory of the U.S.S.R. were t be paid by the Soviets, I assumed that the obligation began with the plane from Prag which I understood, would fly nonstop int Moscow. Mr. Georg seemed to enjoy havin a problem to work out (business was slack a the Airflot) and offered to telephone for m to the Soviet embassy. No one answered: ev eryone was out to lunch.

"Go to your hotel and I will try again an phone you the results," said Mr. Georg "Where are you staying?"

I said that my travel agent in New Yor had written to engage a room at the Es planade, which he had told me was one of th best hotels in Prague.

Mr. Georg looked at me dubiously. "Wel stay there until I phone you," he said.

The concierge and his cohorts at the Es planade reminded me, with their gloom looks, of the customs officials; they had neve heard of me or my travel agent and informe me coldly that there was no room.

"There is a delegation here now and all th hotels are quite full. Perhaps if you wait her a few hours, have your lunch, the delegatio

(Continued on Page 144)

Waiting for you at your dealer's is the most luxurious mattress ever made . . . your own Beautyrest, for the price of a glass of milk a day.

Here's how it works out: Beautyrest costs $64.50. It's guaranteed for at least 10 years.

When you divide the price by this 10-year guarantee, you find you actually pay only $6.45 a year —or about 1½¢ a night. Less, we repeat, than one glass of milk a day.

And THINK! You not only get unmatched comfort, when you get Beautyrest—you also get a mattress that lasted MORE THAN TWICE AS LONG as any other mattress tested by United States Testing Co. See your dealer today for your Beautyrest Mattress!

Now! Own the world's most luxurious mattress...

for the price of a glass of milk a day!

eautyrest gives you Better Rest! Note op) how "ordinary" mattress lets spine g. Now note (bottom) how Beautyrest attress gives spine-perfect "Levelized Supbrt." Each of the 837 springs in Beautyrest in its own separate pocket—can't pull each her down.

Water Glass Proves Beautyrest is constructed differently. When glass is placed on any one of the 837 springs, and near-by spring is pushed down, water will not spill. For Beautyrest springs are not tied together, work independently! You get "Levelized Support" for every part of your body!

TESTS PROVE BEAUTYREST FIRMEST!

Dr. Taylor

A test that was made recently at the United States Testing Co. by Dr. T. Smith Taylor proved Beautyrest the firmest of ALL mattresses tested. A man was lowered onto heat-treated plastic sheets covering the mattress. When the plastic cooled, the depth his body had sunk into the mattress was measured. Beautyrest proved FIRMEST, the most "levelized" of all.

22-year-old Beautyrest still comfortable. Mrs. John D. Sheehy of Memphis, Tenn. writes, "My Beautyrest is 22 years old. It's had more than normal use—for my mother has been bed-ridden on it for almost two years. And it's still comfortable!"

Only Simmons makes BEAUTYREST

Also from the house of Simmons: Beautyrest Box Spring, ideal companion to Beautyrest* Mattress, $64.50.
Deepsleep* Mattress, $44.50. Hide-A-Bed,* Babybeauty* Mattress, and Ace* Spring.

*TRADE-MARK REG. U. S. PATENT OFFICE. COPR. 1950 BY SIMMONS CO., MDSE. MART, CHICAGO, ILL.

(Continued from Page 142)

will leave. It is possible, but of course we cannot assure you of a room."

After lunch I went into the lobby and sat there over my pocket chessboard for three hours until Mr. Georg telephoned, "You are very lucky. At the Soviet embassy they say they will send someone right away with the money for your ticket. I will telephone you when they arrive."

"But you know I have no room here. The hotel is full. There is a delegation ——"

"Did you tell them you were going to Moscow?"

I went back to the concierge, who fixed me again with his glistening eye. "Will you see if there is not a room vacant now? I am on my way to Moscow ——"

In ten minutes I was ensconced in my comfortable room; at five o'clock Mr. Georg telephoned again.

"Bad news. The plane is down at Lwow because of stormy weather. It will not arrive here before tomorrow and so you cannot leave in the morning; perhaps you will not leave tomorrow even if the plane comes in in the morning."

"But does the same plane go back right away?"

"Oh, yes. Practically immediately. It flies only once a week now." (The schedule in New York said every day.) "I think you had better come here tomorrow morning, we will go together to the embassy, and you can explain everything yourself."

The next morning in the office of the airline Mr. Georg told me he had decided there was no use in our going to the embassy.

"When they say they will do it, they always do it. It is only a question of when. We must simply wait. In any case, the plane will not arrive before tomorrow."

The next afternoon Mr. Georg telephoned: "The plane has arrived and it will leave at seven in the morning. You had better come right down to buy your ticket. You must pay in dollars. I recommend that you buy your ticket to Lwow, which is at the border. There must be a representative of the Intourist at Lwow who will meet you and arrange for your ticket to Moscow."

I went down to the airline office and Mr. Georg looked at me very sympathetically.

"I have just telephoned the embassy," he said, "and they still tell me they are sending a man down with money for the ticket. They will send someone, I am sure. Perhaps three days after the plane has left. If you want to get to Moscow in time for your tournament, I think you had better buy your ticket to Lwow." He paused. "I think I am a free man in a free country, but I know that no one else in this office would have dared to do for you what I have done. If someone at the Soviet embassy should become annoyed, I might lose my job here. But you will be all right. If the Intourist does not meet you in Lwow you can just run into the station and buy your ticket in rubles; the plane stops there an hour and a half."

"But I have no rubles," I said, "and I don't speak Russian."

He really looked very sorry for me. "Why must you just go to Moscow?" he said. "With the energy you will spend getting to Moscow you could build up a business in your country. But don't worry. Just explain your difficulty to the steward on the plane when he brings you your lunch. He will undoubtedly speak English and he can translate for you in Lwow."

"Is it a good plane?" I asked, all my old fears re-arising.

"It's an American plane," he said, surprised. "A Dakota. Besides, the Soviet pilots are the best in the world."

I was reassured at once. I bought my ticket to Lwow, gave Mr. Georg as many cigarettes as he would accept, some lipstick for his wife, and said good-by.

At five the next morning I was at the terminal. I was checked out at the customs and got back my Czech money, which was now of not much use. I saw the small green plane (two motors) waiting in the field. Suddenly the doors opened and I saw the three Soviet pilots and their engineer, very tall, handsome and resplendent in blue-and-gold uniform. They went out into the field and stood by t plane gesticulating.

"What is the matter?" I said to a man w had just come in to open the buffet counte

He shrugged his shoulders. "It looks though the plane will not fly. Bad weathe Soviet fliers never fly in bad weather; th can't see."

I remembered that I had heard that t Soviet airplane flew by sight and not radio. My heart sank. In a few moments saw the four Russians coming back. The ca tain, a Wotan incarnate, said a few incompr hensible words to the guard at the door, a they all stalked back up the corridors a vanished.

"What is it?" I asked a guard.

"Plane not go now. You wait."

I turned to the man at the counter: "B where are all the other passengers?"

"You are the passengers," he said.

I sat down to wait. After several hours occurred to me that I was hungry; I had e pected to have breakfast on the plane, an had not eaten very much the days in Prag The buffet displayed several pieces of ha gray bread alternating with pieces of gray meat, not at all appetizing.

"Can I get some coffee?" I asked the m behind the counter.

"Tea or beer!"

I had some tea and some dry bread, and exchange I offered him one of my 100-cro notes.

"That I cannot accept," he said.

"Will you take dollars?"

"No, they must be changed legally in t country and marked in your passport." were at an impasse. He resolved the probl by making me a present of the tea and bre

At about one o'clock I saw the four Sov fliers returning. They walked majestica through the room and out the door, looki at nothing and at no one. The station gua motioned to me to follow them. I climbed into the plane and the door closed. The fo fliers were already in the control room, I w alone in the cabin. It was true—I was t only passenger. I sat down in dejecti among the baggage—crates, boxes and own suitcases. We took off.

After about four hours we came down i field. I thought that we were making emergency landing. Suddenly, to my surpri the four fliers swept down the aisle, u fastened the door of the plane, and vanish into the darkness. I waited—ten minut twenty minutes. Nothing! Just as I was pi ing myself most, a Micawberish gentlem and a delicate lady in a hat (the only real I saw in Russia) climbed into the plane, l lowed by two porters with a great quantity baggage, including a baby carriage, wh they proceeded to arrange with much care around me. I did not mind at all; I was g to see anyone. They spoke only Russian a seemed actually relieved that we had means of communication.

I expected to see the pilots returning any moment, now that we had taken on t more passengers, but to my surprise seve men in police uniforms came into the pla and spoke very energetically to the gent man and his lady. After some argument th all got out, the porters came back for the l gage, and it looked as though I were going be left alone again.

I caught the last of the police as he w going down the ladder. "Is this Lwow?" asked.

He nodded.

"But where is the Intourist?"

He pointed to a hut at the distant edge the field, and I began to walk toward through the mud and the rain. This is Russ I thought. This field.

Inside the hut was a small room in wh six or seven men were sitting, drinking be or vodka. I said in English to the man near me, "Do you know where I can find the I tourist?" One of the men, pushed from b hind by his companions, stood up and volu teered that he spoke German. I explained m plight, and he offered to telephone to Lw (we were several miles from the center of t city) for the Intourist. I sat down to wait, lieved that the Intourist actually existed in Lwów.

After perhaps fifteen minutes, a woman from the Intourist arrived. She had a pleasant face and a charming voice; she spoke English and at once put me at ease. "You have nothing more to worry about; you are now within the borders of the U.S.S.R., and we will take care of you. You will have to spend the night at Lwów in our Intourist hotel, and tomorrow morning I will bring your ticket and take you to the plane." She led me to a car in which the chauffeur was waiting and we drove to Lwów. We drew up in front of a drab, antiquated building. "This is our best hotel. I am its manager, and I will try now to find you a comfortable room."

The interior of the hotel was very shabby and smelled strongly of cooking and musty clothes and wet boots. We climbed several flights of stairs, but the room which had been assigned to me did not satisfy her. "Of course you must have a private bath," she said. She finally found a room which pleased her, very small but with a bathroom attached. I knew that a bath would be of little use to me, as I had left my luggage at the airport, and in the room were no such western accommodations as soap, towels or even paper.

"Would you like something to eat?" she asked.

We went down the stairs, past a deserted bar, into a small dining room. A young girl with long yellow braids and a very short yellow skirt brought me cabbage soup and some black bread.

When I had finished, the woman from the Intourist looked at me with satisfaction. "Would you like something else?'

"Yes," I said. "Some meat."

This seemed to present a real problem, but after some time the girl with the braids brought me the stewed leg of a chicken which looked as though it had been waiting for me for a long time. I had some cream soda from a bottle, and my friend accompanied me upstairs. She wished me a good night, and said that she would come for me in the morning to take me to the plane. I liked her very much, looked forward to meeting her in the morning, but I never saw her again.

I LAY down in my clothes on top of the bed, covered myself with my two coats, and waited for day. At seven in the morning a young girl brought me some bread, and tea in a glass, and a few minutes afterward there was a second knock on my door. I saw a short, very strong-looking woman dressed in a gray cellophane raincoat.

"I have come to take you to the plane," she said. "But it is very bad weather and perhaps it will not fly after all."

We drove out to the airfield. It was raining heavily and even colder than before. I saw ice gathering on the windshield and wondered about the plane. When we arrived at the field, my companion put her raincoat over my head; and we trudged through the mud and the sleet out to the plane.

The engineer and two of the pilots were standing on the wings, brushing off ice and snow with little twig brooms. Suddenly the rain stopped; the fliers got into the plane and we began to mount. It was very foggy, and I wondered how they could fly in such weather if, as I had heard, it was true that the plane had no radio. It grew very rough, the plane bounced and swayed, and I held on to the sides of my seat and tried to see through the frost which pressed against the window. One of the pilots came into the cabin, set up a small table, and with a ruler and pencil began to make geometric computations on a map. I thought he looked very worried and wanted to question him, but I could find no appropriate phrases. When he had finished, he took up the map and went back to the others.

All at once we came into a clearing, into the sun. We were flying very low and, looking down, I saw many airfields with rows and rows of planes lying on the flat ground. For about an hour we flew in clear weather and always over airfields, airfields, one after the other. Then the clouds closed in again, and the fog; again the plane jerked and careened from side to side, the pilot came into the cabin again and worked with his map and tools. I felt sure we were lost and that if ever we should come down, it would be in some wilderness, far from Moscow. I remembered that I had heard it said repeatedly that Soviet fliers are the best in the world, and I fervently hoped that these would prove at least a part of their reputation.

THE plane began to bank steeply. The pilot looked out, pointed down, and said, "Moskva." We came down beautifully into an airfield.

"Moskva?" I asked, incredulous.

"Moskva," replied the pilot, laughing.

This time I was prepared. When the four aviators paraded past me and went out, I went out too. It seemed to be horribly cold; I could hardly breathe. Outside, ten or twelve men were gathered around the plane, and one in an army coat and fur hat approached me.

"Does anyone speak English?" I asked.

"I do. I speak English," answered the man in the fur hat.

I explained that I had come for the International Chess Tournament and that I was to be met by the Intourist. "Is there anyone here to meet me?"

"I am here. I will meet you," he said.

The office of the Moscow airdrome was one of the finest buildings that I saw in the U.S.S.R. An elegant limousine drew up before the door, and a dapper young man escorted me into it. We drove down the wide highway into Moscow.

"You are just in time for our great day," he began. "We are preparing fine celebrations." It was December nineteenth.

"You mean Christmas?" I said.

"Christmas? Christmas is only for people who believe in God. Here only a few old people believe such fairy tales. I'm talking about Stalin's birthday."

We drove down the wide street, along the beautiful river, past the Red Square with its Kremlin, its grandiose, overwhelming churches (now converted into museums), past Lenin's tomb and the queue of people always waiting for a sight of their embalmed saint, past the Bolshoi Theatre, to the Hotel Savoy.

The Hotel Savoy, where we stayed during the tournament, was considered a first-class establishment. Each of the twelve delegates to the Women's International Chess Tournament was given a sitting room, a bedroom and an adequate bathroom which contained hot water (except for one or two days of the severest frost), soap and toilet paper, wonderful to see east of Paris, of a cottony but elusive character. The ice-covered windows of all the rooms were taped shut, but most of us were soon persuaded by the cold that we could sleep quite well with our windows closed.

All the rooms were kept very clean by a valet and a set of maids who made the beds and tidied. Indoors, I always sat with my gloves and boots on, and usually my fur coat or a blanket wrapped around me. To be really warm one had to go to bed. A great many of the foreign delegates came down with grippe, and at last the Soviet doctor assigned to take care of us exclaimed, "But this is a clinic, not a chess tournament. They must all have stoves." Two days later, small electric heaters appeared in our rooms, which at least obviated the need to wear boots.

(Continued on Page 147)

"Whinever I read in a sermon," said Mr. Dooley, "that the wurruld is goin' to pot, that th' foundations iv government is threatened, that th' whole fabric iv civilized s'ciety is in danger, that humanity is on th' down grade, and morality is blinkin', that men ar-re becomin' dhrunkards, an' women gamblers, an' that the future iv th' race is desthruction, I can always console mesilf with wan thought."

"What's that?" asked Mr. Hennessey.

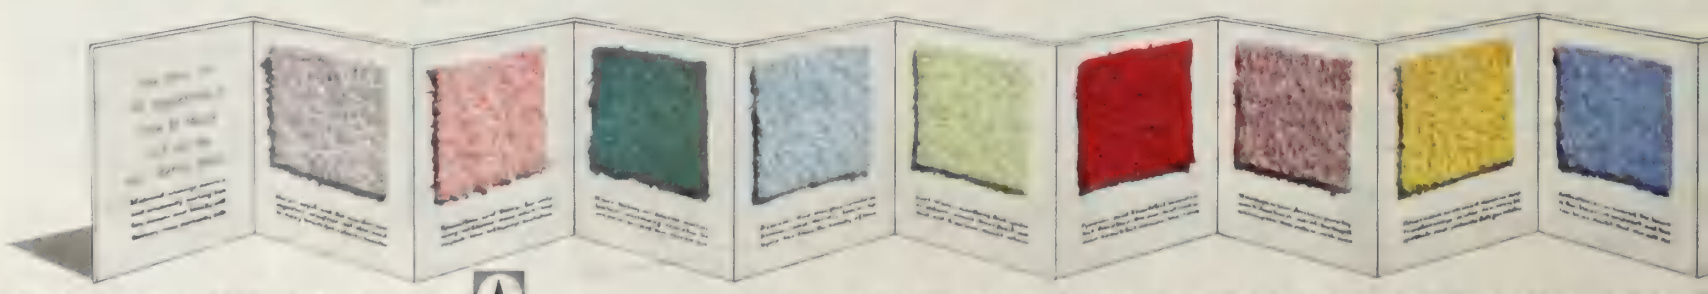
"It isn't so," said Mr. Dooley.

—FINLEY PETER DUNNE.

superb Martex quality!
BIG 25 x 50 inch size!
and so moderate in price!

Whether you're buying towels as a gift or for your "own sweet home," here's the most exciting Martex value in years! A big, big 25 x 50 inch bath size towel—luxuriously soft and beautiful—called "Milady." Ask to see it in your favorite store. Bath towel, about $2! Guest towel, about $1! Face cloth, about 40c! Other Martex bath towels from 98c to $3.50. (Monogramming is extra, of course.)

Wonderful new Martex colors! Wonderful new Martex towel color selector!



Now—Martex takes the guesswork out of choosing towel colors. Yes, thanks to this new Martex color folder (yours for the asking), you choose colors right in your own home; decide which is best before you go to your favorite store! And what a host of beautiful new Martex colors you now have to choose from! Eighteen in all—with brand-new graduated shades of red, blue, green, and yellow plus neutrals and bright accent colors.

SEND FOR THE NEW MARTEX COLOR-CORDION! Before you make any towel purchases, choose your favorite colors first! Just send a card or letter with your name and address and we'll rush your Martex Color-Cordion. Address: MARTEX TOWELS, Dept. L-10, 65 Worth Street, New York 13, New York.

NOTE: Naturally, all Martex towels are not available in all eighteen colors. For example, "Milady," the plus-value towel illustrated, comes in the nine colors shown below and in white.

Martex® Towels
THEY DO WEAR LONGER

MARTEX TOWELS—A PRODUCT OF WEST POINT MANUFACTURING COMPANY • WELLINGTON SEARS COMPANY • SELLING AGENTS • 65 WORTH STREET, NEW YORK 13

(Continued from Page 145)

unch was supposed to be at one-thirty, the delegates straggled in when it suited n. Tea we usually took in our rooms, but er was a convivial affair and took place r the hours of play at eleven P.M. Lunch dinner were very similar: there were ys plates of hors d'oeuvres on the e—smoked salmon or sturgeon in jelly various sauces, or caviar (black, gray or or tinned crab or lobster with peas and ots or cold meat; afterward came a hot , a really extravagant borsch with cab-, cream and four different kinds of meat ed in it, or a chicken soup with at least arter of a chicken in every plate. After soup there was usually fried meat and toes, pork or veal or steak, sometimes d chicken or goose, and always canned ots and peas. I never saw any fresh vege-es or greens, but we could order man-ns (very small tangerines) and apples. ert consisted invariably of cherry com- or ice cream. An American couple had me that figuring at the ordinary rate of rubles to the dollar (the diplomatic rate eight), ice cream in Moscow cost $3.25 nt, so I thought the daily offer of ice m was very generous. Breakfast we d order as we liked in our rooms; and I red black caviar and tea every morning ive weeks.

t five o'clock each afternoon all the con-nts assembled in the Savoy parlor and ed for Mr. Lysenko, the secular arm of Sports Committee, to signal that the Zis usines were ready to take us to the Hall he Red Army. Mr. Lysenko—Ilyusha, nterpreters called him—made all practi-rrangements for our lodging, transporta- and entertainment, and he was eager nticipate our slightest wishes.

e rode in the luxurious Zises to the hall, re we passed into the theater between iring ranks of chess fans. There were t tables set up for the sixteen partici-s, and a special table was placed at one for the judges and members of the et Sports Committee. We played on a d stage in a room which held perhaps a sand spectators and which was usually o capacity.

played at the rate of forty-five moves o and a half hours—five hours a sitting— at the end of the five hours the head e, Grazdanka Chudova, the champion of cow, would come around with an en-pe and the position of the game would be d down and the scores sealed until the on for adjourned games.

n the opening night there was a splendid mony at which we sat in two rows on a e glittering with flowers and lights, and presented one by one to the spectators. Members of the Government Sports Committee and the Chess Committee made welcoming speeches. The tenor of all the speeches was the same: "We thank our leaders who have made possible this tournament. We want only friendly and peaceful relations with other countries. Stalin himself has said he wishes all future battles to be fought only on the chessboard."

The four Russian competitors we saw only during hours of play. We had been formally introduced to them the first afternoon at tea in the Savoy dining room, but where they stayed, what they did when they were not playing in the Hall of the Red Army, nobody knew. They never went with us to the theater or on tours of the city; they never lingered in the hall to play skittles or analyze games. And they spoke only Russian. Two of them, Rudenko and Rubtsova, U.S.S.R. champion, were middle-aged and had grown children; Bykova was a tiny brunette. always dressed in tight black velvet with a knee-length skirt; and Belova, the youngest contestant, was a tremendous blonde, as placid as a pool. All four Soviet players had their special teachers. They had been carefully prepared and coached for this tournament and were expected to do well in it.

The atmosphere among the players was friendly though feline. In spite of the difference in background and language, we were a more homogeneous group than might have been expected.

The tournament was eventually won by the four Russians, Rudenko first, Rubtsova second, Bykova and Belova tying for third and fourth. Rudenko was encircled with a stupendous laurel wreath and given 10,000 rubles (then about $2000) besides various small presents.

There was a musical concert and a banquet with dancing to finish off the festivities, and at the banquet the Soviet chess players, both men and women, mellowed by buckets of caviar, wines and vodka, became very friendly and loquacious. I said good-by to them all with a feeling of nostalgia. They seemed to me simple, childlike people, in spite of their amazing capacity for intricate calculation over the chessboard.

Luba was the interpreter assigned to the English-speaking contestants in the tournament. She had been looking for work, she told me, and one day she heard that the Soviet Sports Committee was organizing an international meeting and could use people who spoke foreign languages.

There were eight interpreters for the twelve of us, all of them responsible to Eugenia Goldberg, a young woman of twenty-five with somewhat inconsistent long yellow curls, who had a permanent position with the Sports Committee. She was the only

"And maybe you'll tell me just what is neurotic about my wanting to get married?"

Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings

Perfume That Clings

Q.—Dear Penny: I adore perfume, but for some reason or other its fragrance just does not last on me. I have told several of my friends that I want a new perfume, but first I must find out about a lasting one.—Mrs. A. W.

A.—A particularly good idea for women who claim that perfume does not "stay with them" is a Liquid Skin Sachet. It smooths on the skin very easily, and lingers longer because of its sachet base. It has a slower rate of diffusion and evaporation than any other type of fragrance. Try this Houbigant Chantilly Liquid Skin Sachet. Only $1.75 plus tax at better stores.

Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings Perfume That Clings

It's Easy to Match Mood and Moment with . . .

FRANCISCAN WARE

America's Finest Quality for Table-Smart Settings

COLORFUL YET CORRECT BUFFETS—with Franciscan Apple, America's most popular pattern—in the earthenware that never crazes . . . with embossed patterns hand-painted under the glaze. What's more, Franciscan Apple is available in the great variety of large accessory items needed for "lots-of-company" entertaining. 16-piece Starter Set, $12.95.

FOR PORCH OR PATIO DINING, match out-of-doors beauty with Franciscan Poppy, the brand new, wild flower pattern, distinctive in the graceful, modern coupe shape so popular right now. 16-piece Starter Set, $12.95.

FOR LUNCHEONS—dress-up or casual—you're always in good taste with Franciscan Desert Rose, the pattern that's so glowingly vivid against plain table mats or solid color cloths. 16-piece Starter Set, $12.95.

CANDLELIGHT OCCASIONS—formal or no—are impeccably correct with Franciscan Ivy, the pattern that blends traditional beauty and design with modern styling and grace. 16-piece Starter Set, $12.95.

BRIGHTEN BREAKFAST NOOKS with the versatile Franciscan Fruit Pattern. Gay and colorful, and like all Franciscan Ware, it bespeaks quality wherever and whenever set. 16-piece Starter Set, $14.75.

DURING OCTOBER, QUALITY DEALERS EVERYWHERE ARE FEATURING THE NEW, ECONOMICAL STARTER-ETTE* (THE E PIECE SET) IN ALL OF THESE POPULAR FRANCISCAN PATTERNS

FRANCISCAN WARE

FROM CALIFORNIA BY THE MAKERS OF FRANCISCAN FINE CHINA

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO., LOS ANGELES • SINCE 1875 COPYRIGHT 1950

interpreter whom I never heard discussing any controversial subjects, and perhaps she had been chosen for her position because of her discretion.

But Luba interested me most of all. She seemed to concentrate in her personality my own impression of the Soviet character. She was blond, had a good figure without accents, an easy carriage and an energetic manner. Her vivid blue eyes with their long lashes heavily mascaraed (she used no other cosmetics) stood out in her pale round face with a startling effect. When we became acquainted, I asked one day why she made up only her eyes. "Oh," she said, "if I should paint my face as you westerners do, I should look too vulgar."

I met her my first evening in Moscow—she was sitting in the dining room with Miss Tranmer, the English champion, and her "trainer," Gerald Abraham. They had just finished dinner and were drinking vodka and discussing dialectical materialism. Luba looked at me appraisingly, rather coldly, I thought, and, handing me the menu, asked me what I should like to eat. I told her that I could not read Russian, had had nothing to eat for two days and was very hungry.

"Well, then," she said, "why don't you begin with some caviar and vodka, then have some borsch and a steak?"

The prospect sounded very agreeable.

"I will show you how we drink vodka here," she said. "Don't sip it like that. You must take it at one gulp or it will do you no good. Bottoms up," and she illustrated.

She told me she had been married twice to the same husband. The first time, he had not been properly appreciative, and so she had divorced him and taught him a lesson. He had learned and repented, and she took him back. She had a little boy of eight who went to an all-day school. Her mother looked after him when he came home from school, and also did the cooking and domestic chores.

"What would you do if your mother did not live with you?" I asked.

"I should have to get a maid," she replied, "but maids are generally very expensive, and impudent, too, because they are in great demand."

Afterward when I grew to know her better, this conversation surprised me. It seemed inconsistent with her often-professed horror of capitalism: "I could never work for somebody else. It would seem awful to allow myself to be exploited or to exploit other people. I work only for the state."

After I had finished my dinner, we went up to my rooms on the fourth floor. She looked curiously at my clothes spread anyhow over the beds and tables.

"I suppose in America you have large amounts of merchandise in your shops," she said.

I assured her that our stores were full.

"We have had a hard time in Russia on account of the war. What a terrible time! I think I could never stand another war. But now everything is much better. You will see our shops—I will take you tomorrow. In five years we will equal in our production anything you have in capitalist countries. Only give us five years. Of course some things here are still quite expensive."

She settled down on one of the sofas beside a tea table and I offered her a pack of cigarettes.

"I have my own," she said. "You know our Russian cigarettes are very good, and I can get as many as I want."

"But try these," I said. "I brought so many packs with me."

"Why should I try yours when ours are so good? We have everything we need."

"Really everything?" I asked. It was n first night in Moscow.

"Well, perhaps not everything in the wa of luxuries. But in a few years when o machines are made to work for us, then w shall have all the luxuries we want and l completely free to do as we like. The m chines will do all the hard work."

"But now," I asked, "don't you feel fr in your work?"

"Of course we do," she said, looking at m rather suspiciously. "Everyone is free t choose his own work; one can work as muc or as little as one likes. If we want mo things, we work harder. But we don't reall work just to have money, as you capitalist do, but for the sake of our work, which useful and interesting. Everything belongs t the country. People who are valuable to th country are treated better than others. No in your country, all the wealth is owned b sixty families who enslave all the rest of th population."

"Oh, no," I said, shocked. "That's quit absurd. I, for instance, am not one of you sixty families and I am not enslaved."

"You don't know it, of course, but it true. I have studied and read all about con ditions over there." She went on to tell m at length what she had read.

I had resolved before coming to th U.S.S.R. to engage no controversial di cussions, but I felt was being prodded, an I said what I four myself repeating ofte afterward: "Perha you have heard all sor of false statemen about my country. Yo accept these as th truth, but you canno say that you reall know anything abou America, because yo have never been there Now if the people o your country coul only see what th United States is reall like, and if you woul only let Americans visi you and if there coul only be free social intercourse, a give-and take between peoples—then understandin and sympathy would naturally follow."

She looked at me for a few seconds, the said, "I believe you are a sincere, seriou person, but of course you are very naïve."

"Why naïve, exactly?" I said.

"Because in your country they are alway talking about war. The capitalists want t continue to exploit the workers; they see tha the communist idea is spreading. There is n way of stopping the idea but war. So the want war. We—we do not want war. We ar exhausted and disgusted from the last one.

The next afternoon she called to take m to tea at which the rules of our tournamen were to be explained. As I was going out o the rooms, I snapped off the electric lights.

"Why do you do that?" she asked sharply

"So as not to waste the light," I said. " will be out all evening ——"

"You Americans are always thinking o money. Always economizing. We are a rich country. We can afford to waste things. If w see something we like, we spend all our money. We don't have to worry about to-morrow."

Luba went with us to the theaters and ballets and interpreted and explained everything with great facility. She seemed to enjoy sharing our more or less luxurious life and used to arrive every morning at the Savoy in time for an excursion or our communal lunch, at which she ordered the best of everything and imbibed vodka generously. She had two fur coats, the first a nondescript, bushy raccoon which she soon gave up in favor of a neat-looking black seal with an attached hood; this gave her an innocuous, childlike appearance which deceived nobody. She was certainly the best-dressed woman I saw in Moscow and seemed

(Continued on Page 150)

Booth Tarkington, past master of the art of compliment, seemed always to know how to say the right thing at the proper time. Returning to his early home after an extensive absence, he was greeted very warmly by a lovely girl whom he did not recognize.

Eying the black-eyed beauty with open admiration, he remarked, "I suppose you're still living at home with your parents?"

"No, sir," corrected the girl. "Papa and mamma are both in heaven. And I'm married now and live with my husband."

Tarkington smiled knowingly. "Then your husband is in heaven too!"

—WEBB B. GARRISON

THE name of TOWLE is signed to many of the loveliest and most famous patterns in the world — Old Master, Craftsman, King Richard, Candlelight, Old Colonial, French Provincial — many, many others gracing tables of taste all over the country.

See the NEW TOWLE Serving Pieces — another design first for TOWLE!

And now — something new in design to add increased usefulness and service to these TOWLE solid silver serving pieces. See the unusual new TOWLE Pie or Cake Serving Knife, with its straight sharp side and pointed end, designed to cut and serve cakes, pastries, and many other desserts easily and deftly . . . the new TOWLE Cheese Serving Knife — with its sharp cutting edge, to slice all kinds of cheeses . . . both pieces designed to serve you well.

You will want to add these new TOWLE pieces to your own set. You will select them as warmly-welcomed gifts. And if you are about to start your set, CHOOSE YOUR PATTERN FROM THE COMPLETE COLLECTION OF FAMOUS TOWLE STERLING PATTERNS. Teaspoons from $2.95, place settings from $24.50, serving pieces from $3.50.

TOWLE SILVERSMITHS, NEWBURYPORT, MASSACHUSETTS

TOWLE
STERLING

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for you

Serve Spaghetti and Meat Balls cooked with Hunt's

You can make this delicious spaghetti sauce and meat balls ahead of time. And then—

Let the crowd come! Your main dish will be ready in minutes. And everybody will rave about your grand recipe.

That's because only Hunt's Tomato Sauce can put that same rich flavor into a dish. It's the Kettle-simmered sauce, and your grocer sells it for only a few cents a can. Now, here's the basic recipe for four people:

¾ cup chopped onion
1 clove garlic, minced
4 tbsp. oil or drippings

Lightly brown onion and garlic in hot oil. Then take:

1 lb. ground beef 1 tsp. salt

Add salt to meat and mix lightly. Form into small balls and brown them in the pan with the oil. Then add:

1 Can Hunt's Tomato Sauce
¼ tsp. pepper 1 cup water
2 tsp. Worcestershire Sauce

Cover the pan and simmer 40 minutes. Pour over hot spaghetti (8-oz. pkg.) and sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese. For 8 servings double the recipe.

Use Hunt's Tomato Sauce in your everyday recipes. In soups, stews, casseroles, gravies, meat loaf. Grand for leftovers—just use a little of this and a little of that and Hunt's Tomato Sauce. Get a few cans at your grocer's!

Hunt's Heavenly Peaches
at down-to-earth prices

Hunt-for the best

Hunt Foods, Inc., Fullerton, Calif.

(Continued from Page 148)

pleased when I told her so. "You will see really beautifully clothed women in our theaters," she said, but I never did.

One day she said to me, with a look at once mischievous and smug, "How is your culture in the United States?"

"Very well, thank you," I said. "America is now enjoying the culture of the whole world. Musicians, painters, writers from all countries now come to the United States to travel or to settle. You must come someday yourself to see our country."

"Oh, no!" she said. "I have not much desire to travel. I was outside the Soviet Union only once, to visit my husband when he was stationed in Germany and was sick. It was interesting to see, but nothing wonderful. I saw an English motion picture there—all about crimes and killings, very horrible and silly. I could not sleep all night. I know you have many such cinemas about gangsters in America. I prefer our way of doing things; we have a more serious attitude toward life, more responsible."

Our discussions always ended in a draw.

After I had been in Moscow some weeks I tried to give Luba a pair of nylons, but she would not take them. "No, really. I have everything I need. Why should I take stockings? We have our own brand here. Perhaps yours are a better quality, but our cuprons wear wonderfully and I need only two or three pairs a year." (These stockings cost 50 rubles a pair.)

A fallen lighthouse is more dangerous than a reef.
—ANON.

Near the end of the tournament, however, I persuaded her to accept a tiny cosmetic kit which contained all the accouterments of Venus, from eye shadow to lipstick. I saw that she regarded it with a feline interest.

"Pretty little nothing," she commented. "So in America you women think only of such frivolous things. You spend all your time dressing up and shopping for clothes."

"No, not all," I said.

"And playing chess," she added, laughing.

Luba was supposed to go about with me, but one week she had a cold and stayed home in the mornings or lay feverishly in bed in the interpreters' room at the Savoy. I went with a young man from the American embassy to visit one of the churches not yet converted into a museum. When I came back, I said to Luba that I had been shocked by the crowds of ragged, crippled beggars who lay on the stone pavement before the church in the temperature of 42° below zero.

"Why did you go there, then?" she said. "We want to make your stay here pleasant. We show you the best things in our city. Why do you try to hunt out unpleasantness? Those people hate to work; they want to beg."

All the foreign contestants had been interviewed many times during our stay by the local press, by radio commentators, by people who wanted to write articles on chess. When, however, I managed to get translations of some of my interviews, I saw that they contained many errors of fact, emphases had been shifted and some of my statements had been misinterpreted. I told Luba that I would not consent to any more interviews unless, before they were published I could see exactly what I was supposed to have said.

"Only one more," she coaxed, "and you can sign it before it is printed."

THE day before I left, she came to my room with a studious young man who asked me questions about what I had seen and about my impressions and reactions. I said that I was full of admiration for the scrupulously just management of the tournament and for the kindness and hospitality with which the delegates had been treated. I had enjoyed seeing the beautiful city of Moscow and I only hoped that the people of the Soviet Union and the people of my own country—in fact, of all countries—would grow to know each other better, could enjoy common experience in the worlds of sport, art and science. I said that I thought direct contact and free association between peoples could only make for amity and peace, and that the people of the Soviet Union should learn to know our character and customs and that we should know theirs, and in this way we might achieve a solid basis for future friendship.

The interviewer looked pleased, and Luba nodded her head approvingly. I went to bed, thinking complacently that I had laid a tiny stone on the tower of peace.

But the next day, when Luba brought in the typewritten sheets, I had an unpleasant surprise. She held out a quill pen and said gaily, "Just sign at the bottom. You see I have kept my promise!"

"But what does it say?" I asked. "Will you read it to me?"

"Read it? But why? You heard it all yesterday. You said it, in fact."

"I WANT to be sure of that," I answered, a little too seriously for her mood.

"Well, if you insist," and she began to read: "'If the American people could only have an opportunity to see the way of life of the Soviet people, they would be convinced ——'"

I was horrified. "But I did not say that at all. I could never sign such a paper."

"Really, Gisela, you are very difficult," she said, looking at me as though I were a willful child of ten. "What do you want to say? I can change it to suit you."

"I want to say only what I said, and I can't possibly sign anything else."

"All right, then. We shall have to do the whole thing over."

She sank down at the table with a martyred look, and we labored for some time. She erased and rephrased and added, and finally I signed what she said she had written. After all, I was only a chess player and a female chess player at that, and my social opinions were of no special value.

The next evening at nine-thirty, Fru Larsen and Señorita Mora and I said good-by to the other players and, equipped with food for the next day's train ride, our Soviet traveling papers, and all the acquisitions of our stay, we rode to the station. Luba and the wonderful Mr. Lysenko went along to see us off. A young man from the American embassy had assured me that the trains for Leningrad left at nine-thirty and at eleven-thirty, but our tickets were clearly marked ten-thirty. American couriers were to be on the eleven-thirty train, and they had promised to help us when we arrived at Helsinki.

When we got out at the station, we saw the eleven-thirty train, waiting cold and unlighted. The nine-thirty had gone; the ten-thirty was nowhere to be seen. We went into the waiting room to sit over our baggage until Mr. Lysenko could resolve our problem.

"Have you a cigarette?" said Luba. "I ask you just this once, since you are leaving, and I mislaid mine at the hotel."

I brought out my cigarettes, and we all began to smoke, laughing at our predicament.

All at once a young girl, dressed in the upper half of a uniform over woolen trousers and high felt boots, came up to Luba. Obviously she was explaining that smoking was against the rules.

"This is a delegation," said Luba rather haughtily. "Explain to the stationmaster that these are foreigners, guests. If they want to smoke, they must have special permission."

The girl returned soon with an older woman in complete uniform who assured Luba in no uncertain manner that smoking was absolutely forbidden.

In my five weeks I must have acquired some Russian, or Luba's expressions must have been unusually eloquent, because I actually understood what she was saying. "Even for delegates?" she asked. I had put out my cigarette and so had the two other women, but Luba was still smoking.

"Even for delegates," repeated the woman.

Luba observed her a moment speculatively. "Oh, well," she said at last in English. "I suppose we really must stop. There is so much red tape everywhere. It is always hard to explain what you are to people who don't want to understand." THE END

The coffee-pots that went to college!

Doesn't that smell GOOD!

My WEAR-EVER makes perfect coffee EVERY TIME

It's "College Educated"! A great American university conducted exhaustive research to find the best coffee-maker design for making the best coffee every time. All Wear-Ever percolators and drip pots incorporate the results of this scientific research.

These "College Educated" perks and drip pots, of friendly-to-flavor aluminum, are strong, too—built to take the abuse of everyday use. See them at your favorite department, hardware or housefurnishings store.

	PERKS	DRIP POTS
2-cup	$2.25	$2.95
4-cup	2.50	3.25
6-cup	2.75	3.60
8-cup	2.95	3.95
12-cup	3.50	4.50
16-cup	5.45

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

50TH ANNIVERSARY SPECIAL—Greatest advance in pressure cooker history! See its amazingly improved patented "safety" cover, new Resilio Seal and cam-lock handle. With easiest-to-use recipe book.

4 qt. size $9.95 (was $12.95)
7 qt. size $14.95 (was $16.95)

WEAR-EVER FRENCH FRYER

For golden-brown French-fried potatoes, doughnuts, croquettes, oysters, egg plant and other delicious treats. Fine mesh, so small pieces won't fall through. Patented rest eliminates dripping on stove; 2 and 3 qt. sizes. 2 qt.—$1.75.

WEAR·EVER

ALL PRICES SLIGHTLY HIGHER IN THE WEST

50TH ANNIVERSARY 1900 1950

© TACUCO 1950

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL COMPANY, DEPT. 1810, NEW KENSINGTON, PA.

PHOTOS BY STUART

Italian policy—good food, pleasant company, time to enjoy both. Start with an antipasto tray; next, cannelloni stuffed with minced clams, mushrooms, cheese. Boned lamb is seasoned with herbs, glazed with mint jelly. Garnish vegetables with lime.

Conversation Piece

PHOTO BY PED PATELLANI

The Contessa Luling-Buschetti Volpi serves coffee to Mrs. Teague in the garden of her villa near Maser.

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

FROM a two months' gastronomic tour of Italy I have brought back countless delightful memories, a collection of marvelous recipes and a few general impressions. Among the last is a conviction that the Italian cuisine is at its best in the first and last courses of a meal: the soups and pasti, or noodle concoctions, and of course the antipasti; and in the dolci, or sweet—but never heavy—desserts. The coffee, too, their powerful caffè espresso, served in many Italian restaurants in this country, is always delectable. In between, they do (Continued on Page 154)

Zuppa Inglese alternates layers of cake, fresh fruit, frothy zabaglione.

B-V gravy makes the meal

Tasty, satisfying B-V gravy dishes

With a jar of Wilson's B-V on hand you can always whip up tasty "gravy" dishes that will satisfy ravenous appetites. Just make up a batch of smooth, rich brown B-V gravy. No meat juices needed. Then pour this wonderful gravy over rice (see recipe) or bread, macaroni, noodles, potatoes, etc. You can't beat this for quick, inexpensive lunch or supper dishes. Wilson's B-V is featured by food stores everywhere.

RICE 'N' GRAVY

Here's a good family dish that will "save the day" for you many a time—a dish young and old will really enjoy.

B-V GRAVY (no meat juices needed)

Melt 2 tbsp. fat. Blend in 2 tbsp. flour and add 1 cup liquid (milk, vegetable water, or water) stirring constantly until smooth and thickened. When hot, add 1 tsp. Wilson's B-V dissolved in a small amount of the hot mixture. Cook to desired gravy thickness. Serves 3 or 4.

FLUFFY MINUTE RICE (Southern Style)

For fluffy rice that's lightning quick, use Minute Rice, General Foods' new pre-cooked discovery. Just pop 1 package of this Minute Brand product into a saucepan. Add 1½ cups water and ½ tsp. salt. Bring to boil. Cover, remove from heat, and let stand for 10 minutes. No other cooking needed.

Serve with Plenty of Delicious, Rich Brown B-V Gravy

★ ★ ★

For something extra special include meat balls or meat loaf. Or, add chopped cooked meat, parsley, chives, green peppers or cheese (alone or in any combination) to the rice.

WILSON & CO. INC.

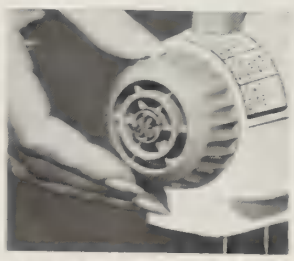
The Wilson label protects your table

This beauty makes cooking easier —

The 1950 General Electric Triple-Whip Mixer!

3 powerful beaters... No-clog juicer...

save you time and work!



For faster, more thorough mixing, you get 3 easy-to-clean beaters. No center shafts, no hard-to-reach corners. Mix thoroughly from center to side of bowl.

New no-clog juicer comes with each 1950 Triple-Whip Mixer. You'll love it. It lets you squeeze more than a dozen oranges with no clogging.

Built-in light shines directly down into bowl so you can really see what you're mixing. (A four-quart and a two-quart bowl accompany each mixer.)

New, improved speed selector is in front where it's easy to read. You get lots of power no matter what you mix! General Electric Co., Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

See your G-E dealer.

$34.95

Price subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 152)

vegetables remarkably well—young, tender vegetables, always fresh because they are used only as they come in season.

This Italian meal will be a dinner, and you may be surprised to find that the main dish will be boned leg of lamb—but I'm getting ahead of myself. We'll begin with antipasto, the Italian hors d'oeuvre. The antipasto tray can be an elaborate affair indeed, but for this dinner which is fairly hearty, I think a simple assortment of antipasti will be best. We want this first course to stimulate, not satisfy appetites, so we'll put the accent on dishes that are high in seasoning and low in calories.

Next, the pasta, cannelloni con vongoli (clams). Cannelloni are rolls of noodle dough filled with a stuffing, baked with a covering of cheese and served with or without a sauce. For our menu we'll have a delicate version, filled with minced clams, chopped mushrooms and cheese, and there will be a thin tomato sauce and grated Parmesan cheese to put on them. (I hope you'll try these sometime as a main dish for a luncheon, served with only a salad, and a dessert to follow.)

The boned leg of lamb which follows is seasoned with herbs and glazed with mint jelly. With the lamb there will be two vegetables, spinach and carrots, both cooked with an Italian flavor.

The dessert will be a real dolce, zuppa Inglese, which is just about the most misleading name I have ever heard. Zuppa means soup—and this dessert is a far cry from anything faintly resembling soup—but that's what the Italians call it, and is it good! You'll agree when you try it. Basically it's made with alternate layers of cake and a light custard, but there are various additions which I'll tell about when I get to the recipe. One of these additions is fresh fruit, and this is important because it keeps the dessert from being too sweet.

Now I'd better whip along to recipes which will serve six or eight.

Taking food and drink is a great enjoyment for healthy people, and those who do not enjoy eating seldom have much capacity for enjoyment or usefulness of any act.

—CHARLES W. ELIOT: The Happy Life.

ANTIPASTI

There should be one fish, either tuna, anchovies or sardines, and if you want to be adventurous you might choose squid, which are available, canned, in very fancy food stores or Italian markets. In selecting the other items, give thought to color as well as taste; and here you'll have no trouble, because delicatessen and grocery stores are full of delicious canned foods which will be perfect for your tray. There are small green pickled peppers; artichoke hearts in oil; a combination of chopped green olives and pimiento; jars of mixed sweet-sour pickled vegetables that include attractively cut carrots, cauliflower, onions, cucumber pickles and red peppers; pickled mushrooms done in oil or a highly seasoned tomato sauce, and so on.

Then the wide variety of stuffed olives shouldn't be overlooked. In addition to the familiar pimiento stuffing, I've found olives stuffed with nuts, anchovies, Roquefort cheese, orange and lemon. In the fresh-vegetable department there are tomatoes, radishes, celery and finocchio to choose from. I'm not suggesting that you use all of these—heaven forbid: this is merely a list to help you make your choice, and there are many possibilities I haven't included, such as thinly sliced salami, prosciutto (Italian ham), stuffed eggs and salads.

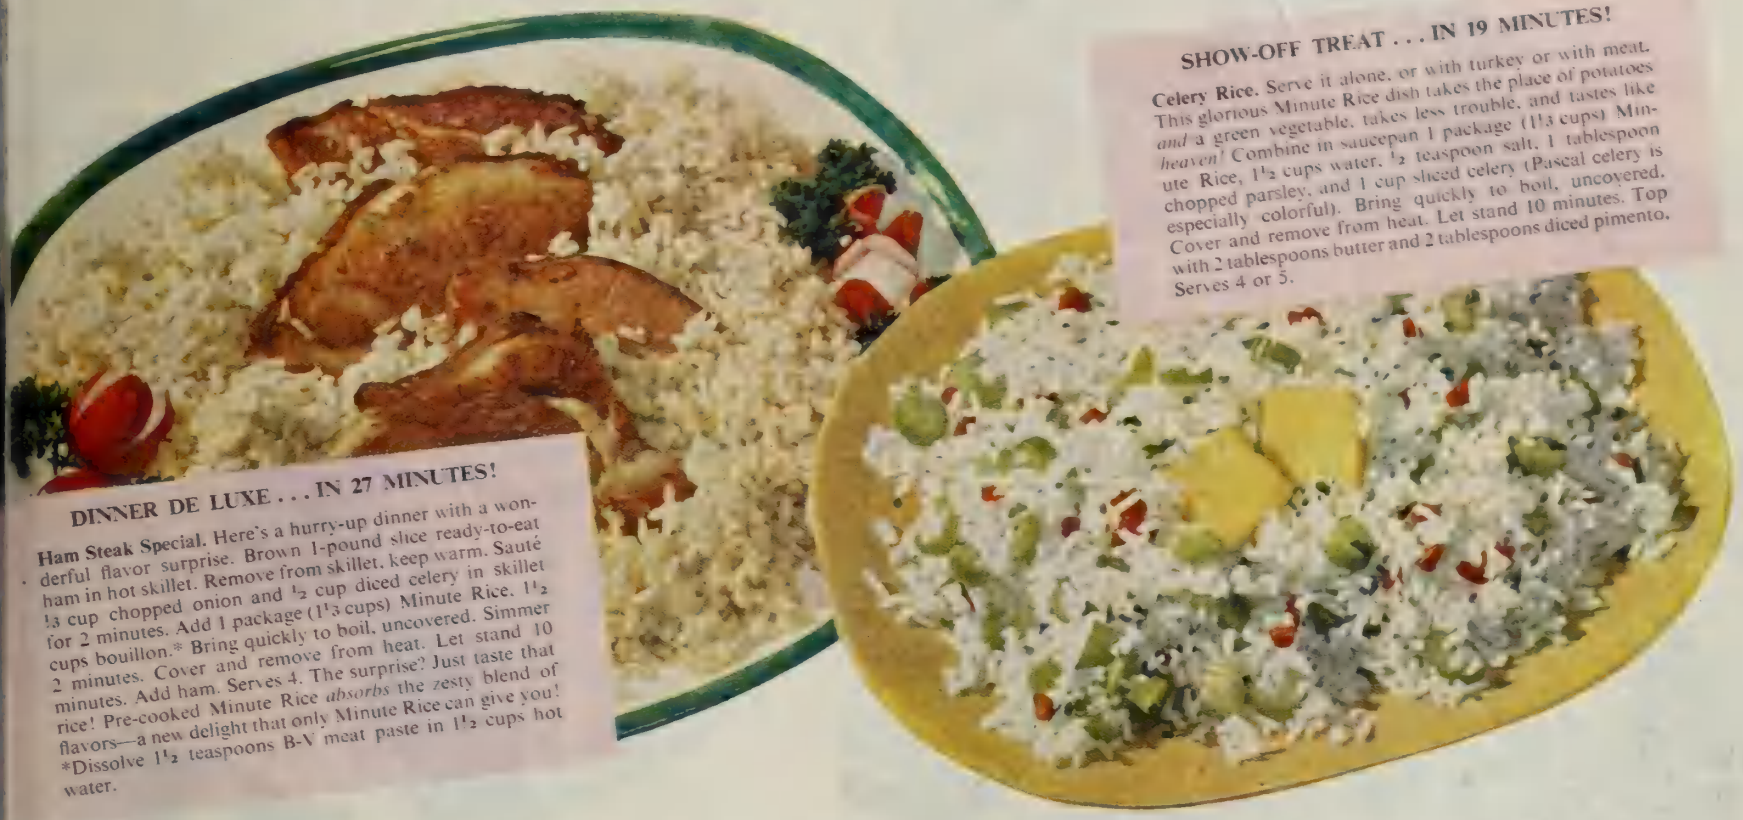
A platter that is divided into sections is ideal for serving the antipasti, or they can be put in small bowls or dishes placed on a tray. When the platter or dishes are arranged, pour a little salad oil and wine vinegar over the food, or have a cruet of each available.

Serve thick slices of Italian bread or bread sticks with the antipasti.

One last word before I can drop this subject. If you want to be very simple and serve only one thing as a starter for this meal, get some finocchio, a celerylike vegetable that tastes of anise, and soak the stalks in ice water until crisp. Cut stalks lengthwise into four sections. Heap them on a platter, or serve on individual plates and have a small dish of salad oil, salt and freshly ground black pepper for each person. To eat, tear off a piece of finocchio, dip it into the oil and bite. I had never eaten finocchio this way here, but I certainly made up for lost time in Italy. It's terrific.

CANNELLONI CON VONGOLI

Allow 2 or 3 cannelloni for each person to be served. To make noodle dough, break 2 eggs into a bowl, add 2 tablespoons cream and ½ teaspoon salt and beat with a fork until mixed. Stir in flour until dough is too stiff to handle with a fork, transfer to well-floured breadboard and knead in more flour until dough is stiff and no longer sticky. You'll use about 1½ cups flour for 2 average-size eggs. Work dough into a compact ball, cover with a towel and let stand ½ hour. Divide into 4 balls and roll into thin sheets, using a little flour so that dough won't stick to board or rolling pin. Spread sheets on towels to dry for a while, but don't let them get dry enough to break. Cut into 2½-inch squares. If there is more noodle dough than you need, cut what is left into slender strips, dry out completely and use for soup another day. Drop squares into a large pot of rapidly boiling salted water and cook 10 minutes. Drain, immediately run cold water over them and place separately on board which has been sprinkled with farina or corn meal.



To make stuffing, drain one 10½- or 12-ounce can minced clams and chop fairly fine. Add 1 tablespoon clam juice, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, 2 tablespoons chopped chives—if chives aren't available, use onion instead—½ small can button mushrooms cut into little pieces, 2 slices crumbled stale white bread, crusts removed, 3 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese, ¼ pound diced Mozzarella cheese and 4 tablespoons cottage cheese or ricotta, which is the Italian cottage cheese. Mozzarella is a bland, unsalted Italian cheese which melts easily and is wonderful for cooking—for eating, too, if you can get it very fresh. It is available in most Italian food markets. If you can't get Mozzarella, substitute the mildest processed cheese you can get. Mix stuffing well and season with a very little salt and some freshly ground black pepper. Spread the stuffing on the squares and roll each one into a cylinder. Grease 1 large or 2 small shallow baking dishes and fill with the cannelloni, packing them in close together.

To make the sauce, put 3 tablespoons salad oil and 1 clove garlic, minced, in a saucepan and cook over high heat a minute. Add 1 No. 2 can tomato purée, 1 tablespoon dried orégano, 1 teaspoon sugar, and salt and pepper to taste. You can use prepared tomato sauce instead of purée if you like. Cook, uncovered, for 20 minutes. Spoon a little of the red sauce into the grooves between the cannelloni and reserve the rest to serve in a bowl at the table. Sprinkle ½ pound Mozzarella or processed mild cheese—⅓ pound if the latter will be plenty because the taste is stronger—cut into small pieces all over the cannelloni, add the remaining ½ can button mushrooms and dot with butter or margarine.

This much can be done a day in advance and I strongly advise it. Cover casserole tightly and store in refrigerator, but let it stand at room temperature an hour before baking. Half an hour or 25 minutes before serving time, put uncovered casserole on a fairly high rack in a moderate, 375° F., oven and bake until cheese has melted, then turn on broiler until top is delicately browned. If you aren't ready to serve that minute, they will keep hot some time in a turned-off oven, but better put them on a lower rack. Serve the casserole and have a bowl of tomato sauce and another of grated Parmesan cheese on

(Continued on Page 157)

Oh how quick! Oh how slick!

DINNER DE LUXE . . . IN 27 MINUTES!

Ham Steak Special. Here's a hurry-up dinner with a wonderful flavor surprise. Brown 1-pound slice ready-to-eat ham in hot skillet. Remove from skillet, keep warm. Sauté ⅓ cup chopped onion and ½ cup diced celery in skillet for 2 minutes. Add 1 package (1⅓ cups) Minute Rice, 1½ cups bouillon.* Bring quickly to boil, uncovered. Simmer 2 minutes. Cover and remove from heat. Let stand 10 minutes. Add ham. Serves 4. The surprise? Just taste that rice! Pre-cooked Minute Rice absorbs the zesty blend of flavors—a new delight that only Minute Rice can give you! *Dissolve 1½ teaspoons B-V meat paste in 1½ cups hot water.

SHOW-OFF TREAT . . . IN 19 MINUTES!

Celery Rice. Serve it alone, or with turkey or with meat. This glorious Minute Rice dish takes the place of potatoes and a green vegetable, takes less trouble, and tastes like heaven! Combine in saucepan 1 package (1⅓ cups) Minute Rice, 1½ cups water, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, and 1 cup sliced celery (Pascal celery is especially colorful). Bring quickly to boil, uncovered. Cover and remove from heat. Let stand 10 minutes. Top with 2 tablespoons butter and 2 tablespoons diced pimento. Serves 4 or 5.

PRE-COOKED RICE IN A PACKAGE—

A sensational new idea!

- ★ NO WASHING!
- ★ NO RINSING!
- ★ NO DRAINING!
- ★ NO STEAMING!
- ★ PERFECT RICE EVERY TIME!

At last it's happened! Now you can have fluffy, snow-white perfect rice with NONE of the tedious preparation of regular rice.

Minute Rice is fancy long-grained rice—pre-cooked by a patented process. You dump it in water, bring to a boil. No other cooking's needed. Keep this amazing Minute Brand product on hand, and serve real glamour rice dishes often!

LUNCH DELISH . . . IN 27 MINUTES!

Rice Milanaise. Egg and tomato, cheese and perfect tender rice! Here's a wonderful combination of favorite flavors . . . in one of those speedy dishes only Minute Rice can give you. Sauté ½ cup chopped green pepper and 2 tablespoons chopped onion in 3 tablespoons butter in saucepan. Add 1 package (1⅓ cups) Minute Rice, 1½ cups water, ½ teaspoon salt. Bring quickly to boil, uncovered. Cover and remove from heat. Let stand 10 minutes. Add 2 hard-cooked eggs, diced, and ⅓ cup grated Cheddar cheese. Top with 2 cups tomato sauce and ⅓ cup grated cheese. Serves 5.

SUPPER PLATE SPECIAL . . . IN 13 MINUTES!

Rice 'n Gravy Quickie. Two short cuts in one wonderful dish! Prepare Minute Rice as directed on the package—so easy! While the rice is sitting on the back of the stove, prepare this quick, delicious gravy and serve it with the rice. Wilson's B-V gravy: Melt 2 tablespoons fat in saucepan. Blend in 2 tablespoons flour. Add 1 cup liquid (water, milk, or vegetable water) gradually and cook over low heat until thickened, stirring constantly. Dissolve 1 teaspoon of Wilson's B-V meat paste in small amount of the mixture and add to gravy. Makes 1 cup.

For perfect rice without the work  pre-cooked

MINUTE BRAND RICE

A Product of General Foods

LIVE BETTER ON YOUR BUDGET

Arvin

ELECTRIC HOUSEWARES

Save work...save time ...save money!

Arvin Lectric Cook—Grills! Fries! Bakes! Toasts!

America's most versatile cooking appliance! Grills hamburgers, fries bacon and eggs, toasts sandwiches, bakes delicious pancakes and king-size waffles! Cooking area equals 3 ten-inch skillets. Pre-seasoned waffle grids clip on easily. Automatic heat control, signal light, expanding hinge, no-crush sandwich spacers. Underwriters' listed. Beautiful chrome finish. $24.95

Arvin Automatic Toaster

Every slice uniform, as light or as dark as you wish. Cushioned pop-up, inspection knob, hinged crumb tray. Exclusive Sta-Warm Shelf keeps toast warm until mealtime. Insulated walls and handles. Underwriters' listed. $21.50

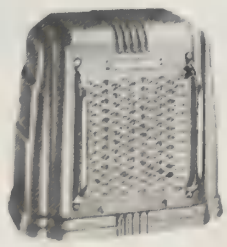
Table Oven with Lectric Cook

A "second oven" that bakes rolls, cakes, and pies; roasts fowl and meat. Serves as warming oven while you cook on open "door." Chrome finish. Heat indicator. Oven with Lectric Cook, less waffle grids. $29.90

Arvin Lectric Grill

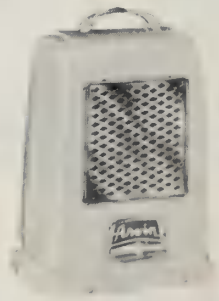
Toasts, fries, grills, warms! 95 sq. in. of cooking area. Lid prevents grease from spattering, keeps food warm. Thermostat; drip spout; chrome finish; cool, black plastic handles. Underwriters' listed. $10.95

Arvin Automatic Iron



A truly modern iron at a money-saving price! Weighs only 3 lbs. Automatic heat control for all kinds of fabrics. Fast heating saves ironing time. GUARANTEED for FIVE YEARS! Underwriters' listed. $9.95

Arvin Dual-Control Iron



Ends risk of too-hot or too-cool ironing face. Exclusive Magic Watchman ends gu work. Long 8-ft. cord, reversible for righ left hand ironing. GUARANTEED FIVE YEARS! Underwriters' listed. $1

CHASE CHILLS QUICKLY, SAFELY!

Arvin Economy Fan-Forced Heater is beautifully finished in baked enamel and chrome. Delivers billows of heat instantly. 1320 watts. No radio or television interference. Operates on AC only. $9.95

Arvin Safeguard Heater cuts current instantly if tilted. Safe with children. Red glow signal light. Choice of three colors. Handy toe switch. No radio or TV interference. Operates on AC only. $13.95

Arvin Hot-R-Cool—200 cu. ft. of warm per minute. Adjustable to any directi Safeguard switch cuts current if tilt Double as cooling fan in summer. TV interference. AC only. 3 colors. Underwriters' listed. $1

Arvin Industries, Inc., Columbus, Indiana (Formerly Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc.)

(All prices subject to change without notice)

(Continued from Page 154)

he table so that your guests can help themelves to as much as they like.

ROAST LAMB IN MINT GLAZE

Get a small leg of lamb weighing about 5 pounds and ask the butcher to bone it. Crush teaspoon rosemary, mix it with 1 tablepoon salad oil and add ½ teaspoon dried weet basil, ½ teaspoon crushed red pepper nd 1 clove garlic, minced. And speaking of garlic, I found that it was used very sparingly n Italy, and in some localities not at all. This oity-toity attitude toward the good cook's best friend I can't go along with—as my ecipes prove—but that's the way they treat t, and if you haven't traveled in Italy you'll probably be as surprised as I was. Rub this nixture all over the lamb and sprinkle with alt. Do this sometime during the morning so hat the flavor of the herbs will penetrate the neat. Put it in a roasting pan, skin side down, nd do not add water. Place pan in a slow, 300° F., oven and allow 30 minutes to the pound for well done and 25 minutes for slightly nderdone lamb. If you have a roast-meat hermometer it will register 170° F. for slightly nderdone, 180° for well done. Underdone for ne, because it's so juicy. Half an hour before ooking time is up, turn roast over and put ⅓ glass mint jelly on top. In about 15 minutes baste thoroughly, put several more spoonfuls jelly on top and cook until done without basting. The jelly will give the lamb a faintly greenish glaze and the drippings, unthickened, make a wonderful mint sauce.

SPINACH

Put 3 tablespoons salad oil in a saucepan with 1 clove garlic, minced, and heat. Add 2½ pounds well-washed spinach, and stir and toss with a fork until well mixed with oil. Cover and cook until barely tender—not more than 10 minutes, and less if spinach is quite young. At last add salt and pepper to taste. The trick is not to overcook it—the texture should be a little like that of wilted lettuce.

CARROTS ROMA

Cut carrots into slender strips about 2 inches long, or in any shape you like, and cook in a small amount of salted boiling water until almost but not quite tender. Drain. Add 4 tablespoons butter or margarine and ½ teaspoon grated nutmeg, and return to heat until butter or margarine is melted. Mix well with a spoon, add salt if needed and cook, covered, over very low heat until carrots are tender but not mushy.

The meat and vegetables can be served on the same platter and they look very pretty that way, garnished with sections of lemon or lime. But however you serve them, be sure to have the lemon or lime in evidence for those who want to squeeze it over the vegetables.

ZUPPA INGLESE

You will need 1 round cake, about 9 inches in diameter, baked in a pan with straight sides and a tube in the middle. For this dessert I've used spongecake, angel food and cake made with one of the prepared mixes. The mixes make delicious cakes and they couldn't be easier, but since we're going in pretty heavily for egg yolks in this recipe, you may want to use the whites for an angel cake. And if you wanted to be truly Italian about the whole business, you'd use spongecake. The choice is up to you. We have to cut the cake into 3 layers, and I find it much easier to do this with a piece of string or heavy thread than with a knife. Stretch the string between your two hands, aim at the spot you want to cut and saw back and forth. It's easy and accurate.

Have ready ½ cup nut meats, 2 large navel oranges peeled and cut into sections, and a small amount of candied orange peel cut into little pieces.

The custard which will go between the layers and on top of the cake is zabaglione with a little gelatin added. Put 9 egg yolks in a bowl, beat with rotary beater and add slowly, still beating, ⅔ cup granulated sugar. When this mixture has been whipped until light and fluffy, add 1 cup orange juice and beat until well mixed. If frozen orange juice is used, dilute with ⅓ less water than directions indicate. Pour mixture in top of double boiler and place over small amount of boiling water—the water must not touch bottom of upper pan. Immediately begin beating with rotary beater and keep it up until custard is thick and has doubled in bulk. Sometimes this takes a little longer than other times, and I wish I could tell you why. The atmosphere? The eggs? Your mood? Anyhow, when the zabaglione is quite thick and you notice it isn't rising any higher, it's time to stop—usually 8 or 9 minutes. At the last, beat in 1½ teaspoons gelatin which has first been softened in 2 tablespoons water and then heated over steam until gelatin is dissolved. Put the pan in cold water and don't do what I did recently, which was to put it in the pantry sink, turn on the water and go back to the kitchen. When I returned I found the sink about to overflow and all my lovely zabaglione floating around in plenty of water, so out came the egg beater again.

Now back to our cake. Lift the top layer with a couple of pancake turners onto the center of your cake platter. When the zabaglione is really cold, spread about ⅓ of it on the cake layer, arrange half the orange slices on it and sprinkle with nut meats and a little orange peel. Put the second layer on top of this and repeat the routine with orange slices, nuts and candied orange peel. Now the top layer of cake goes on and the remaining zabaglione is heaped on it. Make the top look as attractive as you can. If some of the zabaglione oozes out between the layers, smooth it onto the sides of the cake and put the whole thing into the refrigerator. This is all day-before business.

> There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good—myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy—if I may.
>
> —ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

At a convenient time in the afternoon of the day of your party, whip 1 pint heavy cream, ice the sides of the cake with it and heap the rest in the center. Sprinkle center with bits of candied orange peel and put a border of orange slices around outer rim of top. Decorate the platter with alternate groups of orange slices and pitted fresh Bing cherries filled with candied orange peel. You can pit and fill the cherries the day before—in fact, they are better if the orange peel stands in them overnight. Fresh peaches can be substituted for the orange slices and any kind of berries for the cherries. To serve, cut into wedges with a knife.

CAFFÈ ESPRESSO

Coffee is an important feature of any Italian meal, and the principal difference between caffe espresso and our after-dinner coffee is that the former is much, much stronger. Italian coffee makers with directions for their use can be bought in stores that carry Italian hardware, but you can approach the real thing with a drip coffee maker using 4 rounded tablespoons pulverized coffee to 1 cup water. Caffe espresso is so strong that a small cup is all most people want to drink, and it needs lots of sugar.

Service: This dinner is not designed for buffet service, obviously. But the antipasti can be served in the living room, and this will make the table service simpler. Coffee, also, can be served elsewhere, and in the last fine autumn days before winter closes in on us it's delightful to have it outdoors. In any case, make it a leisurely meal, in an atmosphere of relaxation and ease. No Italian ever hurries over a meal, no matter how busy he may be, and that isn't a bad rule to follow. Since the two major jobs on this menu can be finished the day before, it shouldn't be difficult for you to share the carefree mood. I hope you enjoy it as much as I've enjoyed innumerable leisurely Italian meals, with pleasant company, good food, good talk and not a care in the world. THE END

● Here's a way to have turkey more often, just for the family . . . enjoy delicious dressing, too. Put half a turkey on rack, with skin side up, and roast at 325° F. When half done remove from oven and place on platter.

DIONE LUCAS TELLS YOU

How to stuff Half a Turkey . . .

INTERNATIONAL COOKING AUTHORITY . . .

● Put a double layer of extra-heavy, waxed through Cut-Rite on the rack. Now spoon out your stuffing—which you've prepared in advance—on the waxed paper and shape it into a mound to fit under the turkey half.

● Lay turkey over stuffing and trim Cut-Rite about an inch from the edge. Extra-heavy Cut-Rite keeps stuffing juices in, prevents it from drying out. Put turkey back in oven and roast until fork easily goes into leg.

"CUT-RITE" REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

● Extra-heavy* Cut-Rite is so perfectly pliable it folds or twists without splitting! Famous cutting edge tears easily. A Scott Paper Product.

Every day – more women choose it – love to use it!

Get set for some
GRAND GOOD EATING!

Any old-fashioned appetites in your family? Then here's your dish! It's delicious . . . easy . . . thrifty . . . like hundreds of others you can make in a jiffy with Campbell's Tomato Soup.

And the next time you want a superb tomato sauce, try Campbell's Tomato Soup, just as it comes from the can! What a difference! Campbell's is richer, smoother . . . yet not sharp or hot!

Why? Because no other sauce is made according to Campbell's famous recipe with top-quality tomatoes, fine table butter and a variety of delicate, carefully selected seasonings—17 ingredients in all! It makes a balanced, really complete sauce!

Yes . . . CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP MAKES THE FINEST TOMATO SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED!

Delicious as ■ soup . . . as ■ sauce . . . and in cooking

FREE COOK BOOK
50 PAGES
99 DISHES
FULL COLOR

Mail coupon now to:
Campbell Soup Company,
Dept. L 10, Camden 1, N. J.

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____
ZONE _____ STATE _____

WEDDING SPECIAL

(Continued from Page 74)

special things that are designed to help in your planning and preparations. Whether you make everything yourself, or ask friends and relatives to help, or buy some things from a local caterer, the whole works is here. And you'll be glad to see that I haven't neglected one of the most important wedding "specials" ever thought up by woman. And that is chicken salad.

When I was a little girl, I thought people couldn't get properly married without chicken salad at the "breakfast." While I may have modified that somewhat, I still feel that it's pretty essential. So you'll see it, slightly disguised, and it sure does make one feel better to have it right in here along with all the other "specials." By the way, isn't it good to have oysters back? The frozen ones are all right—but the first fresh ones are worthy of sharing such an occasion. So let's begin with the something hot and go on to something cold.

HOT CURRIED OYSTERS

Strain the liquor from 3 quarts oysters. Get the fish market to give you plenty of liquor. They'll love that. Put the liquor in a saucepan and heat to the boiling point. Strain it through cheesecloth and save. Melt 1½ cups butter or margarine, add 1½ cups flour and stir until smooth. Add 3 cups oyster liquor and, when smooth, add 6 cups cream, heated. Stir and cook in the double boiler until smooth as a kitten's ear, as I always say. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 tablespoon celery salt, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 tablespoon grated onion and 2 tablespoons curry powder.

Pour boiling water over oysters. Drain the oysters well in a colander. Chop the oysters and add 4 cups to the curry sauce. (Hot water keeps the oysters from bleeding when you cut them, so water has to be very hot.) Simmer until the oysters are heated through. Serve in small timbale cases or puff pastries. This receipt makes 3 quarts. Serves 25.

Do you ever get a little tired of the ubiquitous patty shell? I sometimes do, and then I get out my well-seasoned timbale iron and make my own. You may not want to undertake it this time, but it's really simple. There's only one thing to keep your eye on. That's to have your iron hot. At least I think it's important, but everything is important, including the eating.

So here's your receipt, and after a few minutes of study you'll find it not hard at all.

TIMBALES

Sift 1 cup flour with ¼ teaspoon salt and 1½ teaspoons sugar. Beat 3 egg yolks until quite thick and fluffy and add ¾ cup milk. Make a well in the dry ingredients and add the egg and milk. Beat until smooth, with first a spoon, then an egg beater. Add 1½ tablespoons melted shortening or salad oil. Let this stand a few hours.

Put on a kettle—and how I hope you have a deep-fat one kept only for frying—in it put 2 pounds shortening or 2 pints salad oil, set your timbale iron into it and let the fat heat to 375° F. The fat should come up over the iron—but don't have it so deep that the iron must be tipped. (Timbale will be lopsided if you do.) Four inches deep is good.

Stir the batter and pour some of it into a cup until the cup is about ¾ full. Take the hot timbale iron from the fat, quickly pour out the fat from the center of the iron, drain just a second on absorbent paper, and dip it into the cup of batter to ¾ of the depth of the iron. Lift the iron out; let the batter cook on the outside of the hot iron a moment—you'll see it steam—then plunge it quickly into the hot fat. If timbale batter doesn't cling to the iron, the iron is too cool. Be sure to have fat at 375° F. When the timbale is golden brown, slip it from the iron with a fork onto absorbent paper and drain. Then proceed with more batter in your cup to make the next one. If the batter gets thick from having the hot iron dipped in it, thin it with a little milk.

Timbales may be made the day before. They stay crisp and may be reheated in a low oven the day of the party. This receipt makes about 4 dozen. Timbale irons may be bought in any good housewares store.

The indispensable dish. Chicken salad is still the indispensable dish on a wedding-party menu. It's the first thought of the planning committee, it's the one dish that supports and carries out the whole scheme of the breakfast. (Why do they call it "breakfast" even if it trails along at four P. M. or later? But they do.) Never mind, here's a chicken salad that, instead of being heaped up in the biggest bowl you or one of the neighbors has, may be molded in heart-shaped individual salads. And that's as new as the last minute and highly appropriate for a wedding. Receipt? Coming right up, and here it is:

CHICKEN SALAD

Wash 3 youngish roasting chickens weighing about 5 pounds each. Place in a large roasting pan on a shallow rack. Add 1 quart water, a few celery leaves, 1 onion, cut up, and a few sprigs of parsley. Cover and simmer until the chickens are very tender, and the meat will part from the bones with ease. Lift out the chickens. Cool. Take the chicken meat from the bones and dice in ¼" pieces. There should be 3 quarts. Mix with 1½ quarts finely diced celery, 2 tablespoons salt, ¼ cup grated onion and 1 quart mayonnaise. Mix well. Soak 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water or cooled chicken stock for 5 minutes. Set in a small bowl over boiling water and stir until the gelatin is dissolved. Stir the gelatin into the chicken mixture, tossing and mixing with a silver fork. Put into 25 individual heart-shaped molds (½ cup to a mold). Chill until firm.

To serve, loosen the molds in warm water or wrap each one in a hot wet towel, briefly, and turn out on platters. Garnish with watercress and green olives. This can be shaped in 2 large molds, if you don't have heart molds or enough individual molds. For smaller parties, this receipt can easily be cut to the size you want.

The chickens may be cooked and the salad made a day before the wedding. That is—if you want to. But keep it covered and keep it cold. To stack in the refrigerator: Arrange 1 dozen salads on a tray. Cover with wax paper, then put a cooky sheet on top and arrange the second dozen on top. Cover the top layer with two thicknesses of wax paper.

Neat and necessary. There must be exactly five hundred thousand and eleven kinds of sandwiches, and here we go, picking out a neat new number to round out the total. But I can tell you that you'd better provide plenty. They're little, you see, so they disappear at one gulp, and before you know it there'll be some replenishing to be done.

CUCUMBER SANDWICHES

Slice 1½ loaves white bread very thin, and cut into rounds with a 2" cutter. Peel and remove seeds from 1 large cucumber (cut cucumber in fourths lengthwise and it's easy to take out seeds and easier to dice too); chop fine and drain. (There should be enough for 1 cup. Use 2 cucumbers if they are not large.) Soften 1½ 3-ounce packages cream cheese with the back of a spoon. Mix with 6 tablespoons cold hollandaise sauce, ½ teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, ½ teaspoon grated onion and 1 cup chopped cucumber. Make into sandwiches with buttered bread rounds. Makes 6 dozen.

The hollandaise sauce may be made the day before. If you're slicing and cutting the bread the day before, line a pan with a damp cloth for holding the sliced bread and then wrap in wax paper or aluminum foil and store in the refrigerator. But just the same—if you're going to sit around playing with laundry tags or something, until the wedding is upon you, that's all right by me. But honest, I think the sandwiches should be ıade from scratch the day you're using ıem. I put in the day-before idea in case—ell, in case.

omething cool. Even though it's October nd cooler days are in, the wedding feast ıust include a cold, refreshing, beautiful des-ert, to go along with the all-important cake.

ORANGE SHERBET MOLD

eat 9 eggs until light and thick, adding 2¼ ups sugar gradually while beating. Then dd 2¼ cups light corn sirup, 2¼ quarts ilk and 3 six-ounce cans frozen orange- or ıngerine-juice concentrate. Mix well. Add a w drops of yellow and red food coloring, if ou want the color stronger. Pour mixture ıto freezing trays. Put in the freezing com-artment. Set indicator to coldest position. hen almost frozen, scrape into a bowl. Beat uickly with hand or electric beater and pour ıto a 3-quart melon mold and the rest into a ½-quart melon mold and freeze until firm. n overnight freezing is a good idea. When ady to serve, dip the molds in warm water second, turn out on a platter and garnish ith green grapes and strips of candied range peel. If you do not have the type of eezing compartment that is big enough to ake a 3-quart mold, serve the sherbet plain, eaped in a crystal bowl. Scatter strips of andied peel over the top—for a garnish, you now.

n the spotlight. This is that central osition held without a word of contradiction y what is known as the Wedding Cake. Whether it's cut by a soldier's sword or a itchen carving knife, it's ıe bride's big moment at is affair when she and ıe groom sidle, blushing, p to the table and cut ıe cake.

In case you've decided) make the wedding cake, ere are receipts for both edding and bride's cake, nd all the directions for oing a thoroughly professional job—that's ot too difficult but looks wonderful. Won-erful to eat, too, give you my word.

It is unfortunate that Providence didn't think to give us our neighbors' children, since these are the only ones we know how to raise.

—DON ROSE: Stuff and Nonsense.

WEDDING CAKE

his is a three-tiered cake: the bottom layer a fruitcake; the top two layers, white ake—known as the Bride's Cake. Three-ered cake pans can now be bought for a nall sum, and I'm giving just the quanti-es to fill the pans used for this cake.

'or the large fruitcake: Make this cake weeks efore the wedding. (In fact, when they be-in to hold hands under the table or go for ıe double feature, you might as well get the herewithal together. It's inevitable!) Wrap ı cloth, kept damp from time to time with rape juice or something else suitable. Pre-are the fruits a day before you bake the ake.

Slice 1 pound candied cherries; cut ½ pound tron, ½ pound candied lemon peel, ½ ound candied orange peel and a 2-pound ox mixed candied fruits into small ½" ieces. The citron, lemon and orange peel, all iced, come in cans if you aren't wild about icing and such. Save time too. Put all to-ether with 1 pound seedless raisins, and let uits stand overnight in ¾ cup pineapple ıice. Sift 3¾ cups flour with 2 teaspoons alt, 2 teaspoons baking powder, 2 teaspoons llspice and 2 teaspoons cloves. Cream 2 ups butter or margarine until light. Add 1 up sugar gradually and beat well. Now add 0 eggs, 1 at a time, and beat well after each ddition. Add the sifted dry ingredients lternately with 1 cup honey and blend well. 'old in ½ pound shelled pecan halves and ½ ound toasted skinned shelled filberts (an asy way to skin shelled filberts is to place ıem in a moderately slow oven, 325°F., and eat until the skins can be rubbed off be-ween your fingers). Dredge the fruits with ½ cup flour and stir into the batter last. Line he large pan, which is 12" wide and 3" deep, ith 3 layers of greased brown paper, cut to t—bottom and sides. Fill ¾ full with batter. Bake 5½ hours in a very slow oven, 275°F. Place a large pan of hot water on the bottom rack of the oven and have it full of water throughout the baking period to keep the cake moist.

White or Bride's Cake for 2 top tiers: Cream ¾ cup butter or margarine very thoroughly with 1⅔ cups sugar. Sift together 2½ cups cake flour with 3½ teaspoons baking powder and ¾ teaspoon salt. Sift again. Add the dry ingredients alternately to creamed mixture with ¾ cup milk. Beat until smooth. Flavor with 1 teaspoon vanilla and 1 teaspoon almond extract. Lastly, fold in 5 egg whites, beaten to soft peaks. Grease the bottoms of 2 tier-cake pans—2" deep, one 6" in diameter, the other 8" in diameter. Pour in the batter and smooth evenly. Bake 1 hour for the 8" and 50 minutes for the 6" in a moderate oven, 350°F. Cool 5 minutes and turn out on a rack. Cool. Frost cakes with your favorite icing. This is ours.

Our icing: Mix 2¼ cups sugar with ¾ cup water and 2 pinches cream of tartar in a heavy pan that has a tight-fitting lid. Stir well. Cover tightly and bring to a boil, slowly, over low heat. Increase the heat and cook, uncovered, until the sirup spins double threads, or to a temperature of 250°F. (via the candy thermometer). Remove from the heat and pour the sirup gradually over 5 egg whites beaten stiff, beating thoroughly as you add it. Add a pinch of salt, 2 teaspoons vanilla and 1 teaspoon almond extract. Beat until the mixture is very glossy and stands up in fluffy peaks and will not run. Frost the fruitcake base first—put on the next tier—frost that and then the top tier.

The decoration idea behind this cake: Wedding cakes and table decorations are getting away from the all-white—cake decoration is less ornate, simpler to do and easier to cut. It was our idea to use a replica of the bride's bouquet for the top of the cake with the bridesmaids' bouquets on the lowest tier.

To make the old-fashioned bouquet ruffs, use 3½" lace-paper doilies for the bridesmaids' bouquets and a 5" doily for the bride's bouquet. Cut a circle out of the center of the doilies and a slit at the side. Cut out a 1" piece of the lace rim, overlap and fasten together.

Ornamental icing for making decorations: Put 4 egg whites in a bowl. Add ½ cup confectioners' sugar and beat 1 minute. Add more sugar until 2½ cups are used—keeping up the beating as you add. Add 1½ tablespoons lemon juice, gradually. Now keep adding confectioners' sugar (you'll need close to 2 pounds), until a knife makes a clean cut through the icing. This is the best test. And you can tell when it holds a shape. Try it out first to see if it acts right.

Divide the icing for tinting. Sometimes to get your right tints you will have to mix colors rather than using straight pink, yellow or whatever. A few drops of yellow and a few drops of red, for instance, make a lovely coral pink like a Talisman rose. A little yellow with the green gives a softer tint to the leaves. Given a pastry bag and three or four tubes and, before you can say Jack Robinson, you'll be an artist! Try to hold you, after that. The next thing will be the complete set.

Here's to the bride. And may I add my own good wishes? For all the brides who read these words, I wish all the happiness there is to be squeezed out of these hectic days and times. You'll find a lot of it, that I know. And if you keep the chin up and the head high (they go together), you won't let down a peg to the old diehards who say, "My dear, don't you think you ought to wait?" Don't do it. Have your October wedding, be a beautiful October bride. And don't forget all the days ahead, when "the air that is October's wine" gives savor to all the years to come.

THE END

Dad knows delicious cooking when he tastes it—and the Greenbrier's got it! Naturally the chefs in this famous hotel prepare their renowned cooking on Magic Chef—most famous of all gas ranges. You'll find Magic Chef preferred by master chefs in the world's finest restaurants, as well as by expert cooks at home, because it's the dependable, easy-to-operate range! Made for city, "Pyrofax," and other types of bottled or tank gases.

Models in all price brackets, starting in most areas at $119.50

AMERICAN STOVE CO., ST. LOUIS 10, MO., WORLD'S LARGEST GAS RANGE MANUFACTURER

*The Greenbrier
White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

World renowned for its fabulous vacation delights! Naturally, all of the Greenbrier's fine food is prepared on Magic Chef ranges.

SEE THE NEW Magic Chef HEATERS

"America's most beautiful!" Heats your home for less! Burns fuel oil or city, bottled or tank gas. Priced from only $59.95.

WANT THE Magic Chef CAP 'N APRON?

Regulation chef's outfit, $4.00 value. Get it from your Magic Chef retailer for $1.98 and this coupon!

No wonder— "more ~~women~~ families cook on Magic Chef than on any other range"

Just look at you...

Here you are expressing your baking art. Here you are demonstrating your thoughtfulness for your family. Here you are bringing in a cake just as luscious, just as eye filling, just as joyous as the one you see here.

And here you are without a single curl out of place, because you baked your cake with one of the new Pillsbury Cake Mixes—white or chocolate fudge. (You merely had to add the milk.) Just look at you. Just look.

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Remember—
You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

WHITE AND CHOCOLATE FUDGE

Just add milk—

Milk is all you add—no eggs, flavoring, or extras of any kind required. These are complete mixes.

"HIS EYE IS ON THE SPARROW"

(Continued from Page 45)

Charlie, my uncle, was woman-simple, but armless. Things just didn't matter much to harlie. He could whistle, and sold newsapers on the street corners. He was always alling in love with all the women he met. harlie was weak, and any woman he loved ould get him to do anything. She could tell im, "Go home and steal your sister's shoes," nd Charlie would do it. But Charlie did love hildren, and I was always a child to m.

My aunts, my mother and Charlie had to ring themselves up. Mom (when I say that, mean my grandmother; when I was very mall I called my mother Louise and, later n, Momweeze), in order to pay the rent in he rickety shanties where her children lived. as forced to take jobs where she had to eep in. So her children raised themselves. They lived in an alley and the boys were round the house all the time. When my randmother was home on her day off, ney'd watch for her to leave and then would art breaking the door down.

Louise, my mother, took no part in any of his. She was religious and wanted to be an vangelist. She went to church instead of ith the boys. She shut out of her mind verything worldly.

One of the boys who would come around o that rickety home in the alley was John Vaters, my father. There was a saying used nen when anyone wanted to ask if a girl was virgin. They would say, "Is she broke in et?" One day John Waters asked Vi, "Is ouise broke in yet?" Vi told him my nother wasn't.

Vi was the eldest and Mom had left her in harge of the others. But she plotted this hole thing out with John Waters, who was ark brown in color though he had white lood. Vi told him to come around on a day hen she was sure my grandmother wouldn't e home.

So John Waters, my father, came back one ay and forced my mother to submit to him. he tried to fight him, but he raped her, holdng a knife to her throat. She was only twelve nd didn't know what it was all about. And hat is how I was conceived.

My mother always hated my father, and ever afterward would have anything to do ith him. Nobody suspicioned anything was rong at the time. And my mother wouldn't ell, she being so hurt and hardly understandng herself what was happening inside her ody. It was Sally who finally noticed the change in her, the bulge that was beginning to show under her dress.

Mom just couldn't understand how such a thing could have happened. "Not to Louise," she kept saying. "Not to Louise."

Then my grandmother beat and upbraided my mother. Not because my mother had done wrong and was going to have a baby, but because Mom thought she had been sly.

That's when Vi came forward and told my grandmother, Sally Anderson, just how it had happened. Sally took my mother and Vi to see my other grandmother, Mrs. Lydia Waters. As far as I could ever find out, she was a white woman who had married a dark-brown Negro. But I am not sure of this. Her skin was a snowy white, but it is possible that she might have had some colored blood. She lived, after her marriage anyway, as a Negro and among Negro people.

LYDIA WATERS was in good circumstances. She denied the whole thing, telling Sally Anderson, my mother and Vi, "My son has never even been in your neighborhood. He couldn't possibly associate with riffraff, your kind of people."

It seems that, of all her children, my father was the one Lydia Waters loved best.

The contempt of Mrs. Waters upset Mom more than anything else. Along with her awful pride, she'd always despised dicties, which is the name my people have for those who look down on others and consider themselves superior.

My white grandmother then called my father into the room. He admitted having sex relations with my mother. But his account of the circumstances differed from Vi's. He denied using physical force.

Sally Anderson stood up. "I don't want him ever to cross my door again," she said. "We don't want nothing more to do with him."

She meant it. It never occurred to her to try to compel John Waters to marry my mother. What was important was finding out whether Louise had been sly and deceitful. She was convinced now, even though he denied it, that John Waters had forced my mother to give in to him.

That was the end of it, as far as Sally was concerned. She never asked or wanted my father or his family to contribute to my support. Until the end of Sally Anderson's life, she would fly into an uncontrollable fury if the name Waters was even mentioned in our

"As far as I can see, they don't do a thing for me!"

Let this Baked Cheese Loaf

OPEN YOUR EYES TO BORDEN'S CHATEAU*!

Once you discover Borden's Chateau, we doubt if you'll be happy with any other cheese food!

Some folks note its mellow-mild American Cheese flavor first! Others first notice its clean-slicing texture. And all agree that Borden's Chateau is the best-behaved cheese food you ever cooked with!

Chateau is made from the best American Cheese. Spreads—slices—melts to perfection! And here's a happy way for you to find out how Chateau improves all your cheese favorites—from sandwiches to main dishes. At your store, be sure to get Chateau (look for Elsie on the ½-lb. pkg. or 2-lb. loaf) and try this luncheon loaf today:

2 tbsps. butter
2 tbsps. chopped onion
2 tbsps. chopped green pepper
2 eggs, slightly beaten
1 cup milk
1 tsp. salt
¼ tsp. Worcestershire sauce
⅛ tsp. pepper
⅛ tsp. poultry seasoning
½ lb. Chateau, diced
3 cups cooked rice

Melt butter in top of double boiler. Add onions and peppers. Cook until soft. Add eggs, milk, seasonings and Chateau. Cook over hot water till cheese melts. Add rice. Pour into 8½ x 4½ x 2-inch loaf pan, greased and lined on bottom with waxed paper. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 40 minutes or till knife inserted in center comes out clean. Unmold and serve with tomato sauce. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Tops for Topping

BORDEN'S GRATED AMERICAN!

It's a clever cook who keeps a canister of Borden's Grated American on hand to add extra come-on to dozens of everyday dishes. On casseroles and escalloped dishes, it bakes to a crusty golden brown. Inviting and rich with the flavor of fine American Cheddar. At your food store—in handy 2-oz. and 4-oz. shaker-top canisters.

© The Borden Company

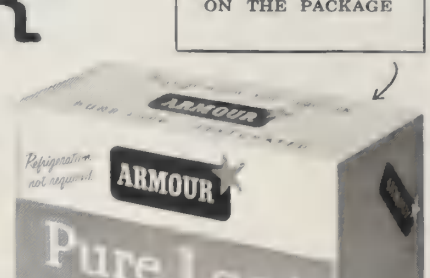
BORDEN'S FINE CHEESES

FOLKS WHO KNOW CHEESE SAY "BORDEN'S, PLEASE"!

Get these and make the finest apple pie ever ...

with the Magic Ingredient champion pie-makers use!

"It takes lard to make a pie crust really tender and flaky—and it's the crust that makes the pie," say women everywhere who win blue ribbons for their pies.



Yes, lard is the Magic Ingredient of the champions. And Armour Star Lard is their choice of lards—outselling any other brand at least 2 to 1! That's because Armour Lard is America's perfect pie lard—texturated for faster, easier mixing. Mighty economical, too!

So ask your grocer for Armour Lard in the self-measuring green and white carton. Try it in your favorite recipes. See for yourself how Armour Lard makes pie crusts flakier, hot breads tastier, fried foods more digestible!

The all-pure lard that stays fresh without refrigeration . . .

ARMOUR STAR LARD

MARIE GIFFORD'S famous 5-minute pie crust RECIPE ON THE PACKAGE

For free booklet of MARIE GIFFORD'S choice recipes using lard, write Dept. 445, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois.

home. For this reason I never used my name while I was growing up.

When I was born, it was at my Great-aunt Ida's home in Chester, near Philadelphia. Sally Anderson was working in Chester, so she'd arranged for my mother to stay with her sister nearby.

My mother was alone in the house when I came into the world on October 31, 1900. She was alone because I arrived unexpectedly. There was no doctor or midwife. The woman next door was a hunky lady and she came in on hearing my mother cry out in pain. It was this hunky woman who delivered me. She notified my grandmother, who got excused from work for the day.

As soon as I was born my grandmother took over, my mother being only a child herself, a child under thirteen and utterly bewildered. She never wanted me, and my coming almost killed her.

After I was born everybody could see that I was the spitting image of the Waterses.

When my white grandmother, Lydia Waters, heard how much I resembled her family, she hurriedly married my father off to another girl whom she considered more respectable.

My mother also got married, shortly after my birth, to Norman Howard, a handsome, light-colored man. All the women in my family inclined to light-colored men, though I never did.

Norman Howard was a stoker, or an engineer, or something like that on the railway in Chester. Even after her marriage, my mother left me in the hands of my grandmother. She had a daughter by Norman Howard, my half sister, Genevieve, who is only fifteen months younger than I am.

I was about three years old when my father died. He was poisoned by another woman. My father was a pianist, a playboy, and everybody was crazy about him and his music. But just the same this woman poisoned him out of jealousy.

I can't remember ever seeing my father while he was alive. But I can remember being told by my aunts that he was dead. They took me to his home to see him.

Though I was only three years old, I remember being in that place and seeing all those people. I even remember the conversation before I was taken in to see my father in his coffin.

"Do you know why you're here, Ethel?"

"Yes. To see my father. He's dead."

I wasn't afraid. I knew there was a man in the big box, but that didn't scare me. What impressed me most was the setting, the white shroud, the flowers, the drapes.

I didn't go to the funeral. Knowing my grandmother would be coming home soon, my aunts rushed me back there so she wouldn't find out where they'd taken me. They were afraid of what Sally Anderson would do if she learned they'd taken me to the home of the Waterses.

SOON after I was born the stork visited our home twice. Ching had two children—Tom and Myrtle. Myrtle didn't live long enough to walk. Because my grandmother was away working so much, the responsibility of taking care of us fell on Vi and Ching. But they had their own lives to live and liked to go out. So we had to bring ourselves up. My aunts would take in washing and ironing and would work out by the day. But they would never, as my grandmother and later my mother did, take jobs as houseworkers where they had to sleep in. That would have prevented them from going out every night.

The main thing that Vi and Ching taught Tom and me when we were so little was to know our names and address. I was not Ethel Waters then. I was Ethel Perry. As a girl, I always used the name of the man my grandmother was in love with at the time.

Left to our own devices, little Tom and I often went out, hand in hand, adventuring. We were always being lost and found by policemen who would take us to the station house. They'd feed us candy and lots of other stuff. When we lived on Waverly Street, I'd tell them "Dikstien-dikstien Waverly." We got lost so often that, after a while, the policemen didn't ask, just took us to 1616 Waverly.

Tom also died when I was three.

MY grandmother, Sally Anderson, had three sisters and a brother. Three of the four—Elizabeth, George and Margaret—were snobbish and had little to do with us. Aunt Ida, whom we called Ide, was closest to Mom. Whenever things got tough, I was sent over to live with Ide for a while.

My whole childhood was almost like a series of one-night stands. I was shuttled about among relatives, continually being moved around to Camden, Chester and Philadelphia homes.

For some reason Mom, who was so disappointed in her own children, tried to cling to me. But her world was really in the kitchen and with the white families she worked for.

In her whole life, Mom never earned more than five or six dollars a week. Being without a husband, it was hard for her to find any place at all for us to live, a place she could afford. Even then she never got a chance to live with my aunts and me, could only visit us on her day off. Being with white people so much, she stopped living colored, thinking colored.

What broke Mom's heart was realizing that her children knew nothing and cared nothing about the better side of life. From the white people she worked for she had learned there could be a nice side. But Vi and Ching and Charlie took no interest in that. I think she saw I was different, even when I was very small, nothing like them.

Few books that are any good appear in our elementary or high school curriculum. It is perfectly possible to graduate from a good American college without reading a single great book in its entirety.

—DR. ROBERT M. HUTCHINS.

Almost always, when Mom would come to the bleak and dreary household she was trying to keep together, she'd find it full of men with Vi or Ching, or both of them, out stiff.

She would fight my aunts, trying to force her way of life on them—and they resisted. Mom had intelligence, but she never understood that people don't like to be prodded and ordered about and made to live somebody else's way. So always, when she came home, there was fighting and confusion.

Mom traced all her troubles to her unhappy marriage with Honey Anderson. She thought that Vi and Ching took to drink because their fathers were liquorheads. And always, it hurt her that she couldn't stay there and straighten out their harum-scarum lives.

She, Mom, was the greatest influence on my childhood. She never accepted our dismal surroundings, or felt they were good enough for her. She was passionate, almost fanatical on the subject of personal cleanliness. Each time she came home, she'd inspect my underwear and instruct me in the whole ritual of bodily care. We never had a bathtub. Mom would bathe me in the wooden or tin washtub in the kitchen, or in a big lard can we had. After scrubbing me, she would inspect my hair. Then she'd bend down and smell me all over to see if she could detect an odor.

Sally Anderson fought a never-ending war against bedbugs. We called them chinches and they were all over the place, hard-biting armies in constant battle formation, in the bed slats, the pillows and woodwork.

Mom never routed the chinches, though she worked ceaselessly. She'd wash everything with carbolic acid and other disinfectants. Twice I suffered bad burns: once when I put my hand into the carbolic acid while sleeping; once when I moved my head and the carbolic acid burned my face.

When the incessant attentions of the bedbugs prevented me from sleeping, Mom would put me on the floor, spreading newspapers all around me. The theory was that chinches were illiterates who wouldn't cross sunny-rich taste of Brer Rabbit "New Orleans" Molasses gives these muffins their unusual racter. And the new, easy one-bowl mixing method will make it your favorite muffin recipe.

(Continued on Page 164)

"Never tasted muffins so delicious!"

"The family was simply crazy about them!"

These are the typical comments of the women who have tried this Brer Rabbit Bran Muffin recipe. You'll want to try it yourself—and add it to your collection!

More women use Brer Rabbit Molasses than any other—by far! What makes it so special is that "New Orleans" flavor—that rich, smooth, natural goodness which sun and soil put into Southern Plantation sugar cane.

Whether for flavorful cookies, heavenly home made gingerbread, or "out of the ordinary" desserts—you'll find Brer Rabbit Molasses your best flavor bet.

For 50 pages of Brer Rabbit recipes—including a sensationally easy one-bowl gingerbread method—send now for Brer Rabbit Cook Book.

Rich in iron! Brer Rabbit is one of the richest sources of iron, next to liver. Use it often—in cooking, and milk drinks. A superlatively nutritious food!

© 1950 Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.

Brer Rabbit ALL-BRAN Muffins

JUST ONE BOWL! One quick stirring! No creaming of shortening! No beating of eggs. For best results be sure to use Brer Rabbit Molasses.

1 cup All-Bran
¾ cup milk
1 cup sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup Brer Rabbit New Orleans Molasses*
1 egg
2 tablespoons soft shortening
½ cup raisins

1. Combine All-Bran and milk in mixing bowl.
2. Sift together flour, baking powder, soda and salt into same bowl. Add Brer Rabbit Molasses, egg, shortening, and raisins. Stir only until combined.
3. Fill greased muffin pans ⅔ full (or for pan bread spread in greased 8 x 8-inch pan). Bake in preheated moderately hot oven (400° F.) 20-25 minutes. (Slightly longer for pan bread.)

Makes 12 medium muffins (or 9 squares of bread).

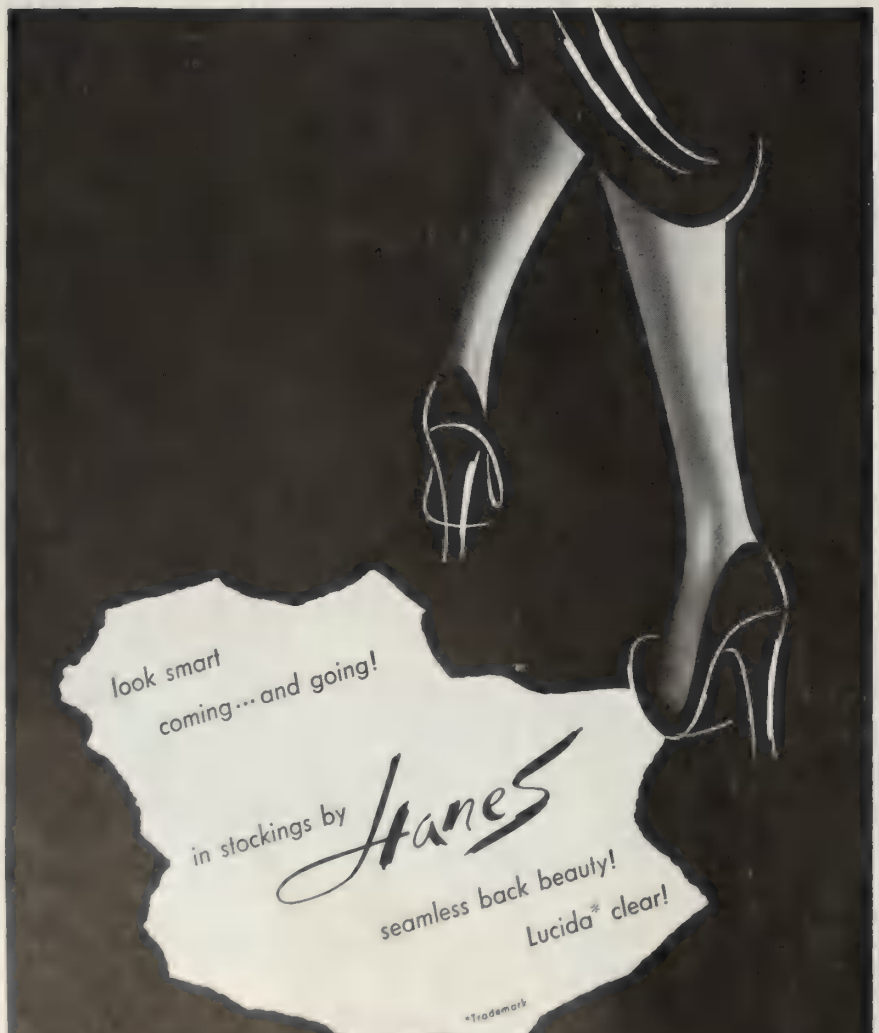
Serve: with butter, cream cheese, cottage cheese, marmalade or apple butter.

*Use either of Brer Rabbit's two flavors: Gold Label—light, mild-flavored; Green Label—dark, full-flavored.

(Made by the makers of My-T-Fine Desserts and Vermont Maid Syrup.)

NO COST to Brer Rabbit users . . . this wonderful, colorful cook book! 124 delicious, tested recipes. For this valuable book, simply mail coupon, with any part of a Brer Rabbit Molasses label, to: PENICK & FORD, DEPT. L3, New Orleans 7, La.



Name_____ (Print)

Address_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

(Offer good in U.S.A., Alaska and Canada only)

(Continued from Page 162)

newspapers with printed words on them. But our chinches were Rhodes scholars, could read English, French, Spanish and Sanskrit. At any rate, the newspapers never stopped them.

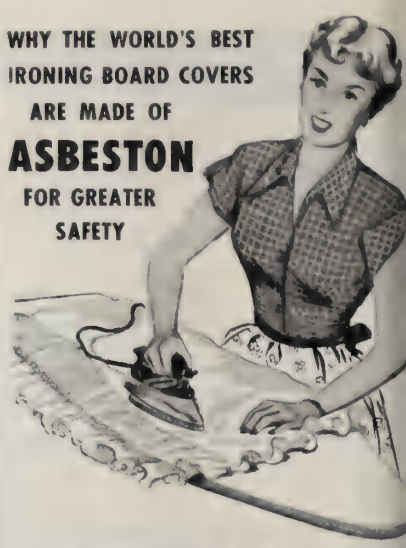
For an odd reason, I had better luck outwitting the rats that would sometimes get into our closets. When I opened the door and came across one, I'd stand there, paralyzed by terror, and look into the face of the rat. He would watch me, alert and antagonistic. But if you didn't move, didn't attack him, he would slink away. It was only after he'd disappeared that I'd unfreeze enough to scream. And these rat-infested, bedbug-plagued shanties were all the home Sally Anderson ever had to go to when she left the spotless, clean houses of her white employers.

Frantic with defeat down through the years, Mom never quit on me. My great regret is that she didn't live long enough to share some of the money and the comforts my work in show business has brought.

Following Tom's death, I lived with Ide for a while, then was moved in with Vi, who was living in Camden with John Bassett, whom I called Uncle Bassett. He was a good provider and a family man. It was in this home that I learned what it was to have three squares a day and a bed to sleep in. Until I went to their house I'd just sleep anywhere, on the floor, a broken-down couch, two chairs, an ironing board, anywhere at all.

But it was also in their house, when I was between three and five years old, that I gained my first knowledge of life and sex. I was already tall for my age, and could outcurse any sailor. I knew that I was a bastard and what that meant. I've never in my whole life minded being a bastard. I've always found it can work both ways. If I wanted pity, I got it because I was illegitimate. And when I didn't want it and was mean and nasty, I always could say, "Well, what can you expect of an old bastard like me?"

Now Vi was fly, and Uncle Bassett was very jealous of her. She'd bring men into the house or skip over to Philadelphia while he was working. Above everything else she schooled me never to talk about anything I knew or saw. Little as I was, I knew how to keep my mouth shut—and I never got myself in Dutch by talking.



While I lived at their house I would play with another kid who lived on the other side of the street, across the car tracks. I always resented the ding-dong noise the streetcars made as they came along. I'd been told a thousand times to look both ways and wait for the cars to go by, but one day I decided to disregard the advice. So I just dashed in front of a car. The cowcatcher hit me and I was hurled to the opposite curb, knocking out two teeth and cutting my chin. I had a paper bag clutched in my hand. There were two pennies in it that I'd been given to buy sourballs. I held on tightly to that paper bag. A boy picked me up, but even with my teeth knocked out, I didn't let go of the bag with the two pennies in it.

My getting run over turned out to be a bad thing for Vi. It happened on one of those days when she had skipped over to Philadelphia. That she wasn't there to take care of me made Uncle Bassett suspicion there was something wrong. He slapped her. That made Vi mad and she beat the devil out of me. So first I had the accident, and then I got beat.

But Vi was pleased with me when the adjusters for the transit company came to question me about the accident. Nothing they could do or say made me change my story that it was "Car 81" that had hit me. I knew numbers because I had made Vi teach me to tell time. The company had to pay my family money for the accident.

Even then, at four and five, I was beginning to sprout. I was so huge that my people were having trouble about me on the streetcars. The conductors insisted I was at least seven and wanted three cents, half fare, paid for me. We had a hard time talking them out of that. I spoke right up along with my aunts. Whatever else I was, I was never timid.

WHY THE WORLD'S BEST IRONING BOARD COVERS ARE MADE OF ASBESTON
FOR GREATER SAFETY

- The rock asbestos fibers in this non-burning fabric give you greater home safety.
- This fabric holds flat, never wrinkles, so your iron glides smoothly.
- Asbeston releases dampness quickly, so work goes faster, looks much nicer.

That's why our Asbeston fabric is used by leading manufacturers for Ironing Board Covers that are praised in over 3 million homes. This label assures you of the best in safe, smooth, long-lasting Ironing Board Covers at fine stores everywhere. About $2.98 (cover only).

Look for this label... and safety

ASBESTON® U.S.ROYAL Fabric
UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

Made by the Textile Division
UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

Knitting Yarns
BY MAIL
Finer quality yarns of all types—spun in our own mill . . . sold to you at lowest possible price. Choose the colors you want.
Write for FREE Sample Card
Cliveden Yarns have been distributed for over 40 years by Walter McCook & Son, Inc. See and feel their lovely texture before you order.
WRITE TO DEPT. 1
CLIVEDEN YARNS
711 Arch St. Phila. 6, Pa.

MAKES SEWING MACHINES HUM!
...GRAN'MA

1 and 3 Oz. Cans
3-IN-ONE OIL
TM REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 FOR MAKE Extra MONEY FAST
SUPERB SATIN VELOUR & METALLIC
Show rich New Cards never before offered. Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1 up. 80 Assortments. Personalized Book Matches and Stationery. Gift Items. Samples on approval. IMPRINTS FREE. Write now!
PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept 013-M, St. Louis 3, uring these first years of my life, my ly was never settled in one place long gh for me to go to church. But I was ht to say my prayers every night. I was that God was up there in heaven, watch-ne. I would look up and try to see Him.

n things went wrong I'd get mad at Him use He was falling down on His job of ing after me. I fought with Him plenty, plenty of fault to find with Him as a girl.

ften, when my aunts wanted to go out at t they'd give me a couple of drinks of tened whisky and water before I went eep to make sure I wouldn't wake up e they were gone. As you can see, I n't brought up in no home, and by no
ner or father.

here was one emotional outlet my people ys had when they had the blues. That singing. I'd listen, fascinated by the es told in the songs. My whole family
d sing. Vi had a sweet, soft voice. Ching's bell-like and resonant, Louise's rich and
n. One of the first pieces I remember Vi ing was I Don't Want to Play in Your
d. Ching's favorites were There'll Come me Some Day and Volunteer Organist.
ut, in the beginning, it was always story told in the song that enchanted I'd ask one of them, "Tell me a y," when I was little, and they'd sing it.
ly family and the other families who lived those alley homes nonized without any ruments to accom-y them. There were
icians in the neighnood, fellows who ed the banjo, mann, guitar and the bells
netimes one man
ld play all of them).
they played at par-
and sometimes on et corners. We never the money for a
y. There was als people in the se but that wasn't
no party.
can remember com-
nome some days when would be drunk.
'd be sitting there
n a bottle, all alone feeling her blues. And she'd start to , softly and sweetly.
ut singing and dancing was nothing ng us colored people. It came natural as thing.

lid have one childhood home for more n a few weeks. It was a three-room shanty n alley just off Clifton Street. Prostitu-was legal in Philadelphia then, and Clif-Street, in the old Bloody Eighth Ward, in the heart of the red-light district.
here was always something interesting to ch in that lively neighborhood. I was yet six years old when we moved there, seven when we left. I came to know well streetwalkers, the ladies in the sporting ses, their pimps, the pickpockets, shop-rs and other thieves who lived all around I played with the thieves' children and sporting women's trick babies. It was y who taught me how to steal.
hings at home didn't change much, but I ember the little alley home as the heaven earth of my childhood. For once, we were together in a whole house—Vi, Ching, arlie, me, Mom on her days off. And after while, Louise also came to live with

We stayed in Clifton Street for fifteen nths. That was the only time I could feel t I had a family that wasn't continually upting.
All of us dead-end kids ran errands for the stitutes. Some of them were good for as ch as fifteen, twenty or twenty-five cents ne day. We spent most of our earnings on dy and food. You could buy a frankfurter three cents at a street stand, yat-gaw-mein t a nickel in the Chinese joints, and for a e you could get a whole plate of fish and French-fried potatoes at a food stand called See Willie's.

A bunch of us would often sleep all night out on the street, over the warm iron gratings of bakeries or laundries. Our families didn't care where we were and these nesting places, when you put your coat under you, were no more uncomfortable than the broken-down beds or bedbug-infested pallets we had at home. Being so large for my age, I was accepted as an equal by older boys and girls. My biggest asset as a street child was my ability to keep my mouth shut.

Along with a few other Clifton Street youngsters, I acted as a semiofficial lookout for the sporting houses. Though prostitution was a legalized business, there were occasional police raids. These came when church groups bore down heavily on the authorities or after one body too many, stabbed, shot or cut up, had been found in some dark alley.

ANY of us slum children could smell out a cop even though he was a John, a plain-clothesman. Usually we'd be playing some singing game on the street, a game like Here Come Two Dudes A-Riding or the one that begins,

King William was King James's son,
Upon his breast he wore a star,
And that was called ——

On smelling out the common enemy, we boys and girls would start to shout the songs, accenting certain phrases. The other kids, even those who weren't lookouts, would innocently imitate us, and in no time the whole neighborhood would be alerted. The street women would disappear, the lights would go out and the doors would be locked in the sporting houses.

Some of the friendlier policemen tried to be nice to us, but that got them nowhere. It was an unwritten law not to accept candy from cops or have anything to do with them. It was the only law that was never broken on Clifton Street.

The Bloody Eighth at that time was not exclusively a Negro slum. We had plenty of white neighbors, Hunkies and Jews, and some Chinese. I didn't know much about color then. There was no racial prejudice in that big melting pot, running over with vice and crime, violence, poverty and corruption. I never was made to feel like an outcast on Clifton Street. All of us—whites, blacks and yellows—were outcasts there together and having a fine time among ourselves.

Anyway, racial prejudice couldn't have existed in that neighborhood where vice was the most important business. The white and black streetwalkers worked together. The two men who owned and protected most of them were Lovey Joe and Rosebud, both Negroes. It was not considered unusual for a black prostitute to have a trick baby white as a lily.

No woman in my immediate family ever turned to prostitution. Neither were they saints. Sometimes they lived with men they weren't married to. And they never saw anything wrong in getting what presents they could from their men—shoes for themselves or for me, clothes or money.

Sally Anderson hated the idea of me growing up in the red-light district, but there was nothing she could do about it. The alley shanty was the best home she could find for us on the five or six dollars she got a week.

But Mom had no objection to doing the weekly laundry of the prostitutes. However, they had to address her respectfully as Mrs. Perry or she wouldn't take their work. Mom used that name all the years she was in love with Pop Sam Perry, who was a huckster and had his own little vegetable wagon. Vi and

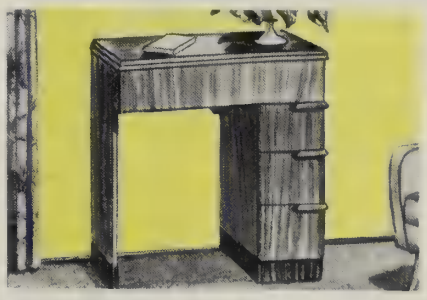
(Continued on Page 167)

Inside

By Elizabeth McFarland

Here in this room,
In this warm place,
With Brahms still shining
On your face,

And a bright pulse
Behind your brow—
I almost feel
I know you now.



The easiest sewing you've ever dreamed of—with the NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE!

You can pay $100 more—and still not get all these easy-sewing features!

Once you've tried the New-Home Sewing Machine, you won't be satisfied with any other. Here—at your New-Home Machine—you'll tackle the most intricate sewing jobs with the greatest of ease. For no other machine—at any price—gives you all these advantages!

- Patented "Nevr-Clog" feature prevents thread jamming in machine.
- Sews both forward and backward—instantly.
- Easily sews over pins, seams, large folds.
- Full rotary gear driven mechanism gives smooth performance at all speeds.
- Famous air-cooled Westinghouse motor.
- Sews 1350 stitches a minute—fastest home movement made.
- 15 attachments at no extra cost.
- Wide choice of beautiful cabinets.
- Guaranteed for 20 years.

Beautiful And Practical New-Home Sewing Machines come in desk, console, or portable models—priced as low as $69.95, and all are lock-stitch. Desk Model 500, shown here, is walnut finish—a FULL ROTARY, GEAR DRIVEN sewing machine for only $169.95! Also available in natural oak.

Save $300 A Year by making your own clothes, drapes, slip covers, with a New-Home Sewing Machine. DeLuxe models have light aluminum head, non-glare Hammerloid finish, built-in sewing lamp. Let the New-Home help you create the beautiful things you felt you couldn't afford before!

See the strikingly beautiful New-Home Sewing Machines now—at your New-Home Dealer's. Look for his name in classified section of phone book or write New-Home Sewing Machine Company, Rockford, Illinois. Choose the New-Home for your home!

NEW HOME LIGHT-RUNNING HOME

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

SEWING MACHINES
Made in America since 1860
ROCKFORD, ILL., BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF., TORONTO, CANADA

Never were such Elegant Cakes so easy

AS WITH THESE 2 SWANS DOWN-WONDERFUL MIXES!

A new experience! Deeper-chocolate Devil's Food!

TASTE A MELTING MORSEL of devil's food cake made with the new Swans Down Mix. Deeply, darkly, utterly lush and rich!

Here's a new Walter Baker blend—and a formula that holds the original chocolate flavor through the oven heat.

Cake flour milled by Swans Down . . . fresh, all-vegetable shortening . . . and the same egg whites with delicate, spring-fresh flavor that make Swans Down Instant Cake Mix so wonderful. Nothing to add but milk.

With this new orange butter frosting —oh, oh, what a glorious cake!

Sunny Orange Chocolate Cake

Prepare layers as directed on Devil's Food Mix package. Cool. Frost with:

Sunny Orange Butter Frosting

- 6 tablespoons butter
- 1½ teaspoons grated orange rind
- 3 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
- Dash of salt
- ¼ cup orange juice
- 2 drops almond extract

Cream butter and orange rind. Blend in part of sugar gradually. Add salt and mix well. Then add remaining sugar, alternately with orange juice, beating after each addition until smooth. Add almond extract and blend. Sprinkle additional grated orange rind on top of frosted cake, if desired.

SWANS DOWN Devil's Food Mix

COMPLETE! Just add milk—no expensive eggs!

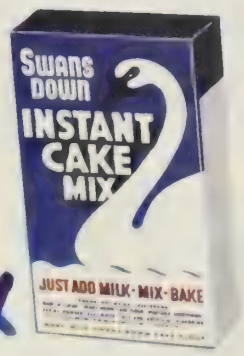
The mix that won the experts! All-variety Instant Mix!

Makes beautiful, velvet-soft white cake, yellow cake, quick cocoa cake, pineapple upside-down cake, brownies, cookies . . . recipes with every box.

It's America's favorite white cake mix!

Black and White Pecan Cake

- 1 package Swans Down Instant Cake Mix
- 1 cup milk
- Seven-minute frosting
- 2 squares Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate, melted and cooled



Mix and bake cake as directed on package. Prepare seven-minute frosting, then add chocolate, stirring gently. Frost cake and garnish with pecan meats.

Lemon Frosted Spice Cake

Prepare Spice Cake as directed on Swans Down Instant Cake Mix package. Cool. Use orange frosting recipe above, substituting lemon rind for orange rind and 2 tablespoons each lemon juice and milk for orange juice. Garnish with chopped nut meats.

Orange Blossom Cake

Bake Orange Cake as directed on Instant Cake Mix package. Frost with Sunny Orange Butter Frosting.

SWANS DOWN Instant Cake Mix

Swans Down Cake Flour and Cake Mixes are products of Ge

(Continued from Page 165)

ing also insisted that their prostitute tomers treat them with dignity and pect.

We had one family link, though, with stitution. This was Blanche, one of m's nieces, who was only seven or eight rs older than I. Though Mom shook her d over Blanche's way of life, she was ays biased in her favor because she was relative. Blanche often played with me, d me stories and sang little songs with me. r beauty fascinated me, and that young stitute gave me some of the attention and ection I was starving for. Whenever I ped off the sporting world that the cops e just around the corner I felt I was doing or Blanche and her friends.

Mom always did Blanche's laundry and I livered it. Blanche soon decided that she ld trust me completely. Lovey Joe, the p, was her sweetheart and she'd send ssages to him through me. Whenever they rreled, Lovey Joe would find me on the eet and give me notes to deliver to nche. Afterward, he was always able to eet-talk himself back into her affections.

Later, Blanche got into the habit of sending me to the druggist with a sealed envelope. 'd give me bichloride of mercury, blue tment and larkspur. Blanche had syphilis, ich was called The Fox. She had a horrible e on her upper leg that eventually became painful she couldn't bear to bathe it herf. So I would wash it for her, apply the dicines and help her pull on the specially de stocking she had to ar.

Blanche was in and out my life until I was elve. In the last stages her life, and still not enty years old, she took sniffing cocaine and ng the bang needles to get the pain. From that ne drugstore I got the pe she had to have.

In Clifton Street I was learning all there is know about prostitution and degeneracy, o heroin, cocaine and morphine. I learned ll at the age when other children were discovering life by reading Robinson Crusoe and beautiful fairy tales of Hans Christian dersen.

I never have forgotten that sweet, lovely-king Blanche and what it was like to tch her decay and rot before my eyes. I'd her at night, all dressed up and gay, and en the next day so ripped and pounded by n.

The prettiest sight in that neighborhood me at dusk when the lights were turned on the sporting houses. I'd stand on the street d look in with awe at the rich, highly lished furniture and the beautiful women ting at the windows wearing low-cut eveng gowns or kimonos.

But there was Blanche—and others. anche, poor soul, did more to keep me aight in the tough years to come than any rson I ever knew. I never have touched uor except for medicinal purposes because aw as a child what whisky and gin do to ople. I don't smoke because cigarettes are ever associated in my mind with the nking and chaos there. If I don't gamble it because I know what trouble that can bring. Whatever moral qualities I have come, I'm raid, from all the sordidness and evil I served, firsthand, as a child. However, I not wish to exaggerate the impact of the il that constantly surrounded me when I as little. I was tough always and, like all m kids, able to adjust myself to any situations.

EING so enormous for my age, I didn't cape the attentions of the fully grown men the neighborhood who liked little girls. he first thing that I discovered about sporting men, society's despised pimps, was that ey had a much more moral attitude toward ds than many of the squares around Clifton reet.

Lovey Joe, Rosebud and the others had rict "Hands off!" code with little girls. I think they would have beaten to death any other pimp who molested one of us youngsters.

Actually, being such a wised-up child, I don't think I was ever in too much danger from degenerates. Nobody was handing me any package. My vile tongue was my shield, my toughness my armor. With my gutter vocabulary and my aggressiveness, I outshocked the odd ones.

When Louise joined us in Clifton Street it was because she'd been having a little woman trouble. My Pop Norman was a handsome, light-brown-skinned man. He chased the women—and vice versa. One of Pop Norman's bright flames became so bold that she came to Louise's house to flaunt her intimacy with my stepfather.

My mother and the bright flame tangled. During the fight, Louise picked up a railroad spike and beat the other woman so badly that she had to be taken to the hospital. Louise left Genevieve, my half sister, with Norman's parents, and came to live with us. She stayed until the Chester police lost interest in the case.

I'd always been told that Louise was my mother. That hadn't meant anything to me because I always called my grandmother "Mom" and felt so much closer to her. But when Louise moved into the shanty I began to realize she was my mother and came to like her. But she never liked me; she merely tolerated me.

Yet once, while in Clifton Street, I did feel she cared for me with a mother's affection. I suffered, when six, an attack of typhoid fever and double pneumonia and was taken to the Pennsylvania Hospital, where Louise was working as an attendant. When the doctors there told Louise I might die, some of the long-repressed maternal love seemed to come to life in her. She spent as much time as she could in the hospital at my bedside.

I once heard a guest ask an old Scottish keeper if he knew of a good retriever for sale. The old man's blue eyes twinkled as he answered, "Sir, there never was a good dog for sale." —GUY FARRAR.

Sally Anderson had always inclined to the Catholic faith. When she learned that I might not survive my illness, Mom sent for Father Healey, of St. Peter Claver R. C. Church. He baptized and anointed me.

After I recovered, Louise went back into her shell, ignoring me as much as possible. She always lavished all her mother's love on Genevieve. If she couldn't love me, I suppose it was because I was the living reminder of the most frightening day of her life.

Pop Sam Perry was always kind to me and would take me for a walk sometimes on Sunday "Dress Ethel up," he'd say, "I want to take her out." Hand in hand, we'd walk through the bleak, dreary streets, looking into the shopwindows and ending up with a visit to an ice-cream parlor.

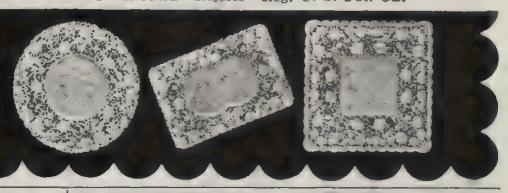
Whenever Pop Sam Perry had an argument with Mom, I knew enough to keep away from her. When things weren't going well in her love life, she seemed to take it out on me. But at all other times I was her favorite. For me, there was one pleasant feature about her militant weekly home-comings. Mom always came home with "cold functions" for me.

In those days most of the white people who had Negro servants preferred to throw leftover food in the garbage pail to giving it to the people who worked so hard for them around the house.

Early in her life Mom figured out a way to outwit her white bosses. She sewed little pockets in an apron, and filled the pockets with neatly done up parcels of food—sandwiches, pieces of pie or cake, sugar and eggs. Then when she was ready to take her day off on Thursday she'd put on the heavily laden apron under her petticoat. Mom could sneak any kind of food out of her boss's house except soup.

The parcels were my "cold functions." When I was very little I'd pull up her dress and dive under it, yelling "What did you bring me tnis time, Mom? What did you bring me?" Mom always got a big thrill out of that.

Tips on a NEW AMERICAN CUSTOM



Save with ROYLIES at every meal!

It's a wise new American custom to economize by serving every meal on beautiful Roylies Lace Paper Doylies—costs less than laundering linen! Save money, work, laundering. Food looks better. Get new Family Pkgs. of 45 to 120 Roylies; 5", 6", 8", 10", 12" round, and oblong Place Mats. At 5 & 10's, Supermarkets, Housefurnishing, Naborhood, Dept. Stores.

Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Brooklyn 1
Trade Mark "Roylies" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

MAKE MONEY SELL DRESSES FROM NEW YORK
Specially Priced $5.95 to $19.95
5th Ave., N. Y. firm desires women to sell Dresses, Suits, Lingerie, Hosiery. As seen in "Vogue", "Mademoiselle". Featuring the New York Look. Good commissions. Write for sample Book.
MODERN MANNER, 260 Fifth Ave., Dept. L-10, New York

NEW WAY TO MAKE MONEY!
SELL LADIES' RAIN SANDALS with FREE carrying pouch Only $1.00. Individuals and organizations earning amazing profits. Sample on approval. Complete line 150 fast-selling Novelties, Christmas and Everyday Greeting card assortments.
WRITE FOR SAMPLE
HEDENKAMP & CO., Inc., 361 Broadway, Dept. L-44, New York 13, N. Y.

Nothing like soda to keep refrigerator sweet!

1. Soda sweetens as it cleans! Kills "icebox odor," removes sour, musty odors that adhere to enamel.
2. Soda emulsifies greasy film! No rubbing or scrubbing—you wipe film away!
3. Soda needs no rinsing! Just sprinkle on damp cloth—wipe once. There are no suds, no grit to rinse away. Wash ice trays in soda solution.
4. Soda never mars enamel! It never scratches. Arm & Hammer or Cow Brand Baking Soda is pure Bicarbonate of Soda, U.S.P. Safe and costs less than ½¢ a week!

22 leading refrigerator manufacturers recommend soda

P. S. Bake cakes with soda for more velvety texture

Amazing New Airko*
MOISTURE-PROOF SHAKERS!

*T.M.

ORIGINAL
Ideal for luncheon use. At glass counters and leading 5 & 10's for 39c pr.

Keep salt dry! Airkonite element in gleaming top assures free-flowing salt in dampest weather. Originals...3½" tall. Deluxe...4" tall of sparkling crystal glass, hand-cut satin-finish base.

If deluxe pair unavailable at dealers, add 10¢ postage, order direct from manufacturer. Dealer Inquiries invited.

AIRKO MFG. CO., CLERMONT, FLORIDA

DELUXE
They grace any table. At gift and glassware counters, 5 & 10's for $1.00 pr.

They taste so good...

at a party!

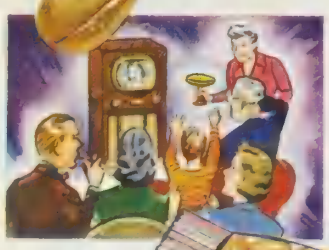
Your parties will be famous for good taste if you serve PLANTERS SALTED PEANUTS. Crisp, tender, salted and toasted to perfection! Only PLANTERS, the world's greatest experts, have the know-how to make peanuts taste like these.

They taste so good...

after school!

Here's a real treat for the children, when they come storming in after school. And good for them, too, for PLANTERS PEANUTS are packed with nourishment.

They taste so good...



in a lunch box!

Whether it's lunch at school, at work, or on a hunting trip, PLANTERS PEANUTS add zest to every meal. They pack more protein than meat, fish or eggs.

They taste so good...

as a T-V snack!

You watch and nibble, and nibble and watch, and your watching enjoyment is doubled by the zestful goodness of these crisp, oven-fresh favorites. Keep several cans handy, always.

These PLANTERS products are also made in Toronto and sold everywhere in Canada.

MR. PEANUT ®

PLANTERS is the word for PEANUTS

Sometimes, on days when she wasn't coming home, she worried about me not getting enough to eat. Whenever she could, she'd fix up a parcel of food for me, and leave it on a post or the garbage pail of the house where she was working, and I'd come out and get it.

But I can never remember Mom kissing or hugging me. She wasn't demonstrative, and I think she feared that Vi and Ching would resent her showing affection and make my life a living hell while she was out working. Vi, more than Ching, was always jealous of the way Mom tried to take care of me.

Being a tough-minded and realistic child, I can't say that Mom's home-comings gave me any great pleasure, despite the delicious "cold functions." Only on the rare occasions when she found my aunts sober was there peace in the house. But almost always she'd come home and find them high—nasty and horrible on gin that cost ten cents a pint. Mom would chase their men friends out, and sometimes hit my aunts.

Fortunately, neither Vi nor Ching dared fight back. They seemed to realize, even when they were drunk, that Mom's terrible temper would drive her on and on until she'd killed or crippled them.

Once, though, Ching, the easier-going one, did try hitting back. In her rage, Mom bit a piece of flesh out of Ching's arm. Police questioned Ching when she was taken to the hospital, but she refused to tell who had bitten her.

It was natural for the children of the shoplifters and pickpockets who taught me to steal to follow in their parents' footsteps. These kids were older than I. They accepted me as an equal, not only because I was hep and so big for my age, but because they were awed by my atomic delivery of the king's profanity. Some of these words they had never heard before. Generously, with the children who were my friends, I shared my encyclopedic knowledge of bad words, offering precise definitions of what each term meant. I also saw fit to punish my enemies by refusing them this valuable information.

Sometimes we would stand on the street screaming curses at the top of our voices. The older boys and girls who were my friends sometimes went into the darker alleys at night to make fumbling sex experiments. I was always happy to be their lookout, though I took no such pride in this as I did in singing and whistling warnings to the neighborhood brothels and street women. I, myself, made no such experiments. Sex didn't interest me. There was nothing about it I didn't know.

I got my kindergarten course in thievery when the pickpockets' kids showed me how to swipe bags of rolls and bottles of milk from doorsteps and porches. I displayed such adeptness that I soon became their leader. We stole so much that we exhausted the looting possibilities of the neighborhood and had to fan out into other sections.

I stole because I was always hungry. I'm still always hungry, now that I come to think of it. Whenever I remember the old days on Clifton Street, I develop a lumberjack's appetite. And I think of those days often. We never felt there was anything wrong in stealing. I still don't know what's wrong about a kid's stealing when he's hungry.

When my grandmother wasn't home, we seldom sat down to a fully prepared meal. My aunts lived on liquor and seldom felt like eating much. But after they found out that I was the best child thief in the Bloody Eight Ward they occasionally decided that a cooked meal wouldn't kill them.

Whenever this happened, they'd send me out with a quarter. If there was no cash in the house, they'd have me gather up all the empty whisky and beer bottles and return them. If there were not enough empties to get twenty-five cents, I'd be sent to the pawnshop to borrow a quarter on a new pair of shoes some admirer had given Vi or Ching.

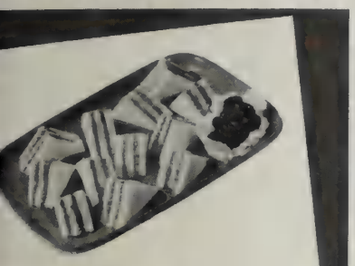
Once I had the quarter, I was ready to go shopping and stealing. First I'd buy wood for three cents and charcoal for a nickel. Walking into the bakery, I'd order a loaf of yesterday's bread, which also cost three cents. When the man turned to get the bread from a shelf, I'd slip a half-dozen cinnamon buns into my big shopping bag.

In the butcher shop I'd ask for three cents' worth of cat or dog meat. The butchers on Clifton Street only had to look at my big hungry eyes to know that I didn't want the meat for any pet animal. They'd give me plenty of good scraps fit for human consumption.

Swiping fresh vegetables was the easiest of all. If the owner was inside the store, I'd just take my choice of the potatoes, onions, carrots and peas on the stands outside his shop. If he was outside, I'd order three cents' worth of salt or something else I knew he kept in the rear of his store. By the time he came out with it, I had my bag full of vegetables covered up by the package of meat.

My ability to go out with a quarter and come back with a whole dinner—and some change—delighted my aunts. They never tired of praising my prowess.

I stopped stealing some years later while I was living in Chester. One day I went out carrying a parasol, to the five-and-dime store. Because of its wide variety of merchandise, this was the kind of store I most enjoyed robbing.

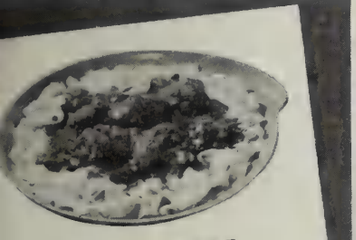


Everything I took—hair ribbons, chocolate bars, toys and trinkets of all sorts—I dropped into my parasol. But when I came out of the store it was raining like mad. I couldn't open the parasol because all my loot would have fallen out.

I had to walk all the way home in the teeming rain, carrying the parasol. Everyone I met looked at me as though I were crazy. Soaked to the skin, I indignantly decided

"Hi, Ernie—someone's got a blue convertible kiddie coupé parked smack up against a fireplug out there."

ANGLO
CORNED BEEF



HURRY UP MEAL
Corned Beef
Double Deckers

Mince corned beef. Mix with Tartar sauce. Spread between slices buttered bread. Cut in triangles.

ANGLO CORNED BEEF IS ALL SOLID, LEAN MEAT—NO BONE, GRISTLE OR EXCESS FAT. A "MEAL-IN-A-TIN."

ANGLO ROAST BEEF

FIX IT—FAST
Hungarian Goulash

Heat roast beef, tomato juice, paprika, chopped green pepper, and onion. Serve on wide, buttered noodles.

ANGLO ROAST BEEF ALSO MAKES TASTY MEAT PIES, STEWS, HASH AND RAGOUTS. UNSURPASSED IN QUALITY.

BUY SEVERAL TINS TODAY

k for Anglo Corned Beef and Anglo oast Beef today! Always keep several s on hand for emergencies. You can t your wholehearted trust in Anglo.

N SALE AT ALL GOOD GROCERS

petty larceny didn't pay if it made me get that wet. Thereafter, I stole things only once in a while to find out whether I still retained the magic touch.

Our home in Clifton Street broke up when I got diphtheria. Louise had moved to a furnished room quite a distance away. Mom sent me there on an errand, telling me to stay overnight. When I woke up in the morning I was sick. Mom heard that the Philadelphia health authorities were planning to quarantine the house. She hurried out and took me to the home of Aunt Ide, who'd moved to North Chester. Mom could have been sent to jail for that, so it was just as well that we got out of the city of Philadelphia for a while.

Aunt Ide's house in North Chester was in a semirural neighborhood. When I woke up there in the morning I could smell the trees and the grass, and hear birds singing. In the school I went to there, I met a better class of children. I considered them morons because they obeyed their parents.

I wasn't permitted to remain long in bucolic North Chester. Mom soon got a little place for us in the rear of a Jewish family's house in Philadelphia. Their back yard was my front yard and I played with the two children, but mostly with the little Jewish boy who was about my age.

Every afternoon our games were interrupted by the arrival of his rabbi, who was giving him Hebrew lessons. The Jewish boy hated to stop playing to learn the ancient prayers and chants. But I was intrigued by the strange sounds. I'd stand under the window listening, without, of course, understanding a single word.

Because of my phonographic ear, I could repeat them, syllable for syllable. The rabbi heard about this and had me say some of the Hebraic prayers for him. He mistook my mimicry for genius, and constantly was reproaching his student for not being as good a scholar as the little Negro girl who had never taken one lesson in Hebrew.

On having a fight with Mom, Louise would snatch me away to live with her in Chester. Beginning when I was eight, she had another reason for this besides hurting Mom. It occurred to her that she could make some money by putting me out to work. She'd do this even if she could get only fifteen cents by having me work all day. She also taught me to set bread for her neighbors. She'd get twenty-five cents from each woman and I'd make as much as $1.50 for her on a Saturday night. But setting bread is hard work and my wrists would swell up like balloons.

I was just eight years old the time Louise hired me out to a white woman who lived in West Chester. This woman gave me the filthiest, most disgusting jobs around the house to do. When I refused to do them, she threatened to beat me.

"If you ever tried to beat me," I told her, "I would kill your baby."

"How would you kill him?" she asked.

"I'd just pick him up and take him downstairs. Going down the steps, I'd let myself stumble so he'd fall on his head. That would kill him, I guess."

The white woman didn't beat me. But she fired me. I had to come back to Chester on the milk train next morning.

My imagination always seemed to flower most lushly when I was threatening people. One reason I quickly became a leader of the bad kids wherever I moved was that I could dream up frightening stories. In Philadelphia, I had a friend, Sis, whom I kept in a state of terror by whispering to her the dark secrets of my past.

"Look out," I'd say, "I once killed another girl like you for not doing what I told her."

"How did you kill her?" asked Sis, her eyes big with fear.

"I stuck a needle in the top of her head. I pushed the needle all the way in. The hole closed up so nobody ever found out she was murdered."

"Where was this?"

"In Camden," I said, knowing Sis could never check up if I made it Camden. "And you better keep watching the color of my eyes. If they change color, watch out. The

make every occasion
GAY! BRIGHT! COLORFUL! with plastics housewares

MADE OF STYRON®
A DOW PLASTIC

Lanai Deluxe Salad Set—molded and distributed by B W Molded Plastics.

¼ lb. and 1 lb. Butter Dishes—molded and distributed by Lincoln Plastics Corp.

Sectional Plate—molded and distributed by California Moulders, Inc.

Thermo-Jug—molded and distributed by Victory Plastics Company. "Dinah Ware" Dinnerware Set—molded and distributed by Nosco Plastics.

Spark the party spirit whatever the occasion with brightly-hued plastics housewares made of STYRON (Dow polystyrene). These gleaming beauties will be the life of the party because they're fun to use . . . easy to clean . . . and their festive colors won't chip or peel. Smart hostesses are using low cost, Evaluated STYRON housewares for all occasions because they have confidence in the "made of STYRON" label. STYRON is their buy-word for better plastics products. Look for them in leading department, chain and variety stores everywhere.

DOW
plastics

Plastics Division Dept. SHP-14 ▪ THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY ▪ MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

days my eyes change color is when I murder people. I'll kill you, too, if you ever tell anyone that I'm a murderer."

After that, Sis was so in awe of me I could get her to give me anything she had—an orange, a stick of candy, a ball. But I knew Sis would tell the other kids I'd killed a girl and make them so scared they'd let me be their leader, and do whatever I wanted.

I was a bad girl, all right. I wanted other people to like me, but never made the slightest effort to win them over. I felt it was up to them to discover my remarkable qualities.

Whenever I lived with Louise, I made life a nightmare for my half sister Genevieve, who was lighter in color than I, and was treated much better by my mother. "Yaller dog" and "Yaller puppy" were my favorite names for Genevieve. But I'd warn her, "I'll kill you if you ever say I'm dark. Don't you ever dare say I'm blacker than you."

We had a pallet on the floor to sleep on. It was so narrow that we had to sleep head and tail. Being taller than Genevieve, I'd pretend to be asleep and kick her in the face again and again.

The greatest thing in my whole childhood happened when I was nine. Purely by accident, I had a chance to walk for a little while in a clean and brightly shining world. Someone told Mom that a new Catholic school for white and colored children had just been opened and she entered me there.

The school was in a neat, brownstone house that had been a private home. I went there, determined to hate my teachers and to lose no time establishing myself as a holy terror. But from the beginning, the nuns were so patient and understanding that I couldn't cope with them, couldn't hate them.

The first thing I noticed was that they expected you to answer "Yes, Sister" or "No, Sister" when they asked you a question. I'd already learned that if you didn't say "ma'am" when addressing any white woman, you, as a Negro, were liable to have your block knocked off. "Sister" was the friendlier term Negroes used among themselves.

I soon came to love the instruction periods in which our teacher, Sister Mary Louise Agnes, told us little stories about the boy Jesus, and told them beautifully. I was moved deeply when she told me how close Mary was to Jesus, and that you could ask her for things and she'd ask Jesus to see that you got them.

There was a statue in our classroom of Mother Mary and the infant Jesus. Sister Mary Louise Agnes told us that any good child would be rewarded by being allowed for a whole week to kneel alone, close to the statue, and say his prayers.

"I want to pray in front of the statue, all by myself, right now," I told the white nun.

"There are other little girls ahead of you, Ethel," she explained. "But if you are good, your turn will come."

Even though I couldn't believe her, that fixed me. It was impossible for me to visualize myself, a battered and buffeted bad girl, being allowed to pray so close to the image of the Virgin and the boy Jesus, so close and all alone. Some way would be found to gyp me.

Yet I couldn't be quite sure of that. The only possible way to find out was by behaving myself.

And after only a few weeks, I got my chance. I could hardly believe it. As soon as the week was up, I asked Sister Mary Louise Agnes, "Why can't I pray all next week before the sacred image?"

"You'll have another chance, Ethel. Just keep on being a good girl. But first the others must have their turn."

Convinced I'd not be cheated, I was hooked into permanent good behavior. I loved every hour in that school—except one: the hour when we all went downstairs to the recreation room in the basement to eat lunch.

The trouble was that I seldom had any lunch. If there was anything in the house to eat, it would be some stale old cakes. I was afraid to bring them, knowing the other kids—who had sandwiches, fruit, fresh cake, hard-boiled eggs—would make fun of me. That would make me fly at them. And when I had nothing, I couldn't sit there and watch them eat.

To get out of my dilemma, I began to act up a little, always just before the lunch period, so I'd be kept upstairs. But I never slid on discipline enough to endanger my chance of praying again all alone before the sacred image.

The nuns noticed. They must have guessed what I was doing. They began to send me on little errands each morning. That gave them an excuse to ask me to eat the noontime meal with them. I gladly accepted their food for what it seemed to be, pay for the errands I had done.

Several times the sisters asked about my parents. I always had the right evasive answers—my grandmother worked out, my mother had married again and lived over in Chester, so my two aunts were taking care of me.

Gradually, I was becoming more and more of a Catholic. But when the soft-voiced nun first suggested I go to confession, I told her, "I can't go to confession, Sister."

"Why not, Ethel?" she wanted to know.

"I just couldn't tell the father all the bad things I've done." I was thinking of all the stealing, fighting and cursing I'd done.

I was afraid that any full and honest confession from me would shock the priest so that he'd fall right out of his box onto the marble floor of the church. In the end though, Sister Mary Louise Agnes and the other nuns talked me into taking a chance.

The very least I expected was that the father would be so appalled at hearing about all I'd done that he'd tell me never to come back. But I went. That first confession of mine took hours. Yet all the priest said, on hearing me out, was:

"I understand, my child. You must not swear any more. You must not do these other things ever again."

My penance that first day was saying ten Hail Marys and five Our Fathers before each of the fourteen stations of the cross in the church. You just won't cheat on a thing like that when you're a child. I stayed in that church, saying penance, darn near all night. I tried not to be so bad a girl and was very proud of myself when I cut down my penance to a mere hour and a half, after only a few weeks.

I would leave the school, full of hope, and feeling exalted.

Then I had to go home.

From eight in the morning until two each day, I'd feel wanted, enriched by the affection of the nuns, an accepted member of the human race.

But nothing had changed at home. Always it was the same: Vi or Ching drunk, nothing washed or clean, nothing in order, the smell

(Continued on Page 173)

It Isn't Cheating—

When Marian Spitzer's doctor told her that she had tuberculosis, would have to lie flat on her back for months, following a strict routine to save every bit of energy, she crossed her fingers, made her own plans. "It isn't cheating if you don't get caught," she thought.

Here, in her own words, is the story of how a woman learned that she was a cheat, a liar—and a fool—and nearly died in the learning.

I Took it Lying Down

By Marian Spitzer

Complete in November Journal, condensed from the book soon to be published by Random House, Inc.

Refresh . . . Add Zest to the Hour

In town, ice-cold Coca-Cola is around the corner from anywhere.

But out where there are no corners, the hero of the party is the one who brings the Coke along—ice cold in the handy picnic cooler.

Ask for it either way . . . both trade-marks mean the same thing.

COPYRIGHT 1950, THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

For every woman who leads a double life...

CAPABLE YOU! You wield your own dish mop—suds your own duds. But you needn't let it roughen and redden your hands—not anymore! Now you can stop the damage before it starts—with Trushay, the "beforehand" lotion! So different from "ordinary" lotions, you apply Trushay BEFORE doing dishes or light laundry! Then when evening comes and it's . . .

GLAMOROUS YOU—the woman who loves to dress up and go—your Trushay-guarded hands are smooth and attractive. For creamy, fragrant Trushay—applied BEFORE each daily washing task—protects your hands right in the hot, soapy water! Actually helps prevent its drying damage—protects your hands while you work! Begin today to use Trushay!

TRUSHAY . . . the "beforehand" lotion . . . guards your hands even in hot, soapy water!

Wonderful, too, as a quick skin softener—Trushay's rich oils soothe and smooth chapped, roughened skin. Grand for elbows, heels, knees.

As a flattering powder base—Trushay makes powder cling beautifully, never gets that gummy look. Protects your skin from weather-chap.

As an after-shave lotion—Oil-rich Trushay smooths away after-shave dryness and flakiness. Legs and underarms feel velvet-soft.

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

(Continued from Page 170)

peer and smoked cigarettes all over the el. And the same tensions and recrimina-s.

What saddened me most was knowing how e they could be when sober. If there had n no drinking, we could have been the piest little family in the world—even nout money, or anything but the barest essities. All of us had a wonderful sense umor, and were full of fun and laughter. Louise had never approved of my Catholi-n and didn't let me stay in the school very g. But I did return there, intermittently, ing the two years that followed.

My mother never drank heavily. Old-ioned religion was her refuge. I've always that I inherited her deeply religious feel-s, but her conception of God was nothing mine.

My mother didn't make God ugly exactly, she sure made Him wrathful. I felt that d loved me as I loved Him. To me, He was er a tyrant, an enemy waiting to pounce made some mistake.

Though Louise's religion was almost fanat-, she wasn't as strict with me as Mom. I d hard to please her, but she never be-ie as fond of me as she was of Genevieve, legitimately born child. But Louise must e retained some smoldering maternal in-ct toward me. When Norman hit her, d never fight him. Yet when I tried to e her part, and he'd lift his hand to me, ise would go for him like a tigress.

Louise was so scrawny and starved-looking t once the Chester health authorities ed she might be tubercular. They asked to bring Genevieve and to their offices so we, could be examined. To d us up they allotted wo dozen eggs a week six quarts of milk daily. My half sister and I lost ime, immediately going the retail dairy-prod-s business. We sold our eggs and milk to the ire neighborhood at gain prices and earned plenty of pocket ney.

y the time I was eleven I was so big that d trouble getting men to leave me alone. eral times Mom sent me to a doctor who mined me to find out if I was still a virgin. doctor said I was a virgin but said I ght be going into a decline." This meant rculosis so Mom got me beer, porter and to stimulate my appetite, milk being too for us to buy.

My grandmother also decided it was time d some wholesome amusement. She took to Pop Grey, an old friend of hers, who a respectable dance hall on South Street. n though I was so much under the legal he agreed to let me attend evening ons at his place.

dmission cost fifty cents, but before long offered to let me in free if I'd give his r girl customers dancing lessons. I won y prizes in the dancing contests at y's. Besides the usual one-steps and zes, we did square dances, and all the ttisches and quadrilles that have lately me so popular again.

OULD always dance for hours without ing tired. The year before (I was ten, but ed fifteen) I made Mabel, a friend of e, take me to the Saturday-night dances nother hall in a dimly lighted place over ble. Mabel was a little bit of a thing, but ourteen she was as developed as she'd be.

To those Saturday-night dances, I'd wear high-heeled shoes I'd found at rummage s. Though my hair reached to my waist, put it up and pack it with rats, which e very fashionable. I'd make my eye-vs bigger by using burnt cork. For cheek e, I rubbed the red dye from crepe shelv-paper into my face, topping it off with m powder. Proudly I hung hoop ear-s in my pierced ears and, for a last touch ass, tied a black velvet ribbon around my .

Fortunately, my mother didn't catch on and I was able to keep going to those wonderful Saturday-night dances, feeling always like the belle of the ball and a dream girl, in my outlandish getup.

The last little place Mom was able to set up for us was in an alley off Kater Street. This was in a semi-red-light district of Philadelphia. Kater Street was almost the end of the road for Mom. When she got home she was so tired, and groaning with her many aches and pains. But her children—Vi, Charlie, Ching and Louise—were still plaguing her.

I FELT very sorry for Mom, but I didn't let that interrupt my mischiefmaking. Across a fence from our shanty was the back yard of a restaurant called The Busy Bee. Every chance I got I gathered up garbage and other refuse and threw it into the baskets of potatoes, lettuce and other vegetables which lay exposed in the yard.

Going into the house, I'd wait patiently at the window for the restaurant men to come out of the kitchen to get the baskets. When they saw my garbage on their nice clean vegetables, they'd cry out in anguish, "What's this? What stuff is this?"

Utterly charmed by my ability to throw them into a frenzy, I'd go out and ask people I met on the street, "What restaurant do you eat in?"

If they replied, "The Busy Bee," I'd laugh until I became hysterical. Puzzled, they'd always want to know what I was laughing at. But giving them only a pitying look, I'd walk on until I met someone else who said he patronized The Busy Bee. Then I would get hysterical all over again.

There wouldn't be half as much fun in the world if it weren't for children and men, and there ain't a mite of difference between them under their skins.

—ELLEN GLASGOW.

In Kater Street, I learned another lesson you'll never find in the book called What Every Young Girl Should Know, a lesson about opium and the sort of people who smoke it.

Back in Clifton Street I'd heard my aunts call Harry, a friend of my mother's, "a junkie." I'd never known quite what that meant. When I thought of Harry, "the junkie," I remembered his high and flighty eyes.

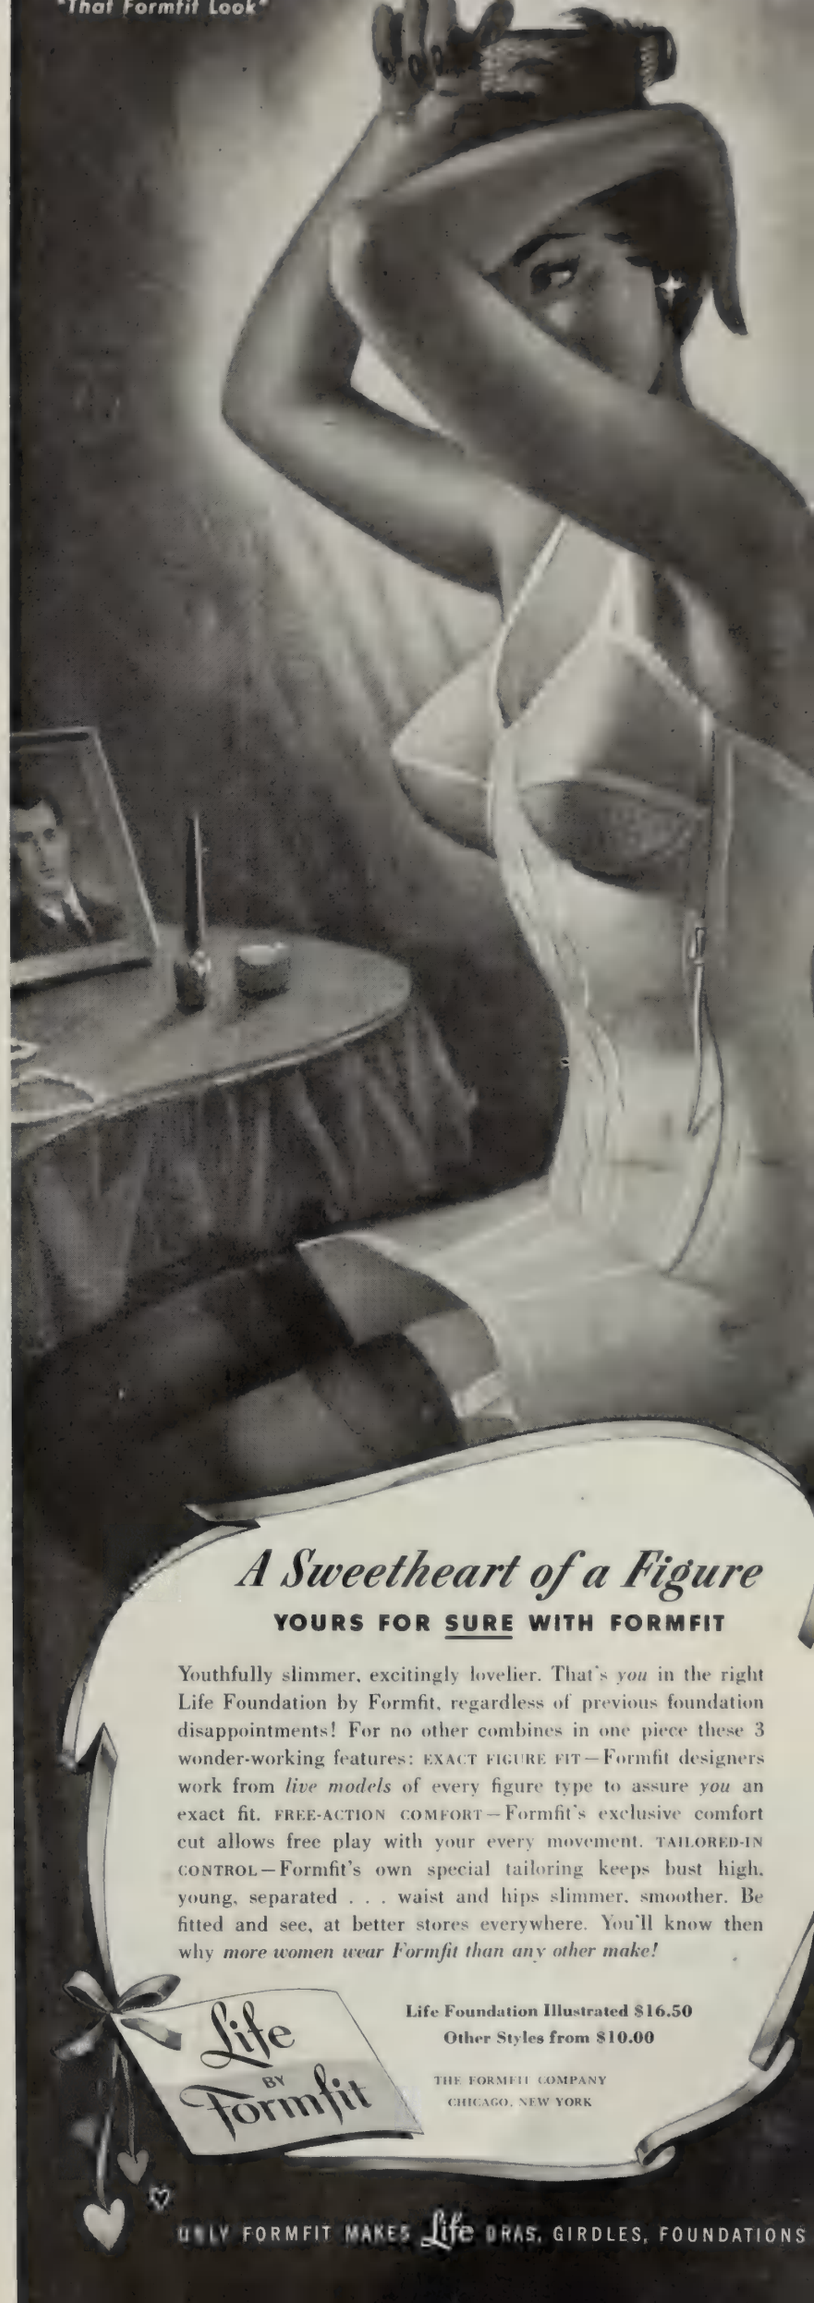
While we were on Kater Street my aunts were again earning their drinking money by doing the sporting women's laundry. They sent me out to get and deliver the wash. Whenever I took the weekly bundle to a customer I called Miss Hazel I had to wait a long time, after knocking on her door, before it was opened. And her eyes, like Harry's, were high and flighty. Sometimes there was a curious smell—an odor like yeast—in the hall.

One day, when Miss Hazel asked me to do some errands for her, I said, "That funny smell ain't in the hallway today."

"What funny smell?"

I described it.

Miss Hazel nodded. "Ethel," she said, "any time you notice that in the hallway, let me know. Ring my bell three times—that will be our signal. Okay?"



Unknowingly, I'd saved her from a police raid. The yeasty smell was the odor of opium cooking. Miss Hazel hadn't known it was escaping from her room into the hallway.

After that she felt more free with me. She'd let me into her room, something she'd never done before. I didn't comment on what I saw there—wet towels and sheets spread across the windows and the doors, silent, sleepy-looking people in the room, the little lamp sitting on the floor.

Before long, Miss Hazel trusted me to the point of asking me to stay with her when she smoked alone. She paid me a dollar just for stroking her temples while she smoked.

Sometimes her boy friend would come in, take off his coat, lie down and smoke. Miss Hazel knew how to prepare and cook the stuff. The little black opium pellets looked like pine tar.

I never forgot that dark room, the wet sheets hanging over the door, or that yeasty

Enjoy Tuna Tater

as featured at
THE EDGEWATER BEACH HOTEL
by Chef Peter Ungaretti of this noted Chicago hostelry at its delicious best only if made with CHICKEN of the SEA BRAND or WHITE STAR BRAND

"BITE SIZE" tuna!

The Edgewater Beach is famous for its lakeside location, its luxurious appointments, its splendid cuisine.

A popular food specialty on its menu is TUNA TATER . . . a real he-man dish, if there ever was one!

But, to be sure it will taste as it does when Chef Ungaretti serves it, it must be made with this quality "Bite Size" Tuna.

EASY! Wash, dry and grease potatoes before baking. Make your favorite cream sauce and add Chicken of the Sea Brand or White Star Brand "Bite Size" Tuna. Split baked potato and fill opening with creamed tuna. Put strip of cheese on top, place under broiler until cheese melts.

Millions of housewives have found that these famous brands are the only tunas that assure every tuna dish being a success . . . hot or cold.

Trademarks of Van Camp Sea Food Co. Inc., Terminal Island, Calif.

"I ALWAYS BUY THE BRANDS THAT MADE TUNA FAMOUS!"

"I BOUGHT A SUBSTITUTE AND IT RUINED MY FAVORITE RECIPE!"

THERE'S NO HALFWAY QUALITY IN TUNA!

Buy either brand . . . the quality is the same smell. I never forgot watching the torment of Miss Hazel and her friends when they couldn't get dope. My aunts were like that when they couldn't get liquor. They'd become frantic, would get the shakes. And what they were going mad for was fifteen minutes of artificial stimulation.

Going around with girls of fourteen or fifteen when I was eleven, I was continually embarrassed because they had breasts and I was as flat as a board. The other girls never stopped talking about their sweethearts. So I invented a boy friend for myself. He was handsome, loaded with money, generous and out of his mind about me. He was also strictly anonymous and that was what I appreciated most about him. I had no boy friend and I wanted none. All I wanted was to talk about him.

I'd taken a job as cleaning woman for Giuseppe Donato, the sculptor. I got seventy-five cents a week for working after school for him. Besides cleaning up his studio, I kept his big stove full of egg coal. Mr. Donato predicted I'd have a pretty figure when I grew up.

With Mom so full of the misery, I thought a lot about her and all she'd tried to do for me. I decided to give her the only good Christmas she'd ever had.

By saving my money for months, I managed to amass five dollars. On Christmas Eve, I bought a tiny tree, put it on the table and decorated it. I also bought three fancy little glasses, set them in a row before the tree with a dollar bill stuck in each one. I didn't buy any food, knowing that Mom would come home with enough "cold functions" for dinner.

Ching was away and there was only Vi at home. For weeks I'd begged her to be sober this one Christmas Eve. But Vi wasn't there when Mom came in, tired and all beat up. When she saw the tree, and the little glasses with the dollar bills in them, her whole face lighted up.

"This is nice, Ethel," she said. "This makes me feel good."

She sat down at the table and I sat down on the other side. The idea that some of the family had thought of her this Christmas gave her a wonderful, warm thrill. It was nice for me, too, feeling close to her, talking to her so peacefully.

We sat there like that, until we heard Vi outside and let her in. She was drunk and bullish.

"Why did you have to get drunk this one day, Vi?" I asked. "I asked you to stay sober so Mom could have a nice Christmas."

Vi started calling me horrible names. I didn't answer her curses, just stared at her.

"Don't pay her no mind, Ethel," said Mom. "Let her get it all out of her system."

Vi fell into a chair and continued to upbraid me. I said nothing, just kept watching her. Seeing something on the floor, Vi swayed down and picked it up. It was a hatchet.

"Put down that hatchet, Vi," said Mom. "Have you lost your mind?"

Vi pulled back her arm and threw the hatchet at me with all her strength. It went into the wall back of me with a quivering zinging noise. It had gone over my shoulder, missing my head by inches.

I got up and jumped on Vi. I must have choked and punched, kicked and gouged her in my maniacal fury. All I can remember was being pulled off Vi by Mom and a fat man who lived next door. He had rushed in, hearing Vi's screams. It was that man who pried my hands from Vi's throat and stopped me from killing her. I never would have let go by myself until she was dead.

Vi was unconscious. They gave her ammonia and smelling salts, then carried her upstairs and put her on the bed. When Mom came downstairs again, she found me in a daze and gave me some smelling salts too. Then came release—and hysterics.

Next day when I looked at Vi, I got sick. Her face was nothing but bumps and lumps and all shades of purple and red and black. Her throat had deep black-and-blue dents. I had almost killed her. But if I had killed her before Mom and the fat man could interfere, I wouldn't have been sorry. She was scared stiff of me from then on. I never had to fight her again.

The one regret I had was that Mom's Christmas—like everything else in her life—had been spoiled.

My aunts and my mother were not ignorant women. They discussed people, and things that happened, with considerable intelligence and insight. But I could never get them to listen when I told them about what was happening at school or of anything else that concerned me. They just didn't care. Perhaps they were alienated from me because I was so different in every way from the three of them.

Yet I can't condemn them for that. For them, too, each day was a scuffle, a racking struggle to keep alive. When people are in that situation, the problems of a child must seem unimportant.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

So Long

By William Stafford

Of the millions of raindrops
One fell on the window
Between me and the city,

One fell on your cheek
As I turned to look
When they started the train,

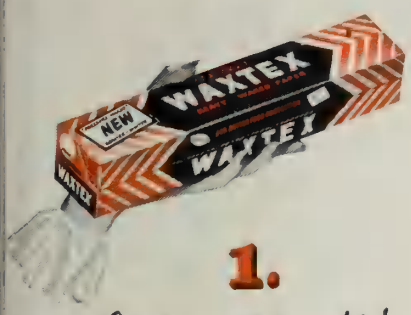
One blurred this letter
Down near the end
Above my name.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

When Louise's father-in-law, Grandpa Howard, a nice old man, died, Mrs. Howard could no longer take care of Genevieve. Louise, whom I had started to call Momweeze, once more set up housekeeping and I went to live with them in Chester. Before long Mom had to move in with us. She had become too weak to work. Pop Norman didn't want her there, but there was no other place for her to go.

Momweeze always was wonderful about getting things on the installment plan. In this place she even had an organ. Louise never once managed to pay all the installments on the furniture she had bought so optimistically. One week her house would be full, the next week bare. But we often got a lot of use out of the stuff before the finance company sent their men to take it away.

Sick as she was, Mom loved having an organ in the house. She'd ask me to pick out her favorite hymns with one finger on that little organ. One of these favorites was His Eye is on the Sparrow and I Know He Watches Me, the hymn I sing now for the second-act curtain in my Broadway play The Member of the Wedding.



I was spending a lot of time with Mom. I didn't think I'd have her much longer. But sometimes Genevieve and I would go at night to parlor socials. I could dance, sing and do the split. In Chester I was also known as the champion hip shaker. What we most prided ourselves on was our prowess in quivering muscle rolling and shaking. Among these amateurs I encountered professional jealousy for the first time—because I could not only dance with the boys, but could dance alone. The other girls didn't like that.

Pop Norman was boss of that household most of the time, but not on Sunday. We all had to go to church on the Sabbath no matter how much he grumbled. At home, too, the whole religious ritual was observed.

Louise didn't object to my going to church and staying there the whole day. I didn't say anything about my Catholic leanings in these little Protestant churches I attended, fearing I'd be ridiculed. But what I learned from going to these churches was that other religions than mine held something that was worth while and exalting.

(Continued on Page 177)

Amazing! This Waxtex Dispenser Box!

1.

As You Buy It!
Ready to Use!

2.

Flip of Your Thumb..
Paper at Your Finger tips!

3.

Pull down...
Tear up...
ZIP!.. It's off!

4.

Ready Again...
Paper at Your Finger tips!

ROLL JUST CAN'T PULL  OR FALL OUT!

and in this Amazing Dispenser Box –

125 feet of excellent quality waxed paper—pressure-waxed WAXTEX—heavy, strong, transparent and protective . . .

Look for the familiar Orange and Brown WAXTEX Dispenser Box in your food store today!

A PRODUCT OF MARATHON CORPORATION Protective Packaging FOR AMERICA'S FINEST FOODS

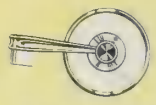
Look! New Super-Storage Design!

New, Built-To-Last Beauty! New Ice-Blue Trim! New Features Galore!

You'll find them all in FRIGIDAIRE!



See the new De Luxe! New Super-Storage design gives you 9 cu. ft. of storage space—yet this refrigerator takes little more kitchen space than a 5 cu. ft. model of a few years ago! Look outside—at a gleaming Lifetime Porcelain or Durable Dulux finish, rugged steel cabinet, finger-touch Target Latch. Look inside—at lustrous Ice-Blue and golden trim. Full-Width Super-Freezer Chest, full-width plastic Chill Drawer, twin stacking Hydrators! The main food compartment has new, improved Cold-Wall cooling, aluminum shelves that cannot rust. 9 and 10.7 cu. ft. sizes available—frozen storage capacities, 45 and 49 lbs.

Look at it inside! Look at it outside!

You Get New Beauty!

1. New! Lustrous Ice-Blue, Gold and White Beauty—sets a new standard for smartness.
2. New! Target Door Latch—with finger-tip action—locks cold in.

3. New Streamlined Design—finished in Lifetime Porcelain or Durable Dulux.

You Get New Convenience!

4. Extra Storage Space—in less kitchen space than before.
5. Extra-Large Frozen Storage Space—holds from 15 to 70 lbs.
6. Double-Easy Quickube Ice Trays—trays slide out—cubes released instantly—no melting.

7. New Aluminum Rustproof Shelves—adjustable, sliding—more space between shelves.
8. New, Extra-Deep Porcelain Hydrators—for fruits and vegetables.
9. New Full-Width Plastic Chill Drawer in De Luxe models—for meat and ice cube storage, quick beverage chilling.

You Get New Economy—New Dependability!

10. New Improved Meter-Miser—makes more cold with no more current.

11. Freon-12 Refrigerant—developed by Frigidaire and General Motors.
12. New Improved Cold-Wall Cooling—in all De Luxe and Imperial models.
13. New Sealed-In Mechanism—with 5-Year Protection Plan.
14. This emblem on a Frigidaire Refrigerator is your assurance of safe cold from top to bottom, lasting beauty, utmost convenience, proved economy features—plus General Motors' dependability and Frigidaire's 30 years' experience in building more than 12 million refrigerating units.

3 TYPES, 4 SERIES, 10 SIZES
4 to 17 cubic feet — STARTING AT $184.75

Whatever the size of your family, your kitchen, your budget—there's a Frigidaire Refrigerator that fits your needs. You can take your choice of the luxurious Imperial with separate, near-zero Locker-Top—the beautiful De Luxe with spacious Super-Freezer Chest—the big-value Master or low-priced Standard with colder-than-ever Super-Freezer! But whatever you pick, you'll enjoy many time-and-money-saving features found only in Frigidaire—America's No. 1 Refrigerator! Get a demonstration—soon!

You can't match a FRIGIDAIRE Refrigerator

See your Frigidaire Dealer for PROOF! Look for his name in Yellow Pages of phone book. Or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.

Refrigerators • Electric Ranges • Automatic Washer • Clothes Dryer
Electric Ironer • Food Freezers • Electric Dehumidifier
Electric Water Heaters • Kitchen Cabinets and Sinks • Air Conditioners

(Continued from Page 174)

My devotion to the spiritual side of life did ot alter my basically Jekyll-and-Hyde char- ter. I was in deep fear that my shameful rginity would be discovered by the crowd at so admired my conversation, which was phisticated—not to say gritty—at all mes. This was my dilemma: though I had desire to lose my virginity, I also was termined to maintain my respected posi- on as a worldly girl. With my younger ad- irers, the solution was simple because they ere as inexperienced as I. Other more en- rprising young boys I held to a standoff ith tall tales about my big shot uptown who as loaded with money and was so insanely alous that he threatened to slash the throat any man who even presumed to wink at e.

The older boys with whom I went on ncing sprees just laughed at such stories. I was reduced to telling them that I was ing with a little boy. Though I can hardly y they were intimidated, it did seem to hance my desirability.

In fact, I was soon being grabbed at so rsistently that I made Genevieve go to all e dances with me. I told her that she must ver let me out of her sight—no matter hat the boys said or did. Genevieve, always ick to capitalize on the misfortunes of hers, set a high price on her services. Be- re she would agree to become my human ustard plaster I had to promise her half of erything I had and was making by my ter-school work. But she earned all she got. o sharecropper ever reaped a bigger harvest insults and humiliations. For once I was ad that my half sister as such a greedy little ast. Genevieve never let of my arm.

Meanwhile, my educa- on in life in the raw was ntinuing. In our house Morton Street, Chester, e neighbors were iendly. The woman talk ere was all obstetrical gossip and reminis- nces. I struck up a friendship with a preg- nt woman who lived across the street. She ld me she enjoyed my company "because u know so much about having babies." I did know many things, such as rubbing an pectant mother's stomach with oil to osen the muscles, and no details had been verlooked by the gossiping women who dis- ssed so endlessly their childbearing feats front of us youngsters.

When this woman had her baby she sent r me. I took over until the doctor arrived. have never delivered a baby, but I'm sure could. I saw the whole miraculous and essy process that day.

Though dancing, being chased by the boys nd the mysteries of human birth all fasci- ated me, my greatest interest, when I was even, lay in the church. Though I was a atholic, I recognized that Louise's little rotestant churches had something. The auty that came into the tired faces of the ry old men and women excited me. Some ould rock. Some would cry. Some would lk with eloquence and fire, their confusions nd doubts dispelled. And oh, those hymns! began to dawn on me that if sordidness ft a deep and lasting mark, so could the odness in life.

My search for God and my finding Him as to begin in one of those Protestant hurches where they were having a Chil- ren's Revival. All my girl friends in the eighborhood were going to this Children's evival. I went, every day. When the reacher, the Rev. R. J. Williams, called hose who wished to repent and be saved, all y gang would go up to the mourners' bench, nd kneel down—but not for long. They ould pop up quick as hot cakes and as hough they had brand-new souls. But we out hearts in the back knew they hadn't een cleansed of sin, but were just trying to tract attention.

One night there were only three of us oungsters still left unsaved in the whole ongregation. All the rest had gone to the ourners' bench and been redeemed.

"Come!" cried the Reverend Williams, an inspired and fiery preacher. "Get down on your knees and pray to our Lord!"

So I thought, I will get down on my knees and pray just to see what happens. I prayed, "O Lord, I don't know what to ask of You!"

I did this and nothing happened. I didn't feel purged of sin or close to the Lord. It was this way with me right through the last night of the Children's Revival meeting.

I was the only one left who was still unsaved, and the preacher looked at me and announced he would continue the revival, if necessary, for three more nights—just to save me. I like to think that the Rev. R. J. Williams saw something special and fervent in me, something deep and passionate struggling toward salvation and spiritual expression.

On the last of the three extra nights of the meeting, I got down on the mourners' bench, down on my knees. Nobody had come that night but the very old people who were always there. I was praying hard and hopefully, asking God, "What am I seeking here? What do I want of You? Help me! If nothing happens, I can't come back here any more!"

But then it happened! The peace of heart and of mind, the peace I had been seeking all my life.

I know that never so long as I live can I experience again that wonderful reaction I had that night in the little church. Love flooded my heart and I knew I had found God and that now and for always I would have a Friend close by to strengthen me and cheer me on. The people who were there that night told me that I was radiant and like one transfixed. And I did feel full of light and warmth.

I started to go to church every Sunday. Any church to me has always been the House of God, whatever the denomination. I was a Catholic, but I didn't think He would mind whether I went to that church, a Protestant church, a synagogue or a Hindu temple.

I was not made more grave and solemn by what had happened. I remained as frivolous as before. Everybody smiled and said, "It is wintertime religion that Ethel has. When summertime comes it will wear off."

I just smiled back at them. I knew it was not just wintertime religion with me and that my feeling of being watched over and protected would never leave me.

Years later, when I was seventeen, I was performing at Barney Gordon's Bar, at Thirteenth and Kater Streets. Philadelphia had Sunday blue laws then and the saloons couldn't open up until five minutes after midnight following the Sabbath Day.

While waiting to get into the saloons, lots of people would go to church. One Sunday night Florrie, a sweet church person who was a friend of mine, asked me to go with her and another girl, named Ethel like me, to hear the Rev. R. J. Williams preach. He was holding his meetings then in big movie theaters. I went to hear him.

During the meeting, as usual, the preacher asked the entire congregation to stand up. Then he told those who were regular members of the congregation to sit down. Next, he asked all those who belonged to any church to sit down. Finally, he asked all those who were Christians, whether they attended church regularly or not, to sit down.

When that was all over only the other Ethel and I remained standing. She would have liked to sit down but she couldn't, as I was holding tightly to her hand, and she couldn't get it away from me. I couldn't sit down because, on account of my work of singing risqué songs, I didn't feel like a Christian. Yet I didn't like to be left there, standing all alone.

The Reverend Williams looked at us, and said, "This is wonderful. In this whole vast congregation there are only two people honest enough to admit they aren't Christians. Come up, ladies! I want to shake you by the hand."

(Continued on Page 179)

She leads away from aces and neglects to keep jump bids alive. But she is still my mother. —HEYWOOD BROUN: Collected Edition (Harcourt, Brace).

Pattern No. 1230

Beautiful Plastic SANDRAN (TRADE MARK)

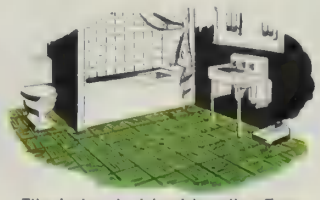
For out-of-this world beauty at a down-to-earth price there's nothing like Sandran . . . the new plastic floor covering with colors locked-for-life in durable vinyl plastic.



Here's revolutionary new cleaning ease. Sandran's non-porous surface simply sheds dirt . . . cleans easily without scrubbing.

Here's low-cost durability. It's the surface that counts! Sandran's rubbery, vinyl plastic out-wears more costly products. Unaffected by strong soaps and detergents . . . even lye won't hurt it!

Here's ease of installation, too. Lies flat without fastening or can be cemented. Install it yourself. It's flexible, easy to handle. Comes in rolls 6 and 9 feet wide . . . costs only a thrifty $1.79 a square yard in most areas.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

LOW-COST LUXURY FOR EVERY ROOM

Tile designs in rich rubber tile effect.

Tone-on-Tone patterns with the luxury look of deep pile carpet.

Buy Sandran Where You See This Authorized Dealer Sign

SANDRAN (TRADE MARK)

The Floor Covering of Irresistible Beauty!

FREE! Write for literature on Sandran and for information about all-plastic rooms. Sandura Company, Inc., 1411 Architects Bldg., Philadelphia 3, Pa. Also, manufacturers of SANDURA enamel surface floor covering and SANDURA-WALL plastic wall covering.

The NEW MAYTAG AUTOMATIC gets clothes cleanest!

Only Maytag has Gyrafoam action

Gyrafoam washing action! That's wh it takes to wash clothes really clean. An the Maytag Automatic is the only aut matic that has it.

Gyrafoam action has been proved in m lions of homes as the best and safest wa to remove even the most stubborn di and grime.

Completely automatic, your new Mayt is so easy to use. Just set two simple co trols. Maytag washes, rinses, spin-dri your clothes. It does the complete was then even turns itself off. Your cloth are fluffy, light, tangle-free, almost read to iron!

Put your Maytag anywhere—it needs bolting down.

When you choose your automatic wash —look for the name you can have con dence in—Maytag. The Maytag Compan Newton, Iowa

Maytag

WASHERS ▪ IRONERS ▪ RANGES • FREEZE

America's Biggest Washer Value! Gyrafoam ac tion, big double-walled tub, exclusive Roller Wate Remover, three models. Choice of more than 6,000,00 homemakers. See your dealer for free demonstratio

New! The Maytag Dutch Oven Gas Range!

Everything you want in a range. Big, super-insulated oven keeps all the heat in – cooks with gas turned off. Table-Serve broiler, Dutch cooker well, visual height controls, and giant burners which cook faster with less gas.

No other range is so easy to keep clean. Your dealer has six Maytag gas ranges to show you.

(Continued from Page 177)

We two Ethels went up and he asked us ho we were. I told him that I was Ethel Waters and that maybe I had no right being here, seeing that I was singing songs at Gordon's saloon just a few blocks away.

"Ethel Waters," he said. "The name is familiar."

"It should be to you," I told him, reminding him how he'd once extended a Children's Revival meeting three whole nights just to save me.

Reverend Williams reached down and took my hand again and held it as he preached a sermon that tore the hearts out of that big congregation, and my heart out of me.

"I admire the courage of these two people who remained standing," he said. "This girl refused to lie. She is a child of God. Yes, she is the real Christian."

Though I'm deeply religious, I still do not go often to any churches, except Catholic ones. A church is to me a sacred place, and when I hear somebody say, "Oh, there's Ethel Waters!" I feel embarrassed. In church I am not Ethel Waters, the actress, but just another worshiper of God.

Religion is a strong, healthy thing. Any God you worship is good, if he brings you love. The Catholic religion gives you a beautiful image to cuddle. I, who have always believed in an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, try to get God in my corner. His is almost like an inner voice, soothing and calming.

And, at home, I talk a great deal to Jesus. Often He is my only playmate.

EACH day, Mom seemed to get a little weaker. I was spending a lot of time with her, singing the songs she liked and trying to make her comfortable. But the arguments between Louise and Norman became too much for Mom and she said she'd go and stay with Aunt Ide. Ide now lived so far out in Chester that you had to go to the end of the trolley line, then walk a mile.

When Mom left, I was sick from overeating. I was born hungry and always was a glutton, gorging and eating ravenously every chance I got. What made me sick this time was eating a lot of fried fish and applesauce, and lemonade to top it off. It was a bad time to be sick. My parents were breaking up their home again. Genevieve was going to live with her father's people. Momweeze was going to work in Atlantic City. I begged her to take me with her, but she wouldn't. Mom, of course, was too ill to take care of me, yet nobody seemed to be worrying about where or how I was going to live.

At some dances I'd met Merritt Purnsley, a little fellow whom everybody called Buddy. He was twenty-three, being almost twice my age. There was something about him I disliked and feared, even though he was attractive.

Buddy had attempted some passes, but Genevieve had always been around in her well-paid post as guardian of my virtue. While I was sick, Buddy kept coming around to see me, and one night he asked me to marry him. It seemed to me that he only wanted to marry me because he couldn't get me any other way.

I told him I didn't want to marry him. I told Momweeze about his proposal and also that I didn't like him. But when Buddy kept on bothering me to marry him, I told him, "Ask Momweeze. If she says all right, I'll marry you."

I just wanted to get rid of him and counted on my mother to refuse, for she knew very well what I thought of Buddy. But when he asked her about it, she double-crossed me by saying, "Yes, you can marry my Ethel."

I felt betrayed and thought she'd agreed only because marrying me off to Buddy was an easy way of eliminating me as a problem. I was twelve. I was in the sixth grade and wouldn't be thirteen for six months. I believe the minimum age for marriage in Pennsylvania then was twenty-one, but that didn't stop Buddy Purnsley from getting a license. Large though I was for my age, I didn't look twenty-one. So he got an older girl to go with him and got the license in my name.

Buddy found a minister who would marry us. My wedding gown was a skirt and a blouse. That wedding was awful, and I was heartbroken because Mom couldn't be there. We were just two people standing in one of those smoky little rooms.

When Louise left for Atlantic City she gave us the furniture—along with the unpaid installment bills. "It will give you a start," she said.

The installments—fifty cents a week for this, seventy-five cents for that—didn't seem much. But they are a lot when you are earning only a few dollars a week. Buddy had a job with the Pennsylvania Steel Casting Company, and wasn't overpaid. I didn't know anything about cooking then, and his Aunt Martha, who came to live with us, took care of that. She was nice and so was his mother.

After I was married, I continued going to school until June, when I finished the sixth grade. I worked after school hours and when school closed I went out, working by the day.

". . . or take Mary's stockings. I'm assuming, of course, that you're still making thirty-seven-fifty a week. . . ."

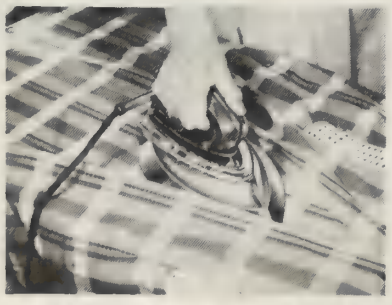
AMERICA'S FASTEST IRON...

saves 26 minutes of every ironing hour!

UNIVERSAL Stroke-Sav·r

BY ACTUAL TEST against five other leading irons, the new Stroke-Sav·r proved almost twice as fast, and saved four out of ten strokes!

MAKE A 10-DAY HOME TRIAL



Take this amazing iron home and prove to yourself what it can do. If you are not convinced it is the finest iron you ever owned, the entire price of $12.95* will be refunded!

NEW EXTRA LARGE SIZE gives 37% more ironing surface than ordinary irons . . . yet weighs only 3¼ lbs. Now pretreated with miracle "Pantastic" for easier gliding strokes and to keep starch from sticking.

NEW REVOLUTIONARY SHAPE with rounded heel enables sweeping strokes backward or forward without wrinkling or bunching. The Stroke-Sav·r is actually two irons in one—long and low for dainty pieces—extra sized for flat work.

NEW WIDE SLOPING BEVEL glides into pleats, ruffles and under buttons without interrupting stroke. Makes ironing easier.

SINCE 1842 *Price is Fair Traded in states where appropriate Fair Trade Acts exist.

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

UL

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Being a Catholic, I believed seriously in marriage, and wanted to be a good wife. But Buddy insisted I give up everything I liked—dancing, roller skating and my friends. He even tried to stop me from talking to the neighbors. He also bewildered me by accusing me of being unfaithful to him.

What upset me most was Buddy's refusal to take me out to Aunt Ide's. I'd heard that Mom was getting steadily worse. One Sunday I went there with a gang of other people. I found Mom lying on the same kind of broken-down couch she'd had in our house. She looked terribly ill, shrunken. She was dying, and I knew it. She asked me to sing His Eye is on the Sparrow and I Know He Watches Me. As I sang it, I wondered if it was the last time she'd ever hear it.

It was. On Friday of that week Vi came in from Ide's house. She said, "The doctor was just out there. I don't think that Mom can make it."

I started right away, but Mom had passed on by the time I got there. She was still lying on the couch and I picked her up in my arms. She weighed so little—ninety pounds, eighty pounds, nothing. I held Mom tight, Mom who had been all heart and fighting fury. I thought of how hard she'd worked for the little she'd wanted from life, and how she never got that little—a clean shack to come back to on her day off, children who didn't disgrace her, the smell and the good taste of respectability. But she'd kept her head up, never quitting or whimpering. I thought, too, of how, after she acknowledged defeat with her own children, she had turned to me, the unwanted, unloved one, seeing I was so much like her, bold, unvanquished as yet, and strong.

I had the undertaker, Mrs. Parker, bring Mom to our house and laid to rest there in her coffin. Each morning I would put the crape out for her. Then I would go in, sit down and talk with her. It wasn't like Mom at all. At last, there was peace in her face.

On the day set for the funeral, Momweeze came up from Atlantic City. Vi, too, was there, and Charlie. Only Ching, whom Mom loved best, and who lived just a few doors away, couldn't make it.

Ching was so drunk she couldn't leave the house. But when they brought the coffin out into the dusty, littered alley, Ching was sitting at her window, watching. And she was singing in her sweet, low voice Flee as a Bird to the Mountain, a song she and Mom had always loved.

Momweeze was mad at Ching for getting so drunk she couldn't attend her own mother's funeral. But I thought I understood. Ching, once so gay and carefree, just couldn't face seeing Mom being buried in the earth. Three months later Ching, too, was dead from grief over losing my grandmother.

With Mom and Ching both gone, things got worse for me. I was getting fed up with Buddy's charges that I was unfaithful and his refusal to allow me to see my young friends. Often he berated and beat me.

I couldn't understand it. I was doing everything possible to please him, but getting only scorn and abuse. One night I came home and Buddy was waiting. He jumped on me and beat me until both his brother and Aunt Martha interfered.

"Don't you dare beat her again," Martha said.

With my face all bruised, I told her, "It's all right. I'm going to leave him. If I don't, I'll just have to kill him."

Some of the anger and determination I was capable of must have come through, because Buddy didn't say anything. As a further challenge, I purposely stayed out late the next night, going to see my cousin, who lived uptown. When I got home, my dinner was on the table and Buddy had no questions to ask. He seemed contrite, and I said nothing about the beating.

But I'd made up my mind to leave him, though I had to stay for a while until I'd paid the bills for Mom's funeral.

Buddy refused to go to work for three days, and just sat around the house. I worked each day in order to lay away a little money. I was always able to go back to any place where I'd worked before. The people I worked for were glad to see me come back, for I never wasted time and always did the best and most thorough job I could.

On the fourth day, Buddy announced he would go back to work. Meekly, he asked me to bring him his lunch, and I agreed.

I packed the few belongings I had into paper boxes, and took the trolley car to Philadelphia.

During the next few weeks I was bombarded with post cards and letters from Buddy, telling how brokenhearted he was and saying he'd commit suicide if I didn't come back to him.

I wrote one answer to all these. "If you dare set foot on this here soil of Philadelphia, I'll have you put in jail for the bad things you did to me."

The marriage had lasted less than a year. At thirteen, I was married, separated and on my own. I had a certain amount of battle cry in me.

Having no one but Momweeze to hold on to, now that Mom was gone, I worked hard to win her affection. I gave her a servantlike devotion, but I couldn't get close. Her answer to everything I did was "I borned you! I borned you!"

Sometimes I think this big size of mine has prevented me from becoming a human being. Nobody's protective instinct seems to be aroused by a huge girl. I was so eager to feel sheltered and have people like me. I was hungry for a kind word. When it didn't come, I cried inwardly but, being myself, I also began to build up my defenses.

An act of folly isn't foolish, when you know it for the folly it is.

—LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH, All Trivia. (Harcourt, Brace)

Looking back now, I can remember that I was a thin-structured child with a pretty face. But no one then, or ever, could convince me that I had any physical charms.

I started to work in hotels as a substitute for dishwashers, cleaning women, waitresses or bus boys, whoever happened to have a day off. Such jobs were always available because the work was so rugged. And I always worked hard at whatever I was given to do. I guess the feeling of being unwanted and belonging to nobody made me eager to give satisfaction and win the respect of my employers.

My mother had been working as a scullion at the Harrod apartments, in Philadelphia, and when she got sick I replaced her. That was the first place I ever was employed on a steady basis. I looked forward to working with the same people every day. There were eleven in help at the Harrod apartments, besides me—four bellboys and a substitute, a head cook and second cook, two chambermaids and two waitresses.

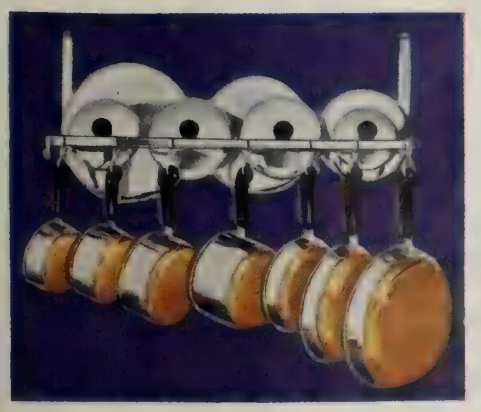
I had the most fun on the days when I substituted for one of the chambermaids. I was allotted a half hour to make up each room, but soon became so efficient I could finish the work in ten minutes. Then I'd lock the door, stand in front of the full-length mirror and transform myself into Ethel Waters, the great actress. I played all sorts of roles, and also the audience, mugging and acting like mad. Sometimes I'd be so carried away by my own magnificent performance that I'd forget where I was or what I was supposed to be doing.

Each year, when it got warm, large numbers of Philadelphia's working folks went off to jobs in Atlantic City, Asbury Park and Wildwood, New Jersey. The summer I was fifteen I became a waitress in one of the big white hotels in Wildwood.

Because of my memory and eagerness to please, I was a good waitress. The cook in the hotel loved me and called me "Baby" because I shared my extra-big tips with her. And whenever a customer handed me a dollar to give the cook, she really got it. I never kept that money as some of the other girls did.

(Continued on Page 182)

American Beauties...



. . . Revere style! Yes, each and every one of these bright beauties is in the grand Revere tradition . . . lovely-to-look-at . . . easy-to-use . . . and built to last a lifetime!

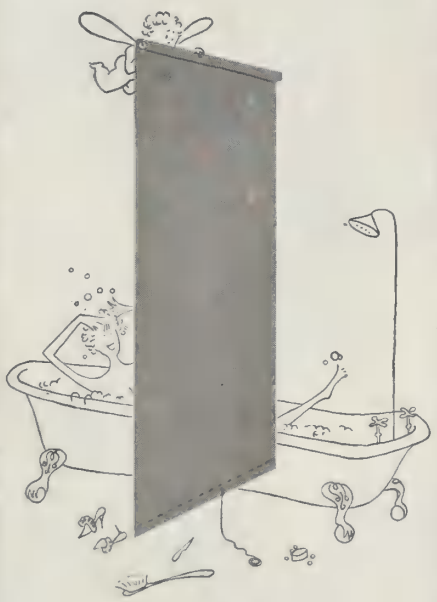
And what time and money-savers! Why, cooking the Revere "waterless" way makes preparing meals a pleasure. This modern method also preserves precious vitamins and minerals . . . adds new zest and flavor even to the simplest dishes.

And because these copper-clad stainless steel "Kitchen Jewels" resist pitting, stay bright and beautiful through the years, they're your most economical buy, too.

So whether you're interested in skillets, sauce pans, sauce pots, percolators, Dutch ovens or pressure cookers, be sure you ask for Revere Ware. There is nothing finer! But beware of imitations. Always look for the trade-mark in the thick copper bottom. Revere Copper and Brass Incorporated, Rome Manufacturing Company Division, Rome, N. Y.

Set off your gleaming "Kitchen Jewels" and save storage space with this handsome, convenient Revere De Luxe Rack.

TOUGH, SPRINGY,



LONG WALKING MILEAGE FOR RUGS

Carpet Cushion "shock-absorbs" wear so walking won't grind away the life and nap of your rugs. This resilient rubber sponge helps rugs last so much longer; it's real economy to enjoy luxury.

- Won't creep, slide, mat, pack or stretch
- Cuts to fit • Dust-free, non-allergic, moth-proof and sanitary.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Mishawaka, Indiana

for that SHADE of difference

Quality shades at every price from your local dealer . . . a houseful, if need be, delivered in no time flat.

HARTSHORN
WINDOW SHADES

250 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.
STEWART HARTSHORN LTD., TORONTO, CANADA

(Continued from Page 180)

One day a very light-complected, middle-aged man walked up to me in the hotel dining room. "Aren't you Ethel?" he said. "What's your last name?"

"Purnsley," I told him.

When he said he'd heard I was Ethel Waters, I explained about my marriage. "My name is Wright," he said, "and I'm married to your grandmother, Lydia Waters. She's hurt, Ethel. She lives here and you've been working here all summer, yet you haven't gone to see her."

"But I haven't been in contact with her for years, Mr. Wright."

"Do me a favor, Ethel, will you? Go around to see her the next time you have a day off."

I promised I would and he wrote out the address on a card.

The house Mrs. Lydia Waters lived in was a big Colonial-type home with tall white pillars in front. A very impressive-looking woman, who looked white, answered my ring. I explained who I was.

"I'm Lydia Waters, your grandmother," she said, and took me into her arms. I felt uncomfortable, because I couldn't think of Mrs. Waters as anything but a stranger whom Mom had regarded as our enemy.

She brought me into the house and tried to be cordial and affectionate, but I just couldn't let her pet me and fondle me. However, when she asked me to stay with her, I did—for a couple of weeks, off and on.

I think my grandmother was drawn to me, belatedly, because there had recently been another tragedy in her life. John Waters had left three sons. Elvi, the eldest, had died under mysterious circumstances the previous summer. A brilliant young pianist, he had competed for a fellowship in a leading academy. All entries but those of Elvi and another boy had been eliminated. Then one day Elvi's rival and some other youngsters invited him out in a fishing boat. They started skylarking and wrestling, finally capsizing the boat. Elvi, the only one who couldn't swim, had drowned.

This second tragedy had been almost too much for Mrs. Waters. Just as my father had been her favorite son, Elvi had been the grandchild she loved best. People afterward told me that Elvi had looked enough like me to be my twin. I believe that when she saw how closely I resembled both her loved ones she may have been conscience-stricken and wished to make amends for the manner in which she'd neglected me.

But it was too late. Our lives and our manner of living differed so that Lydia Waters and I had absolutely nothing to say to each other. It was difficult for me even to call her grandma, as she wished.

THOUGH Mrs. Waters lived long enough to see me enter show business, I never saw her after that summer in Wildwood.

I've always thought that I inherited some of the better qualities of both my grandmothers. From little Sally Anderson, who died in defeat and the grimmest poverty, I got my fighting heart. From Lydia Waters, who died rich, but heartbroken and quite possibly tortured by a bad conscience, I think I inherited poise, dignity and whatever intelligence I have.

No purpose would be served in condemning my grandmother. People are what they are and are sometimes governed by impulses and forces that are difficult for others to understand. Besides, as a child of the underworld, I learned early in life not to judge others. We outcasts are content to leave that job to our social superiors.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Personal Commentary

By Nacella Young

My friend attends a great machine
That gulps down steel, and time, and hope,
And gives her back a slip of paper
Sealed in a tidy envelope.

My children feed on sun and song,
And warm their little hands with verse.
And, judging from the folk around,
They might have fared a great deal worse.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

October 31, 1917, was a big day in my life. It was my seventeenth birthday, and I sneaked into the back room of Jack's Rathskeller, where there was a Halloween party going on. No one under twenty-one was supposed to be allowed in Philadelphia saloons. Some of the fellows on the door were the saloon men who had fed me hot meals when I was a hungry little kid. They would have turned me away, but they didn't recognize me, because I was wearing a mask.

YOUNGSTERS representing the wards all over Philadelphia were to compete in entertaining at that party. I was living in the old Seventh Ward. The girl who was supposed to perform for our district never showed up, and somebody at my table yelled:

"Chippie sings! Come on, Chippie!"

I was Chippie. And that night at Jack's Chippie Waters got up and sang the tearful ballad, When You're a Long, Long Way From Home. The crowd liked it and I had to give two or three encores.

Among the professionals there were Braxton and Nugent, who had a small vaudeville unit. They said that if I would work on the stage with them they could get me $10 a week.

The idea scared me. I told Braxton and Nugent that I was seventeen, too young to be on the stage. I was getting $3.50 a week as a scullion and chambermaid, and $1.25 more for taking home laundry. But that was steady work, something I'd learned to keep a half nelson on whenever possible.

The two vaudevillians talked it over with my mother. They told her they could get me two weeks in Baltimore if she would sign a paper, swearing I was twenty-one. She signed without any arguments. But I refused to go until she promised to replace me in my cleaning job and to hold it for me until I got back from Baltimore.

I bought the dress for my debut at a rummage store. It was eggshell satin, had buttons down the front, and fastened up around the neck. It was like a Russian dress, and on a scrawny young crane like me it was a costume.

I wanted to sing a new number that I'd once heard Charles Anderson, a very good female impersonator, do. Braxton and Nugent said it was a restricted song and I'd have to get permission from the copyright owners, Pace and Handy, in Memphis, Tennessee.

There was no radio then killing off popular songs in six weeks. Some song publishers permitted only one or two acts to do their restricted numbers. The idea was that these performers would feature the restricted song wherever they played, and in that way it would slowly become popular all over the country.

The song I wanted to sing was St. Louis Blues.

Pace and Handy answered my letter by granting me permission. That was how I, a seventeen-year-old novice, became the first woman—and the second person—ever to sing professionally that song which is, according to many people, the greatest blues ever written.

"Glamorous" is not quite the word for the Lincoln Theater, in Baltimore, and the other houses I played that season. Often there were no wings to the tiny stages, no back stage and no dressing rooms. You had to dress down under the stage, behind a thin partition. On the other side there was a partition behind which the men dressed. If someone was dancing on the stage you got out of there fast. If you didn't, plaster came down on your head.

(Continued on Page 185)

...of course, it's electric!

EXCLUSIVE SUPER-COROX UNIT . . . fastest heating electric range unit on the American market today. Saves many precious minutes.

Gets Red-Hot in 30 Seconds!

Sensational Westinghouse *SUPER-COROX Surface Unit on "Commander" Speed-Electric Range cooks bacon and eggs in 3 short minutes

You'll hardly believe your eyes when you see this fabulous new SUPER-COROX Unit in action. Talk about speed! It gives you piping hot soup for four in 3 minutes . . . makes afternoon tea for a quick pickup in less than 2 minutes . . . brings fresh or frozen vegetables to steaming in 3 short minutes . . . warms leftovers in less time than it takes to set the table. In a dozen other ways, this grand new unit clips precious minutes off meal preparation.

But speed's only half the story about this marvelous new Commander Speed-Electric Range. Wait 'till you see it.

It has exclusive Color-Glance Controls that tell by color which unit is on and at what heat.

The exclusive Miracle Oven bakes perfectly in any rack position. There's no shifting of hot racks . . . you can bake anywhere.

It gives you completely automatic cooking. The built-in electric timer gives automatic control of both oven and appliance outlet.

Choose a single or double-oven model in the new Commander. Both have the sensational SUPER-COROX Unit. See them, and the other great Westinghouse Speed-Electric Ranges at your retailer's, today. Prices start at $149.95. Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Appliance Division, Mansfield, Ohio.

*Trade Mark

COLOR-GLANCE CONTROLS . . . out of the Steam Zone. Each unit has the 5 different heats you need for all kinds of surface cooking.

NEW "RANCHO" SPEED-ELECTRIC RANGE . . . with extra tuck-away space. 4 surface units. Large True-Temp oven. Low price, high value.

See TV's Top Dramatic Show . . . "STUDIO ONE" . . . Every Week

YOU CAN BE SURE . . IF IT'S Westinghouse

Toaster-Oven · Mixer · Waste-Away · Cleaner · Tank Cleaner · Refrigerator · Home Freezer · Laundromat · Dryer · Water Heater · Iron · Exhaust Fan · Coffee Maker

"I did a slow burn for 180 days!"

says DEBORAH KERR, co-starring with STEWART GRANGER in MGM's "KING SOLOMON'S MINES" Color by Technicolor

WE TREKKED 6 MONTHS IN AFRICA TO MAKE "KING SOLOMON'S MINES." THE SIZZLING HEAT PARCHED ME TO THE BONE...MADE MY SKIN UNBEARABLY DRY!

ACTING thirsty took no talent in the desert. Even my skin was thirsty!

EVEN BETWEEN SCENES the African sun continued to sear and torture me.

BUT JERGENS LOTION kept my hands from looking sun-baked and harsh . . .

KEPT MY SKIN soft and delicate for romantic close-ups like this.

BEING LIQUID, Jergens Lotion is quickly absorbed by thirsty skin

CAN YOUR LOTION OR HAND CREAM PASS THIS "FILM TEST"?

To soften, a lotion or cream should be absorbed by upper layers of the skin. Jergens Lotion contains quickly-absorbed ingredients doctors recommend—no heavy oils that merely coat skin. Proof? Water won't "bead" on hand smoothed with Jergens Lotion (left hand) as with a lotion or cream that leaves a heavy, oily film (right hand).

YOU CAN PROVE it yourself with the simple test described above . . .

YOU'LL SEE why Jergens Lotion is my head-to-toe beauty secret . . .

Jergens Lotion

used by more women than any other hand care in the world still 10¢ to $1 plus tax

AND IS USED by Hollywood stars 7 to 1 over other hand cares!

(Continue[illegible]2)

most always, the audience gave a pep- performance than the people they'd e to see. Rugged individualists all, they whatever they pleased while you were ng yourself on the stage. They ran up and n the aisles, yelling greetings to friends sometimes having fights. And they ght everything to eat, from bananas to erday's pork chops.

ut they also were the most appreciative ences in the world if they liked you. 'd scream, stomp and applaud until the e building shook. Years later, when I stepped before a white audience, I ght I was a dead duck because no one to tear the house down. They merely ed their hands. Such restraint is almost er in the Negro vaudeville world that I e out of.

axton and Nugent had another man rmer and two girls, the Hill Sisters, ing with them. So they made me the l Hill sister.

was so frightened the first time I walked n a stage that Nugent had to hold my to prevent me from falling flat on my Our entrance was a man-and-wife argu- t, and I sank into a rocking chair soon could, happy to get off my feet.

cting disgusted, Nugent said, "I'm going my other chick."

Don't leave me, sugar," I pleaded. ase don't leave me."

ter Nugent went off, I'd sit there, rock- adly.

When I see how my man treats me," I'd n, "I get the St. Louis Blues." Then I d sing the St. Louis s, but very softly. It he first time that kind egro audience ever let kind of low singing get And you could have d a pin drop in that h, rowdy audience.

hat first time, when I ed singing St. Louis s, the money fell like rain on the stage. ent had to come on again to get me off would have been sitting there yet. But he picked up the silver for me, the ite money," as it sometimes is respect- called.

tarted sending home money at the end of first week out of my $10 and the coins ent turned over to me. I've never ped that and never will want to. Help- my family has always been the biggest faction I've got out of show business.

ven the applause didn't convince me I all right. After each performance I'd off my make-up, including my Ford ling eyebrows, and rush out to the lobby ear what the people were saying. They 't recognize me without my make-up. No ographs had been taken of me for the y displays. Instead, the management put out an enormous picture of a big, fat an. Written under this was:

Sweet Mama Stringbean, direct from St. Louis, And Singing St. Louis Blues."

hey called me Sweet Mama Stringbean use I was so scrawny and tall. And may- because there was a very famous male ngbean in Negro vaudeville at the time.

SWEET MAMA STRINGBEAN stopped working Braxton and Nugent the night we con- ed our two-week engagement in Balti- e. But I didn't go back to Philadelphia. ggie and Jo Hill invited me to join their The girls thought we could get $50 a k. My third, they pointed out, plus the ey thrown on the stage, would mean I'd ll right.

hat tour with the Hill Sisters was a gay enture, exhilarating and interesting. It owed the patchwork pattern of my child- d—melodrama all mixed up with belly hs. Only now the gay surprises predom- ed.

d been away from home almost a full . My return to Philadelphia turned into ething of a triumph when we were booked for two weeks into the Standard Theater, where I'd watched shows from the peanut gallery. It was still the city's leading Negro showhouse and the engagement meant I was recognized in my home town as an established professional performer.

After we closed at the Standard, we broke up our act. Jo went back into night-club work. I took a job bussing dishes at Horn and Hardart's Automat. I got seventy-five cents a day with one hot meal thrown in.

I didn't look upon this as any comedown. I've never been able to feel that there is anything undignified about making your living by the sweat of your brow.

I HADN'T been hustling dishes at the Automat very long when Toots Moore, a drummer who was working in Barney Gordon's big saloon, came to see me.

"There's a fill-in job at Barney's," he said. "He needs a singer to work Friday and Saturday nights. He pays two bucks a night and the tips are good there. Why don't you take it, Ethel?"

Barney hired me, and after I'd sung two nights at his place he offered me a steady job at $15 a week. I sang there six nights a week and on Thursday afternoons.

But before I took the full-time job at Barney's I asked the manager of Horn and Hardart's if I could come back and work for him when I finished my job in the saloon.

"Any time at all, Ethel," he said. "You're a hard and willing worker."

I got vast satisfaction out of that. I was a hard and willing worker and it always pleased me when my bosses noticed it.

Every man should keep a fair-sized cemetery in which to bury the faults of his friends.
—HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Barney Gordon's saloon was on the ground floor. We entertained, though, in a big room upstairs where the customers sat at tables. There was only a two-piece band: Toots Moore, the drummer, and a piano player who could play in only two keys.

For a short while I lost my voice trying to sing in his two keys. Barney kept me on while my vocal cords were making their recovery because I could shimmy so good. Shimmeshewabble, the big shimmy song, had just come out. When the boys played that, I'd put my hands on my hips and work my body fast, without moving my feet. There was never anything vulgar about my fast and furious wrigglings. Even in towns where other girl performers were stopped from shimmying by the local bluenoses, no one objected to me doing it.

However, it was my blues that drew big trade and soon Barney hung out banners reading, "Our Ethel is Back!" to draw in all my old friends.

Barney Gordon's was no temple of culture and refinement. But there, as in the tough spots up in Harlem where I worked later, I had little trouble with drunk or rowdy customers.

One good reason for this was that I had several paternal-minded sporting men watching out for me. The Brown brothers, Willie and Louis, were bartenders. Another protector of mine at Gordon's was Jack Blackburn, the old-time lightweight who afterward trained Joe Louis. The Browns and Jack Blackburn would have slapped me from Independence Square to West Philadelphia if they saw me doing anything they thought would hurt me. Of course, being sporting men, their ideas about this were on the unorthodox side.

By that time I had acquired a boy friend. He was West Indian Johnny, a big-time gambler, whose real last name was Sinclair. Johnny was tall, dark and handsome. He spoke five languages and was very kind and easygoing. I'd met him years before at Pop Grey's dancing place on South Street and he knew my whole family. He was twice my age and seemed an old man to me. But I was very fond of him.

I was getting such good tips at Gordon's that I was able to support my whole family. I was happy to assume that responsibility.

The big menace of my teen-age came into my life in Barney Gordon's saloon. I'll call

Are you always Lovely to Love?

Suddenly, breathtakingly, you'll be embraced . . . held . . . kissed. Perhaps tonight.

Be sure that you are always lovely to love; charming and alluring. Your deodorant may make the difference. That's why so many lovely girls depend on FRESH Cream Deodorant. Test FRESH against any other deodorant—see which stops perspiration . . . prevents odor better! FRESH is different from any deodorant you have ever tried—creamier, more luxurious, and really effective!

For head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap. Used regularly, it is 20 times as effective as other type soap in preventing body perspiration odor, yet mild and gentle.

NIBLETS BRAND SWEET CORN

A little horn-tootin' is in order. The Green Giant's done it again! Now in your store is the new, sweeter-than-ever, 1950-model Niblets Brand—the best-eatin' corn ever was. Fill up your arms with cans for the fresh-shucked flavor of tender young corn-on-the-cob without the cob!

Green Giant Co., headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario.

"Niblets" Brand Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. © G.G.Co.

him Rocky, because he's still around. For almost a month he came there three or four times a week to hear me sing. I never saw him because he sat in another room, out of sight. But each time he sent a dollar to me by a waiter with a request that I sing his favorite song, I Lost You So Why Should I Care.

I had got pretty curious about this man who stayed in the back room while I sang his favorite ballad. And one night he sent the waiter to ask if I'd have a drink with him.

"Tell him I don't drink nothing but milk," I told the waiter, "and that the customers get disgusted and say they won't buy me any milk."

Word came back that this customer would be very happy to buy me milk if I'd sit with him. I went to the other room. To my surprise, the man who always wanted to hear I Lost You So Why Should I Care turned out to be just my age. He was very good-looking, and immaculately dressed.

"Why do you sit back here," I asked him, "where you can't watch me as I sing your song?"

A dreamy look came into his eyes. "I like to visualize you as I listen to you sing. It relaxes me."

Each time he came in after that I'd sit with him a while, drinking my milk. One night he asked me to go for a ride in his car. I probably wouldn't have gone if I hadn't been annoyed with West Indian Johnny.

I was used to Johnny's going away for three or four days at a time to sit in big-stake, round-the-clock poker games. But this time I'd heard that a woman gambler had come down from New York to tangle with the best local card players—and had decided to go shooting for my Johnny. "Shooting," in underworld talk, sometimes means going after somebody's affections. Resenting that, I went for the ride with Rocky.

A few days later West Indian Johnny came to see me. "I hear that boy you went riding with is no good," he said. "I don't want you seen around with him."

"You're not my boss, Johnny," I told him.

ROCKY didn't come around for a whole week after that, and I kept thinking about him. During our car ride he hadn't made a pass at me, which made him almost unique in my experience with men.

One evening, on reporting to work, I was handed a five-dollar bill with a message to call up Rocky. I phoned the number and the woman who answered said Rocky wanted me to bring him some oranges and sandwiches wh[illegible] work, and gav[illegible] the address.

When I ar[illegible]ed at the house with food, Rocky said he hadn't been arou[illegible] see me because he had been sick.

I'd expected that I might have to figh[illegible] way out of the place, but again he ma[illegible] grab for me at all. Instead, he talked t[illegible] like some poet, and I'd never heard an[illegible] talk like that before.

He said I was beautiful and used ey[illegible] sions like "Your hair is lovely as black r[illegible] light." Stuff like that. I was intrigued, [illegible] was something entirely new to me. And [illegible] joyed sitting there and not being claw[illegible] and mauled, just listening to his high[illegible] sweet-talk.

ROCKY mentioned marriage that nigh[illegible] I said that was impossible because [illegible] married to somebody else. And he just[illegible] on talking in language that rippled and[illegible] and danced. I got more and more mysti[illegible] and fascinated.

If I'd known more about junkers, I [illegible] have suspicioned he was one. I later le[illegible] that all junkers talk in terms of beaut[illegible] unreality when they've been "smoking[illegible]

For weeks after that, Rocky continu[illegible] be a perfect gentleman, behaving as th[illegible] I were some fragile and lovely flower. B[illegible] time I discovered he was a knight on a [illegible] horse only when high, and a sniv[illegible] treacherous human wreck the rest o[illegible] time, I was hooked, a girl well sunk.

Meanwhile, West Indian Johnny had [illegible] investigating Rocky. One night at Go[illegible] he got us both to a table. "Ethel is a [illegible] girl," he told Rocky. "I want you to [illegible] her alone. I hear you smoke hop. I hea[illegible] steal."

"I don't steal," said Rocky.

"Hop?"

"I don't smoke no more. I was sic[illegible] my doctor started me on a habit. But I [illegible] hop now."

I could see that West Indian Johnny [illegible] believe one word of this. But the mo[illegible] put the knock in against Rocky, the [illegible] stubborn I became.

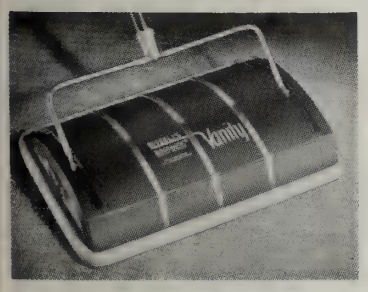
No one could disillusion me about h[illegible] was at a movie one day when Kid As[illegible] city detective, slipped into the next sea[illegible] known him since I was little and a[illegible] called him Uncle Kid.

"Ethel, why don't you stay away [illegible] that Rocky?" he asked. "I sent word t[illegible] about what sort of man he is through [illegible] Indian Johnny. Didn't Johnny tell you [illegible] him?"

"And take the birds—is it the female who wears the bright colors? . . . No, sir, it's the male! . . . Take the lion ——"

Jean gets scolded...

You can't cut paper dolls without making snips on the rug. But if mother has to get out the vacuum again, she's apt to get pretty snippy herself. And innocent Jean has her fun spoiled.



Janie doesn't...

Her mother admires the dolls, and then whisks out her handy Bissell Sweeper for a quick clean-up. No need to plug in the vacuum except for heavy over-all cleaning. "Saves a lot of time to have both!" this smiling mother says.

Only BISSELL has "BISCO-MATIC"* brush action

You don't bear down at all! This miracle-action brush adjusts itself to any rug, thick or thin, with no handle pressure. Sweeps clean even under low furniture and hard-to-get places!

New Bissell Sweepers with "Bisco-matic" Brush Action as low as $6.95. Illustrated: the "Vanity" at $8.95. Prices a little more in the West.

BISSELL SWEEPERS

Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's full spring controlled brush.

I didn't reply.

"I just took Rocky downtown," whispered Uncle Kid Asher.

"Downtown" meant only one thing, of course: police headquarters. Within an hour I had arranged with Barney Gordon's brother, a bail bondsman, to get my pick-pocket-lover out of the jug. I'd been raised to $20 a week and was getting plenty of tips. But after that day I had to bail out Rocky so often I was working for nothing.

And before long, I discovered that West Indian Johnny had made no mistake when he accused Rocky of being a junker as well as a thief.

Being a child of the underworld, the Jekyll-and-Hyde character of my boy friend fascinated me more than it shocked me. When high, nobody could be more pleasant, courtly and attentive than Rocky. But off the stuff, he was cross and irritable.

The fear of going to jail haunted Rocky. When flush, he kept a couple of hundred dollars around the house so I'd be able to bail him out whenever he was arrested. But it wasn't the iron bars that terrified him nearly so much as being in a place where he couldn't get junk. That always threw him into a state of wild fright.

The belief that dope fiends try to inveigle other people into going on a habit with them is nonsense. Junk is far too expensive to share with anyone else. Rocky never suggested I try it.

Soon afterward, he was drafted into the Army and was sent to a camp in Chillicothe, Ohio.

The war made business drop off sharply at places like Gordon's. I was laid off except for a couple of nights a week and went back to working part time at Horn and Hardart's.

Then I got a wire from Joe Bright, the Negro actor-producer, who'd been on bills with me in the South. Joe was putting on stock shows at the Lincoln Theater, in Harlem, and offered me a week's work there. Besides singing the blues between acts, I'd have a few lines to speak in the olio show, the wire said.

I took the engagement.

NEW YORK is only about ninety miles from Philadelphia, but was The Big Time as no other American city has ever been. On reaching New York, I went straight to Harlem, and stayed there.

One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street was still a white boulevard, and we weren't welcome there. Colored people could only buy seats in the peanut gallery to B. F. Keith's Alhambra Theater, and none at all to the other white showhouses. Our people were even barred from the burlesque house on 125th Street, which marks high tide, I think, in white snobbishness.

For entertainers, the last stop on the way down in show business was Edmond's Cellar, at 132nd Street and Fifth Avenue. After you had worked there, there was no place to go except into domestic service. Edmond's drew the sporting men, the hookers and other assorted underworld characters.

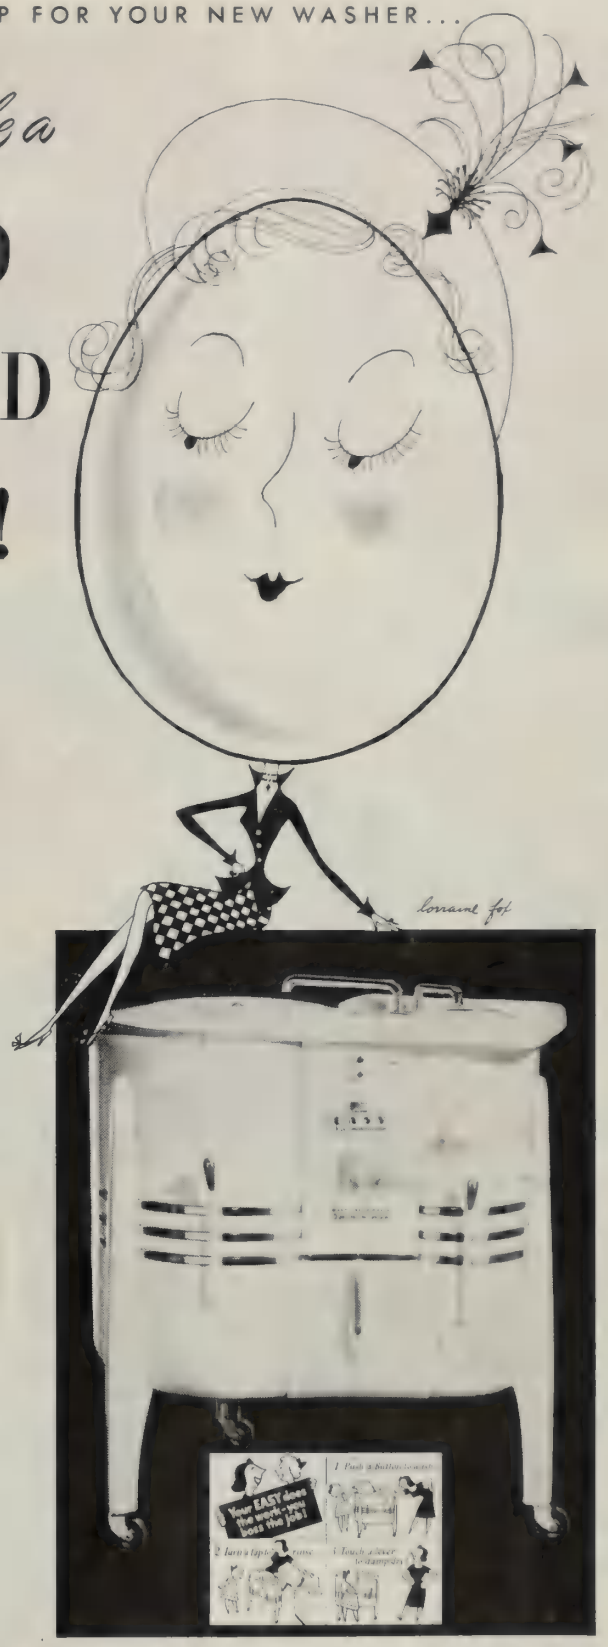
I was given a good reception at the Lincoln Theater and was held over for the second week. What pleased me most was that so many entertainers who had caught my act at Barney Gordon's dropped in to see me.

Alice Ramsey, a dancer whom I'd met in the South, came backstage. Alice said she was working at Edmond's. "Why go back to Philadelphia when you're through here?" she asked. "I want you to come down and meet my boss, Edmond."

I promised I'd do that when I'd concluded my engagement at the Lincoln. While working I never care to go to night clubs. I always worried about the heavy cigarette smoke hurting my throat. When I did go down to Edmond's, Alice, after introducing me to Edmond (Mule) Johnson, suggested that I go out on the floor and do my Shimmeshewabble number.

"Will you give Ethel a job?" she asked him after he'd watched me work.

He shrugged. "If she wants to put her money in the kitty, she can work here."



(Continued on Page 189)

WHEN YOU SHOP FOR YOUR NEW WASHER...

It pays to be a

HARD BOILED EGG!

SPEED! When the man says "It's faster", ask him "Faster than what?" No washer can match the two-tub Easy Spindrier for speed. It does a week's wash in less than an hour!

DRYING! When he says "It does a good drying job" remember Easy whirls out 25% more water than a wringer. Clothes are lighter to handle and hang up, dry faster... no broken buttons.

CLEANER! Easy's gentle roll-over Spiralator action washes all clothes in all parts of the big capacity tub!

SAVINGS! Easy saves live hot suds for re-use . . . safely does "washable" drapes, slipcovers. No set tubs needed . . . Just roll it to any sink.

RINSING! Does it work equally well with soap or new "no-rinse" detergents? That's where Easy shines! With soap, clothes are automatically spin-rinsed in 3 minutes right in the spinning basket. With "no-rinse" detergents, many women skip the rinse, or spin-rinse 60 seconds to be doubly-sure. Easy's high-speed spinning action whirls away the dirt held in the suds!

IN WRINGERS TOO, hard boiled buyers choose Easy! Wonderful Spiralator action. Massive safety wringer. Automatic overload safety switch. Quick drain pump. See it in action.

PRICE! Compare prices. Easy gives you faster, whiter, brighter washes than any washer at any price. Easy Washing Machine Corporation, Syracuse 1, N. Y.

You'll end up buying an EASY SPINDRIER

Nourishing

BEEF

You will spread it good nutrition and flavor furthe
with cuts like th

Braising is best for leaner cuts

Braising is a method of moist heat cookery in which the meat is browned in a little hot fat, then cooked slowly in a covered utensil with a small amount of added liquid.

1. Season meat with salt and pepper. (Sprinkle with flour, for a richer brown.)

2. Brown meat slowly on all sides in a little hot fat.

3. Add small amount of liquid. As liquid cooks away, a little more may be added.

4. Cover tightly. Cook over low heat at simmering temperature on top of range or in moderately low (325° F.) oven, until meat is tender.

Fall roundup time in the cattle country means that your meat market will have a seasonal increase in the hearty-flavored beef cuts shown on this page.
So isn't this the time to make the most of those sure-fire family favorites—short ribs, pot roasts, Swiss steak, country-fried steak —and plenty of that good beef gravy.
These cuts of beef are as long on nourishment as they are on flavor. Like all meat, beef is an outstanding source of complete, high-quality protein, B vitamins, food iron and other important minerals. So when you're building menus, remember the body-building nourishment of meat.

This Seal means nutritional sta made in this ad ment are accep the Council on and Nutrition American M Association.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U.S.

(Continued from Page 187)

Edmond paid his entertainers and the boys in the three-piece band $2 each per night. The tips the customers gave you were thrown into the kitty and this money was divided, each entertainer and musician drawing an equal share.

Edmond's was a small place and seated between 150 and 200 people at tables jammed close together around a handkerchief-sized dance floor. Usually Johnny Lee was at the piano, but the first night I went there his fill-in man, One-Leg Shadow, was at the box. It turned out that One-Leg Shadow had known my father and so he took a paternal interest in me.

There was a code of ethics at Edmond's that prevented one entertainer from poaching on another's repertory. But I was okay, as my blues and my shaking didn't conflict with the others.

I am no stoolie, but I don't think it can hurt anybody if I say now there were many bunkers, gamblers and thieves down in that cellar at all times. As at the Lincoln, I was amazed at how many people who listened to me had seen me before, at Gordon's.

I soon found out why. Whenever the lid was screwed down tight in New York, plenty of those customers would skip down to Philadelphia. They would stay down there until they got the word over the grapevine, "Come home. The district attorney has gone into long winter's nap again."

At Edmond's I sang the numbers I'd done at the Lincoln—Shimmeshewabble; St. Louis Blues; Minor's Blues, and I Want to Be Somebody's Baby Doll So I Can Get My Lovin' All of the Time.

Though I often look back on that time as the happiest in my life, working in that cellar was like my tour. There was no set closing time and once again I was working until unconscious. You'd report at nine o'clock at night and sometimes not get out of there until eight, or even ten, the next morning.

I'd established right from the beginning that I wouldn't do no hustling of drinks. I wouldn't drink either whisky or the colored water that looked like whisky they served to the girls who didn't want to get pie-eyed. I didn't want to sit out with customers who blew smoke in my face. I wasn't selling my physical health for nobody.

Edmond didn't let his girls roll the customers or chisel money from the customers. He considered that cheap stuff and unethical. When the customers wanted to buy me a drink I ordered, as always, milk. And just as at Barney Gordon's, the customer would usually yell, "I ain't buying no damned milk!"

But when somebody would buy milk, Mr. Perkins, the friendly and fatherly bartender who worked there, would give me the top cream off the bottle. Usually, I drank an average of seven or eight quarts of milk a day. That's how skinny and underfed I still was. I always had to laugh when I thought of Mr. Perkins pouring off the creamy tops of the milk for me. That meant when any customer ordered a whisky eggnog the milk he got in it was skimmed and very thin.

Shadow was replaced by Lou Henley, a truly wonderful pianist who kept telling me I ought to learn other type songs. Lou got me to sing the popular ballads of the day—Oh, How I Miss You Tonight; My Buddy; Rose of Washington Square, and A Pretty Girl is Like a Melody.

Fanny Brice was making a sensation downtown singing Rose of Washington Square. But I didn't know anything about the white theater. At the time, I didn't even know who Fanny Brice was.

Many critics have praised my voice, but I've never thought I was a good singer. That I not only was able to please that brass-knuckle crowd of regulars, but began to draw the sporting men and downtown white people, I credit to the fact that I had spunk, and was also an enigma. I was a kid, yet my mind was so old and raw that neither the public nor my coworkers could figure me out.

In the summer Edmond's Cellar became a furnace that could melt your bones—and our boss had to close up for the season. I was invited to sing at Rafe's Paradise, in Atlantic City, a big club with mostly all white patrons.

Before going into the Paradise, I made Rafe understand that I didn't hustle drinks, sit and drink with the customers or go out on any arranged dates. But I did love to dance, so I danced with the customers. White men often were eager to dance with the performers. The other Negro girls in the show just wouldn't dance with them. Colored people can't bear to dance with white folks. Invariably, whites dance in a broken rhythm, don't listen to the music, and count. They're off the beat most of the time.

About that time they were casting in Harlem a show they were calling Mayor of Jimtown. Miller and Lyles and Sissle and Blake were writing and producing it and were also going to appear in it. They hoped to send this show downtown. When Broadway finally saw this all-colored production, it had the title Shuffle Along, and it was the fast-moving musical that made theatrical history and opened the trail for all the successful Negro musicals and big revues that followed.

I was trying to get a job in that show. I wanted to get away from smoky night-club work, even if I was only to go in the chorus or in a walk-on part.

Snow Fisher, a friend of mine who was in the show, said, "Don't go down to see them no more, Ethel. They say you're not the type."

Snow was giving me the right steer. The Shuffle Along producers still classed me as a Fifth Avenue honky-tonk performer. Unlike downtown, where Fifth Avenue is considered elegant and very brownstone, in Harlem it was the street of about-to-be-forgotten entertainers.

During that winter I made my first appearance on Seventh Avenue when I was asked to appear at one of the special Sunday-night shows at the Lafayette Theater, the uptown Palace. Those Sunday shows were events. Harlem's dicties got their first gander at my work that evening. They knew performers and they decided that I had a future bigger than my present or my past.

Getting into a stage show had become my greatest ambition. I was determined to show the Shuffle Along men they'd made a big mistake in rejecting my services. Traveling shows were being put on by Whitney and Tutt, colored producers, and by Frank Montgomery, the performer.

Frank said he could use me for blackface comedy. That meant working in burnt cork. The name of his show, I think, was Hello, 1919! I sang and did a crowjane character with Brown, of Brown and Gulfport. In this I played a sort of blind-date bride whose groom refuses to marry her after getting a good look at her face. I also did a dance in the show. The white audiences thought I was white, my features being what they are, and at every performance I'd have to take off my gloves to prove I was a spade.

The big and memorable feature of the Hello, 1919! tour was that we showgirls were forced to live in bawdy houses in each town, no other accommodations being available. As we hit each city, the management would register our names with the police so the cops, checking up on the red-light district, would know we weren't "house girls."

Hot Biscuits are just the beginning!

Strawberry Shortcake

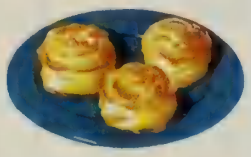
Bake Ballard OvenReadys. Break open with fork, butter generously. Cover lower half with chilled, sweet strawberries, add top half and cover with more strawberries and whipped cream.

Meat Pie

Fill casserole or baking dish with cubed cooked meat and favorite vegetables. Place layer of OvenReady Biscuits over top. Bake in hot oven (425°) until biscuits are done and browned, about 15 minutes. Serve hot

Donuts

Punch hole in center of unbaked OvenReadys. Shape. Fry in fat (360° to 370°) like regular donuts. Remove when done and dust with powdered sugar. Serve hot.



Deviled Ham Foldovers

On lightly floured board, roll each biscuit into circle ⅛ in. thick. Brush with melted butter. Place one teaspoon deviled ham on half of circle. Fold over, pinch edges together and prick top with fork. Bake in hot oven (450°) 10 minutes.

Cheese Puff Biscuits

1 tbsp. butter, ½ cup grated sharp cheese, ¼ tsp. prepared mustard. Cream butter till soft. Stir in cheese and mustard. Spread smooth mixture over tops of Ballard OvenReadys. Bake in hot oven (450°) for 10 minutes.

Honey Butter Biscuits

¼ cup butter, ¼ cup strained honey, 1 package OvenReadys. Cream butter until soft. Blend in honey. Beat. Use as spread for piping-hot OvenReadys.

Pert "party treats" or luscious hot Southern Biscuits. You'll make them all with Ballard OvenReadys. For biscuits, just take them . . .

Out of the package. Place on cookie sheet and . . .

Into the oven (no mixing, no fuss, muss, nor failure). Tempting Southern biscuits . . .

Ready to eat in 9 minutes! Made of only the finest ingredients, Ballard OvenReadys assure you luscious hot biscuits with never a failure. Get 2 packages today!

IN YOUR GROCER'S REFRIGERATOR!

Just Bake and Serve

Ballard OvenReady Biscuits

Distributed exclusively by Kraft

NEW, SUPER-DUPER RECIPE FOR

"Prize Winner"

CHOCOLATE CAKE

Chosen from 63,000 recipes to be the CALUMET Cake-of-the-Month

"Prize Winner" Chocolate Cake

Preparations—Line bottoms of pans with paper; grease. Use two round 9-inch layer pans. 1½ inches deep. Start oven for moderate heat (350°F.). Sift flour once before measuring.

Ingredients:

2 cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
2 teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder
¼ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
⅔ cup shortening
1⅔ cups sugar
3 eggs, unbeaten
3 squares Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate, melted
*Milk (see below for amount)
1 teaspoon vanilla

*With butter, margarine, or lard, use 1 cup milk. With vegetable or any other shortening, use 1¼ cups milk.

Note—To insure truly glorious results with this "Prize Winner" recipe, use Double-Acting, Double-Dependable CALUMET BAKING POWDER. It works first in the bowl and you can depend on it)—and then in the oven (you can depend on that, too)—to make the most delicious, velvety-smooth cakes you ever tasted . . . And gorgeous biscuits, muffins, waffles, pancakes, coffee cake!

More Women Use CALUMET

Yes, for real Homemade goodness, more women use CALUMET than any other baking powder! And here's another proof of its dependability you may have noticed yourself:

More published recipes specify CALUMET than any other baking powder!

METHOD:

1. Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder, soda, and salt, and sift together three times.

2. Cream shortening, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each; then add chocolate and blend. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla; blend.

Baking—Turn batter into pans. Bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 30 minutes, or until done. Cool.

Frosting—Prepare your favorite fluffy white frosting. When cool and of right consistency to spread, add ¼ cup crushed hard peppermint candy. Tint ■ delicate pink with red coloring. Spread frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Sprinkle with additional crushed peppermint candy.

In Baking Your Best Bet is—

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

DOUBLE-ACTING

A Product of General Foods

The Hello, 1919! company was stranded in Akron, Ohio, and it was good-by, pay check. I went to live with Louise Brooks, a woman who ran a restaurant in Akron. I soon got a job in a local night club, where I worked as an entertainer just long enough to get the money together to pay my fare to New York.

Once more I went to work in Edmond's Cellar. My real career was about to begin, though I didn't realize it.

The first Negro woman singer to make a phonograph record was Mamie Smith. My first was made for the Cardinal Company, and had New York Glide on one side, At the New Jump Study Ball on the other.

The same talent scout who dug me up for Cardinal worked for other record companies. He asked if I would care to make some records for Black Swan, a new company just started by Harry H. Pace and W. C. Handy, the two grand old men of Negro music

I was still only getting $35 a week and tips, so $100 seemed quite a lump sum to me. That first Black Swan record I made had Down Home Blues on one side, Oh! Daddy on the other. It proved a great success and a best seller among both white and colored. My second Black Swan record had There'll be Some Changes Made on one side, and One Man Nan on the other.

Like all the other early records I made, these are now collectors' items.

Pace and Handy then suggested that I go out on tour with Fletcher Henderson's Jazz Masters, with Fletcher as my accompanist. They said such a tour would sell a lot more of my records.

For advance man, Black Swan hired Lester A. Walton, of the New York World. He was the first Negro reporter ever hired by a great white daily paper. Years later he became U. S. Minister to Liberia.

Two travelers, one a veteran and the other a novice, were climbing in the Pyrenees. At night they were caught on one of the peaks and had to sleep under a ledge. Toward morning a storm came up and the howling wind wailed fiercely among the heights. The frightened novice waked his friend and said, "I think it is the end of the world!"

"Oh, no," said the veteran, "this is how the dawn comes in the Pyrenees!"

HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK: Successful Christian Living (Harper & Brothers).

I was learning a lot in Harlem about music and the men up there who played it best. All the licks you hear, then as now, originated with musicians like James P. Johnson. And I mean all the hot licks that ever came out of Fats Waller and the rest of the hot piano boys. They are just faithful followers and protégés of that great man, Jimmy Johnson.

Men like Jimmy Johnson, Willie the Lion Smith and Charlie Johnson could make you sing until your tonsils fell out. Because you wanted to sing. They stirred you into joy and wild ecstasy. They could make you cry. And you'd do anything, and work until you dropped, for such musicians.

The master of them all, though, is Lucky Roberts. Everybody calls him Pop, but reverently. He now runs a restaurant up on the hill in Harlem. I don't call it Sugar Hill. I don't use that kind of language. Any night you can go up to Pop Roberts' place and hear operatic arias sung magnificently by the great singers who are waiters and waitresses there.

Fine singers! People I know, people I admire, people I've worked with! But they are colored and have to wait on tables because they can't get any work in show business. They are colored. Period.

I can't read music, never have. But I have almost absolute pitch. My music is all queer, little things that come into my head. I feel these little trills and things deep inside of me, and I sing them that way. All queer, little things that I hum.

Whitney and Tutt, the Harlem theatrical producers, had a show called Oh! Joy! that they were booking to follow the tour of Plantation Revue, starring Florence Mills. They sent for me because they had no Negro performer in her class. Whitney and Tutt had refused to consider me for their shows before I made a big stir with my records

Oh! Joy! was the show in which I first appeared as a name performer. But when Whitney and Tutt asked me to play Boston, I didn't want to go there. I thought I could get out of it by asking for too much money and said I wanted $125 a week. But they said they'd pay that.

This thing of asking what I considered an impossible salary when I didn't want to work for someone has boosted my pay again and again. That is one reason my pay got so big later on. I'd ask what I thought was a salary the people couldn't pay, and they'd give it to me.

However, there is a bad angle to this. Whenever I was paid more than I thought I was worth, I would always have to go out there and work my head off—so I wouldn't feel like a thief.

A Chicago agent had jived Mr. Johnston, a white man who ran the Grand Theater, in Chicago, into thinking I would go out there for a return engagement.

But I wouldn't go. On my tour with the Jazz Masters I hadn't always been paid off and I was scared to go out on my own. So once again I asked a salary I thought no one would pay—$500 a week, plus transportation for three persons. I stipulated that I would want a good pianist and that I would go out only on a two-week guaranty.

I was flabbergasted when the tough deal was accepted. Mr. Johnston was a fine and courteous man. We had two very successful weeks at the Grand, and when I was finishing there, he said, "Ethel, why don't you book your act into other cities? Towns like Detroit and Cleveland? I'll guarantee you a salary of $250 a week and expenses and pay for your dancer and accompanist. I'll also buy two beautiful drops for the act."

I liked that offer. But my accompanist had other commitments. I had to go back to New York to find another pianist. I had heard of a girl named Pearl Wright and got her to join our act. Pearl was very good at the box. She was a nice girl, too, and well educated. She was to be a mainstay to me for years, and my very good and dear friend.

When we got back to New York I had some money, also some records to make, and decided to loaf in Harlem for a while, and get some rest.

Jerry's Place, on West 135th Street, was a favorite of mine because it had a good band, entertainment and dancing, and I liked the late Jerry Preston, who ran this spot.

Earl Dancer had become part owner of the Golden Gate Inn, just across the street from Jerry's. He dropped in on our party there one night.

Earl told me he had caught my act at the Lafayette. He said, "You are a truly wonderful artist. You don't belong on the colored time. If you would only let the white people hear you sing, they'd love you for the rest of your life."

But I still wanted no part of the white time.

I started making records for Columbia that summer. They paid me $250 apiece, or $125 per side.

I was booked into the Monogram in Chicago. While working there, I took sick from the migraine headaches I'd had off and on, for years.

Somebody told me that Earl Dancer was in town and wanted to see me. One evening, when I came out the stage door, he was waiting. I told him about the headaches I'd been having and he said he'd been having some hard luck too.

"I'm broke," he told me. "I'm stranded here."

There are few performers who can refuse to help another actor down on his luck. We have all found ourselves living on crumbs and watery bean soup too many times not to know what it is like. And so I helped Earl.

(Continued on Page 192)

Beatrice Coo

Mealtim

OCTOBER: A molded Vegamato salad, Halloween hand-outs, a ver Taste a Love Apple?

ure you have! It's the tomato! First brought to e by the Spaniards, it was called "Moor's apple," mme de Maure. This became pomme d'amour— apple." The Spaniards got the tomato from the s, who called it "tomatl." And today—when its ous juice is blended with the juices of celery, beets, rs, parsley, spinach, carrots, and lemons, a new is born—VEGAMATO! A sparkling, refreshing zer that would have reminded the Moors of Ma- 's garden itself! Try VEGAMATO tomorrow—it's a lous cocktail! Delightful, too, in salads like this:

Molded Vegamato Ring

Vegamato
eaves
e cloves
l onion, sliced
salt
Dash of pepper
1 tbsp. lemon juice
2 pkg. lemon flavored gelatin
2 cups celery, diced
Meadow Gold Mayonnaise

er Vegamato, bay leaves, cloves and onion for 15 min- train and add salt, pepper, and lemon juice. Then add gelatin and stir until dissolved. Chill until partially dd celery and turn into well oiled 1 quart ring mold. until firm. Loosen sides of mold carefully with paring knife. Turn aspic out onto tomato wedges, lemon wedg with Meadow Gold Mayonna

A Triumph for

I know how very much every mother enjoys helping her teen-ager win that so-important social success. So I know you'll appreciate this wonderfully original suggestion from a writer friend of mine. It's a soda-jerk party, just the way she gave it for her own schoolage daughter.

On an oil-cloth-covered ta fruits, nuts, Chox Fudge S MEADOW GOLD ICE CRE guests in soda-clerk coats (r And let them pitch in—they

Of course nobody can quickly than youngsters, creamy smoothness of M freshness of the nut or f ICE CREAM yourself, too for your own entertaini

Formula Pro

Many mothers have foun HOMOGENIZED MILK. An enized MEADOW GOLD, th smaller and softer—wh

ust one can of LaChoy Mixed Chinese Vegetables supplies all the tender Bean S hoots, Water Chestnuts and Mushrooms you need for this rich, fine-flavo

Only your wisest love can protect your baby's tender skin from harm

his Thinner Skin

day is spent keep- y and comfortable. reful thought to the issue. More mothers e ideal combination ities in ScotTissue.

You need to change him often. And ScotTissue has "old linen" softness that doesn't chafe. Quick absorbency for clean cleansing. And just the right strength to resist tearing. Up to 6 months try cushioning his diapers with 20 or more sheets of fluffed-up ScotTissue. Just flush away the soiled tissue. Nicer for both of you.

"ScotTissue," "Soft As Old Linen," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

OFT AS OLD LINEN

(Continued from Page 192)

Though I liked many of the white vaudevillians, I never really got to know any of them well. I didn't fraternize with them. For one thing, I was not as yet in their class as a performer. And I had the sense to know I was colored. I thought it wisest to keep everything on a casual, "Nice day, isn't it?" basis.

While I was doing good for myself in vaudeville from coast to coast, Florence Mills had become the sensation of New York. She had done such big business at Sam Salvin's Plantation Club that the management wanted to keep open all summer.

But Florence insisted on touring, and Mr. Salvin started to look for a colored name to replace her. Earl Dancer, always a great one for getting about and talking to people, heard they'd tried out several girls.

"They're still auditioning," he told me. "Why don't you go down there?"

I shook my head. I felt that Broadway and all downtown belonged to Florence Mills. She was a public idol, and I didn't think that following her at the Plantation was going to be easy. But I went there for the tryout, and in those days I was as trim and shapely as Florence or anyone else.

Mr. Salvin, Harry Akst and Joe Howard, who were writing the songs for that floor show, were there for my audition. I could see that Sam Salvin was impressed. After I finished my own songs, Harry Akst and Joe Howard asked if I'd try a new one they'd written.

I took that song home and worked on it with Pearl. "This is a nice little number, Pearl," I said.

That nice little number was called Dinah. Dinah, with your girl Ethel singing it in her own original way, made history from Tin Pan Alley to Tokyo because it was the first international song hit ever to come out of an American night club.

The origin of civilization is in man's determination to do nothing for himself which he can get done for him.
—H. C. BAILEY.

At the Plantation, there were three of us in the same dressing room—Josephine Baker, Bessie Allison, who later married the manager of the Savoy Ballroom in Harlem, and me.

Every once in a while I'd run into Edmond, formerly of the well-known cellar of the same name. Poor Edmond had lost his club and was working as the big-muscled doorman of somebody else's spot. But until Edmond died, I called him only one thing—boss—whenever I saw him around Harlem. I only hope that made him feel a little better.

It was after this, and in New York, that Earl's big dream of becoming a Broadway producer came true. He got Otto H. Kahn, the banker-philanthropist, to put up $10,000 so he could do a full-length revue. This was Africana, my first Broadway musical, and it was patched up from all the different little tab shows we'd been doing. It was a good, fast show and gave the theatergoing ofays of Broadway their first long look at me. I was the star.

Africana had a good run. But I think it would have run much longer if somebody hadn't messed around with the box-office receipts. The bookkeeping on that show's take would have brought no approving nods from the Better Business Bureau.

I was working at the Everglades Night Club, on Broadway, when Earl Dancer maneuvered me on to an all-star bill for some big Catholic charity at the Palace Theater. The backstage was jumping with big names, and I had to go on following Will Rogers!

That big crowd had sat for hours listening to the biggest and best entertainers in the whole world—and Will Rogers. Yet they waited to hear this little brown-skinned girl sing. Following the unmatchable Rogers was like going on during an earthquake. Still I got a big hand, and that was one of the most heart-warming compliments I've ever had.

By this time, of course, I was beginning to meet more and more white people. One of the first ones I understood was Antonio Salemmi, a sculptor who made a bronze bust of me that Carl Van Vechten later bought.

Tony lived down in Greenwich Villag he took me to meet his friends and to any Marie's and the other Village pl Those Bohemians were like my own pe and I liked them. Your color or your account made no difference to them. liked you for yourself.

I met Paul Robeson for the first tim Salemmi's studio, where Tony was mak full figure of him. Paul was a wond young man in those days. He'd been a liant college student and a football star. he was on the eve of sailing for his first certs in London. His boy, baby Paul, just been born.

Rex stout and his first wife and J Coffee were other interesting white peo met through Tony Salemmi. Rex happ to be in the hospital on his birthday. birthday present I gave him was to dre as a nurse. When he pressed his be button I went into his room, carryin breakfast tray. I waited on him all that wheeling out his chair to the balcony he wanted to sit in the sunshine.

The best of all my white friends I while I was playing at the Lafayette, call boy told me one night that a white named Carl Van Vechten wanted to se I'd heard of his book, Nigger Heaven, had condemned it because of its obno title—without reading it. Later I read novel and thought it a sympathetic stu the way Negroes were forced to live in lem.

When Carl came up, he told me he'd catching my act for years and invited have dinner at his h I didn't see any reas going. White people, g ally, bored me and didn't speak the language.

If whites bored n was because they themselves. They se to get little fun out o and were desperately lonely. Often, I worked in night clubs, I'd look a at those pale faces and weary eyes I'd think, "They are only here to time." In spite of the countless advan they enjoyed as the Master Race, looked fed up with everything and as th they hated life itself. When you work front of them, you had to do the whole

But in the Negro night clubs the custo worked with you. They had come to the to cut loose, and even if you were te they had a good time. High spirits we forced on them. They came in with bo and éclat checking their woes and tro at the door.

When Carl Van Vechten talked to me evening I sensed that he was more lik Greenwich Village friends than the n clubbing crowd I'd watched. Before he he had persuaded me to come to dinn his home. When I got there it was filled beautiful things—paintings, rare old b sculpture and antiques. But none of meant a thing to me. They still don't. N ing in my life has geared me to like or a ciate these works of art.

Carl had the bust of me there that he bought from Tony Salemmi, and I admit I liked that. Working with his fi in clay, Tony had brought out much of I'd been like as a girl and was now like woman. It was my portrait in bronze sh by affectionate and intuitively wise and pathetic hands.

Carl and Fania Marinoff, his wife a good actress, became my dearest fri Sometimes it seems to me that Carl is only person in the world who understoo shyness deep down in me. To others, I not shy, but aloof and indifferent. But not.

I have reason to be shy. I have been plenty, and don't want to be hurt any than I can help. Carl summed up my acter as well as anyone ever has, I th when he said, "Ethel, you never ask an for anything—and you never thank an for anything."

(Continued on Page 197)

FRIENDS OF THE BRIDE-TO-BE

ST CHUM: "Leave it to me—I'll pass the rd you want luscious, smooth Cannon
mbspun Percale Sheets!"

PRICE-TELLER: "I thought you'd love 'em—and such a buy! I really expected to pay lots more . . ."

CLOWN: "Cannon Combspun comes from Nawth Carolinah. They comb the cotton so the sheet is finah!"

CENTLY WEDDED PAL: "Believe me, my dear, en do notice nice things like lovely soft sheets you'll see!"

FIANCE'S OLD GIRL: "Doesn't seem fair for you to get Jack and Cannon Combspuns, too, HA-HA!"

KILL-JOY: "Your Cannon Combspun Percales are heavenly—but you'll have to make beds 365 days a year!"

INNY-SIDER: "Don't worry—Cannon Combspuns e lighter in weight—for easier bedmaking
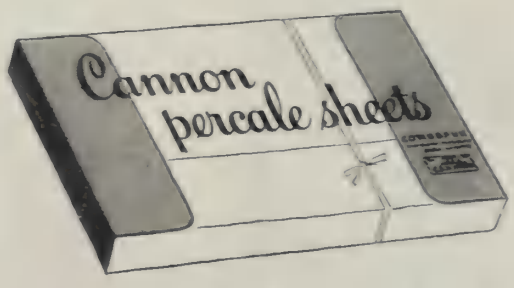
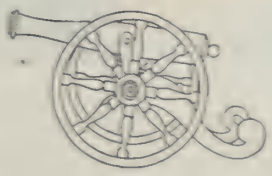
d laundering!"



IMAGINATIVE FRIEND: "I knew you'd have lots of practical, long-wearing things like Cannon Combspun, so . . ."



FAVORITE AUNTIE: "Here, Sweetie, go get some Cannon Combspuns in the new colors—6 of the dreamiest pastels to pick from!"

IRLS' CLUB: "Lucky!" "She's set for years!"
Well, any gal is who gets Cannon Combspun ercale Sheets!"

COPR 1950, CANNON MILLS, INC

CANNON PERCALE SHEETS – THEY'RE COMBSPUN

TRADE MARK CANNON

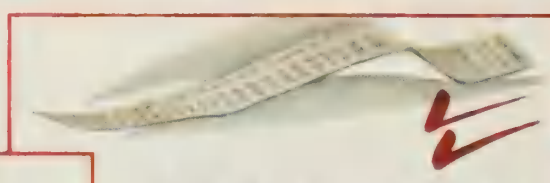
CANNON TOWELS • STOCKINGS ■ BLANKETS ■ BEDSPREADS ■ CANNON MILLS, INC., N. Y. 13, N. Y.

"Why does A&P put the price on every item ?"

"That's a good question, Sue. A&P marks the price on every item so we'll always know what everything costs. Mother doesn't have to guess after she gets home how much she paid for all the different things she bought. It also helps the clerk to figure our bill correctly and in a jiffy. You might say A&P shows me how I spend every penny. That's another reason why I like to shop there."

Keeping track of pennies is mighty important. It's smart shopping, too. At A&P Super Markets our system of "Accurate Pricing" helps you do just that. With the price plainly marked on every item (and on the shelves, as well) you know exactly how much you're spending... and what the cost of everything is when you're checking it at home.

Try shopping at your A&P Super Market for a week or two. See how A&P's "every day low prices" and "Accurate Pricing" help you keep check on your food budget.



SIMPLE ARITHMETIC

Anyone knows that the lower the profit a merchant takes, the more goods you get for your money. When you shop at A&P, less than 1¢ of your dollar is A&P's profit. A&P pioneered this low profit method of food distribution that helps America eat better today!

A PARADISE FOR CHEESE LOVERS

If you were to count the different varieties of cheeses in an A&P Super Market, you'd likely find over 50 kinds. Mild and sharp, young and aged, imported and domestic. A cheese-lover's paradise! Just the place to sharpen your appetite and cut your budget.

CHECK AND DOUBLE CHECK!

At A&P Super Markets your purchases are itemized by departments on a printed cash register receipt. Be sure to take this receipt home with you. Having a printed record of every penny spent is a good check on runaway budgets.

A&P

Customers' Corner

A&P is constantly seeking new and better ways to serve you. Your ideas and thoughts on our "Accurate Pricing" system will be appreciated. Do you like it? Does it help you? Do you always get a cash register slip with your purchases? Please write us:

Customer Relations Department
A&P Food Stores
Graybar Building, New York 17, N. Y.

SUPER MARKETS

(Continued from Page 194)

From time to time, I met a great many ıite celebrities at the Van Vechtens' me: Eugene O'Neill, Sinclair Lewis and ɔrothy Thompson, Alfred and Blanche ıopf, George Jean Nathan, Alexander oollcott, Heywood Broun, Cole Porter, ɔel Coward and Somerset Maugham.

Harold Gumm, of Goldie and Gumm, eatrical lawyers, was trying to disentangle e financial troubles of the deceased Afri- na. The show had closed, but the subse- ent arguments and lawsuits were in for a ıg run. Mr. Gumm said he would handle ı part in the mess if I would give him 5 per nt of my earnings, exclusive of my pay for udeville dates. We sealed that deal with a ndshake.

I was having stomach trouble and all that llabaloo made it worse. Some friends asked e to come to Philadelphia with them while ey played a date. I was glad to. Besides erything else, I was on the verge of split- ıg up with Earl Dancer. Earl came running Philadelphia and he had a let's-forgive- d-forget-and-start-all-over-again routine, t I let him slide.

In Philadelphia, Clyde Edward Matthews peared out of the nowhere. I'd met him in kron a few months before. When I first met ldie, the girl he was romancing told me he ıs interested in me, but I didn't believe it. paid him no mind, but in Philadelphia ldie started picking up the checks. He ned me and dined me most graciously. He d an air and when he heard I needed ɔney he would say, "Here is a couple of ındred, Ethel. It's just a loan."

ACCEPTED the loans, but inside I was leery him, and I didn't want to be wolved. But was a tonic, according to this sweet-talker, breath of fresh air and just what the doc- r ordered for him so he could get on his et. I fell for it, and some time later Eddie atthews and I were married.

The work I enjoyed most at that time was aking records for Columbia, though that mpany had not yet seen fit to identify me its catalogue as a Negro singer.

Then and later I made records with such ɔnderful white musicians as Benny Good- an, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, Joe Venuti, uby Bloom and Manny Klein. It was a per and a delight doing those records with ose fellows who could ad-lib my music with e. If the bosses wanted changes, we'd make em on the spot without any hesitation— ıd those changes would be right.

The Palace Theater in Chicago wanted me, and I asked $1250 and transportation, more than I'd ever dragged down before. It turned out to be the same old story. I asked that big money because I was sure I'd never get it, and I wanted just then to stay around New York. But I got the boost and had to go.

THEY have queer and dizzy ways in Hollywood. Harry Akst, who'd written Dinah, came to my dressing room while I was playing the Orpheum, in Los Angeles. Harry said he was working on the score for a new musical Warner Brothers wanted to make. They needed a song hit, and Harry thought he had it. He had brought the lead sheet to me so I could work on it with Pearl.

So we worked on it, and the song was Am I Blue! When we were ready Harry brought me to the studio and introduced me to Darryl F. Zanuck, who was production chief. Mr. Zanuck listened to my interpretation of Am I Blue!, said, "This is it," and asked what would I nick him for two weeks' work on his movie lot.

"Well, Mr. Zanuck," I said, "I have commitments on the Orpheum time, but I will see if I can postpone them."

The Orpheum people were nice about it and said they would rearrange my bookings. Meanwhile I'd talked salary to Mr. Zanuck.

"How much do you get?" he asked, and I gave him an honest answer:

"I would like to have a four-week guaranty at twelve hundred and fifty a week, which will come to a nicely rounded five thousand dollars."

"You drive a pretty nice bargain for yourself, Miss Waters," he said, but with a friendly smile, and that was our deal for the picture, which was On With the Show.

I worked my way East after finishing On With the Show. In New York I made some records, among them Traveling All Alone, which Kate Smith sang later and Al Jolson did in Wonder Bar. I had the great pleasure and privilege of being accompanied on that recording by James P. Johnson.

But my throat, which had been troubling me for some time, got worse, and my physician recommended a long rest. When I asked whether I could rest in Europe, he suggested I consult, while in Paris, the great throat specialist, Doctor Wiercart.

We sailed for Europe on the Ile de France, first-class. Many of my friends were in Paris and they tried to give me a good time. Valaida Snow was working there, and the Berry Brothers were playing in the Paris company of Blackbirds.

JENNIFER

"Boy, oh boy, Marge, you really gotta give our mothers credit—to get a husband in these things!"

masland Duran* all plastic upholstery covering

Duran Ranch pattern featured on dinette by The Lloyd Mfg. Co., Menominee, Mich.

PATIO

Plan with Duran! The upholstery is genuine Masland Duran all-plastic upholstery covering... the same all-plastic whose lovely colors and patterns look perfect on living room furniture. Pliant Duran is practical everywhere... a damp cloth keeps it bright and fresh.

SEE DURAN IN Sealtuft DESIGNS

All plastics are not the same! Only MASLAND makes DURAN. This tag is your protection.

Upholstered with masland Duran all plastic

SEND FOR FREE DURAN FOLDER WITH SAMPLE

THE MASLAND DURALEATHER CO.
Dept. L, Philadelphia 34, Pa.

*Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

MAKE A LUSCIOUS
HOME-MADE LEMON PIE
With My-T-Fine Lemon Flavor Pie Filling

Made by the makers of Vermont Maid Syrup and Brer Rabbit Molasses

MY-T-FINE
Lemon Flavor Pie Filling

I danced quite a bit. On many nights my escort and dancing partner was Al Brown, the fighter, who became world bantamweight champion the following year.

While in France, we spent three months in Cannes. We had booked passage home when an offer for me to play at the Palladium came from London. So we went there.

I was also able to take an engagement at the Café de Paris. The night I opened there that plushy spot was jammed with blue-bloods, lords, earls, baronets and their titled ladies. They were scattered all over the place, along with Spanish, Hungarian, Prussian, Russian types of royalty, both ex and present. As I came out to sing I saw that Tallulah Bankhead, the gorgeous yam from Alabam', who was then reigning queen of the English stage, had a ringside table. It was an exciting night.

They had beautiful hostesses at the Café de Paris. One of them, Estelle O'Brien, looked like some sort of Javanese. Estelle and I became friendly. Later she had a small part in Henry VIII, the movie that made Charles Laughton one of the world's biggest picture stars.

"Do you think I could make good in pictures in Hollywood?" this young girl asked me. "Should I take the gamble and go there?"

I looked at her. She had almond-shaped eyes and olive skin. She was sweet, charming and had a lovely face. "I think you'll make good," I told her. "Go to America. Take the chance."

It turned out to be the best advice I ever gave anyone. Shortly afterward Estelle O'Brien went to Hollywood. She became a big-time star under her professional name, Merle Oberon.

The management of the Café de Paris reserved the same table for me each night. One evening I came in to find the Prince of Wales sitting there with a lady. He was incognito, and when he was told he had my table the Prince walked over to me and apologized.

I told His Royal Highness that it was okay. I didn't like it later when he abdicated as King and Emperor and ruler of the Dominions Beyond the Seas and all the rest. After all, he was the only king who had ever apologized to me for anything. The Prince came back once a week to catch my act during the ten weeks I played at the Café de Paris. He always nodded to me and I nodded back.

I had been away from the U. S. A. for eight long months, so I lost no time getting vaudeville dates and making new records.

One day Herman Stark came to my New York apartment and asked if I cared to work at the Cotton Club. Pearl and I went up there and they had a new number Harold Arlen had written. They were using a lot of mechanical devices to get storm effects. It was a wonderful number. But after listening to it, I told them the piece should have more to do with human emotions and should be expressed that way instead of with noise-making machines to interpret the rumblings and rattlings of Old Mother Nature.

"Let me take the lead sheet home," I suggested. "I'll work on it with Pearl. This song should be given a dramatic ending. I'm gonna see if I can't give it that."

The song, of course, was Stormy Weather.

Singing Stormy Weather proved a turning point in my life. My marriage was being stormy just then. I felt I was working my heart out and getting no happiness. Stormy Weather was the perfect expression of my mood and I found release in singing it. When I got out there in the middle of the Cotton Club floor, I was telling the things I couldn't frame in words.

One night Irving Berlin, the frail, little Jewish man who has written the great love songs for two generations of Americans, came up to hear me sing that song.

The following day he got in touch with the lawyers, Goldie and Gumm. He told them he was writing the music for a revue Sam H Harris was producing. Irving said, "We like to talk to Miss Waters about it."

I went down and saw Irving Berlin, Sa Harris and Moss Hart, who was writing t book for the show, which they were calli As Thousands Cheer. Clifton Webb, Maril Miller and Helen Broderick, the comedienn were to be starred. I was only to be feature but there were four big song numbers for m

I must say that I never had better mater to work with. My four song numbers wer Heat Wave, which turned out to be a tr mendous hit; To Be or Not To Be; Suppe time; and I've Got Harlem on My Min

As Thousands Cheer was a smash hit Broadway. During the summer, when Ma lyn Miller and Clifton Webb took their v cations, Sam Harris kept the show o though there were only Helen Broderick an me as draw people. He said he wouldn't clo it unless the box-office receipts dropped b low $12,000 a week. And they never did.

While I was in As Thousands Cheer I got letter, and sometimes I think that lett opened as important a phase in my life as the good luck and success I'd enjoyed wi As Thousands Cheer.

It was a form letter, appealing for funds f St. Theresa's Monastery, in Allentow Pennsylvania.

I'd always contributed to Catholic cha ties, increasing my donations as my pa rose. But I'd never heard before of th monastery. And the moment you becon well known in show business, you are snowe under by requests for money from worth causes and individuals.

I sent $3. I was deep touched by the letter personal thanks that can from the mother superio It rang true with swee ness and simple gratitud I began to send the mo astery five- and ten-dolla checks. Always I got a letter back that gav me a big lift. I began to look forward, in patiently, to these little letters of thank They did my heart good.

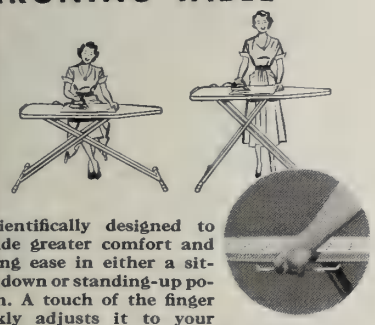
I needed something like that just the While performing in As Thousands Cheer, had separated from my husband, Clyd Edward Matthews. I guess every woma knows that breaking up a marriage is neve anything to celebrate. It is the toughest of a good-bys. I knew all this, but it had becom simply impossible to go on.

After that, I sort of adopted the mona tery. Down through the years I often seeme to sense when they were pressed for money Again and again, one of my checks woul reach them on the very day they reached th bottom of the coal pile in their cellar. An each time I was in trouble, personally, an didn't know who to turn to, I'd sit down an write to the mother superior. Always I foun in her replies the loving sympathy and u derstanding that helped to calm me.

When I first crashed into the big-earn bracket I was amazed to see that money only important—in itself—when you haven got it. Once in the chips, you can give thos dollars importance only by what you d with them.

I have always lived simply. But I do lik my comfort, and I have fur coats, jewelr and big, beautiful cars. But the main reaso I have for buying such extravagant objects because a Broadway star cannot dress like waif or ride in the subway. People will tal and you can say "The hell with them!" bu they are my customers and I gotta live an appear in public as they expect me to.

My earning power, though, has given m the chance to help twenty little girls grow u and to assist God-loving people like my A lentown nuns do His work. This is almo the only satisfaction I've taken in collectin checks with the big numbers on them.



In 1935, I was costarred with Beatrice Li lie in a Shubert show, At Home Abroad That revue was Vincent Minelli's first direc ing job. The book and music were written b Howard Dietz and Arthur Schwartz. Th first-rate supporting cast given Lady Pe designed for you!

Don't seek experience, you'll get enough of it if you just let nature take its course. —WILLIAM FEATHER.

"SIT-or-STAND"
G.P.F.
MET-L-TOP
IRONING TABLE

Scientifically designed to provide greater comfort and ironing ease in either a sitting-down or standing-up position. A touch of the finger quickly adjusts it to your personal preference—whether you are short, medium or tall. Convenient finger-touch control makes height adjustment easy . . . no fumbling or groping, and there's an automatic safety lock so that the table will not collapse accidentally. Smooth, sturdy, tubular legs won't snag stockings. Table sets level and firmly on floor . . . will not tip, wobble or creep. New "Speed-Top" provides 49 square inches of extra ironing surface. Be sure to see ■ MET-L-TOP demonstration. It costs no more to own the best.

Sit-or-STAND Model, $12.95
Speed-Top Model, $7.95 . . . with Adjustable-Height, $8.95

GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO.
Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

It's just a plain shame the way some people let their finest furnishings take a terrific beating—all year 'round—from sunshine streaming through the windows. Fabrics fade and rot, wood finishes lose their luster—and it's all so unnecessary. CLOTH window shades, specially treated to withstand this punishment year after year, will shield your valued possessions from harm, save you grief and money. With a strong, flexible base of firm cotton fabric . . . either oil-painted or plastic-coated . . . smart, smooth-rolling, easy-to-clean CLOTH window shades give you positive "sunburn insurance" at every window for only a few pennies a year.

Feel that fabric! At your dealer's, the Joanna Western Quality Demonstrator turns window shades "inside out" . . . lets you feel the difference between CLOTH and substitute materials.

Joanna Western
Cloth
Window Shades
...tell the world you're a smart housekeeper!

JOANNA WESTERN MILLS CO. · CHICAGO

and the former star of Edmond's Cellar included Eleanor Powell, the tap dancer; Reginald Gardiner, the Englishman who imitates everything from steamboat whistles to drunken goldfish; Eddie Foy, Jr., Paul Haskon, Vera Allen, and Sue Hastings' Marionettes.

Georgette Harvey, who had a good part in Porgy and Bess, invited me to a party she was giving for Rouben Mamoulian, director of that famous Negro folk opera.

A white couple were arriving as I got out of my car. We went up in the elevator together and the three of us sat down, side by side, on Georgette's couch.

The white lady asked if I remembered her. "Yes, I do," I said. She'd been a guest at a society tea where I'd sung some years before. Afterward, she'd come up and complimented me on one of my songs, a take-off number on Porgy, written by Dorothy Fields and Jimmy McHugh.

The white lady seemed pleased that I remembered her so clearly. "And what do you think of Porgy and Bess, Miss Waters?" she asked.

LIKE the play Porgy, the folk opera had been based on the novel Porgy I told her that I preferred it to the straight drama.

"But this is very interesting, Miss Waters," said this lady. "Du Bose and I ——"

For the first time I realized I must be talking to Dorothy Heyward, who had dramatized Porgy with her husband from his book. And that he was the man seated next to her.

"There was a book I read some years ago ——" and I went on to tell her how and why Mamba's Daughters had held me spellbound. Yet I didn't know that Du Bose Heyward had also written that novel as I explained that Mamba's family was just like my own, with Mamba herself almost the image of Sally Anderson; her daughter Hagar like Momweeze; and her daughter Lissa, Hagar's daughter, being a girl like myself, illegitimate and going out into the world to become a successful singer.

"To everyone else, Mamba is the main character in the story," I told Dorothy Heyward, "but not to me. Hagar is the main one."

Hagar, fighting on in a world that had wounded her so deeply, was more than my mother to me. She was all Negro women lost and lonely in the white man's antagonistic world.

Dorothy Heyward listened. "If we ever decide to dramatize Mamba's Daughters," she said, "we'll see you."

Then, of course, I remembered that her husband had written the book. But it was quite a long time before the Heywards did make a play of it, and sent me the script to read.

I was thrilled and I was scared as I read that play. Even when I read it for the first time I understood that there could be no greater triumph in my professional career than playing Hagar.

The Heywards, Dorothy and Du Bose, were fine people. I had promised to steer clear of all long-term commitments so I could come in to New York and start rehearsing whenever they sent for me. A year passed, a year and a half, and I couldn't help but start to get discouraged. I couldn't see how the Heywards would ever find their much-needed bankroll.

Then the big break came. This was a wire from New York telling me to come in and start rehearsing for Mamba's Daughters.

Guthrie McClintic, Katharine Cornell's husband and her director, had read Mamba's Daughters. When he saw Du Bose Heyward again, Mr. McClintic told him, "I'm going to do your play."

Guthrie McClintic didn't know much about colored actors and he never minded my making suggestions. I was able to get many of the performers who were good friends of mine into the show. And he got together a brilliant cast—Georgette Harvey as Mamba, José Ferrer as Mr. Saint, J. Rosamund Johnson as The Reverend Quintus Whaley, and lovely-looking little Fredi Washington as Lissa. Not to forget Ethel Waters as Hagar. I also got

This ticket is your ASSURANCE of GOOD VALUE

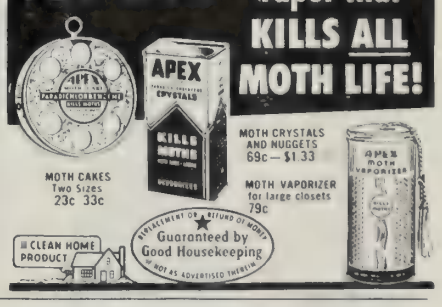
Look for it when you want a quality service sheet at a moderate price. Woven from smooth cotton yarns selected for strength and exceptional wearability, Thomaston Pilgrim sheets are perfect for daily duty. In white and popular pastels: Azure Blue, Dawn Pink, Crocus Yellow, Coral Peach, Bud Green.



Thomaston Sheets

Other Thomaston Sheet Qualities:
PAGE, TYPE 140 • FIRESIDE, TYPE 128 • TAVERN, TYPE 140 • PEDIGREE, COMBED PERCALE
Ask for THOMASTON SHEETS at your favorite store—a quality for every purse and purpose

Make More Money
SELL WOMEN'S WEAR
Up to minute styles—DRESSES—street—house—DRESS GOODS—cotton—rayon—HOSIERY—LINGERIE—APRONS—TOWELS—STATIONERY—GREETING CARDS. Beautiful samples make easy sales. Good profits—from your spare time. Be first—write now.
MITCHELL & CHURCH CO.
Dept. 3■ Binghamton, N.Y.

APEX
A penetrating vapor that KILLS ALL MOTH LIFE!

LOOK!
Protect Your FURNITURE With PLASTIC COVERS

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET ■ SWATCH
OF FIRESTONE VELON. Dirt, water, pet-proof. Slip on—off. Lowest prices! Most chair-sizes $3.95. Money-back guarantee. FREE BOOKLET gives details. Mail postcard TODAY!
HOUSE OF SCHILLER
Dept. 180 No. Wacker
OC- 2 Chicago 6, Ill.

Famous for Sleep
to start your day bright

Your choice of OSTERMOOR Quality Mattresses ...traditionally as fine as money can buy. Superlative in comfort, in structural excellence... and long wear. Therefore soundly economical.

INNERSPRING
OSTERMOOR
AMERICA'S QUALITY MATTRESS FOR NEARLY 100 YEARS

See your Local Dealer, or write "Ostermoor" Chicago 16, Ill., or Bridgeport, Conn.

my accompanist, Reggie Beane, in the show as Slim.

Mamba's Daughters had its preview opening on New Year's Eve and its regular opening on January 3, 1939, which I still remember as the most thrilling and important experience of my life as a performer. And my whole life, too, except for when I found God.

I was the first actress of my race ever to be starred on Broadway in a dramatic play. And we opened at the Empire Theater, which has the richest theatrical history of any showhouse in America.

And the Empire's star dressing room was mine on that night. While the carriage trade was arriving outside, I sat at the dressing table where all the great actresses, past and present, had sat as they made up their faces and wondered what the first-night verdict would be—Maude Adams, Ethel Barrymore Helen Hayes, Katharine Cornell, Lynn Fontanne and many others, now dead, who had brought talent and beauty and grace to that old stage.

I was Hagar that night. Hagar and Momweeze and all of us.

Seventeen curtain calls that opening night for me alone.

I couldn't stand it. Half collapsing with joy and humility, I pushed through the kissing mouths and the slaps on the back into my dressing room where Elida was waiting.

"How do you feel now, Miss Waters?" she said. "And what are you thinking?"

"Elida, if I died here and now," I told her, "it would be all right. For this is the pinnacle, and there will never be nothing better or higher or bigger for me. I have fulfillment, Elida. At last, I have fulfillment."

And I burst into sobbing as I humbly thanked my God. Because even if no one else knew it, I had been no actress that night. I had only been remembering and all I had done was carry out His orders. And I had shown them all what it is to be a colored woman, dumb, ignorant, all boxed up and feeling everything with such intenseness that she is half crazy.

After seeing the play, friends would ask, "Ethel, how can you do it? How long can you continue to give out with all that pent-up emotion, night after night?"

I never could convince them that the role offered great release for me. Being Hagar softened me and I was able to make more allowance for people's faults. Before Mamba's Daughters, I was always cursing outside and crying inside. Before, I'd never been able to do what I was doing now when I was hurt and heartsore—go out on the stage and work off my grief and melancholy.

After a long tour, Mamba's Daughters returned to New York for a second engagement. When it closed I went into the movie houses to pick up some more of those big pay checks.

While appearing in the movie houses, I was given a play to read. Its title was Little Joe, though when it was finally produced on Broadway it was called Cabin in the Sky. They wanted me to play Petunia, the wife of Little Joe, a bad man who is dying. Petunia pleads with God to give her wicked husband another chance to live decently so he'll be able to get into heaven.

I took the role. One reason was that the songs were so good.

They put good people in that play. Dooley Wilson, who later became a Hollywood sensation as the piano player in the movie Casablanca, was Little Joe; Rex Ingram played Lucifer, Jr.; Todd Duncan was the Lawd's General, and J. Rosamund Johnson Brother Green. Katherine Dunham played Georgia Brown, and had her whole dancing troupe swirling and cavorting about in that show.

Cabin in the Sky played on Broadway into March of 1941. After closing in New York we jumped to the Coast.

Cabin in the sky's tour wound up in San Francisco. I had decided to stay out in the California sunshine for a while, and in Los Angeles some movie men came at me, waving their checkbooks. They said they'd pay me $10,000 to appear opposite Paul Robeson whom they'd already signed, in Tales of Manhattan. This was an all-star episodic picture with some of the biggest names in Hollywood appearing in its different sequences.

I got interested only after they told me the story they were using for the Negro episode. Knowing what a large part God plays in our daily lives, they had been eager to inject religion in that section of the picture.

In the script a suitcase full of money falls from a plane on a poverty-stricken colored community. All the Negroes who live there have different suggestions of what to do with this manna from heaven. Hester, the woman I was to play, is the religious stronghold of the community, and she says, "What I think God meant, if that money isn't claimed by its legal owner, is that we should use it to build a hospital, a school and the other things we need so badly."

My best scene came when I go into a wretched hut where an old woman of eighty-odd lies dying. She asks me to sing her across the River Jordan. Stroking her head, I sing Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen, with the Hall Johnson Choir furnishing the musical background. As she passes on to her reward, a lovely light shines down on her from above; and it is as though this light is the ladder which her soul will ascend to reach her Maker and the Lord of us all.

The scene was reverently and tenderly done, and everybody in the studio when it was being shot raved over it. But when I went to the preview my heart broke. The whole scene was cut out.

When Tales of Manhattan was released various Negro organizations went on the warpath. They sent pickets to the theaters where the picture was shown. Their posters said us colored people were being portrayed in a bad light and as wretched, dirty and poorly clad.

I didn't understand that. These same organizations were forever complaining that we Negroes in America are underprivileged. So why was it wrong to show us on the screen that way?

I know that some of these organizations are run by men and women of the highest ideals. They've done a lot in the fight for Negro equality. But when they protest showing colored people as they really are, I think they are making a mistake.

There are thieves and wife beaters and murderers among us. There are also Negroes who are saints, geniuses and walk all their lives in God's pathway. In other words, the Negro is human, a human being with the same faults and virtues as the members of every other race.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Young Mother

By Frances Rodman

I try to imagine what it must be
To tremble with longing to touch, to see,
To live in a world where all is
new,
With wonderful things to taste, to do.

I try to put myself in his place
In a universe higher than is my face,
With steps too steep and chairs
too high
And strangers busily hurrying by.

I try to think, if I could not talk,
And my legs hadn't learned just how to walk,
And everything came from up above,
I'd need a lot of lifting and love!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

KAUKAUNA KLUB
Cheese foods

end for Mary Irene Hart's brand new 5-page full color recipe book. Many de-ghtfully different recipes for each of the x famous Kaukauna Klub Cheese Foods. merica's favorite cheese for cooking.

6 DELICIOUS FLAVORS

American	Hickory Smoked
Port Wine	Garlic
Appetizer	Onion

lways fresh, always in the refrigerator, at our favorite food store.

KAUKAUNA DAIRY CO.
280 SOUTH ST., KAUKAUNA, WISCONSIN

Nation's Cheese Treat from America's Dairyland

azing Offer—$40.00 Is Yours selling only 50 boxes of Christmas s. And this can be done in a single d. Free samples. Other leading boxes approval. Many surprise items. Write today. It costs nothing to try.
CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-36, White Plains, N. Y.

FREE SAMPLES
PERSONALIZED CHRISTMAS CARDS
STATIONERY
NAPKINS

ROASTWELL
PATENTED GRAVYWELL
ELF-BASTING • • • TENDERIZES

OASTING PERFECTION
AT LEADING STORES EVERYWHERE OR WRITE
FLETCHER ENAMEL CO. DUNBAR, W. VA.

'MEXENE
GIVES SPAGHETTI WONDERFUL FLAVOR"

Says
Mrs. J. M. McLeod,
of Reno, Nevada

Thanks to Mexene, Mrs. McLeod is famous for her delicious spaghetti sauce, for like thousands of other good cooks, she has found Mexene All-purpose Seasoning ideal for adding piquant goodness to everyday dishes. An unusual blend of rare peppers and spices, Mexene is also a favorite for seasoning meats, vegetables, soups, salads and sea-foods.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Walker's AUSTEX Chili Co.
CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STEW
BRAISED BEEF HASH • SANDWICH SPREAD
SPAGHETTI and MEAT BALLS

I prefer to rest my case for the Negro as he is, gay and game, and with an endurance and an ability to survive without equal in history. I'll take him with his music and laughter and his love of God—and with all his faults. I love him and am proud of him.

I am all for raising the standard of living for my people. In fact, I have done not a little standard-of-living raising all by myself—helping my family, out-of-luck friends and sometimes complete strangers.

But I'll never understand why some of us should want Negroes to be portrayed as neat, clean Elsie Dinsmores and Little Lord Fauntleroys. They are white characters, and bores, and I'm for letting the white folks keep them for themselves.

A little later I worked in the film version of Cabin in the Sky. From the beginning there was conflict between myself and the studio because I objected to the way they were playing around with the religion in the story. Thinking it over, I don't know how, with all the snarling and scrapping, Cabin in the Sky ever stayed up there.

The trouble with winning your fights in Hollywood is that you get crucified . . . and my martyrdom was about to begin.

My agents couldn't seem to get me anything but dates in night clubs and colored vaudeville. And none of it was solid bookings. I'd work four weeks, then lay off six. I was beginning to think I was being blackballed out of the entertainment industry because of squabbles with the movie big shots.

I was still waiting for my agency contract to run out when I went back to New York. I was getting on a Fifth Avenue bus one day when I met an agent I'd known years before in Chicago. He told me he was in business with a partner and what about signing up with them?

"Excuse me," I said, and got on the bus. I wasn't a blues singer any more and that was the only field where I believed they could get me any work.

He kept buzzing me on the phone and I kept telling him that all I wanted to do was a play. But I was getting no work and sinking very low in spirit. I finally signed with this agency for a year.

I WANTED to keep working around New York. However, my new agents seemed able to get me offers from only a kind of café I didn't want to appear in. Months went by and they got me no suitable dates. Again and again I'd hear that managers had called other agencies I'd been with and asked them to get me for a job. These agents never admitted I was no longer with them. Instead, they'd say I was unavailable. That gave them the opening to push their own people as substitutes for me.

All the time I was being belted by those heavy losses I was becoming aware that my whole professional future was being menaced. In New York, Chicago, California, everywhere I went I kept hearing echoes of what show people were whispering about me:

"Old Ethel Waters is washed up. She can't get a picture. She can't get a play. They don't even want her in the movie houses or big-time vaudeville. She's through."

I felt I had hit bottom, both professionally and emotionally. After a while, I decided to move into a friend's home on 113th Street. Gossip started to spread all over Harlem that I was broke and living on charity. Of course I had insisted on paying my friend for my room and board.

It was during that summer that the Theatre Guild asked me to read a play they intended to produce. This was The Member of the Wedding, which Carson McCullers had adapted from her own novel. I took the play home and read it. When I'd finished it, I told the Theatre Guild people:

"No, I won't do it. There is something sordid and ugly about Berenice Sadie Brown, the cook." That was the character they wanted me to play. "Berenice is bitter, is a chain smoker, drinks heavily, and I would be the last to deny there are characters like her in real life. I've met such characters. But I don't think it's for me. I don't think I would work well in that channel."

(Continued on Page 203)

Quaker Oats helps grow
"STARS OF THE FUTURE"

Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! They say that because a recent survey shows only 1 school child in 5 gets enough breakfast.

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition! Mother, your youngsters get more growth, more endurance from oatmeal than from any other whole-grain cereal! To help your boy or girl become a success—serve good, hot nourishing Quaker Oats several times a week!

A GIANT in Value! Less than 1¢ a serving! Penny for penny, oatmeal is the richest source of all leading types of cereals in 4 vital food elements: Protein, Vitamin B_1, Food-Energy, and Food-Iron.

A GIANT in Flavor! People eat more Quaker Oats than any other cereal in the world because THEY LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR! Every spoonful is packed with creamy-delicious goodness!

Tomorrow morning serve hot
QUAKER OATS
Less than 1¢ a serving

QUAKER AND MOTHER'S OATS ARE THE SAME

Four boxed corners fit sheet to mattr like a second skin. Taut tuck-under prevents sheet from wrinkling.

IS YOUR HUSBAND A SHEET FIGHTER?

Give him a CONTOUR sheet... it can't wrinkle, can't pull out

A rumpled, twisted bottom sheet is as old-fashioned as a nightshirt! It's completely unnecessary to strip beds every day when you use Pacific's amazing Contour* Sheet. It needs no retucking, stays smooth until you take it off! Even the most restless sleeper can't wrinkle it or pull out the fitted corners.

Four taped and sewed corners anchor sheet to mattress like a second skin. A unique tuck-under slips into place automatically, keeps the sheet tight and firm on all four sides—wrinkle-free! Pacific Contours fit perfectly washing after washing because they're Sanforized.

Pacific Contour Sheets are easier to handle, cost less to launder, because they weigh less. Ironing is optional. Available in double—twin-bed and crib sizes, combed percale and extra-strength muslin. Standard sizes adjust to slight variations in mattress thickness.

Try your favorite store or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. K-10, 214 Church St., New York 13, N. Y.

*TM Pacific Mills Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Pacific Cribfast Sheets are the only baby-proof fitted sheets that tuck under all around. Bouncing babies can't pull them out.*

It's a PACIFIC sheet BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTED

(Continued from Page 201)

rom late September until November, I ed a week here, a week there. When New r's Day, 1949, came I was in Pittsburgh. as lonely, and more heartsick than ever r those layoffs which weren't getting any rter. I picked up the Bible and where my d fell it opened at the 70th Psalm. I read, the last verse of that Psalm is:

But I am poor and needy: make haste o me, O God: thou art my help and my verer; O Lord, make no tarrying."

nd then I read the 71st Psalm, which be-s:

In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust; let never be put to confusion.

Deliver me in thy righteousness, and se me to escape: incline thine ear unto and save me.

Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto ay continually resort: thou hast given mandment to save me; for thou art my and my fortress."

hose verses might have been written for I was so lonely that day in the hotel m. I've read them every day of my life e, also the 35th, from the first to the enth verse, and the 37th Psalm, from the t to the eighth verse.

went from Pittsburgh, after closing re, to Chicago. I think that winter was the y lowest period of my life. But always re is one thing that keeps the hardest-ssed entertainer going. Today or any day t phone may ring and bring good news. d one day in January God made my me ring and I got a message that made my rt soar. Twentieth Century-Fox wanted to fly out to Hollywood to take a screen for a picture John d was directing.

cannot remember ten ser days than those I nt waiting to hear how made out in that screen . Then, in answer to a usand prayers, came word, "The part is rs, Miss Waters. You're to report to studio on February fourteenth. The —oh, it was swell."

he picture was Pinky.*

d had a lucky break getting the role of nny in Pinky. All I had to do to play nny was remember my own grandmother, ly Anderson. The Granny in Pinky was ch like her, being proud of her blood, d-working, fierce-tempered and devoted her white employers. Jeanne Crain was granddaughter, the Pinky, a colored girl o looked white enough to pass. William ndigan was the white doctor in love with . Ethel Barrymore played the aged mis-ss of the plantation. That great actress l I had several long scenes together.

After four weeks, John Ford's doctor told n he'd have to quit directing for a while he had overworked himself. Elia Kazan ne in and replaced him. And Kazan, like thrie McClintic, had been an actor him-and understood my problems. I was able, ough his help, to let myself go, and live part of Granny as I moved before the neras.

On completing my work in the picture I nt back to Chicago. While I was there I rd from Bob Whitehead. He wanted me star in the Carson McCullers play, The mber of the Wedding, which the Theatre ild originally had asked me to read.

OB came to Chicago with the script. I d it, and shook my head.

"There is still no God in this play," I told n. "Berenice, the cook, is nasty. She's lost faith. I won't play such a character."

Bob Whitehead asked if I would come to w York and talk with Carson McCullers. aid I would if I got no engagement.

"But don't get the wrong impression of ," I told him. "I need the job and the ney. Especially the money. I'm $10,000 debt right now, but still I can't be in a play thout any God in it."

When I got to New York I told all that to rson McCullers. She and Bob Whitehead finally agreed to let me give the role my own interpretation and I signed a contract.

Bob Whitehead had got a first-class director, Harold Clurman, to put on The Member of the Wedding. He'd signed Julie Harris to play Frankie, the thirteen-year-old heroine, and little Brandon De Wilde to play the little boy, John Henry.

No one was sure The Member of the Wedding would click. It is a peculiar play, having no big climaxes or sweeping movement. But it did capture a universal emotion in an adolescent, the feeling of being alone and wanting to belong to the world. And it was written with tenderness and great beauty.

I am not struck so much by the diversity of testimony as by the many-sidedness of truth.

My part of Berenice Sadie Brown, the colored cook, offered a problem. Though I was being starred, I didn't have the star part in the play. Julie Harris had that, as Frankie. So my job, if I was to justify my star billing, was to pull and hold the play together, and thereby dominate it. But I also had to avoid distracting the audience's attention from Frankie, the central character.

Free to give my own interpretation, the character of Berenice satisfied me. She had been buffeted plenty, but she was not without humor, and she had retained her faith in God. Besides this, she was moved and guided by the memory of her one great love for a husband now dead.

In the play Frankie, the little girl, wants more than anything else in the world to go on the honeymoon of her brother and his bride. Being left out of that honeymoon is too much for her to bear. And that was the play, all mood and loveliness but not too much plot. Julie Harris and I fell in love with each other at first sight and got along fine. She is a magnificent little actress. Brandon was a perfect gem in his part too.

The night we opened the out-of-town run in Philadelphia I said my prayers, as always. Then I told myself, "I'm gonna walk out there and say everything just the way I feel it."

That's what I did. And that turned out to be just what Mr. Clurman, bless him, wanted me to do. The Philadelphia papers came out with raves.

We opened at the Empire Theater in New York. And once again I sat before the dressing table in the same room where I had sat on the opening night of Mamba's Daughters eleven years before. This time I was fifty years old and it was the end for me or a brand-new beginning. Once more the prayers said so humbly and earnestly.

This time I was onstage when the curtain went up. I was trying too hard to be Berenice Sadie Brown to see, hear or feel anything else. The curtain came down and there were ovations for all of us. The reviews next day were rapturous.

How the adjectives came tumbling out of those boys: "Something rare and special" . . . "Ethel's terrific!" . . . "Miss Waters is giving her best performance in the theater" . . . and on and on and on!

There was a long line stretching from the box office next day clear around the corner and up 40th Street. The house was sold out for weeks, then months in advance, sold out solid!

I signed a contract with Bob Whitehead's firm to stay with the show until July 1, 1951. Julie Harris and Brandon got the same long-run deal.

I'd almost finished writing this book of my life the Sunday I decided to go back to Philadelphia and the little alley places where I grew up. I thought I would go to Chester, too, while I was at it, and look at the house where I was borned.

Most of those jungle areas are unchanged. But some of the things I wanted to see weren't there any more. Clifton Street, of unholy memory, had been leveled to the ground. Fawn Street, too, was gone.

I drove down the little alleys in my Lincoln. The people came out to see me. Some of them were old neighbors and friends. I was a

*First published in the Journal as Quality, by Cid Ricketts Sumner.

COOKING MIRACLE OF '51
CROSLEY
DOES EVERYTHING-AUTOMATICALLY!

ROASTS, BAKES, BOILS, BROILS, FRIES OR BARBECUES by clock control!

The new 1951 Crosley Electric Range with five-way push-button timing selector lets you cook five ways automatically: in the large oven—the second oven—the deep-well—on the deep-well unit when raised to the surface—or with an appliance outlet. With the new Crosley Rotary Barbecue you can serve food an exciting new way, too—broiled-on-the-spit for richer flavor, faster cooking, less waste.

New super-speed cooking!

It's true! Crosley now gives you the new "Hastyheat" Unit that heats faster than any cooking fuel. And Crosley's new "Colortrol" switches give you simpler, faster, more accurate selection of the unit and the exact heat speed you need.

Model SCOD-1 with double oven, double broiler—and Crosley's exclusive new-type Rotary Barbecue for "indoor meals with outdoor appeal". . . standard on SCOD-1—and available for most other Crosley Ranges.

You have a combined clock and timer, a new "Visidor" oven window, and bake and broil units in both ovens. In fact, Crosley now brings you more thrilling features than any range in history!

10 Sensational 1951 Models with "divided" or "cluster" tops, single or double ovens—now on display at your Crosley Dealer's.

CROSLEY
The Electric RANGE
with Beauty and Brains

THE PACE-SETTING DESIGNS ARE COMING FROM CROSLEY!

Crosley Division
Cincinnati 25, Ohio
AVCO

Better Products for Happier Living

SHELVADOR® REFRIGERATORS ★ FREEZER SINKS ★ GARBAGE DISPOSERS ■ ELECTRIC RANGES ★ ELECTRIC WATER HEATERS ★ STEEL KITCHEN CABINETS ★ RADIOS ■ TELEVISION star, but they didn't care. "Hello, Ethel, you old, fat thing," they said, and "My, Ethel, you're big."

And old Morton Street was now Yarnell Street. In Chester where the shanties of Banana Avenue and Longbottom's Gut once stood in crumbling, tumble-down rows is a housing development for ofays!

But in other little streets my people still live with the privies in the back, the piles of rubbish and empty gin bottles and the smells that were there when I was a little girl.

In those alley houses I was borned and raised. Too big, always too big to fit or sit on anyone's lap. There I was shaped and formed with all my character and my faults and my good points, and I was still living there when I had the greatest experience of my life, finding God.

A long, hard way I've come indeed, but it's been a great life, and if I had it to do all over again, I would choose no other path than that one I took—touring with the Hill Sisters, as Sweet Mama Stringbean, singing in Edmond's Cellar and up to Broadway, London, Paris and Hollywood. The pains and the heartaches were all part of that life.

And now I have told it all and it has been an ache and a joy both to look over this big shoulder of mine at all my yesterdays. And there are no regrets, not even sighs, only joy and thanksgiving to the Lord for this life He gave me.

For I was born naked and hungry and He fed me and clothed me and made me strong enough to make my way on my own. And there is no greater gift or destiny, I think.

Yes, I have told it all except one thing that I have been saving until now, until the end. Except for finding God, I think this was the greatest thing that ever happened to me. And it happened three years ago when I was so low and people said I was beaten and through in show business.

I was playing in some hinky-dink night club in Philadelphia and I went to see Momweeze, who was living with Genevieve. I opened the door and there she was, sitting in a chair, and she stared at me. Then she laughed.

"Mother," I said. "Momweeze, it's Ethel."

My mother looked at me with love in her eyes and she said, "Ethel, I'm glad you've come. I want you to know that, even if you never see me again. You've been a good girl, Ethel. You know God, and He has His arms around you. Don't you worry none because once again you'll be top of the heap. And do you know something, Ethel? You're pretty. You're pretty, Ethel, and you're a good daughter. He'll bring you back."

And that was it.

That was the acceptance and the fulfillment I'd been dreaming of winning all my life. And my heart filled up, and my eyes. For the first time I knew that Momweeze loved me. I knew that she had loved me and cherished me for many years in her storm-tossed, buffeted heart.

But she had been unable to say it, any of it, until then when she sensed I was down and needed her simple words of praise as I'd never needed them before and never might again.

And I bless the Lord and thank Him for building that bridge between us, and getting Momweeze to hold out her hands to me, her unwanted one, whom she had borned so long ago in such great pain and sorrow and humiliation.

STAR PERFORMANCE

(Continued from Page 68)

is unbelievably terrible," said Alfred Lunt, and this was not dramatizing it at all!

The problem for the JOURNAL was to transform the ancient laundry-storage room into a compact, efficient kitchen. And a beautiful one, too, where Miss Fontanne and Mr. Lunt could enjoy after-theater meals or Mr. Lunt could invent a new recipe while friends discussed the success of the new play.

The room held the old water heater, old meters, wall pipes, and the old cement floor was broken. Plaster fell from the walls when you walked across to the narrow door. The room itself was 11′6″ by 9′4″.

"We'll put the door to the furnace room in the dining room," said Alfred Lunt; "save more room for the kitchen."

The old steps up from the street to the parlor floor were torn out and a new entrance was opened directly onto the first floor just below ground level at the front. This left the kitchen and dining room on the first floor with the little garden opening from the dining room at the rear. Miss Fontanne designed a minute powder room in a one-story extension at the back of the house. It opened from a narrow hall under the stairway into the garden.

The first step in the kitchen remodeling was arranged with the engineers of the local utility company. They relocated the pipes so only the gas meter and a housing box for electric service were left to cope with in the kitchen itself. The gas meter was placed in a ventilated kitchen cabinet and the service box put behind a removable panel. The pipes and conduits were consolidated at the upper part of the wall above the wall-cabinet space.

With the little room cleared for action, kitchen equipment was planned to use every inch and quarter inch. Being a famous cook, Alfred Lunt had definite requirements.

"I want a center table, round, with a marble top," he said. "Marble is best for kneading bread or anything else. And what are we going to do about the meat grinder? I've always had to put it on a chair when I used it!"

He did not want one of those awful drawers for lids—they rattle around so—and he did want the knives and spoons out. He uses a wooden spoon by choice.

"Long ago I sent an idea for step-u shelves for spices to the JOURNAL," he said "now everybody has them. It used to be w couldn't get them, so we carried ours around with us."

He liked a refrigerator with a freezing compartment. In Genesee Depot, their summer home in Wisconsin, they have a walk-i freezer and keep many of their farm food there. Some of these could be mailed from Wisconsin by air from time to time.

The equipment finally chosen met all the requirements without making the room seem like a sardine box. In fact, the kitchen looked larger!

Under the single recessed window, the JOURNAL placed the cabinet sink, with a dish washer under the counter to the left. The refrigerator fitted in at the other side, and the range was located in front of a jutting chimney breast, with cabinets and counters filling in the space between the range and the dish washer.

Along the wall toward the dining room there was not space enough for a full-depth base cabinet, so a wall cabinet was turned upside down and used under a narrow counter which was left open at the end—a perfect place to use the meat chopper and to put a wastepaper basket.

In the corner next to the dining-room door, a desk-shelf wa fitted, leaving room to recess the radiator in the wall under it. A shelf for radio and cookbooks was placed over it, as was the wall cabinet fitted with ventilation grilles that housed the gas meter. And there was space left on that wall for a tall cabinet for cleaning supplies.

Beside the refrigerator, a three-tier tray rack was installed, and added storage space was provided by a lazy-Susan revolving unit in the corner next to the dishwasher. There was left a narrow space behind the counter next to the range where the chimney jutted out; this was used for small canisters and the step-up spice shelves Mr. Lunt likes—now available with kitchen cabinets.

Recessed lighting behind the wall cabinets gives good light to work by, and a central iling fixture gives a soft glow to the kitchen night.

"Light it hot, we must have plenty of light the kitchen." Mr. Lunt appreciates good hting to play up dramatic effects, and pro-de for seeability after sundown. A happy oice for the center fixture is a fluorescent e that hugs the ceiling. Through plastic nels at the sides some light spills out on the ates lined up over the wall cabinets. But ost of the light falls downward through uvres that keep the bare bulbs out of sight. At each of the main centers there are her lights which can be switched on as eded. Fluorescent fixtures were used at the nk, range, desk and the counter between the shwasher and range. With real ingenuity, e lights over the range and desk were aced under the shelves, and the front trim otects the eyes from glare.

It is good news that now there are flu-escent lights that are kind to colors. ith some of the old ones, people looked nastly and colors appeared entirely dif-rent from the way they do in daylight.

Setting the stage for charming living was e final step in the tchen. Miss Fon-nne's collection of ates is displayed on narrow shelf run-ng all around the alls above the cab-ets. No problem r Alfred Lunt to t down her favor-e, since he is 6'3"!

The walls above ie counters and ver the wall cab-ets were painted warm Victorian d. The ceiling, and ie wall toward the ining room, were apered with a copy an old Alsatian aper with a small esign on a light ocha background. ounter tops in a esistant plastic ere the color of offee laced with ream, and the wood im and doors were ainted to match.

For the floor, dark red plastic tiles were id, just right with the vivid colors of the st of the decoration.

"And we like blue," said Mr. Lunt. So the ccents of soft French blue were added in ablecloth, washable chair coverings and mall accessories.

The final touch of magic was in the marble p for the table, which is soft pink with eeper rosy tones. Worth all the hours of unting in antique shops to find! The base of ie table and the chairs were painted coffee-nd-cream.

The whole effect is gay as a French pro-incial setting and, as Mr. Lunt says, "Won-erful. It's a kitcheny kitchen, too, the most seful possible."

WHILE the Swedish bread was baking on the ay the kitchen was finished, Mr. Lunt made he coffee, and finished telling how to make he Swedish Rotgrot.

"You could call it fruit cream," he said, if it sounds better. You use fresh raspberry uice—add some currant jelly if it is too weet—boil it until you get four cups of irup, then stir in three tablespoons of ornstarch mixed in a little cold water and ook until it is thick—like gravy."

He poured gravy from an imaginary spoon o illustrate.

"Then you pour it in a low bowl and do not hill." His voice was somber with warning. Never chill it! Then you slather ground al-nonds and cream over the top. Wonderful! And have you tried Tarragon Chicken? Do I bore you? If I bore you, just say so." He ooked over at the clock. "Five minutes nore," he said.

"Miss Fontanne makes an English cake," ie went on, abandoning the Tarragon Chicken. "I wish you could taste it. It is heavy as lead. It weighs a ton, you can barely lift it. But delicious! Delicious! We have it for tea."

The bread came out, brown and crusty and tender to slice. Mr. Lunt sliced half a loaf and presently sliced the other half. "Not quite as moist as usual," he said thoughtfully. "I have to get used to this new oven. I began to make bread when I was sick a number of years ago. It has great therapeutic value—and is so rewarding." He buttered a fresh hot slice and offered it to me. "Then I went into puff pastry."

"When did you begin to cook?" I asked.

"WHEN I was living on five dollars a week," he said. "I was hungry. Then later on, Miss Fontanne was too thin and had absolutely no appetite, so I began making her breakfasts every morning, and you know what happens when you do that: omelets, creamed fish, broiled things, popovers—well, there is no end to it!"

He poured more coffee and we were about at the heel of the loaf. Miss Davidson stacked the shining bread pans in the sink. Mr. Stuart, the Journal's photographer, took a last bit of butter. Lib Goetsch passed the sugar.

"Did you see the crystal chandeliers upstairs?" asked Mr. Lunt dreamily. "Miss Fontanne found them at an auction. They were candelabra. And she said, 'Why can't we turn them upside down and put a pineapple on them and have chandeliers?' We restrung them ourselves, thousands of crystals. You can't trust a repair place with that sort of job. And how do you like her lining all the closets with quilted fabrics? She does all that sort of thing, I don't know about that sort of —— Do I bore you?"

He rolled down his sleeves.

"You know, we have been married thirty years," he said, "and sometimes people wonder why we have so much to talk about. But we never get to the end! Quite aside from our theater business, there is always so much to say!"

The afternoon sun was shining through the little casement panes. A faint sound of a boat whistle came in.

"We're getting an award next week," said Mr. Lunt with his radiant smile flashing again, "somewhere; and the wonderful thing is we're getting it together—one award to us both!"

Pretty wonderful, I thought watching him untie his apron and button his collar. Pretty wonderful, not so much for being the world's most loved acting couple, but for being married thirty years and finding it exciting and splendid.

Miss Fontanne was in bed with a cold, but she had the last word about the kitchen, as a woman should. She wrote, "I must leap into the picture to tell you what a joy the kitchen is and how it has embellished our little house. P. S. Such a collection of ravishing trays—we shall take our meals on them all over the house!"

As I looked back at the charming kitchen evoked from the rubble of the old basement room, I thought of all the plays the Lunts have dazzled us with, the glamorous backgrounds against which they have moved. But home, I thought, is the best setting of all and the very best Design for Living.

And the kitchen, as Alfred Lunt says, is certainly the most important room of all!

THE END

ALFRED LUNT'S SWEDISH COFFEECAKE

SPRINKLE 2 packages dry yeast in ½ cup lukewarm water. Let stand 5 minutes, stir well. Scald ½ cup milk and pour onto 2 tablespoons butter, ½ cup sugar and 2 teaspoons salt. Add 10 crushed cardamom seeds. When lukewarm, add 2 beaten eggs and yeast. Mix in 4 to 5 cups flour, shape into a ball and place in a greased bowl. Cover and let rise in a warm place until double in bulk. Shape into 3 strips and cut each strip in half. Braid three strips and pinch ends together for each loaf. Place in greased loaf pans and let rise until double in bulk. Bake in moderate (350° F.) oven 30 to 40 minutes. Ten minutes before it is done, brush with a beaten egg mixed with 3 tablespoons water. Makes 2 loaves.

Sensational New '51 CROSLEY FREEZERS

FREEZE FASTER AT 20° BELOW ZERO!

Crosley for 1951 sets a wonderful new high in home freezer efficiency and economy . . . with a new low in temperatures! Crosley now offers you the benefits — and operating thrift — of fast freezing at 20 degrees below zero (52 degrees below freezing!) . . . the extra convenience of Crosley's exclusive automatic ice cream freezer in several models . . . new "Floating-Action" Lid which opens at a nudge . . . "Soft-Glo" Interior Styling . . . and a host of other great features! See the new 1951 Crosley Freezers at your Crosley Dealer's.

And write for free booklet on home freezing. Address: Miss Claudia Ames, Crosley Home Economics Dept., Cincinnati 25, Ohio.

A Crosley Freezer is the thriftiest thing you can add to your home!

Model CCF-8

8 MAGNIFICENT MODELS

- Ideal for small dwellings is the kitchen freezer, holding up to 144 lbs.! Linoleum-covered flat top gives extra work surface.
- There's the Storador "Eight," with handy shelves in the lid;
- Custom and De Luxe "Eights" (capacity up to 287 lbs.);
- Custom and De Luxe "Twelves" (capacity up to 441 lbs.);
- Custom "Sixteen" (capacity up to 556 lbs.);
- Custom "Twenty" (capacity over 700 lbs.).

1951 CROSLEY Home & Farm FREEZERS

Crosley Division
Cincinnati 25, Ohio

AVCO

SHELVADOR® REFRIGERATORS ★ FREEZERS ■ SINKS
GARBAGE DISPOSERS ★ ELECTRIC RANGES ★ ELECTRIC WATER HEATERS ★ STEEL KITCHEN CABINETS ■ RADIOS ★ TELEVISION

THE PACE-SETTING DESIGNS ARE COMING FROM CROSLEY

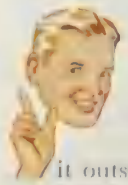
205

...s a salad! It's a dessert!

It's delicious!

The frost on the melon is the world's most famous cream cheese... Philadelphia Brand

2 POPULAR SIZES
3 OZ. a favorite for 70 years
½ LB. saves you as much as 12%



FROSTED HONEYDEW! New . . . as exciting to eat as it is to look at! And it's so easy to make.

Peel a medium-size honeydew melon: cut slice from one end: remove the seeds. Fill cavity with water then use that water, brought to a boil, for dissolving a package of raspberry gelatin dessert. Drain melon well. When the gelatin is somewhat thick, fold in well-drained canned fruit cocktail or cut-up fresh fruit. Fill the melon; place it in your refrigerator till the gelatin is firm.

Soften one 8-oz. package of Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese with a little milk and whip it fluffy. Frost the melon; place on plate with crisp lettuce leaves.

Cool, colorful slices, topped with Kraft French or Miracle Whip Salad Dressing, make grand salads. Omit the dressing and you have a luscious dessert. Spring this surprise tomorrow!

WATCH OUT! A secret of this recipe is the rich, fresh-tasting Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese. Other cream cheeses are in similar wrappers but they can't beat this brand name or bring you this quality famous since 1880. Philadelphia Brand is so superior it outsells all other brands of cream cheese combined. So always look for and insist on genuine Philadelphia Brand.

THERE'S ONLY ONE "PHILADELPHIA" CREAM CHEESE...

THE BRAND MADE BY KRAFT AND GUARANTEED FRESH!

Teachers before marriage, Edith and "Rolly" agreed that teaching wasn't for him—he wanted to farm his own land, as his forefathers had.

HOMESTEADERS 1950

By RICHARD LAUTERBACH

The Roland Powerses are proving claim to 160 acres of Idaho's Magic Valley land.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MORRIS ENGEL

The yearning of men and women for land of their own is as old as history. This irresistible drive impelled generations of earlier Americans to leave comfortable surroundings for the hazardous trek westward. The right of pioneers to stake claims to public lands was first legally recognized when Abraham Lincoln signed the Homestead Law in 1862. The spirit of that law remains in effect today, and the urge to blaze fresh paths in the wilderness is still strong. As our frontiers have closed, new homesteads have been carved out of vast areas reclaimed from the West's arid deserts. Since the war, the Interior Department's Bureau of Reclamation has opened more millions of irrigated acres to veterans, chosen by lot, with three years of proved farm experience (after the age of fifteen) and with assets of $3000. The lucky ones have five years to prove their patent to the land. Typical of the tens of thousands of recent homesteaders engaged in creating a home and a livelihood from the desert sagebrush are Edith and Roland Powers, of Idaho. This is their story.

Some of Hunt Project fields were cleared by Japanese internees during last war: land the Powerses drew was rocky, unbroken.

THIS was a very special Monday afternoon on the Powers homestead. Not because Edith and Roland Powers had dragged themselves out of bed at dawn complaining about their age (31), or because it was washday, or because the Idaho weather was hot, sunny and dry. Most Mondays in the summer went like that. This particular Monday Neighbors admire the Powerses for "sticking it out on the roughest land at Hunt." Farm equipment, well, clearing land cost more than $3700. Gross on '48 crop, $469; '49, $4000; '50 should bring $7000.

"We invested too much in machinery, not enough in comfort." This fall Rolly plans to improve house (a transplanted barracks), install bathroom, insulate. "You gotta live. You only live once."

A one-cow farm now, but eventually Rolly will concentrate on dairying.

Water is the only magic in Magic Valley

27 miles of irrigation canals link Powers farm, Snake River.

afternoon was different because Rolly's $97.50 monthly allowance under the GI School Bill had arrived and the Powers family, all five, were going to pile into the '39 Ford heap for a shopping spree in Twin Falls, 25 miles distant.

Everyone except Rolly was gathered in the spick-and-span kitchen, most livable room in the Powerses' bare, unfinished house. Edith slid the potato-bread tins out of the shiny new white electric range, twisted a dial to "OFF," and then began undoing the knotted clean diaper which she'd tied around her head after washing and setting her hair. Carmen, her thin-limbed, straw-thatched three-year-old, kept bouncing barefooted up and down the kitchen floor chanting, "Carmen's gonna get new shoes!" while Jimmy, a solidly built towhead about a year younger, thundered, "No, I is!"

Calmly ignoring the uproar, Edith stood brushing out her not-so-blond, not-so-curly locks in front of a mirror propped over the sink. A few feet behind her sat the baby, Janice Marilyn, cooing and gurgling in a shaky crib expertly chicken-wired together by the handiest of handy men, her father.

"Here comes daddy!" Carmen screamed, almost knocking down Jimmy in her dash out the kitchen door to meet a dust-covered, wirily built figure in a sweaty blue work shirt and patched overalls.

Rolly quickly scraped the ditch mud from his GI-style boots, scrubbed his small, sure hands and sturdy arms, changed his clothes and pronounced himself ready to "play hooky."

First stop in Twin Falls was the supermarket where Edith usually buys the weekly supply of food staples. With meat prices so high, she felt she was splurging on pork chops, stewing lamb, frankfurters and sausage. "When Rolly's working so hard," she reasons, "he should have meat twice a day."

Next visit was to the J. C. Penney store. While Rolly entertained Jimmy and the baby, Edith helped Carmen select inexpensive white sandals similar to those she had spotted in the Powerses' "wish book," the Sears, Roebuck catalogue. There were a dozen other things in the store that Edith wanted for herself, for Rolly and the kids. As she walked briskly past them with Carmen tugging on her sleeve, Edith whispered, more to herself than to the little girl, "Someday, someday."

's a good homemaker," other Hunt wives say, but Edith sometimes feels guilty when she hears one of them has turned in "a man's job" in the fields.

rest—brains, brawn and confidence.

After ice-cream cones at a drugstore, the family headed back to the n in time for Rolly's evening chores. The spacious drive-in movie beyond Twin was not even a temptation; Edith and Rolly had n to a movie only once during the year. Since pitching in on the nt Project in 1947, they had learned to go without things cheerfully. Monday-afternoon outing to Twin Falls would be their major di-sion for the week.

The demands of their backbreaking daily routine had made them ual shut-ins, completely isolated from dancing, music, parties, ks or the stimulating bull sessions which they both formerly en-ed. Except in the winter months, when Rolly does nothing more nuous than repair machinery, remodel buildings and study, the verses have little time for anything but work. From early spring ate fall, six days a week, their regular rising hour is five A.M. While ly sees to morning chores, Edith starts the coffee and toast, pares cereal and either wheat cakes or eggs. At six A.M., she has akfast on the table in the dinette adjoining the kitchen. A half ır later Rolly is back in the fields checking his irrigation ditches. When the children tumble out of bed at seven, Edith has water ıting for them in a huge washbasin on the ancient Great Ma-ic coal stove, used by Rolly's parents for thirty years. At the table, y Janice sits on her mother's lap for spoon feeding. Jimmy ches on a tin cooky box to bring him abreast of his plate. Carmen, o tends to be a picky eater, maintains a constant stream of childish ıtter at meals, except when Rolly is present to silence her.

Dinner, the main meal, comes at noon, with six-o'clock supper in-iably followed by evening chores. "And then," Edith says, "if ı're lucky you can sit down and read the paper. By then it's time go to bed."

Her day is just as strenuous as Rolly's: cooking, baking, washing, eeping out the omnipresent desert dust which sifts under the ill-ing doors and windows, sewing, bathing the children in the sink, ding the chickens, and "picking up the house"—which covers every-ng from making beds to ironing.

The living room, just off the dinette, is the largest. Its few uphol-red pieces are covered with khaki Army blankets to hide gaping les. A long hall to the left of the kitchen leads to the unfinished throom and the sleeping quarters—drafty in winter, breathlessly t in summer. At night Janice's crib is rolled into her parents' small droom, while Carmen and Jimmy have bumpy cots in their own m. The third bedroom is reserved for a temporary hired hand in e summer months and for visiting relatives in off season. Edith "Paddle and patience" is disciplinary rule for Carmen, 3, Jimmy, 2, baby Janice—"a lot more patience than paddle, though."

Rolly worked hard for his college degree (interrupted by almost 4 years in the Air Corps), wants things "a little easier" for his kids.

In a crisis "a wife must make her husband understand she hasn't lost faith in him." Crisis came when new irrigation ditches washed out; after 19 hours Rolly was ready to give up.

The "someday department" holds luxuries like a furnace, curtains, "a lawn that won't blow away," as work brings "someday" closer.

has made a few economical efforts at cheerful décor—a colorful red trim around the living-room windows and a dainty pink marquisette valance for the otherwise bare bedroom windows. She longs for bright curtains—but they are in the "someday department," along with the bathroom, rugs, a furnace, shrubs and enough grass for a lawn that won't blow all over the house.

Aside from tending her large and not too productive vegetable patch, Edith does not work on the land. She suffers occasional pangs of guilt when she hears that Frances Boerner or another wife has turned in "a man's job" with the seeder or disker. The neighbors, Bath water is heated on ancient coal stove. With their two 120-foot barracks buildings (from Jap internment camp) Powerses got bathroom fixtures, but must store them until the budget stretches to cover $200 installation fee.

Powerses have their own vegetables, milk, butter, chickens, eggs, sometimes venison; figure food bills run $50 a month. This year they raised a pig—"handy garbage-disposal unit."

No beauty shops on budget; nearest movie, 25 miles (they've seen one this year). 15-hour day leaves scant time for social life.

On father's death in '49, Rolly could have taken over easier job of running 200-acre family farm—wouldn't leave Hunt. "This was home, our roots already too deep."

however, respect Edith's own accomplishments. "She's a good homemaker, better'n I am," Frances Boerner readily admits.

"I like the way she keeps her children," another wife chimes in. And Vern Chenowith, the amiable, ample-sized Land Use Agent on the project, insists that Edith—the "Powers model," he calls her—is the best cook for miles around.

Rolly, who has a gay, bouncy manner despite his tasks and troubles, reported this compliment to his wife and added, gratuitously, "You know you are getting to be a better cook as time goes on—or maybe I'm just getting more accustomed to your cooking." He is positively set against Edith's doing any of the heavy work on the farm. "She could do it," he points out, recalling that she worked in a Portland shipyard during the war. But he feels Edith already does more than her share in their partnership. He has never ceased to marvel at the way she stretches their meager income.

"We have a backward budget," Edith explains. "Each month we write down what we've spent. Of course we know pretty much in advance that half the GI school check goes for food, and you can't go very far with the balance." They've bought few clothes since coming to Hunt—just essentials for the children. Most of their house-ave a backward budget: we write down what we've spent." ays Edith's stretching of $97.50 a month he gets under (their only regular income in grim '48) is "a marvel."

Hunt Unit opened 3800 acres to homesteaders in 1947. Roland Powers was 45th on list of applicants, 43 farms were offered. But he got his land ("We wanted it so much I guess we made it come true!"): two ahead of him had withdrawn.

The Powers have earned highest accolade of Hunt homesteads: "They neighbor well."

hold purchases have been necessities, too—the electric range, the refrigerator and the washing machine.

All such major expenditures are thoroughly hashed out first. Almost always Rolly and Edith agree. "Maybe there's something wrong with us," Edith muses, "but we just don't spat."

"Maybe we haven't time," Rolly puts in, his badly chapped lips curling up in a genuine grin.

Since they are married and human, they do pick at each other. But not for long and not seriously. Rolly may tease Edith because she doesn't spring out of bed, "like rosy-colored dawn," in the wee hours of morning. Or Edith may ask Rolly why he doesn't throw that pitch-black undershirt in the wash and he'll laugh and say there's no point changing until his turn for a bath.

They never squabble about how to raise the children. Their own parents were unusually strict, allowing them few liberties and stressing school and work. The Powerses want their offspring to know the value of education, but, says Edith, "We'd like them to learn more about people, how to live with them, how to handle them, what to expect from them."

So far the children have not developed any special problems. Rolly cured Jimmy of sucking his thumb by bandaging it with adhesive tape, but he hasn't found so simple a remedy for the two-year-old's quick temper. Carmen, a minx with flashes of charm and imagination, is alternately docile and devilish. On the latter occasions, her parents—particularly Rolly, the disciplinarian—may resort to paddling. Reasoning, they figure, will come later. Snub-nosed Janice Marilyn, originally named Edith Marilyn, seems to thrive on a minimum of attention. "That'll change when she walks," Rolly predicts, "then there's trouble." (Continued on Page 216)

"Maybe there's something wrong, but we just don't spat. Maybe we haven't time." Rolly won't let Edith do heavy work on the land. "She could do it," but he feels she does more than her share of work now.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

It's a half mile to the mailbox, but that doesn't seem far since the "sunk well" at the end of the lane is fixed—it used to mean a 2½-mile detour. In bad weather even the children's doctor couldn't get through.

you "buy" more servings per pound
...when you bake meat in

AMAZING REYNOLDS WRAP

the pure aluminum foil

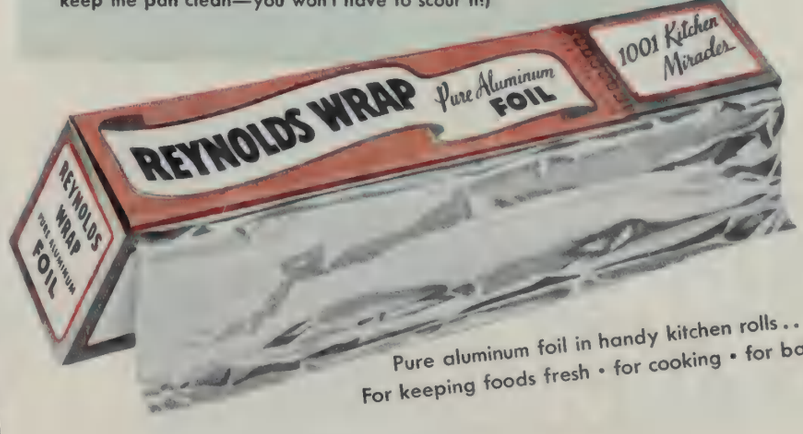
Any ham is better baked in REYNOLDS WRAP ... tenderized, old-fashioned, or the heat-and-serve kind!

JUICIER ALL-THROUGH RICHER FLAVOR, TOO!

ALL YOU DO is wrap your meat in Reynolds Wrap. This pure aluminum foil seals in juices and flavor ... reduces oven shrinkage so you actually get more servings. The wrap is your sealed "roaster." You shape it yourself, to fit the meat. And when you put the aluminum foil aside, you'll find your roasting pan is clean, needs no scouring. So you save work while you save meat, with this full-flavor "foil cookery"!

FOLDER of "1,001 Kitchen Miracles" with every roll. Buy Reynolds Wrap today at Grocery, Drug, Department or Housewares stores. Re-usable, economical!

HAM BAKED IN FOIL



(recipe developed for baking in Reynolds Wrap only)

Wash and dry ham thoroughly. (Soak old-fashioned ham several hours; tenderized ham is ready to bake.) If very fat, trim off excess. Place ham lengthwise at one end of a long sheet of REYNOLDS WRAP. Rub with a mixture of ½ cup brown sugar, ½ tsp. pepper and 2 tbs. each ground cinnamon and grated orange rind. Bring foil over ham, seal edges firmly.

Bake on rack in pan in moderately hot oven at 400° F., as follows:

Whole Tenderized Ham	—12 minutes per pound
Half Tenderized Ham	—15 minutes per pound
Whole Old-fashioned Ham	—20 minutes per pound
Half Old-fashioned Ham	—25 minutes per pound

When baked, remove from oven, open REYNOLDS WRAP and carefully pour off all grease. Score fat diagonally, stick with cloves and cover with a mixture of 1 cup brown sugar and 1 tsp. dry mustard blended to a paste with 2 tsp. wine, fruit juice or vinegar. Return to oven and bake uncovered just long enough to brown and glaze. (REYNOLDS WRAP will catch syrup—keep the pan clean—you won't have to scour it!)

Pure aluminum foil in handy kitchen rolls ...
For keeping foods fresh • for cooking • for baking

Buy it by name—

REYNOLDS WRAP

made by the World's Largest Producer of Aluminum Foil ... used and praised by leading Home Economists throughout America!

REYNOLDS 99.35% ALUMINUM

©1950 REYNOLDS METALS CO., LOUISVILLE 1, KENTUCKY

Perfect Gravy every time... ANY TIME!

SMOOTH ... BROWN ... DELICIOUS !

Just heat and serve... over Beef Burgers!

No more gravy failures! Make perfect gravy every time . . . any time . . . with Franco-American Beef Gravy. Made from fine, selected beef. Has that real, roast beef flavor. And it's all ready to serve—just heat it.

Serve this rich, brown gravy to your family . . . over Beef Burgers and potatoes, for example. Use it with roasts, meat loaf and for hot sandwiches. It's grand good-eating in stews, or added to your own gravy to make it S-T-R-E-T-C-H!

Good cooks everywhere praise Franco-American Beef Gravy and so will you first time you try it! Get several cans at your grocer's the next time you shop.

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY—READY TO SERVE!

Ham goes a long way

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

ROLAND POWERS won his bride over a meal of fried ham and cream gravy. Ham is still Roland's and Edith's favorite food—when they can afford it.

Cooked ham in the refrigerator is like money in the bank—there to provide for many tomorrows. Maybe you've had a whole baked ham for a party or a half for family Sunday dinner. There's still plenty left to create a number of good dishes—that is, if there hasn't been too much snacking going on.

And you don't have to have ham day after day, either. That's one of its virtues. Wrap it well in wax paper or aluminum foil and it will keep a week. There are so many good ways of using cooked ham right down to the bone that you'll run out of ham before you run out of recipes.

Reeling off the old favorites—how long has it been since you've treated your family to ham and potatoes scalloped together? Hash is no laughing matter, either, when it's made with ham—moist and succulent under a crisp brown crust. And when you're down to the bone—you guessed it—split-pea soup, or maybe you make bean soup at your house.

All these you may know and will have often, but now and then you'll want to be more adventurous.

Ground beef doesn't have a corner on spaghetti casseroles. Here's a good one made with ham that rates being as popular with the family as the old faithful of ham recipes—scalloped potatoes and ham. You know the way layers of thinly sliced raw potatoes, onion and slivers of ham—the layers seasoned with salt and pepper, sprinkled with flour and dotted with butter or margarine. Then milk to come to top layer and a slow bake in the oven.

HAM-AND-SPAGHETTI CASSEROLE

Sauté ½ cup chopped onion and ½ cup chopped green pepper in 3 tablespoons shortening until onions are golden yellow. Season with ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper and ¼ teaspoon paprika. Add ¾ pound diced cooked ham (½-inch cubes) and brown a few minutes with vegetables. Cook ¼ pound thin spaghetti in boiling salted water. Drain and add to ham and vegetables with 1 No. 2 can tomatoes. Simmer together 10 minutes. Dice 4 ounces sharp Cheddar cheese and combine with ham mixture. Pour into well-greased 2-quart casserole. Sprinkle with grated Cheddar cheese. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., about 30 minutes. Serves 6–8.

Ham, sweet potatoes and apples have a natural affinity for one another and blend perfectly in another oven medley.

Ham and Spinach Cutlets

APPLE, SWEET POTATO AND HAM CASSEROLE

ook 1 pound sweet potatoes in boiling lted water. Drain, peel and slice them to a greased baking dish. Or you could e canned sweet potatoes, if you're in hurry. Cover with about ½ pound ed, cooked ham. Combine a 1-pound-ounce can sliced apples with ½ cup own sugar, ⅓ cup cider vinegar, ¼ p pineapple juice and 1 teaspoon pre-red mustard. Bring to boil and simmer minutes. Pour over ham and sweet tatoes. Bake in moderate oven, 0° F., 30 minutes. Serves 4.

A dish from the Southland! Ham ds flavor and goodness to a pot-urri of vegetables. Serve it with rice.

HAM GUMBO

it off enough cooked ham from the ne to make about ½ pound. Cut it in ips and brown in 2 tablespoons ham t in a Dutch oven. Add ⅔ cup opped onion, ⅓ cup chopped green pper and 1 bud garlic, minced. Sauté til onion is golden yellow. Push vege-bles to side of pan and stir in 2 table-oons flour. Then add 2 cups canned matoes, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, teaspoon black pepper, ⅛ teaspoon yme, 1½ teaspoons gumbo filé pow-r. (This is a gumbo-seasoning mixture herbs used in gumbos. It adds a ecial flavor, but is optional if not avail-le in your stores. A Louisiana cook, wever, would not be without it on her pboard shelf.) Then add 2 cups icken broth (canned, or you can use ck made with chicken-bouillon cubes water), 1½ teaspoons salt, ½ bay af and a dash of red pepper. Simmer vered over low heat for 1½ hours. ncover. Add ½ pound green beans t into 1-inch lengths. Simmer an-ner 30 minutes. Just before serving, r in a 12-ounce can whole-kernel rn. Heat. Reseason to taste, though

Split-Pea Soup

Scalloped Ham and Potatoes

OS BY STUART

th the above seasonings and a slow mmer it should taste just about perfect now. Serve over or with boiled rice in wls or deep plates. Serves 4–6.

Remember Mrs. Sheheen—August, 50, How America Lives? She gave us r recipe for lentils and rice, which is led judra in Lebanese. Every cook es to add her own touch. Ours was slivers of ham. A wonderful casserole, we think—easy to make and not expensive.

LENTIL-AND-RICE CASSEROLE

Cook 1 cup lentils with 5 cups water until almost tender—about 30 minutes. Do not drain. Add ⅓ cup washed, raw rice, 1 cup tomato sauce and ½ cup more water. Season with 2 teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon black pepper. Cover and simmer until rice is tender. In the meantime, fry 3 onions, chopped, in 3 tablespoons bacon or ham drippings. Add to lentils and rice with ½ pound thin slivers of cooked ham. Pour into a 2-quart casserole and bake 20 minutes in a moderately hot oven, 375° F. Serves 6.

Sooner or later you'll be cutting closer to the bone—sliceable pieces of ham have gone into other good dishes. But there are still good pickings that can be chopped or ground and combined with rice in cabbage rolls. Mixed with spinach and Parmesan cheese, chopped or ground ham makes a good croquette or cutlet.

(Continued on Page 216)

HOW AMERICA LIVES

No other well-known cereal, hot or cold, is so rich in protein—the master body-builder.

The great new protein cereal that helps you have a fine body

ENJOY KELLOGG'S CORN-SOYA, THE NEW TOASTY-TASTING CEREAL WITH THE HIGH PROTEIN FACTOR

"A cereal," you ask yourself, "that can help me have a fine body?"

It's happened. It's here. It's Corn-Soya. It's life itself in cereal form. Sure, it has B vitamins, iron, energy value . . . and tastes just wonderful.

But here in Kellogg's Corn-Soya is the stuff that rippling muscles are made of . . . fine firm flesh . . . growth and staying power. This is the cereal that's really rich in protein—complete, high-quality protein, when served with milk.

In years to come, its benefits can be measured in the fine bodies of men and women who are boys and girls today. It can help you have a fine body now.

I like the clean smell of Fels-Naptha Soap Chips.

I just hated to wash work clothes until I tried Fels-Naptha Soap.

Out of the mouths of Brides

Fels-Naptha ads say it helps make washday easier. It's true, too.

Fels-Naptha's "sunshine" makes my sheets look whiter than new.

Tom fussed about his shirts till I washed them with Fels-Naptha.

Nothing washes clothes as clean as soap— Fels-Naptha, that is.

We've always used Fels-Naptha in my family. We like the way it washes.

Gentle Fels-Naptha helps my hands stay soft and lovely.

IMPROVED

Fels-Naptha Soap

also makers of FELSO, the new, White Instant Sudser

HAM-AND-SPINACH CUTLETS OR CROQUETTES

Mix together 2 cups finely chopped or ground cooked ham, 4 tablespoons grated Italian Parmesan cheese and 1 tablespoon grated onion. Add a thick cream sauce, using 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, 3 tablespoons flour, ¾ cup milk, ¼ teaspoon salt and pepper to taste. Cook one 14-ounce package frozen chopped spinach according to package directions. Drain very, very well. Add to the ham and sauce. Mix well and chill the whole business until thoroughly cold. Shape into cutlets, patties or cone-shaped croquettes. Dip in beaten egg and milk (2 tablespoons milk to 2 beaten eggs will be enough). Roll in a mixture of 1 cup cracker crumbs and 2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese. Dip in egg again, then back in the crumbs. Sauté to a golden crusty brown on both sides in shortening or salad oil. Serves 6.

HAM-AND-CABBAGE ROLLS

Combine 1½ cups finely chopped or ground cooked ham, 3 tablespoons washed raw rice, ⅓ cup chopped onion, 1 tablespoon minced parsley, ¾ teaspoon salt, a good dash of pepper and ¼ cup canned tomato sauce. Set aside. Gently pull apart the unblemished leaves of a 2½-pound head of cabbage. Pour boiling water over them and simmer until the leaves are just wilted. Drain. If leaves are large, cut in half and remove hard center rib. Place a spoonful of the ham-and-rice mixture in each cabbage leaf, fold the leaf over and tuck it in at ends, then roll up into a small, compact roll about the size of a sausage. Place the rolls carefully in a saucepan, which you have first lined with a few of the outer leaves of the cabbage to prevent scorching. Add 1 cup boiling water and ¼ teaspoon salt. Lay a small plate on top of the cabbage rolls to keep them in place. Cover tightly and simmer over low heat about an hour until rice is tender. There will be very little juice left—just enough so rolls are moist and not dry. If pan is not heavy and lid is not a tight-fitting one, you may have to add a little more water now and then during cooking. Serves 4–6. This makes about 25 small cabbage rolls.

When you're really down to the bone, it's time for a tureen of good soup. Here is one of our favorites:

SPLIT-PEA SOUP

Put the ham bone on to cook with 1 cup split peas, 1 large onion, diced, a handful of celery leaves, a pinch of thyme and one of marjoram, and water to cover. Let it simmer several hours to get out the goodness of the bone. Remove bone. Purée the soup through a sieve; season with salt and pepper. Dice bread and toast in oven until crispy brown for croutons. Have plenty to serve with each bowlful.

HOMESTEADERS 1950

(Continued from Page 212)

"The main trouble," and Edith puts her finger squarely on it, "is that children have all the time in the world and we think we're rushed."

During the good weather, Jimmy and Carmen play outside in the sand pile or romp with the black-and-white-spotted mongrel called Punk because Carmen can't pronounce "Spunk." From her kitchen door, Edith has to keep a sharp eye on the kids. Her great concern for the children's safety centers on the water. Last year eight Magic Valley youngsters were drowned in irrigation ditches. Rattlesnakes do not worry Edith as much, although Rolly smashed one with a stone not a hundred feet from the house and another homesteader, Eugene Costley, killed several hundred on his place.

With the nearest neighbors three quarters of a mile away, the Powers children rarely get a chance to mingle with contemporaries except on irregular visits to the Baptist Sunday school at Eden. This tiny village five miles away is also the location of the inadequate county schoolhouse where the Hunt Project sends its students. The Powerses hope that educational facilities will be improved by the time Carmen is ready for first grade.

The Powerses are much admired by the other settlers for sticking it out on the roughest land at Hunt. Edith, pregnant annually the first years on the project, is not too well known. She has attended few of the community potluck suppers arranged by the local Woman's Club. Rolly, however, is both well known and popular. Norm Johnson, the beefy, good-natured young farmer who tills the strip next to Powers, gives Rolly the project's highest accolade: "He neighbors well." That sentence means many things: the other men like to trade equipment back and forth with Rolly; they listen closely when he speaks up at class or during meetings of the local Farm Bureau. "He don't beat around the bush," rangy Harold Hilliard observes about Rolly, "he tells you what he's got on his mind."

Few of the neighbors have guessed that Rolly and Edith are both former schoolteachers. It was while teaching in Riverside, Washington, that volatile Roland Harrison Powers and shy Edith Bennington first met. He'd thought the pretty science teacher with the deep-set blue eyes and high cheekbones was "stuck up" when she barely acknowledged the principal's introduction and later didn't deign to greet the new math instructor in the school halls. Rolly was "baching it" with two friends in a tiny apartment and they decided to date three of the female teachers "in a spirit of mischievousness" to see how they'd behave out of school. The girls, including Edith, knew more about peninsulas and paramecia than pot holders and were agreeably surprised by the home-cooked ham dinner which Rolly fried in a borrowed pan.

Edith warmed to Rolly's chatter as well as his cooking. She listened to him ramble on about his experiences clerking for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, selling Fuller brushes, carpentering, running a dry-cleaning establishment, and riding a motorcycle from India into China during his two years overseas with the Air Force. When he talked about the future, a dreamy look came into his eyes. Teaching wasn't for him: salaries too low to support a wife and four kids, and besides, a man was too pent up; he wanted to be his own boss, wanted to work with his hands, wanted to farm as his forefathers had.

"Then one day," Edith recalls, "he asked me to marry him, and I guess I said 'yes.'" She helped him pick out the engagement ring, setting a precedent for their attitude toward future birthday, anniversary and

"A DOCTOR YOU CAN TALK TO"

HE'S "Doctor Charlie" ("Doctor Ernest's" son) to most people in the small town where his father began practicing medicine in the horse-and-buggy days. He works a 12-hour (minimum) day at everything from delivering babies to removing tonsils. Meet the Sheppards, of Hutchinson, Minnesota, in

COUNTRY DOCTOR

By Betty Hannah Hoffman

How America Lives in the November LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

stmas gifts. The gold band with a small-diamond cost $125—a sum which now ns like "too much money" to Edith.

hey were wed early on the morning of twenty-seventh birthday at Edith's e church, the Evangelical, in Missoula, ntana, with only the immediate family ent for the simple ceremony. The bride e a wedding gown which she had de-ed and made from a lovely cream-red silk brocade sent home from China er brother Kenneth.

fter a hurried honeymoon, Edith con-ed teaching and Rolly hired out as a tor driver. They were only marking time. had filed an application for one of the omestead farm units being opened by Government on the Hunt Unit of the idoka Project in Southeastern Idaho's ic Valley. So completely was Rolly con-ed he would win a farm that he made no r plans. More than 1000 other veterans 9 different states shared the same hope.

n the 43 lucky es were plucked a cracker box June 17, 1947, and Harrison ers was not ng them.

wo weeks later, school over unemployment ality, Rolly and h were visiting Powers family lorthern Idaho. phone rang. y swears he had eling inside—ell, here it es!" His name been forty-fifth he draw, and two applicants d of him were ving their ms, Roland ers was entitled ecome an "en-an."

Dad Powers' l truck, Rolly Edith headed rd Magic Val-to gaze upon future. First t out they slept a bank of the tte River, and full moon was brilliant that h woke up ask-Rolly to turn he light. Shortly after sunup they drove the rutted roads through the treeless ches, past the scraggly clumps of persist-desert sagebrush, following the twist-ourse of the deep-canyoned Snake River ne Hunt Project.

last their feet were firmly planted on own soil. Rolly, who walks with t, springy step and always appears to v where he's going, led Edith to the est boulder in sight. His friendly blue-eyes sparkled behind his steel-rimmed es as he surveyed the flat contours of his under the blazing July sun. Edith turned wide blue eyes on the distant hills, im-sed by the jagged white daggers of snow ting down the bald peaks. Rolly did not notice them. He was too elated counting fairly clear and leveled fields previously ed by Japanese évacués who had been ned at Hunt during the war. Then, with ift encircling movement, he picked up h and hugged her joyfully.

IR joy was short-lived. An error had discovered in the Hunt office: the ers unit was not the one shown to them. ir rightful farm was hilly, embedded with s, its small fields awkwardly cut up. Un-the others, these 160 acres were entirely oken and thickly covered with shoulder-sagebrush. Rolly felt sick, sick in the of his stomach and sick at heart. Clutch-his hand, Edith also experienced a wave of discouragement. Before breaking the stunned silence, Rolly shoved his Sunday pork-pie hat farther back on his big, out-turned ears. "It can't be done," he groaned; "this place cannot be farmed." Not knowing exactly what to say, Edith squeezed his hand. "Let's tell 'em to keep it," Rolly said.

Back at the Hunt office, Rolly, never noted for his calm, roared his disappointment.

"Our engineers say it's feasible to farm that unit," a gruff Reclamation Bureau agent informed him, "but it is the roughest one on the project. I don't blame you for dropping out, if you want to. Let someone with more brawn and less brain take it."

THAT advice stung Rolly's pride. He shot a quick glance at his wife. She nodded. "We'll take it!" Rolly shouted. "You say it can be farmed. I don't know how, but we'll try it!" That was the first of three important turning points in their efforts to establish their right to the land and a home of their own.

Powerses' Budget as Prepared for FHA Advance
(yearly basis)

Food	$600
Clothing	150
Personal care (includes tooth paste, haircuts, etc.)	150
Health	100
Household	150
House repairs and sanitation	25
Minor equipment	50
School, church and recreation	120
Life and burial insurance	32
	$1377

Powerses' Budget as Given Author
(monthly basis)

Food	$45.00
Clothing	6.00
Rent or taxes (prorated figure for construction costs, operation and maintenance)	11.00
Electricity	6.00
Insurance	1.64
Health (paying off $125 each delivery charges for Jimmy and Janice)	5.00
Recreation	0.00
Church	4.00
Telephone	0.00
Magazines, etc.	2.00
Fuel	10.00
Total for year	$1087.68

The second came as the culmination to a long series of hardships which the Powers family endured during their initial winter on the homestead. For a month, they lived with other settlers, dormitory-style, in a former Japanese barracks. Then, with the aid of Vern Chenowith, Rolly selected a homesite. Each entryman had been awarded two 120-foot-long barracks, and when Rolly's were transplanted (at a cost of $400), he set up various buildings which he designated as house, barn, chicken house, garage and machine shed, brooder and coal-and-wood shed. Three days before Christmas, Rolly carried Edith across the threshold of the "barn," the first place they could really call their own. It was March, 1949, before they actually moved into the "house."

They dipped into their modest nest egg to buy a walnut-finished bedstead for their bedroom. Most other furnishings were free pickups from the internment camp: dilapidated chairs, a bed and cot, Army blankets, dishes, utensils and a U. S. Army stove not sufficiently pot-bellied to warm the drafty living room against the cold. In winter they close off this room and live in the dinette and kitchen.

To this day the Powers buildings lack foundations and insulation, the thin pine-board frames being covered only by frayed and ripped black tar paper. Adequate plumbing, as well as insulation, had to be by-passed. Their loot from the camp included bathroom fixtures, but the $200 installation cost has not yet been squeezed into the family budget; instead, Rolly built an outdoor privy.

Electricity was available almost immediately, but the telephone company kept promising "Next season you'll get a line." One would have been mighty welcome those memorably bitter first winters when the snows blanketed the earth at Thanksgiving and the last drifts melted in April. During the worst spell, food, hay and medicines were dropped by air, and schools closed for two weeks. Twice Rolly contacted civilization by strapping on homemade skis and scrambling to Vern Chenowith's telephone, two miles distant. The day the snowplow failed to get through after six hours of plugging, little

(Continued on Page 219)

3 TIMES YOUR MONEY BACK

if you don't agree with Mrs. Thomas McDonough (below) of 318 Third Street, Union City, New Jersey

Biggest Thing in Ironing since Starch was Invented!

SATINA

What it is . . . How it works . . .

It's blue in color—yet takes the "blues" out of ironing.

It's lightly perfumed to make clothes smell fresher.

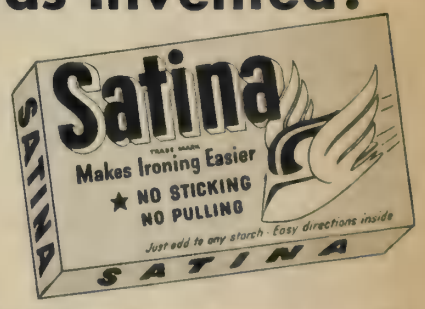
It comes in a bar of four little sections—one section for each starching.

It's quickly, easily melted in boiling water or a boiling starch solution.

Added to hot starch, SATINA lends miraculous ease and speed to ironing.

No sticking! No pulling! No caking! Because SATINA gives starched things a satin-smooth finish that really adds wings to your iron!

Yet this "Little Miracle" of ironing costs you only pennies a month!



—AND LOOK AT THE RESULTS!

Ironed with ordinary starch! — messy, rumpled, soiled after ordinary wear!

Starch plus SATINA! — dirt-resistant gloss helps keep clothes fresher, cleaner longer!

ACT TODAY on Sensational Triple-Your-Money-Back Offer

Offer is made for a limited time only to introduce millions more women to the "Little Miracle" of ironing! It's effective right now on your first purchase of SATINA!

Easy As 1-2-3

1. Buy SATINA at your grocer's—look for the little blue-and-white package with the Winged Iron!
2. Try SATINA in your next starching.
3. If you do not agree with housewives from coast to coast that SATINA added to starch makes ironing 3 times easier—simply mail unused portion to SATINA, Box No. 1540, New York 46, N. Y.—and you'll receive TRIPLE the purchase price you paid for your first package of SATINA!

A Product of General Foods

BUY-TRY SATINA NOW!

Martha Logan's

ZIPPY HAM BAKE

with rice-cheese molds

Gash fat on 1½" center slice of Swift's Premium Ham. Bake 1½ hrs. in mod. (350° F.) oven, gradually drizzling ½ c. honey over top. In last 15 min. of baking, spread with 2 tbsp. prepared horse-radish. Molds: To 3 c. cooked rice, drained but not rinsed (1 c. uncooked), add 1 c. grated sharp cheese, 1 beaten egg, 1 tsp. salt. Chill. Form in balls; roll in crumbs, then in 1 egg slightly beaten with 2 tbsp. water, in crumbs again. Indent tops; bake on greased baking sheet at 350° F. last 20 min. ham is baking. Serve hot with tart jelly.

Dinner's on the table

...and it's bound to do you proud

No need to look to your laurels when there's Swift's Premium Ham for dinner. You know beforehand that every bite will be rosy-rich, fork-tender. You're sure in advance of matchless flavor.

For thanks to a unique system of quality control, Swift's Premium is always perfect. From the careful choosing of each ham, through the Brown-Sugar-Cure and oven-smoking over hardwood fires, a long series of controls assures uniformity.

Swift's Premium is dependably, delectably the same wherever or whenever you buy it. No wonder, year-in year-out, it's America's best-liked ham!

New kind of branding shows on slices too

SWIFT'S PREMIUM Ham is perfect every time

EPICUREAN HAM: Cook 1 c. apple sauce and ½ c. light corn syrup till thick, stir constantly. Add 2 tsp. prepared mustard. Spread on Swift's Premium Ham baked and scored according to directions on tag. Brown 15 min. in mod. hot oven (400° F.). Garnish: Baked onion and tomato slices, mushroom caps.

America's favorite ham comes in 2 styles:

Blue Label, for easy home cooking;

Red Label, fully cooked.

NOTE: Not so-called "ready-to-eat" . . . but really, deliciously, fully cooked as you'd do it at home!

HAM & EGG PIE: Combine 3 c. medium white sauce, 1½ c. cubed cooked Swift's Premium Ham, 4 hard-cooked eggs cut in eighths. Cool; pour in shallow baking dish or pie pan. Top with lattice-strips of pastry. Bake 15 min. in hot oven (450° F.) till crust is golden brown and filling is hot.

Swift's unique system of quality-control assures you the same superbly mellow flavor the same delicious tenderness, in every Swift's Premium Ham mmy Powers had an attack of convulsions llowing a cold and fever. Partly by nature nd partly by necessity, Edith Powers is a laxed mother. She heated a tub of water nd quickly dumped the infant into it, othes and all.

(Continued from Page 217)

The project has had no doctor, and those om the closest towns refused to venture it—bad roads, bad weather, bad risks. "It's een easier to get a veterinarian than a doc-r," Rolly recalls with slight bitterness. fter three years, they still have to go all ie way to Twin for a physician.

The convulsions, which proved more ightening than serious, and being snow-ound do not constitute crises in the Powers manac of headaches. Rolly and Edith were repared to cope with such troubles. Their cond real crisis—and Rolly now admits he asn't prepared for it—came with the water.

THE only magic in the Magic Valley is the ater. To reach the Powers land, it must ow 27 miles from the point where the canal aves the Snake River. That first hopeful ring when the liquid magic gurgled down ie canals, Rolly thought he was ready. He ad painstakingly "set" his best fields ac-rding to verbal instructions. But words nnot assess in advance what a given flow water will do in a new ditch on an un-easured grade

The water nearly washed them out. At ur A.M., Rolly was in the fields, checking ie head ditch, the stilling basin and the zens of corrugates, or small trenches sup-sed to distribute the water evenly through ie planted fields. As he stood there, his art pounding wildly, a center ditch washed it. Furiously Rolly shoveled to patch it, then ashed inside to gulp his breakfast. When he me out, the trench was spilling over again.

Thus it went all day, seven separate wash-uts, the final one at eleven that night. When the water is running," Rolly learned, you can't turn your back even to eat. It'll ash everything away unless you're right ere packing a shovel."

When Rolly dragged himself home that ght, his face was blacker than coal and he ached in every muscle. He was not only dead beat, he was disgusted and ready to call it quits. "I'm no farmer," he told Edith. Listening while he berated himself, Edith realized it was up to her "to turn Rolly around."

His hands were so swollen and cracked from "handling the water" that he couldn't bend them. Edith tenderly coated on Vaseline and wrapped the puffed fingers with torn sheets. Lovingly she soothed his weary anguish, insisting that he not blame himself for inexperience, that everyone had a lot to learn. Presently Rolly fell asleep in her arms. Next morning when he awoke, full of good cheer and fresh resolve, Edith knew she had accomplished "what a wife must do—make her husband understand she has not lost faith in him." And the second crisis passed.

As might be expected, the Powerses' balance sheet for that first crop was pretty grim: a gross balance of $469.37. "Jack rabbits and mismanagement of the water took care of the rest," Rolly recalls. "From seventeen acres of wheat, I got only eleven sacks."

Rolly had spent three months and $400 just clearing rocks and brush. The well cost $700.70 to drill. Equipment ran very high, the secondhand International combine setting Rolly back $1600. The Ford tractor ate up another $1000. And all this time their only regular income was the $97.50 a month that Rolly received under the GI Bill for attending the state-run vocational-agricultural school on the project. That monthly check was a lifesaver for all the entrymen during 1948.

But Rolly would not have pulled through without the valued assistance of the project's two "godfathers"—Vern Chenowith and Sandy Sandberg, of the Farmers Home Administration. The Powerses borrowed $2310 from FHA in November, 1948, and another $1535 in October, 1949. From Vern, Rolly picked up sound advice on soil, seeding, crop rotation and irrigation. With other homesteaders, Rolly poisoned, trapped and shot the pestiferous jack rabbits. In a four-hour drive, Rolly and a group of neighbors accounted for nearly 900.

The 1949 Powers crops—peas, beans, grain and clover—grossed $4000, about average for the county. Additionally they had their own milk, butter, eggs, vegetables and some meat, chiefly chicken plus a deer and a few birds which Rolly shot. This year they plan to slaughter the fatted hog which Rolly raised from a suckling as "a handy garbage-disposal unit."

The third "turning point" came unexpectedly in August, 1949. Rolly's father died. Dad Powers had assumed that one day Rolly would take over his thriving 200-acre dry grain farm in Mohler, Idaho, and Rolly's widowed mother definitely expected as much. Rolly and Edith accepted fate without complaint. A local farmer agreed to rent their homestead. They informed Chenowith and other friends of their decision. Nobody blamed them. Rolly, who hadn't been too well, was under his usual 150-pound weight. Managing a dry farm, Vern assured him, was 50 per cent easier than ditch farming.

When she started to pack baby Janice's pretty blue-and-white piqué dress, Edith knew they couldn't leave. "This was home to us," is the way Rolly explains their change of mind. "Our roots were already too deep."

Staying meant much to Edith, reaffirming the sense of security and confidence which marriage to Rolly had given her. In her heart she felt that they had "proved something" to each other by not leaving for a softer life. "We'd have been back even if we'd left," she says in retrospect.

That decision definitely behind them, the Powerses are more convinced than ever that they will succeed. Many unsolved problems face them, but nothing, they think, that courage and hard work won't lick.

They recognize that it may be quite a few seasons before they can relax long enough to enjoy themselves. Now their daily escape from reality is the comic strip—"the screwier the better." Most of their news comes from the little white table-model radio during breakfast. Edith is not ashamed to admit that last year she read only one book, Pearl Buck's Pavilion of Women. She liked it, Rolly didn't. He tries to keep up with several farm journals and relies on The Reader's Digest for what he calls "a bird's-eye view of the rest of the world." On Sundays, when they remember, they spice this diet with Winchell and Pearson, whose agitated pictures of global goings on often make them feel fortunate to be where they are.

If and when they have time for leisure, they intend to read more and dabble with hobbies. Rolly, a graduate of the Northern Idaho College of Education, would bone up on animal husbandry and fool around with guns or photography. Edith, who majored in general science at Oregon State College, wants to learn more about home economics and says she often dreams of a life in which sewing and gardening are just hobbies.

THE two men who know most about the homesteaders' prospects, Chenowith and Sandberg, have faith that the Powerses will get patent to their land in a year or two. Thus far Rolly has had no trouble meeting requirements of the Homestead and Reclamation Laws. His crop this year should gross about $7000, above average. With another loan from Sandberg (this one under a recently approved low-interest 40-Year Farm Development Program), he hopes to "get out from under a bit." To do this, he plans sprinklers instead of ditches for certain fields, more leveling, erection of fences and the purchase of six milk cows. Gradually, Rolly will shift his farm's emphasis to dairying so that when the GI school income terminates next year, the family will have another regular source of revenue.

After the water is shut off this year, Rolly intends to put a solid foundation under their hand-me-down house, insulate it, install the furnace and bathroom, cover the rugless floors and, in general, pay more attention to living. "We've got to make an investment in comforts now," Rolly says. "Gosh, you gotta live. You only live once. I don't know how we're gonna do it, but we'll sure try."

And Edith, her eyes warmly reassuring him, adds, "That's all anyone can ask, isn't it?"

THE END

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

THE deal was this: any member of the family who complained about the food must wash dishes for a week. Next meal, the most habitual offender began, "This soup is as salty as brine ——" He blanched, and hastily added with gusto, "But I like it!"

There's kinship in being the recipient of another woman's recipe. Every time you bake Fronie's cake or make Mary's icing you telegraph a thought in her direction.

When a child comes up missing, today's parent doesn't call the police station—he calmly telephones the nearest neighbor with television.

Children should know there are dogs whose bite is worse than their bark.

A woman who is an assistant dean of a well-known college and a successful parent told her own mother recently that she'd been frustrated growing up. The surprised mother's query: "Is that why you are the fine person you are?"

One family's hard-and-fast rule: No one answers another from a remote corner of the house.

The well-organized wife and mother carries shoe and sock sizes in her purse, knows by heart her husband's neckband and sleeve length.

Two sisters, now in their eighties, admit they still quarrel about washing the dishes. Where once they quarreled over not doing them, they now quarrel over doing them.

Our youngest daughter writes a business letter:

"Dear Sir: I am sorry but I misunderstood the directions in the paper as to how to get your hand puppets. I sent in $00.75 and 1 box top instead of 3 box tops. I am enclosing the extra two that I forgot to send. If idenity is needed I am enclosing a piece of paper that is the same as the paper I wrapped my coins in.

Thank you,
"C---M---C---"

The family finally prevailed upon mother to take a vacation, the first in twenty years. When she returned they informed her that lightning had demolished the chimney. "Just as I expected," she said. "I knew if I left home something would happen."

A woman waited twenty years to tell her husband his habit of throwing matches on the floor was a thoughtless one and received this amazing reply, "I've been thinking about that."

It really doesn't make a lot of difference how many women there are in a neighborhood who start gossip, as long as there's just one woman who stops it.

1

Gentler bleaching action.....

added protection for linens! There's a special reason why economy-minded housewives launder their costly linens with Clorox. For Clorox conserves precious linens . . . it's free from caustic, extra gentle! So if it's cotton or linen, white or color-fast, trust Clorox to make it beautifully snowy-white, color-bright . . . with a gentleness that means maximum life for your linens!

2

Greater disinfecting efficiency...

added protection for health! After dinner come the dishes... and disinfection of sink and drainboard with Clorox. That's a health habit in millions of American homes because Clorox not only removes stains and deodorizes, it disinfects... better, quicker than any other product of its kind! There are many such ways to protect your family's health with Clorox. You'll find them on the label.

Copr. 1950, Clorox Chemical Co.

CLOROX AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

STAYING FREE

(Continued from Page 11)

more of their time restricting freedom than extending it; a great leader should have little effect among a people that has a true understanding of freedom. Masses of individuals save and build freedom, by wanting it, by understanding its nature, by being able to laugh at themselves and every frill and fancy of government they set up.

It is not so easy to be free. One must first be free to think and then able to think freely. Freedom of thought grows somewhere out of the long, slow history of western civilization, and it is bound by certain moral precepts that have stood the test of centuries and stand the test of day-to-day living: these are matters of honor and honesty, of belief in the worth of man as a man and so in the sanctity of human life, matters of faith, of human sympathy, of tolerance, of loyalty, all the things that go to make human behavior predictable to the point at which men can deal safely with one another. To be able to think freely one must understand these things, their origin and their worth; and beyond that one must have some understanding of the nature of truth, of the variability of dogma, of the steady growth and change of all phases of human thought.

It is hard to achieve all this late in life, so I believe that the first obligation of a family that believes in freedom is to ensure that its children are taught these things both in school and at home. And I believe that this obligation is more urgent now than at any other time in history, because the technique of lies and the dissemination of lies have reached a peak of efficiency never before known.

It is easy to write of freedom in high-sounding terms and generalities, far more difficult to live it. As a family we believe that all prejudice is a highway to slavery. I know we believe this, each in his own fashion; I know we understand it, each to his or her own capacity, at forty or thirteen or eleven or seven. But it is enormously difficult to be completely tolerant and unprejudiced, and none of us is or is ever likely to be. One has to have some convictions to be a worth-w human being at all, and the dividing between the virtue of conviction and the of prejudice is often too fine to be measur by the owner of either.

This on the broad plane, toward an id in the narrower plane of daily living we both more and less certain. We are politicians, though we follow politics q closely. I vote conscientiously, but rarely to a political meeting of any kind, because local people believe, most honorably, I thi that a magistrate should not reveal political preference. Ann, preserving An ican citizenship, does not vote in Cana though she holds stronger political con tions than I do. The children will vote w the time comes and I know they will v independently, out of their own thought effort.

We speak, all of us, publicly or private as the need arises, against prejudice, whic easy enough to do and not always ineffecti We have done our little part, with pleasu to ensure that Indian children are taugh the same schools as our own. We go to so length to try to learn the problems unpopular minority groups such as Dukhobors so that we can speak and intelligently if the matter comes directly us. We have been and are rigidly and ope opposed to the treatment of Canadian Ja nese on the west coast. We are, in f prejudiced against prejudice. If people ar a minority and in trouble, we assume t have a case and a cause.

There is no special virtue in all this. I rooted in self-preservation, because every is a minority and a member of sev minorities—his family, his church, his tr or profession, the organizations he belongs his city or province and, ultimately, nation. Under modern conditions it requ only a minimum of imagination to rea that he can be attacked at any or all of th points. And once that is grasped, the portance of minorities becomes an emotio and intellectual conviction.

ANN HARRINGTON

(Continued from Page 70)

onlookers, Ann's success would not be a surprise. Good-looking and slim as a fashion model, she also has the energetic, friendly personality that makes high-school popularity—plus all the material props to go with it.

Her father, a handsome, white-haired executive in his forties, is treasurer of The Shaw-Walker Company, largest exclusive manufacturers of office equipment in the world. Her mother, an aristocratic woman with short-cropped dark hair and a preference for flat shoes and tailored clothes, has sharp blue eyes and a sense of humor to match. It was in New York that the Harringtons met. Guy Harrington had been graduated from Grinnell College, in Iowa, and his wife, who had the unusual name of Tillie-Engman Stoll, had studied at Northwestern University and was working as a librarian and statistician for a Wall Street firm. When they moved to Muskegon about 18 years ago, the house on Webster Avenue was ideal for the kind of life they both liked.

Built as a farmhouse nearly 100 years ago, the house was originally L shaped. One night Mrs. Harrington "dreamed about" the big, pine-paneled recreation room they later built to make the house square. Now that room has a piano and phonograph with a collection of dance records, the windows are hung with a jitterbug print fabric, and on party nights, often after a prom, Ann and her 14-year-old sister, Kay, invite as many as thirty or forty teen-agers to jam into it to dance, eat sandwiches and drink soft drinks. (Only preparty instructions to the girls on prom night were "Everybody has to be gone by two-thirty.") One wall is built with bookshelves, there is space for Ann's menagerie of china skunks and Kay's miniature-angel collection, there are two built-in desks with spe overhead lighting at which the girls do t studying.

The rest of the house is furnished in cas Early American with many personal touc (Mrs. Harrington needle-pointed the ch in the dining room herself—"two listen to the Republican Convention, two for Democrats and one sitting up all night lis ing to the election returns.") Ann and K share a bedroom with twin beds and clo roomy enough to house their expensive co girl wardrobes.

Ann, who loves clothes and wears th well, is considered one of the best-dres girls at Muskegon High. Though she m stay within a $3-a-week allowance for mov school expenses and lunches, there is no budget on her wardrobe. In the past th years it has grown to include 11 sch dresses, 11 date dresses, 10 sweate 9 wool skirts, 4 coats (with her mother's jacket for winter formals), 23 blouses, 8 h and about 15 pairs of shoes, plus a num of evening dresses, sport clothes and cidentals.

Though she and her mother often sh together, Ann is free to make selecti alone, sending things home for approval the family charge accounts. Once her mot and father drove 7 miles to nearby Gra Haven to do some last-minute shopping special checked slacks for a beach party.

From June to September each year, Harringtons move to their summer hom brown-log house perched high on a sa dune on the shores of Lake Michigan ab 10 miles outside town, in what some tow people call "the sophisticated section."

e is designed around a two-story, pined living room centered by a huge stone ce with a collection of brass candle-on the mantelpiece. "It's a perfect for parties," Ann explained, "and we ots of them." On summer evenings, she s many as twenty teen-agers at a time imming and a grilled-hamburger sup-n the sandy terrace beside the house.
Harrington acts as cook, toasting the rs over a charcoal grill (the hamburgers naped beforehand and put between s of wax paper by the family butcher)
the rest of the party serves the potato nd sliced pickles and opens soft drinks.
Harringtons are used to teen-aged aps, and in planning menus, three ham-rs and two cupcakes are allowed ch guest, with plenty of second help-f "the trimmings."
er, down on the beach, the crowd can r driftwood for a fire, listen to the ole radio or take an after-dark swim.
s a windup for most parties, the phono-is turned on for dancing in the living of the cottage. Once, when Ann was ger and one of her parties got off to a start, her parents tolerated a water until the guests relaxed and felt more ole. ("They just threw water at one er off the top of the sleeping porch—y the time someone thought of throw-around the living room they were for dancing.") Now, if the parties get oisy, Mr. and Mrs. Harrington retreat riend's cottage just a few yards away ome back to help break up the party
d eleven-thirty.
en on nonparty evenings, the Harringis a favorite hangout their daughters'
ls. Both parents are natured and very l at home and treat een-agers, as nearly as ole, as contemporar-ne night, after a date
Ann, a boy from igan State stayed on wo in the morning
ussing Vannevar
n's Modern Arms and Free Men her mother and her. And when vorite date from North Muskegon School came to serenade Ann at o'clock one spring morning with a t rendition of Some Enchanted ing, it was Mrs. Harrington who woke tried to get somebody to appreciate that tiful music!" But when Kay came home lay to announce that she was now going ly (the boy is a sophomore at Muskegon and son of the society editor of the paper), Mrs. Harrington said, "I in't help myself. I just sat there and ed."
n also went steady about two years ago, ly and for the first and last time. (In omance confidence, she told her parents she and the boy, whom she had met at a c contest at East Lansing, had been ing along the beach of the Harrington ner home one evening. He asked if she'd gone steady. When she said "No" he ested romantically, "How about going dy with yours truly?" Several weeks
, when Ann wanted to date someone she explained tactfully to the boy that parents don't really approve of my g steady" and he answered with some f, "That's funny. Neither do mine!")

EN though "the girls have begun to up," the Harrington family still have a f fun together. Sometimes it's dinner at Century Club, an exclusive men's club sed in an elaborate brownstone in the n's business district. Sometimes it's a y at the Muskegon Country Club, parched by L. C. Walker, one of the found-of The Shaw-Walker Company, and to ch the Harringtons belong. More often a game of bridge together or a night visit ne local ball park to watch the Muskegon sies take on another girls' team.
n the Harrington family, every privilege balanced by a responsibility, for, as
s. Harrington explained, "I certainly would not want my daughters to grow up to be snobs."

Both Kay and Ann must take daily care of their bedroom and help iron their own underthings each week. In the summertime, they sometimes take turns cooking and planning menus ("though last year we decided we had enough when Kay served us creamed sardines on toast"). On Saturdays the girls sleep till 11, but on school days Ann wakes herself at 6:45, makes her own breakfast, cleans her shoes and presses her clothes for school. Then she studies a little and skims through the Grand Rapids Herald from front page to comics. At 8 o'clock she's ready to leave for school, tagged after by Kay, who is "the lazy one."

FOR Ann, life at the moment revolves around three things: schoolwork, music and a variety of dates. With the high IQ of 145 (an IQ of 140 is considered genius), she has a straight-A average, but works hard and worries hard for every top grade that goes on her record. In class she rarely takes notes because "I think I learn more if I listen and realize I won't have notes to come back to," and crams for tests directly from the textbooks. Once last year, after getting up at 4:30 in the morning to study, she got a grade of 99 in a Latin exam—one point short of perfection because of a grammatical error.

Ann and her friends frequently "like to get into sort of intellectual discussions." Recently, after seeing Gregory Peck in Twelve o'Clock High, she sat up with a group of girls till one o'clock in the morning "trying to figure out our own distinction between right and wrong. We decided belief is most important —not form." Ann, who herself is an Episcopalian, explained, "Then we got talking about whether or not we believed in life after death, and what we thought it would be like. I'm confused lately, because to me the Old Testament, with Noah's ark and everything, sounds just like mythology. Our conclusion? Just no conclusion, I guess!"

If we take men only as they are, we make them worse than they are; but if we treat them as though they were what they ought to be, we raise them as high as they can be raised. —GOETHE.

Next to schoolwork itself, music is Ann's second love. At Muskegon High, about one out of seven students takes music as part of the regular school course. Through special funds and competitive musical events, the state of Michigan has promoted musical interest until band and orchestra activities in many schools closely rival sports in popularity. Three and a half years ago, after six years of piano lessons, Ann switched to the violin and now plays second violin with the school orchestra. Besides work in class, most music students take private lessons once or twice a week at about $1.50 a half hour (Ann's teacher lives two blocks from school and Ann can take her weekly lesson during a study hour) and spend three weeks each summer at music school at Michigan State in East Lansing. Music classes are so popular at Muskegon High that many students use the band room for afterschool gathering, and two of Ann's favorite dates are a cornetist and a cello player, while last year's prom date was a top clarinetist with the school orchestra.

When she was a junior, Ann—with a girl friend and two boys—formed a group called The String Quartet to play for school assemblies and local functions. Most of the practicing is done in the recreation room of the Harrington house, and the group once earned $42 for an hour and a half's entertainment. On another evening, however, they got only a five-dollar bill to split among them for a two-hour session at a wedding. (Said Ann, "We didn't care too much because we got in a lot of practice, but it seemed sort of insulting.")

Two of the five formal dresses in Ann's wardrobe, one a black satin with a double net skirt and the other an aqua taffeta, are saved for appearances in school concerts, dates with the quartet and for concerts given by the West Shore Symphony, a local, partly professional group which gives eight concerts a year and with which Ann plays

For fine food and a festive table

Just out! New Pyrex Hostess Set!

Here's the newest 1950 edition of Pyrex Ware's prize-winning Hostess Set. 1½-quart casserole in a handsome modern design, complete with heat-saving, streamlined cover and four individual dishes (7-ounce size) —for every baking and serving use. In red or yellow.

5-piece set, gift-boxed $2.95

The casserole you couldn't live without!

Casserole dishes are getting to be America's favorite way to cook—and eat! And this Pyrex Ware beauty shows off your food at its appetizing best! Use this dish for baking cakes and puddings, and as a sparkling serving dish, as well. It's wonderful every way!

PYREX CASSEROLE 1-quart size 79¢

It boils and brews and graces your table!

Mighty talented teapot, this one. Pretty enough to be just for serving. Makes tea so delicious you'd love it just for that. But this amazing Pyrex Ware Teapot does the whole job, from boiling the water to pouring the last fragrant cupful.

PYREX FLAMEWARE TEAPOT $1.95

PYREX FLAMEWARE
for top-of-stove cooking

PYREX OVENWARE
for baking and roasting

PYREX
If it's Pyrex Ware the trade-mark is on it
WARE

"Corning," "Pyrex," and "Double-Tough" are trade-marks in the U. S. of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

A Product of
CORNING GLASS WORKS

"I've seen a great woman's picture... and I urge you to see it!"...

By Jane Goodell

EIGHT YEARS AGO I met a man and a woman who walked straight into the place in my heart reserved for my dearest friends.

True, they were only figures on a motion picture screen . . . but to me they were as real as though made of actual flesh and blood. Their name was Kay and Clem Miniver; the picture was "Mrs. Miniver".

Now I have had the opportunity to renew my acquaintance with these charming people. M-G-M has made another picture about them—"The Miniver Story"— with Greer Garson and Walter Pidgeon once again in the roles they made so true.

And nothing has changed with the Minivers themselves—they are as gay and spirited as ever—but it was fascinating to find how the world had changed around them. Time brought more than its share of tests and challenges.

However, with their wit and wisdom —and that well of courage which was always theirs—all these problems are solved in "The Miniver Story". I found it absorbing and unforgettable, a woman's picture if ever a picture deserved to be called that. I urge you to see it for I know that the Minivers are undoubtedly your friends too, and that you will richly enjoy this peacetime postscript to their wartime adventures.

M-G-M presents
GREER GARSON • WALTER PIDGEON
in "THE MINIVER STORY"
Co-starring
JOHN HODIAK • LEO GENN with CATHY O'DONNELL • REGINALD OWEN and HENRY WILCOXON
Screen Play by Ronald Millar and George Froeschel
Based on the characters created by Jan Struther
Directed by H. C. Potter • Produced by Sidney Franklin
A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture

second violin. The Harringtons want their daughter to fit in as much music as possible in high school "so she'll be able to make up her own mind about whether or not she wants to make it her lifework." For that reason Ann spent eight weeks at Interlochen, Michigan's famous music camp, last summer (the course costs about $450) to study theory and orchestral work.

Though neither of the young Harringtons is allowed to date on week nights, Ann is allowed "to have boys walk me home from music things, and that adds up." One month last year such "music things" took her out every night except one, but "I'm always home from practice by ten and I always get my homework done before I go."

It is on week ends that Ann has "regular dates," sometimes cramming in as many as three to five from Friday through Sunday. Because both her daughters go out so often, Mrs. Harrington has become an avid detective-story fan, and sits up reading in the living room until each girl gets home, even last New Year's Eve when Ann stayed up till 4:30 at a party at the country club. It was Ann's first big country-club evening on her own. Her date was the son of a club member, her dress was an off-the-shoulder orchid-and-green-plaid taffeta, and she drank cola, ate a "scrumptious" buffet supper at 2:30 and danced in the high beamed club ballroom until 4 in the morning

Every Christmas Eve the Harringtons go to a traditional Christmas party given at the club for members and their families, with a tree and presents for the children and a tea dance for more grown-up members. The big, rambling clubhouse in dark brown shingle, with its brick terrace and rolling fairways, has become a favorite summer hangout for Ann since she learned to play golf. Though neither of the older Harringtons plays, Mr. Harrington uses the club for weekday lunching when the weather is good, and Ann and some of her friends from school whose parents are club members, for Saturday-afternoon dates. (On one occasion, when a caddy, a classmate from school, answered a "How're you doing?" greeting with "I'm working. I'm not lucky like you rich kids," Ann was completely surprised and commented hopefully, "I'm sure he didn't mean it.")

Most of Ann's closest friends are the same girls with whom she goes to school each day. Some, like Ann, are members of Carmenta Literary Society, a girls' club of 40 members; Carmenta and a corresponding group of 48 girls called the Senate Fine Arts Society are the two top social clubs of the school. Carmenta was founded about 25 years ago as a literary group, but has since become an almost purely social club. (Explained the teacher who was the original sponsor, "Years ago the girls hit on the name 'Carmenta.' They thought it meant 'head of the muses' and they were so pleased that I never had the heart to tell them that Carmenta is really a water goddess, who is also the guardian of women in childbirth!")

IN her sophomore year, Ann applied for membership in the club for the first time and was turned down because, as she puts it, "I didn't really know many of the girls." Last year she applied again and, according to club rules, gave an oral book review for the group (her selection was The Running of the Tide), was considered on the merits of her book review and "my general personality" and then voted on by a membership committee of four students and one teacher. This time she made it.

As part of her initiation, she was asked to dress in a bathing suit and a jacket from a pair of Chinese pajamas and walk down a Muskegon business street, holding a bottle of cologne and asking passers-by if they would "like to smell my perfume." One of the people she met was Mr. René Robert, handsome exchange French teacher, who was considered very attractive by the high-school crowd. He recalls, "It was very embarrassing for her to have to beg of me— such a ladylike girl." But Ann remembers the afternoon as "just a lot of fun."

Membership in Carmenta means a certain amount of social prestige and fun during the school year, since the girls wear club pins and the club sponsors an annual football dance and a Cotton Ball in spring. Out of the approximate 40 girls who apply for membership in the club each year, about 15 are accepted. New members are told of their acceptance through a letter sent to them in their home rooms. Rejected members receive no letter. However, because of Michigan's strictly enforced anti-high-school sorority and fraternity laws and the genuine concern of Superintendent of Schools C. W. Bemer, both Carmenta and Senate stress that they are not sororities and try not to function as such.

Carmenta meets once every two weeks at noontime in a classroom and with a teacher-sponsor present. Once, years ago, the group brought Vachel Lindsay and Arthur Guiterman to town as literary speakers. Now their activities vary from making bookmarks for the library to collecting books for the local children's home to (as last year's special project) selling carnations at a school dance to raise $25 to buy a used desk for a teacher in Winesap, Tennessee, through the Save the Children Federation. This year Ann was elected historian of the club. Her duties, as she explains them, are clear-cut and simple:

"According to the constitution I take all the articles and pictures pertaining to the club that appear in the Muskegon Chronicle or the school paper and paste them in a scrapbook."

Last year the girls of the Senate Fine Arts Society "discovered" and sponsored Art Summerville, a Negro boy who subsequently beat out three non-Negro candidates to become this year's senior-class president. The club heard about his fine voice, bought him some sheet music and arranged to have him appear on a school talent program. But students say it was his campaign-speech version of Lucky Old Sun, sung at a school assembly, that finally won him the election. As one teacher explained, "You know how teen-agers are. They hear so much about democracy and equality—right now this group would vote for any Negro, even if he wasn't very popular. But Art happens to be popular too."

Most of the 1600 fellows and girls at Muskegon High are very fond of their school. Since it is the only public high school in town, the students range from the children of wealthy industrialists (one girl has had her father's factory, the Kaydon Corporation, named after her brother and her) to the sons and daughters of men employed in the factories or of men who work in season on the fruit farms or celery fields outside town. In school, the students are given enough freedom and are allowed enough activities to make their high-school days seem exciting, senti and important.

A football game between Muskeg archrival Muskegon Heights will ja stadium with a crowd of 15,000 studer townspeople, and there is a gym danc every game. The monthly school paper ideal scrapbook news on athletes, pro class plays, corny jokes with a loca (such as the one about the school's drinking fountain, nicknamed "Old Fac and earnest, idealistic editorials (on torial thanked an attractive faculty sartorial example to students, then p out that "the fact that teachers are no very much is certainly not evidenced way they dress"). Radio classes, with cording studio in the school, bro weekly high-school shows over a loc tion, discussing with vigor such proble cheating in school, going steady and " curfew working in Muskegon?" The servation Club, which purchased 239 a land at $1 an acre for back taxes, us land as a laboratory for biology classe interested students spend part of their tions replanting it with oak and pine.

MUCH of the responsibility for the getic but relaxed atmosphere of the scho be traced to Principal George A. Mann nattily dressed man extremely popula the students, whose educational philo stresses that "experience is what is tant, curricular and extracurricular." 100 students out of the total student are part of the co-operative work pro going to school half days and workin days. (Explained one of the boys, "W hard to get. The unions won't let th into the factories unless they're union bers like everyone else.") The H Manual Training School, an old red building on a campus donated by lumbe Charles Hackley round the 1900's, home-ec for girls and manual trainin boys. In the home-ec room, some Oriental rugs, Haviland china and st silver donated by Hackley still remain the shops have been fitted with the m machines (the printing presses turn ou school annual) and one of the most com miniature foundries in the world. Wh they major in manual training or aca subjects, all students receive diplom the same ceremony and become s "graduates of Muskegon High School.

Because the town boasts a junior c with a semester's tuition of only $7 within walking distance of most o students' homes, about 35 per cent of high-school graduating class goes on t lege. Each year several graduates regis such schools as Notre Dame and N western in the Midwest, Yale, Princet Harvard in the East, as well as at Mic state schools.

When Ann Harrington goes off to c next fall it will probably be to Oberlin, or Carleton ("I just couldn't go to a with sororities—I don't believe the right") to major in English or history music as a minor. College for Ann will ably mean two things: further stimul her already well-developed intellectual osity, and training for an at-home caree Ann hopes to get married "right away a year or so after college," and her re ments for a husband are simple and rea "I wouldn't care what he did, and I wou try to work after marriage if it mad family secondary. I'd just like him to h sense of humor and I'd like to have no vations about him—so I could admire h a group."

Part of Ann Harrington's success wit ing—so far—has been pure luck. Bu greater part has come simply from the that she is the kind of girl she is: a respo and responsible individual who would ably be a successful human being even out her initial material advantages. teen-aged friends say they like her be she is attractive, friendly and fun, teachers because she is intelligent, inter and dependable. And with that combin of qualities to work with, her luck with ing will probably hold. THE

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

To H. K.

¡Lo bailado nadie me lo quita!

By Polly Toland

Peaches will rot,
No pearl's priceless,
Our skin will shrivel and bones grow frail;
But the day dawned
Is dancing always,
Though our bodies are buried our loves prevail.

The dance once danced
Is music forever,
For foot not falters nor slippers fade;
The hour grown crystal,
The waltz more perfect,
Its love more lovely as years cascade.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Elsie Scores with 2 brand-new desserts!

Hearty, quick, and so tasty . . .
relax and make 'em a day ahead.

New Dessert Surprise

Cherry Mince Meat Mold

made with

None Such Mince Meat

2 packages Cherry Gelatin* ½ cup broken nutmeats
4 cups hot water 9-oz. pkg. None Such Mince Meat

Dissolve Cherry Gelatin in hot water. Pour ¾ cup mixture into 2-quart mold. Chill until firm. Chill remaining gelatin until slightly thickened. Meanwhile prepare None Such Mince Meat according to directions on package; cool thoroughly. Fold in mince meat and nutmeats. Turn into mold over firm gelatin. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with whipped cream and mint leaves. Makes 10 to 12 servings.

Or use any gelatin flavor your family prefers.*

Old fashioned good coffee
. . . without cooking

Borden's Instant Coffee

You'll always get compliments on your coffee when you serve Borden's! It gives you all the rich, hearty flavor of old fashioned coffee.

Borden's Instant Coffee tastes so downright good because it's 100% pure percolated coffee . . . concentrated in powder form. No bulky fillers are added to change the precious flavor.

So don't be fooled by the size of the jar. You actually get as many cups from the regular size jar of Borden's as you do from a pound of ground coffee . . . yet Borden's saves you up to 20¢! Get Borden's Instant Coffee today from your grocer.

2-Way Magic Cookies

Quick 'n' easy with

Borden's Eagle Brand

1 ⅓ cups (15-oz. can) Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
1 tablespoon grated orange rind Dash of salt
3 ½ cups corn flakes, coarsely crushed 1 cup shredded coconut
1 cup (6-oz. pkg.) semi-sweet chocolate pieces, melted

Combine Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, orange rind, salt, cornflakes. Divide mixture in half. To one part add coconut. Blend well. To second part add melted chocolate. Blend well. Drop cooky mixtures by teaspoonfuls onto well-greased baking sheets; shape with fingers. Bake cookies in moderate oven (350 F.): Coconut Cookies 10 min., till golden brown; Chocolate cookies 12 to 14 min., till firm. Remove from pan at once; cool. Makes about 5 dozen.

FREE! New revised booklet of 70 "Eagle Brand Magic Recipes." Write Elsie, Dept. J-100, P.O. Box 175, New York 46, N. Y.

IF IT'S BORDEN'S—IT'S GOT TO BE GOOD!

© THE BORDEN COMPANY

Dream girl, dream girl, beautiful Lustre-Creme Girl

Hair that gleams and glistens from a Lustre-Creme shampoo

Tonight!...Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Exclusive! This magical secret-blend lather with LANOLIN!

Exciting! This new three-way hair loveliness . . .

Better than a soap! Better than a liquid! Kay Daumit's cream shampoo with lanolin. Jars: $2, $1. Jars and tubes: 49¢, 25¢.

1 Leaves hair silken soft, instantly manageable . . . first wondrous result of Lustre-Creme shampoo. Makes lavish, lanolin-blessed lather even in hardest water. No more unruly, soap-dulled locks. Leaves hair soft, obedient, for any style hair-do.

2 Leaves hair sparkling with star-bright sheen. No other shampoo has the same magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin to bring out every highlight. No special rinse needed with Lustre-Creme Shampoo.

3 Leaves hair fragrantly clean, free of loose dandruff. Famous hairdressers insist on Lustre-Creme, the world's leading cream shampoo. Yes, tonight, show him a lovelier you —after a Lustre-Creme shampoo!

COMMUNITIES FACE THEIR SLUMS

(Continued from Page 23)

Garbage collection was erratic, due partly to failure of residents to wrap it and put it out. About the rickety apartments and under the broken floors of the older houses trash of all sorts accumulated year after year. Flies bred in the open privies. Rats and mosquitoes bred in the trash and garbage and infested the houses, of which more than 70 per cent had defective screens, or none at all. Grocery stores with their accumulation of broken crates and rotting vegetable trash were crowded among homes, with no zoning to prevent them.

In the middle of it all a run-down city incinerator spewed out its reeking smoke and sooty ash over and into the nearby frame houses, making a fire hazard. There were no regularly assigned colored policemen.

The combined elementary and high school was ten years behind the average white school in equipment in Dade County, although four members of the faculty and the principal held masters' degrees. Today, two years later, the school is rated five years behind the average white school; nine members of the faculty and the principal hold masters' degrees. The school has always been overcrowded and inadequate.

There were white doctors in Coconut Grove to whom the colored people could go, but few made house calls. There was a colored ward in Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami (now taken over and improved by the county, which has invited colored doctors to practice there). There were a small Christian Hospital in Miami and an excellent colored ward in the Dade County Hospital in Kendall, south of Miami. (Today the Mt. Sinai Hospital, which opened in Miami Beach in 1949, also is open to colored people.) Nursing services were almost nonexistent (the county health department now has a nurse who visits the George Washington Carver School for Negroes, goes to the homes of patients with TB, VD or other communicable diseases, sees expectant mothers who are unable to attend the local clinic). There was no visiting-nurse service (now one colored visiting nurse, paid from Community Chest funds, is attempting to care for all calls for bedside nursing not only in Coconut Grove, but in all Negro sections of Miami).

Health officers said the only thing that saved the residents of Coconut Grove, white and colored, from epidemics of disease (rat-borne, fly-borne, mosquito-borne, or carried by Negro washerwomen, cooks, gardeners, and nurses to white babies) was the sterilizing force of the tropic sun.

Few white citizens took the trouble to find out what was going on in Colored Town. It did not occur to many that the increase of Negro delinquency, disease, disability, crime, the overcrowding, hunger and cheap bad food were increasing their tax bills, increasing costs of welfare, hospitals, police, law enforcement and fire departments.

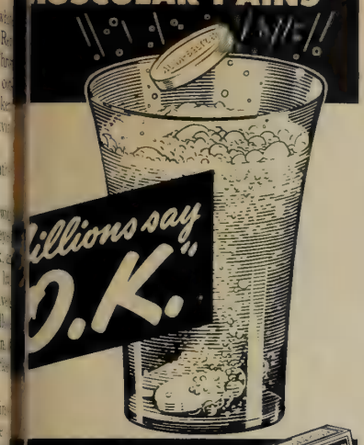
Then, in the summer of 1948, a white woman listened to a talk by the Rev. Theodore R. Gibson, minister of the Christ Episcopal Church (Negro), describing conditions in the Negro area. A sentence kept her awake that night—"My people are living seven deep."

Next morning she went to ask Father Gibson, "What can I do to help?"

Elizabeth Virrick is a small woman with dark brown hair and intense blue-gray eyes. She and her husband, Vladimir Virrick, an architect, own property in the Grove but live in a small house in the country. They have a daughter who was graduated from college last June. Mrs. Virrick, a business woman, is resourceful, courageous, tenacious—a worker, in short.

Following her talk with the Negro minister, she called a meeting at her house of twenty-four white people and Negroes to plan a general meeting at the American Legion Hall, one of the few places in Coconut Grove where white people and Negroes are allowed to meet together. A friend gave money to have mimeographed a thousand notices, at the top of which a new penny was stuck. The notice read:

"A Penny For Your Thoughts—Citizens of Coconut Grove and Vicinity—Here Is Your Chance—to say what you think, hear what others think and help get something done about—THE CROWDED, SUBSTANDARD INSANITARY CONDITIONS in the Coconut Grove Colored Section—How long are we going to close our eyes to this potential source of epidemics and menace to the health of every resident in this area? Let's wait no longer for others to act. This is your invitation to an OLD FASHIONED TOWN MEETING—to form THE COCONUT GROVE CITIZENS COMMITTEE FOR SLUM CLEARANCE—August 30 at the American Legion Hall."



Two hundred people, Negro and white, crowded the hall. They voted to incorporate as a permanent nonprofit organization called "The Coconut Grove Citizens Committee for Slum Clearance." Mrs. Virrick was elected chairman.

An executive board was elected of thirteen citizens, some Negroes and some white, both men and women. They were ministers, a doctor, a teacher, a housewife who was also a mother, businessmen, a policeman, a dry cleaner, a dentist, a writer, a lawyer and a welfare worker.

"Filet mignon means herring, Bill? I hate herring."

ACID INDIGESTION
HEADACHES
OLD DISCOMFORTS
MUSCULAR PAINS

Millions say "O.K."

Alka-Seltzer
All druggists in U.S. and Canada

ON-SLIP CAT'S PAW
Rubber HEELS & Soles

FREE CATALOG
SAVE ON Cottons!

Substantial savings on hundreds of selected Cottons! Buy direct from famous cotton specialists! Beautiful styles, fabrics, household Cottons . . . all fine guaranteed quality! Join the hundreds of thousands who buy and save year 'round . . . outfit entire family and home! Get FREE CATALOG to show you how Now! Send name-address today!

CAROLINA MILLS, Dept. 660, Spartanburg, S.C.

A HOTEL HOSTESS

YOUR WORK! Fascinating position in hotels as Hostess, Executive Housekeeper, Manager, Social or Food Director. Grade school education plus Lewis Training qualifies you. Lewis National Placement Service FREE of charge. One student writes: "I am Business Manager and Hostess. Have attractive suite in addition to salary, thanks to Lewis Training." Write for FREE Book. Course approved for Veterans' Training.

HOTEL TRAINING SCHOOL SR-501, Washington 7, D. C. 35th SUCCESSFUL YEAR

CASH MONEY!

MEN and WOMEN wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill and other popular magazines. Big cash commissions. Devote spare time or full time. Write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS
Show friends, neighbors, etc. finest Christmas assortments. Also beautiful All Occasion cards, Gift Wrappings and Religious Cards. Write for FREE SAMPLES imprinted Christmas cards and stationery.
WETTELL GREETINGS, Dept. L-10, 76 W. Adams, Detroit 26, Mich.

The work to be undertaken was assigned in four parts to a Survey Committee, a Rezoning Committee, a Sanitation Committee and a Committee for the Study of Rents.

Each person present was asked to write a letter to every city commissioner asking that colored policemen be assigned to Coconut Grove for twenty-four-hour duty, and to each of the five members of the city commission, as well as to the head of the county health department, requesting an immediate inspection of and report on all privies.

Both requests were granted. The Miami Police Department immediately appointed a Negro policeman and later added a Negro patrol car.

The city commission appointed Mr. Russell Broughman, of the Bureau of Sanitation, Dade County Health Department, to make a housing-and-sanitation survey to include the Negro section of Coconut Grove. His survey was made from the fall of 1948 to the spring of 1949. It confirmed and emphasized the extreme slum conditions in this area.

Among the cold facts presented, these were of the first importance:

Of the 37 blocks in this enclosed area, only 1 could be said to be good, and that did not rate grade A; 13 blocks had substandard, and 23 blocks extreme substandard, housing. The report showed that 52 per cent of the houses indicated extreme slum conditions. "A high proportion of the families living under slum conditions are in dire need of better housing, either through repairs or rehousing," the report stated.

The report further showed that 27.2 per cent of the houses were occupied by owners (this number is cited as a healthy sign that makes improvement easier); 11.6 per cent of the families had incomes below $100 a month; 16.2 per cent, incomes of $100 to $150 a month; 25.6 per cent, $150-200 a month; 16.6 per cent had from $200 to $250 a month. In all, about 70 per cent earned less than $250 a month at the height of Miami's winter season, when most were employed as domestic, yard, hotel or laundry workers, at high seasonal wages. This leaves 30 per cent who earned $250 or more a month during the height of the season.

In the fall of 1948 the Citizens Committee set about getting the city commission to pass ordinances requiring people to connect with water mains wherever possible and to install flush toilets, sinks and septic tanks.

Mrs. Virrick spoke before the city commission, on the day the ordinance was presented, with the room jammed with white and Negro committee members. "Two miracles have saved us so far from the consequence of all this filth," she said. "The sun, and the fact that conditions have not been made public in Northern newspapers. No one has a guaranty from the Lord as to how much longer these miracles will be sustained. We have not come here to ask you to pass these ordinances. I am not going to insult you by arguing about it. We think you know how important it is. All these people have come here for the pleasure of witnessing your unanimous, affirmative vote."

The city commission, which a few months before had voted down the water-mains ordinance, now voted for it unanimously, along with the requirement for toilets, sinks and septic tanks.

At once the city began laying water mains in the six streets then without them, thus making all residents in Coconut Grove subject to the ordinance requiring toilets, sinks and septic tanks.

Meanwhile, the committee itself was at work. First came the cleanup campaign by the sanitation group under its chairman, Dr. Franz Stewart, and its cleanup chairman, Mrs. Charles H. Baker, Jr. Leaders were appointed for every block in Colored Town. Judges were appointed from a Negro garden sorority in Miami. Prizes were begged from merchants everywhere, to be awarded to the person in each block making greatest improvement.

The mountains of trash piled up along the streets were moved out every night. The

(Continued on Page 227)

Aroll

Tweedies
ALLURING FOOTWEAR

Footwear Fashioning

brings that well-groomed look, making your ensemble so perfectly poised. There is a dealer near you.
Tweedie Footwear Corporation
Jefferson City, Missouri

BESTFORM

put your curves in their proper place

. . . give your good lines a chance to show, do it firmly and with flattery—just slip into Bestform's all nylon girdle. It has nylon taffeta front, sides and back and boned nylon diaphragm, with four sections of nylon leno elastic that trims and slims. ■ Style 5667—16" sizes 25 to 34. White and pink. $5.00. ■ Nylon taffeta bra with embroidered nylon marquisette trim—style 6077. $1.50

no finer fit at any price

A NEW KIND OF FURNITURE!

Hollywood style Coloramic, $99.95* with 4 chairs. Bronze or silver gray legs. Daystromite top in limed oak, chartreuse, gray or green wood grain finish. Chairs upholstered in red, green, yellow, chartreuse or gray Stardust.

Daystrom's own Coloramic

You'll love Coloramic, the wonderful new Daystrom furniture that combines the strength of metal with the soft beauty of wood finishes! Coloramic is sturdy steel, smoothly sheathed in rich-hued plastic. Coloramic's loveliness resists fading, chipping, cracking—blooms for years even with the hardest wear! Restful chairs are covered with washable upholstery. The sleek-lined table is topped with oak grain Daystromite, the wonder plastic that begs for hard wear. At your favorite furniture or department store.

Daystrom's new Playdine

Entertaining? For dinner at 8, or cards at 9, the answer is Playdine! For dining, it's a handsome table with the wonderful, durable Daystromite top. Later, the top slides smoothly and easily aside—and you have a versatile game table with two convenient playing levels, both felt-covered! Safe, secure places for glasses, chips, ash trays, too. Remember, only Daystrom has Playdine!

Playdine in 2 different sizes, with 4 chairs, about $124.50* and $144.50.* Triple-plated chrome legs. Daystromite wonder top in gray pearl. Chairs in a wide selection of colors and patterns.

Prices slightly higher in West, South and Canada*

—it's DAYSTROM furniture!

THE TABLES WITH THE WONDER TOP

At furniture and department stores in United States and Canada
Daystrom Corporation, Olean, N. Y. | Daystrom-Balboa Corporation, Fullerton, Calif

SLIDES OPEN EASILY!

TOP SURFACE FOR CARDS!

TOP SURFACE LIFTS OUT!

LOWER SURFACE FOR DICE!

(Continued from Page 225)

nty Health Department moved in to kill s and give advice on the eradication of s and cockroaches. In a dump lot, piled feet high with weeds, rocks, tin cans, old lsprings and assorted junk, the men strung its and worked nights cleaning and haul-
. They made benches and swings, planted es and bushes, and created a small park
l playground.

E cleanup campaign began with a pae and a band. It ended with a bigger ade and three bands from the Miami gro high schools with high-stepping maettes in bright-colored uniforms. There s a mass meeting with speeches, band mu-chorus singing and prizes. The grand zes to homeowners were two septic tanks, toilets, two sinks. There were furnie, lamps, grocery orders and cash for the ters.

The Citizens Committee was keenly aware t the expensive installation of septic ks, toilets and sinks would work a hardon many of the Negro homeowners. The ney necessary for septic-tank installation, which rock often had to be dynamited, l for the plumbing and almost always a all bathroom addition, added up to sevl hundred dollars.

First the committee faced the problem of ts to individual owners. The Coconut ove Exchange Bank agreed to lend the ney on home mortgages to some of the ners. Plumbers were able to place more ns with credit agencies. But for the real dship cases the committee set up its own n fund, borrowed from white residents, to loaned to the people at only 2 per cent inst. Monthly collections, which the bank eed to handle, were set at amounts of-d by the Negro borrowers themselves.
ne were only $5 a month and will take rs to pay off, but to date every payment been met promptly.

The gratitude and enthusiasm of the cold people were touching and tremendously rtening. A colored woman telephoned
s. Virrick, "Thank you for everything, mostly because I have had my first bath
a tub."

To this point, success had been compara-ely easy. The committee corrected evils ich needed not so much argument as the ve of an aroused and informed public nion. But now the committee's work ben to cut deeper.

They believed that what the colored area
Coconut Grove needed most, before any-ng else could be done, was rezoning.

This area had been zoned only for business l for multiple housing. Although 83.8 per t of the land area was occupied by singleily houses, they had no zoning protection.
sinesses could be carried on anywhere. No estor or would-be owner would be likely to ld single-family dwellings without zoning tection. More important, it was felt that A-insured loans would not be granted for gle-family dwellings here, where there was zoning for single-family houses.

The Rezoning Committee was made up of l-known Miami architects who also had de studies in city planning: Alfred B. rker, chairman; Marion I. Manley, Robert w Weed and Robert Fitch Smith, former irman of the Dade County Planning ard.

Their final report called for the restriction business property to certain main streets, h old and new multiple housing bordering and moving out from that, like the spokes a wheel, duplexes, and then single-family ses in as much area as possible (these uld border the areas next to streets occu-d by white people, where in too-congested ces racial tension may develop).

For the necessary public hearings before City Planning Board, after fifteen days of vertisement, the Citizens Committee concted its usual painstaking telephone poll, ling every Coconut Grove resident who s listed in the greater-Miami telephone ok. They explained the idea and urged at-ndance at the meeting.

Response was overwhelming. The comttee's rezoning plan was received with enthusiasm at a packed meeting of both races. Opposition, however, was raised by a few builders who wanted to erect multiples instead of single houses as called for in the committee's rezoning plan.

Two years before the Citizens Committee for Slum Clearance was organized, the Episcopal diocese of Southern Florida sold for $25,000 a tract of empty land which had been in its possession for many years. Father Gibson, anxious for the development of new housing to help alleviate Colored Town's problem of overpopulation, used his influence in getting the diocese to sell the property, but he says he did so with the verbal understanding that only single-family houses would be built. There was no written agreement. And before the committee's rezoning plan could be presented to the city commissioners, the purchasers put up three duplexes, each with six outside doors.

The rezoning plan was discussed in at least four hearings. Finally the committee was assured that its plan, with a few minor changes, would be approved at the next hearing. The committee heads were so certain of this that they did not bother to rally their usual crowds of members.

But only three commissioners voted for the plan, while two were against it. Four votes were necessary for its adoption.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Drudge

By Norman R. Jaffray

To see you toil, my precious own,
With unremitting care,
Working your fingers to the bone,
Is more than I can bear.

It pains me so to watch you,
dear,
Slaving in such a style,
I think I'll tiptoe out of here
And just lie down awhile.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Then a plan offered by the builders of the duplexes was presented. Four members voted for this plan.

The dismayed Citizens Committee held a meeting to determine what they could do. An attorney advised they could invoke the right of the Initiative Petition. That meant obtaining signatures of 10 per cent of the registered voters of the city of Miami, which then numbered about 107,000, and having them notarized and verified by the city clerk. The petition would then be presented to the city commissioners, who would be required within thirty days to pass it as a law, or, failing to do so, put it to the referendum vote of the people. If there was no election within six months, a special election would have to be called. The board of the Citizens Committee voted unanimously to put the question to a general meeting.

About sixty discouraged people came. The chairman called for all members who would pledge themselves to do the work. About forty stood up. There were more women than men, more white- and gray-haired than younger ones. Many said afterward they stood there with sinking hearts, wondering how on earth they could tramp innumerable strange streets, ring innumerable strange doorbells, argue with uninterested strangers. But they thought of those other people, crowded and miserable in that neighboring Negro area. They decided to do it.

In the days after, something happened. The resentment of everyday citizens at what they considered injustice grew. Eighty-five people, Negroes and whites, many of whom had not attended a meeting, came to the next one purposefully. When the chairman of the Initiative Petition Committee asked how many present were prepared to work, every hand went up. He called for people to volunteer for special committees, and appointed chairmen. People stood up to say, "I think that is something I can do." The meeting recessed so that the committees could meet separately then and there.

Something vigorous and electrical had leaped into life. It was felt by every person there—a realization that individual workers were not being called on to bear the whole burden, but only that part they could do best. It was one of those curiously exciting experiences which happen in a community when the force and purpose of the whole become greater than the mere sum of its parts—the irresistible, fused strength of democratic action.

This meeting took place at the end of February, 1949.

A central office, complete with telephone and typewriter, was set up. An office staff and clerical workers volunteered to man it every hour of the working day. Two hundred petitions, each with space for 130 signatures, were given out.

Blocks of streets were assigned to neighbors who went from door to door getting signatures. Tables were set on sidewalks outside grocery stores and motion-picture theaters, where day after day squads of people explained and answered questions and took signatures. The committee's chairman of speakers made appointments for talks to be made before women's and civic clubs, church and other groups. Newsboys, milkmen, delivery men volunteered to carry petitions about with them. Hundreds of signatures were taken among crowds attending a big homeowners' show.

At the end of May, 1949, the filled petitions, properly notarized, were turned in to the city clerk. They were found to be 528 names short. In the ten legal days more committee members went out and got 1319 additional names. The petition was certified by the city clerk and taken to the commission.

Four votes in the commission still were necessary for passage. Three commissioners voted for the ordinance. Two voted against.

The ordinance went on the ballot for the November election. The November vote was, in round numbers, only 2000 against and 12,000 for the rezoning plan. The committee's rezoning plan became law.

MEANWHILE, other things were happening. A special committee was working for the improvement of the nursery. The Negro citizens (under the direction of the Citizens Committee) organized a Negro civic group and got free adult-education classes in reading, writing and arithmetic. The Dade County Board of Public Instruction (as part of its regular maintenance program) not only repaired the school building, but bought 2½ adjoining acres on which it is planning a $500,000 new school plant. And several Negro and white lawyers worked together to strengthen the already existing free legal-assistance program.

Still the greatest need of the Coconut Grove slum area and the single greatest problem of the Citizens Committee was that of low-rent housing. The committee decided that the only means of solving the pronounced overcrowding and high-rental problem in Coconut Grove Colored Town was to get from 50 to 100 units of well-maintained, low-rent Federal housing.

They circulated a new Initiative Petition which received overwhelming support. They placed on the ballots a referendum upon which the citizens of Miami voted in special election, June 27, 1950. Legislation favoring Federal housing was passed by a majority of 4078—14,367 for and 10,289 against.

The Citizens Committee has awakened in the Coconut Grove slums the realization of the Negroes to the true value of citizenship and the importance of working together to help themselves. It has brought white people and Negroes together in hard work and understanding and true neighborliness. But its work and its story are not finished.

For democracy is not a set plan or a fixed system, but a living process by which the well-being and freedom for the people, by the will and hard work of the people themselves, can be established and will endure.

THE END

It's All So Easy! Write today for the Free Olson Rug Catalog in colors (with 40 model rooms) that tells how your materials are picked up at your door and sent at our expense to the Olson Factory, where,

By the Scientific Olson Process
we sterilize, shred, merge, reclaim and separate the valuable wools, etc., then bleach, picker, card, spin, redye and weave lovely, deep-textured, new . . .

TWO-SIDED BROADLOOM RUGS
. . . in sizes for all needs up to 16 feet seamless and any length, in all the newest:

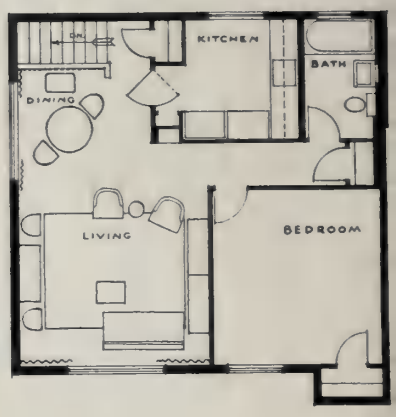
Solid Colors	18th Century	Embossed
Two-tone	Early American	Effects
Tweed Blends	Oriental Designs	Florals, Ovals

SAVE! FACTORY-TO-YOU!

Orders Completed in One Week. We Guarantee to please you, or pay for your materials. You risk nothing by a Trial. Our 76th Year! Over 3 million customers. We do not have Agents or sell through stores. Read praise from editors and customers everywhere.

OLSON RUG CO.
Chicago New York San Francisco

Mail Coupon or a 1c Postcard for—



FREE RUG CATALOG IN COLORS

OLSON RUG CO. B-49, CHICAGO 41, ILL.
Please mail Olson Rug Catalog Free to
Name
Address
Town State

Complete to the last detail, new fabrics and furniture that will stand the test of time. Only the round table and one lamp are hand-me-downs.

Planned for 30,000 young families, a Chicago suburb offers rents they can afford: $75 a month for this apartment. Here are furnishings they can afford too.

$500 and no "Make-Overs"

By H. T. WILLIAMS

PHOTOS BY HAROLD ROWLER

BY the time most young couples have bought a rug, a sofa and two armchairs, $500 has melted from their savings, and not a lamp or curtain is yet in sight. Because of this, hand-me-downs or second-hand furniture is refurbished in order to leave enough money for a few accessories, but that takes time and talent! "What about us?" say young wives who don't have the know-how or the time. The story of how much $500 bought for this room will provide some of the answers.

That handsome striped material on the armless settee (lower picture) is cheap and durable denim. Ticking would do as well. The twin chairs are (Continued on Page 230)

Here inventiveness, persistent searching and a lavish hand with col are used for money. The full-length curtains are 59¢ percale. The cotton woven rug: $48.45.

HERE, AT EMILY POST'S OWN HOME, Canasta has a hearty welcome. "What a blessing it is for the hostess! Everyone can enjoy it . . . strong players and weak, older people and young people. And no problem if there's an extra player or one missing. One firm rule," Mrs. Post adds: "Fresh playing cards, always. I would no more think of offering old cards than to provide soiled dinner napkins!"

One touch tells you—

WHAT A DIFFERENCE CEL-U-TONE FINISH MAKES!

It's that rich gleam and glide no other cards have . . . that smoother Congress "slip," that livelier Congress "snap." CEL-U-TONE FINISH does it! And see how gemlike their colors flash against the gold and silver glow of their edges! To offer such cardplaying luxury is the finest compliment you can pay your guests.

FREE! – Complete 1950 rules for CANASTA, the new game millions are playing! With valuable strategy hints. Just mail a self-addressed stamped envelope to Dept. 27, The United States Playing Card Company, Cincinnati 12, Ohio. (In Canada, The International Playing Card Co., Windsor, Ont.)

Buying a Mattress?

Be sure it's REINFORCED with

STRONGER* LONGER-LASTING

PERM·A·LATOR

TRADE MARK

Wire Insulators

Look for this tag
when you buy MATTRESSES
BOX SPRINGS
UPHOLSTERED FURNITURE

Steel wires keep padding out of springs—Prevent "Coil Feel" . . . Lumping . . . or Sagging!

PERM-A-LATOR . . . the new miracle wire insulator is the strongest insulator used in making mattresses, box springs and upholstered furniture. Tough spring wire pad is placed directly over the springs before padding is applied. It acts as a permanent barrier to keep padding from shifting or sinking into springs—prevents "coil feel", lumping or sagging. PERM-A-LATOR Wire Insulators allow greater spring action, giving you more comfort and adding years of life to mattresses and upholstered furniture. Insist on this extra value that costs no more!

*PROVEN STRONGER

Over 2½ million rolling cycles have been made in independent tests on standard mattress made with PERM-A-LATOR Wire Insulators. Tests proved conclusively that PERM-A-LATORS do not let padding sink into the springs, and last more than twice as long as other insulators.

PERM·A·LATOR
TRADE MARK
Wire INSULATORS
"The Backbone of Your Mattress"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Write for Free Booklet!

Tells how Wire Insulators add longer life . . . greater comfort to all upholstered products.

Manufactured by FLEX-O-LATORS, Inc. Carthage, Mo.

FACTORIES IN CARTHAGE, MISSOURI AND NEW CASTLE, PENNSYLVANIA

(Continued from Page 228)

upholstered in a heavy cotton dress fabric. Those opulent floor-to-ceiling draw curtains were possible only because their material is percale; and since we chose it in eggshell instead of white, they don't look like your best sheets hung up to dry. The coffee table is a luggage rack topped by a pastry board, and we're not kidding. The elegance of the double chest (upper picture) is due to a subtle shade of paint, new legs and new brass knobs. The dining table is secondhand. Its natural-wood top and black iron base mark its original habitat as a restaurant. The other furnishings are more orthodox. Their low cost is due less to inventiveness than to unremitting leg work. But it's good for the arches, the bank account and lasting satisfaction not to try to buy everything at once. Piece out your expenditures and your shopping safaris.

Besides inventiveness and shoe leather, another thing you can use for money is a lavish hand with color. This particular young couple is lucky. The management obligingly paints the walls of these apartments any color the tenants wish. But if you're not so lucky, wall paint is cheap and almost any color in the spectrum is less depressing and impoverished-looking than landlord buff or landlady green. And there are innumerable combinations of colors, subdued or dramatic, that you may like better than our own combination of dark emerald, lime, eggshell, natural, dark blue and geranium red. Just don't be timid about slapping them together. Courageous use of color is so attractive that it looks expensive.

But the location of the wood-slat roll-up blind and the device by which we hung lamp over the dining table are strokes of genuity at any price. A stair well gives a f ing of transience, being associated wit hall. And in a living-dining room you wan feel that you can settle back in peace. this reason we hung the blind from a stri lath nailed above the railing of the stair this second-floor apartment. The result conviction that you can eat your dinner read your paper undisturbed. As for the ing lamp, there is no electrical outlet ab the table, but there is an outlet in the b board under the nearby window. So hitched the lamp to a length of brass ch looped the chain through four brass eye screwed into the ceiling, and threaded lamp cord through all. Then we brought cord down behind the blind and along floor to the baseboard outlet. This trick m be something to remember, since hang lamps are coming back and dining rooms going out, and there is seldom an electr outlet above the right place for a dining ta

In view of the budget, surprisingly li homework went into this room. We plan for you to make the two pillows on the se and the cushions on the tavern chairs. Th chairs, of solid birch, come unfinished, b single coat of shellac is all they need. If have a sewing machine, you could make curtains. But percale is so inexpensive could afford to have them made. You or y husband could paint the chest, and he c replace its legs and knobs. And the sh supplying the twin chairs and the se upholster them free of charge in your material.

BUDGET

7½ Yards cotton print on armchairs @ 49¢	$ 3.68
2¾ Yards cotton texture for cushions and seat pads @ $1.90	5.23
46 Yards eggshell percale for curtains @ 59¢	27.14
7½ Yards striped denim for settee @ 79¢	5.93
1 Floor lamp	7.95
1 Hanging-light fixture	5.00
3 Yards brass chain for hanging fixture @ 40¢	1.20
1 Iron lamp	5.49
1 Shade	3.99
1 Brass table lamp and shade	9.98
1 Woven cotton rug 8′ x 10′	48.45
2 Benches (wood and iron) @ $21.00	42.00
4 Unpainted birch side chairs @ $16.97	67.88
1 Cherry-and-iron occasional table	12.50
1 Hardwood chest of drawers, unpainted	49.95
8 Brass drawer pulls @ 35¢	2.80
4 Turned legs	2.00
1 Armless settee	93.95
2 Armchairs @ $39.95	79.90
1 Dining table	10.00
1 Wood-slat porch shade	17.00
1 Coffee table (luggage rack and pastry board)	5.49
1 Serving cart	9.98
10 Pounds cotton @ 35¢	3.50
22′ Curtain track	3.52
7 Dozen carriers @ 30¢ dozen	2.10
	$526.61

SOMEONE TO COME HOME TO —

(Continued from Page 57)

and her father, Joe, had tried to do the shopping. But he had funny hours on the force, and, besides, he forgot the little things like salt and a vegetable and soap, so she had started to handle it.

After a while she did it quite easily. Mr. Kelley, at the corner grocery, helped her a lot, and she got so that she could cook pretty well—except the steaks that her father always did—and she kept things so very neat and clean around the three rooms that there was no reason to have anyone in. They could save the money for The Place.

There was only one thing that she wan wanted ever so very much. One thing she might have if they ever got The Pl She spoke about it to Joe when they finally on the subway, starting out for country.

"Perhaps," she said, trying to make hear over the roar of the cars, "perh when we get The Place I—we can have animal . . . for a pet and—and to care of."

She said it somewhat doubtfully, beca of course there were a lot of things that c

now
a pleasanter task, still!

Now the easy Sani-Flush way to keep toilet bowls sparkling is even more agreeable. As it cleans, Sani-Flush releases the light delicate fragrance women selected themselves—with their own stipulation that it doesn't linger in the air. Cleans and disinfects fast—safe as ever in all toilet systems. Just follow directions on can. At your grocer's; same price. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

in the familiar yellow can NOW FRESHLY FRAGRANT

you wash anything cleaner
when you use

the miracle water conditioner with your soap or detergent in hard or soft water.

super-mild!
super-effective!
super-good

Use Calgon® every time you wash dishes . . .
clothes . . . lingerie . . . woodwork . . . floors
. . . hosiery . . . baby . . . or yourself!

Calgon, Inc.
PITTSBURGH, PA.

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

first, but she couldn't help saying it because it had been growing in her for so long now—the wanting to have an animal that would be there when she came home, and that she could talk to and take care of and have for her own. Something—someone—to come home to. It was such a strong feeling that she had to tell Joe about it.

And he nodded now. He sat very straight beside her and she liked him in his regular suit, liked him even better than in his uniform, because he did not seem quite so official and because it meant that they could have fun together. His black shoes were very big and square, and his head towered two feet, almost, over hers.

"Maybe," he said, nodding, "maybe a cat or a dog." And that would have to do for now. Because first they had to find The Place.

They were going to a new piece of country today, one where they had never been before, and that was fun and exciting and exploring, and you never knew what you would see. At the end of the subway they got on a bus, and the sun was very bright and warm now, and there was grass, quite a lot of grass, and some boys in Boy Scout uniforms with knapsacks, and handkerchiefs at their throats, and very excited too. Most of the people got off the bus after a while, but she and Joe rode almost to the end. Out there it was truly marvelous.

Of course there were houses, quite a few houses, but they were different from the city, white with green or blue shutters, and with land around them, land that you could really run over. And, in the distance behind, the woods. The woods were part of a big reservation, her father said, and there were miles and miles of them, with brooks and streams and maybe even caves. Perhaps they would find a cave, a real cave.

They walked into the woods, and there were soft dirt paths and the trees just coming into bloom, and birds flying and calling, and the small brooks burbling hurriedly, and rocks that you could climb up on. Twice while they were walking they had to step off the path because people came by riding on horses, and that was very fascinating. She had seen that only once or twice before.

"Is it fun?" she said to her father, watching the horses gallop off down the path.

And he said, "Yep, it's good fun. I used to ride, in the old country."

She thought about that quite a lot, examining the riders very carefully when they went by, and when they found a place to eat their lunch, she and her father, she said, "Tell me some more about horses."

Her father had his coat off and his sleeves rolled up, and was lying very comfortably in a sunny spot by a brook. He was sleepy. "When I was about your age," he said, "on the farm in Ireland, I rode them for the boss. Used to jump them some."

He tried to go to sleep, but she would not let him. She made him tell her more. "Is it hard?" she said finally. "Could I do it?"

His eyes were closed. "Sure," he said lazily. He put an arm over his face, and relaxed. And she sat there, thinking and, suddenly, her mind was made up.

It was a horse that she wanted. A horse of her own. It was a silly idea, of course. She would never have one, probably, but that was what she wanted. That was what satisfied that feeling she had, that wanting to own an animal all her own. A horse. Somehow, somewhere, sometime, she would have a horse.

It was after three when her father woke up. And they took that turn in the path, that most important turn. There is always that turn for everybody. The turn that can change so many things.

They took the turn, and she was very tired now because it had been a long day, and perhaps her feet scuffed just a little. Her father looked down at her and smiled. "Tired?" he said, and his voice was gruffly soft because he loved her very much and because she was very small.

And she said "Nope," brightly, walking just a little faster, and he reached down, suddenly, and took her hand in his, and they went on down through the trees and around

QUALITY CONTROLLED
MA-TI-CO
ASPHALT TILE FLOORING

GET AMAZING 2-WAY SAVING
and beautify every floor in your home

1 New MA-TI-CO install-it-yourself METHOD cuts flooring costs 2/3

This amazing new METHOD enables you to easily, quickly install your own MA-TI-CO floor for the price of the tile alone. Average 9′ x 12′ room costs as little as $10. You save as much as $20—or 2/3rds—on installation costs. You also save on maintenance costs, because MA-TI-CO resists scuffs and mars . . . cleans easily with soap and water . . . and glows like new with only occasional no-rub waxings. Get details! See your dealer, or mail coupon now!

2 MA-TI-CO is most economical type of luxury flooring available

The cost of MA-TI-CO is so low—as little as 10c per square foot—that when dealer-installed it's still a big bargain. MA-TI-CO is long-lasting, too—the most durable type of flooring you can buy. And the rich colors, including exciting, new pastel "Petal Tones", last the life of the tile, because colors and marbleization go clear through from top to bottom. You'll find MA-TI-CO ideal for every room in your home . . . for every type of installation.

Ask your MA-TI-CO dealer for details or mail coupon today!

MASTIC TILE CORPORATION OF AMERICA
Member Asphalt Tile Institute
Newburgh, N. Y. • Long Beach, Calif.

QUALITY CONTROLLED
MA-TI-CO
ASPHALT TILE FLOORING
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

For faster cleaning and more beautiful asphalt tile floors, always use MA-TI-CO Wax and MA-TI-CO Cleaner.

MAIL COUPON NOW!

MASTIC TILE CORPORATION OF AMERICA
Dept. L110, P.O. Box No. 42
New York 10, N. Y.

Please send complete install-it-yourself instruction kit, illustrated literature and color charts. Enclosed is 10c to cover mailing.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State_____

C21

THE most relaxing slip-ons ever designed for foot comfort! Grand for loafing and lounging 'round the house, after a day outdoors, traveling, vacationing, at college, etc. Perfect for breakfast wear! Downy soft pure wool (or nylon) in beautiful colors and patterns with padded glove leather soles. They're washable. An ideal gift for anyone, anytime. Priced at $1.95 $2.50 $2.95 and $3.50 at better stores everywhere, or write for descriptive folder. Ripon Knitting Works, Ripon, Wis. (In Canada: Forest City Knitting Co., London, Ont.)

For Men, Women, Children and Infants

the bend, walking side by side in the sun. And then—there was The Place. She knew, somehow, that it was The Place.

There were perhaps a dozen small houses scattered over the mile into the woods, and they were all new houses. All except one. The One. That one was low and shingled and old, and it had a big chimney in the middle and it was small and weather-beaten and worn, but it was The Place.

It was back fifty yards from the main road, and there was a lilac bush at the front door and there was a shed, quite a big shed, out behind. And there were the woods and an unfinished house not far away. An unfinished house with men working on it.

"Joe," she said quickly, "Joe, it's The Place. Isn't it, Joe?" And he had stopped, too, looking at the little old house with the granite slabs for a foundation, and the roof where the shingles warped up just a little, and the windows that had the small panes.

"Yeah," he said, half to himself, "yeah, maybe it is—The Place." They went over, not saying anything, and stood there looking at it, and there was an old well, and apple trees that were broken, two apple trees, and it had been there a long time, the little house. "Maybe it is," Joe Walsh said.

One of the men working on the new house was watching them. After a while he put down his tools and came over. "You come out from the ad?" he said.

Joe shook his head. "Nope," he said, "we were just walking by."

"Oh," the man said. "A lot of people come out." He waved a hand. "I built all them new places," he said, "ten of 'em. Sold 'em all but the one that we're workin' on now."

"How about the old one here?" Joe said. "That for sale?"

The man shook his head. "Plannin' to tear that down," he said. "It ain't modern. People want modern houses," he told Joe. "Insulated. Cabinet kitchens."

She stood there very quietly, not daring to hope. She didn't care about cabinet kitchens, about any of those things. It was The Place that she wanted. This place. It told her so.

"I'm handy with tools," Joe was saying. "Mind if we take a look?"

THE man was not enthusiastic, but he did not care. They went on in. There were only four rooms downstairs. Four rooms and a fireplace and, upstairs, an attic floored with great wide boards.

"Old couple lived here," the man was saying, "owned all the land. Died a while ago. I bought it."

The old house was very clean, scrubbed clean. It was quiet and warm and the ceilings were low. It was The Place.

"Oh, Joe," she whispered.

"Sh-h," he said. When they went out he said, "Sure you wouldn't let this place go—as is?"

The man looked at him. At her. He was a nice enough man. He just didn't understand. "Well ——" he said doubtfully.

She felt a great weight go from her shoulders. It came off with a long sigh. Perhaps there was a chance. Just a chance. Joe and the man went over by the shed and talked for a long time. She stood and looked at T Place. Just looked at it.

"The bus only comes to here," the m said. "The rest of 'em up there have to wa down—for now. Bus goes right by t school. You go to school, young lady?"

"Yes," she said.

"Give me a call," Joe said to the man.

SHE did not say anything until they w on the bus. On and sitting down. "Will sell it to us, Joe?" she said then, when s could not wait any longer.

He shrugged. "He'd want more'n i worth probably," he said. He looked at h "Do you like it?" he said.

"Oh, Joe, yes," she said.

"You wouldn't be too lonely way o here? You'd be by yourself a lot."

She shook her head very quickly, ve firmly. "Oh, no," she said, "I wouldn't lonely. I—there'd be so many things to so much ——" Th she looked at hi "But would it be t far out for you?" s asked. It might too far out for him

He grinned do at her. "I think could handle it," said. "It's on twenty-five minute His grin stayed clo around her. It wa very warm grin. made her move clos to him. He und stood a great ma things, Joe did.

He understood th she hated, really, t third-floor brick wa up, and the clangi trolleys and the gre trucks that roared b and the schoolya that was cement a fenced in high again the traffic. He und stood that what s craved and loved we the trees and the gra and the country whe there was room walk and run, a the earth with th smell, and the bree that blew so ve clean. He was cou try people, Joe w He knew. She s very close beside h all the way hom She could only ho now. Just hope.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Rock and Tower

By Burnham Eaton

From time before my days, I know that you
Were rock upon whose substance was our home,
As bedrock cradles water, clay and loam.
My mother told me so. My brother knew.
Though in our life the honeyed words were few,
All were contained in that firm honeycomb
Of understanding. Nonsense bright as chrome,
Reason and song, we shared them as I grew.

And every way you walked was a quiet way
Where strife and anger had no place at all.
You came, at six, unhurried through the hall,
Hands in the pockets, calmness in the gray,
Smile-wrinkled eyes, as punctual as a chime.
And we were glad. And it was dinnertime.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

He was very busy, Joe was, all during t next two weeks, so that she had a great de of time to sit at home after her lessons a work were done, and wonder if ever th would get The Place. When she asked h father about it, as she did every day, all would do was shrug his shoulders and sha his head.

"I dunno," he would say. "There's a l of complications. A lot of things in the wa I dunno."

That was all that she could get out of hi Until the next every-other-Sunday, when had his day off.

"Like to go out and have another look The Place?" he said that morning, and s could not wait. She simply could not wa The subway and the bus ride were ten tim as long as the first trip. They would nev get there. And then, there they were, and t little house almost smiled at her, welcomi her, as they got off the bus. The grass w high in the yard, and the new house near was almost finished. She started up t walk and her father said, "Guess we mig have another look inside anyway," and the at the doorstep, he stopped her. He had very funny grin on his face and he stoop down and, suddenly, she was in his arms a he was laughing and they were going throu the door. "Supposed to carry your bride ov

(Continued on Page 235)

One of society's best-dressed women

Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton says . . .

"I live in Washington... I sleep in Utica"

Mrs. Hamilton's bedroom combines the old world charm of French Provincial with the wide-windowed spaciousness of contemporary design.

A leader of Capital society, Mrs. Hamilton is as particular about her linen closet as she is about her wardrobe. "I have used sheets and pillow cases by Utica-Mohawk for many years" she says. "I've never found finer sheets at any price." For best-dressed beds in your home, choose one of Utica-Mohawk's five superior qualities. You will find them at the finest stores in your city.

Write for your free copy of the new, 24-page, illustrated booklet, "Beauty Secrets From Your Linen Closet." The Utica and Mohawk Cotton Mills, Inc., Dept. LH-6, 55 Worth Street, New York 13, N.Y.

A UTICA MOHAWK PRODUCT

Symbol of Quality for over 100 Years

UTICA BEAUTICALE SHEETS
Regardless of price . . . you can buy nothing finer

MOHAWK COMBED PERCALE SHEETS
Each night proves their luxury: . . each year their economy

MOHAWK MUSLIN SHEETS
The Thrift Sheet of the Nation

UTICA MUSLIN SHEETS
Woven extra strong . . . to wear extra long

HOPE MUSLIN SHEETS
Neat, nice . . . low in price

Just 3 inches of FOAMEX give you more pure comfort than 6 to 8 inches of any other cushioning!

- You've never reveled in anything so luxuriously comfortable as Foamex—and it has no clumsy bulk at all! The space-saving comfort of Foamex comes from millions of tiny, buoyant aircells, all waiting to pamper and support you by conforming to every move and position of your body.
- That's a wonderful experience! Like floating, as far as softness and complete relaxation go... only there's support beneath you. Airy, gentle, springy support. How can anything so soothing... so peaceful... be "exciting"? But it is!
- There's nothing like sitting or sleeping on the aerated latex that's Foamex! It's clean, dust and down allergy-free. It's cool and self-ventilating. And its resilience is undamaged by the years, no matter how hard the wear!
- Think over your uses for such a material. Think what that particular sort of comfort... that particular lack of bulk... can mean for you. Then go out and treat yourself to Foamex in finer furniture and department stores and automobile showrooms.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

LISTEN TO THE VOICE OF FIRESTONE ... MONDAY EVENINGS OVER NBC

- in furniture

you get more shapely beauty...

No longer need you put up with heavy, ugly bulk that comes from "over-stuffing". Now furniture beauty and furniture comfort go hand in hand with slim, trim Foamex cushioni

- in mattresses

you get less bulk and weight...

and a lifetime of sleep-perfect nights. Only Foamex mattresses are form-fitted. specially moulded to give greater support to the heavier parts of your body and equalize the lighter parts.

- in automobiles

you get more head and leg room...

so little Foamex gives you so much more comfort. You'll enjoy new, refreshing "easy chair" rides in the spacious interior of your Foamex-equipped car.

*TRADE MARK

©1950 FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY

(Continued from Page 232)

orstep," he said, "and you aren't any yet a long while, but—well, it's your honey." And he put her down and od there in the bare rooms and looked rs, Joe?" she said, and then she could nd it any longer, and the tears came n down her cheeks and she was so that she could not stop them, ever. Joe," she said, and she clung to him s hand was gentle on her shoulder and ce was very gruff.

u like it, punk, eh?" he said, and she nly nod her head up and down, fast. -I love it, Joe," she could say, finally, love it." And that day was the very he highest day, the brightest day the nad ever known. In The Place. Their Home. She believed that then—she t that she was sure. Until another a day that came later. So many things moved in two weeks, on the next other-Sunday, and then there were things to do: the painting, that Joe did f; the curtains to get up; the furniture nge; and, of course, the outside, the nd the shed.

shed was the most interesting. It had floor, worn hard, and the rafters were d poles, very old, and it was a big It was big enough for . . . the animal. arcely dared think about that. That have to wait, of course.

then two things happened. The first appened because of the bus. Her father fore she did, usually, or after, depend- when he was on duty, so that she took s to school alone. The bus stopped n front of The Place and, as the man id, the people in the houses beyond walk down there and wait for it. And, first morning, there was the girl.

girl was a woman, really, and quite d very, very pretty, with dark hair es, and a mouth that was perhaps a arge, but that was very friendly and and that smiled at you as if you were tranger or a newcomer at all. For the w mornings they had just smiled at ther, and then one morning the girl ve your little house," she said. "It has and it looks like home. I think it's the ne on the street."

Patricia had felt very happy about nd they sat together on the bus and the girl said that she worked in town, in an office, and that her family had just bought one of the new houses farther up the line. It was nice to have someone to talk to on the way to school.

School was a little hard at first, because it was new and the end of the term and she did not know anybody. She did not stay at school in the late afternoons, because all the others had their friends and their plans. She wanted to come home anyway, because there was so much to do.

There was only one trouble about coming home. Her father was never at home when she got there, and it was very quiet and still in the little house, and it would have been nice to have someone, something, there to talk to and plan with. After a while she tried to solve that by talking to the house itself, and telling it what she was going to do and why, and how wonderful it was just to be there. How very wonderful. Talking to the house was all right, except that it couldn't really answer, or respond, and it was just a little silly to be talking to yourself all the time. Especially when the mailman or someone selling things stopped by. But she was not lonely. She kept telling herself that she was not lonely.

And then the second thing happened. The most important thing.

There was a small store half a mile farther down the bus line, and she walked there almost every afternoon, late, to buy things. A very nice man, Mr. Cohan, owned the store, and he told her what was priced too high and what was a good buy, and she got to know him quite well and he was her friend.

She had two friends now, the girl on the bus and Mr. Cohan.

One afternoon there was a crowd in Mr. Cohan's store, and they had on riding clothes. Boots and breeches for the men, and the girls in long, strange trousers that were tight from their knees down to their shoes. She waited until they had gone out, and then she said, "Do they ride near here?"

Mr. Cohan nodded. "There's a stable back a piece," he said. "Place where they rent horses. Not much of a place, either," he went on disgustedly, "if you ask me."

She did not ask him why it was not much of a place, but she did know one thing. She was going up there. She was going to see the horses. It was the most thrilling thing since The Place. The next day was Saturday and, in the afternoon, she walked down to the stable.

It was a very battered and tumble-down building, set in the scrub oak and pines on the edge of the woods. Most of the windows were broken, and there were great piles of manure, and tangles of old haywire, and rickety buggies and sleighs stuck out in the open, warped and sagging. It was a very dreary place. A group of men and girls was standing around, talking very loud, and she kept away from them and stayed over by a fenced-in place and just watched.

In a few minutes a lot of horses came out of one of the trails, and the people got off in the dooryard. The horses just stood there, motionless. It was a hot day, and the horses were steaming and their heads were down. Patricia watched them. After a minute one of the horses saw a dusty bit of grass near her and, very slowly, he edged his way over.

He was a black horse and very tall, Patricia thought, and very thin. His ribs stood out clear and sharp, and there were great hipbones that stuck up high with the skin tight over them. The hairs around his mouth were gray, and there were deep hollows over his eyes, hollows that pulsated in and out as he nibbled at the sparse grass. As he stretched his head down she could see, under the front of the saddle, a sore that was rubbed raw.

He came quite near her, and she did not move and he ate the one bit of grass, his reins dragging over his neck. There was some more grass beyond the fence, and Patricia picked a great handful and held it out to him and he ate it, his gaunt head close to her, his eyes big and brown and expressionless. When it was all eaten he kept his head out toward her, and she touched his nose. It was very soft and he did not move. Not until one of the men yelled:

"Hey, get that horse. Get Ben. He goes out with this gang."

Someone came over and grabbed at the reins, hard and snatching, and the horse turned and walked over to the group, walked very slowly. Patricia noticed that he sagged just a little as some man got on. Then the man was urging him out of the yard with the others, and Patricia watched them go. He was very tired, she thought, to have to go out again. Ben, the man had called him. Ben. She waited there for an hour until the horses came back again. Until Ben came back.

It was five o'clock when they did come back, and she should have been at home, starting the dinner. But she had to wait. A boy took Ben and led him down into the cellar of the barn, down through a narrow, sagging door. Patricia waited, gathering her courage. Then she went on down and into the cellar.

It was quite dark in there and the floor was muddy and there were cobwebs everywhere and a dank, swampy smell. It took minutes before her eyes were used to the darkness, and then she saw the boy come out of a narrow stall, with Ben's saddle and bridle over his arm. The boy went up some stairs, and Patricia went over and stood behind the black horse.

For a minute she could not see his head or neck, and that puzzled her until she realized that the stall slanted down in front so steeply that Ben's front feet were in a deep hole. It made him seem even more gaunt than before. It was such a narrow stall that there was barely room for him to turn his head. And he did not turn it. He just stood there, one hind hoof turned up dejectedly. Standing. Standing. She wanted to touch him, to do something for him, but she did not dare. She would have to squeeze in there, past him, and he might move. Then she thought of the grass.

She went outside and gathered two great handfuls. It was thick and moist and smelled of the woods. She took it down into the cellar and stood there, gathering her courage. After a minute she said, "Don't move now, Ben," and, her heart in her mouth, she squeezed by his ribs and up to his head.

He did not even notice her at first, not until he smelled the grass, and then his ears

(Continued on Page 237)

"Why can't we ever have a fair argument? Why must you always drag in a lot of scientific facts?"

After 25 BEWARE of Dry Skin

After 25 every woman ought to use her mirror with a more critical eye.

From 25 on, the natural oil that keeps skin soft and pliant, starts decreasing. Before 40, skin may lose as much as 20% of its own softening oil.

But you can help offset this drying out—by giving your skin an oil especially suited to its needs. You can use a dry skin cream that is extra rich in lanolin, which is very like the oil of the skin itself—this special cream is Pond's Dry Skin Cream.

See its effects on your skin. Work it in thoroughly for night softening. Use it lightly for a smooth look under make-up. The rich cream brings skin a fresher, younger softness at once.

Along your Chin Line—that matronly-looking sagging starts to show.

To Tone Up—Use thumb and first finger of each hand and "pinch along" from point of chin to ear with lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream. This treatment brings circulation up; gives skin the rich lubrication it needs.

Between your Eyebrows, on your Forehead—you hate to see those tiny "dry skin" lines etch in.

To Smooth Down—Regularly every night use lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream to give your dry skin the oil it needs. Circle it on with firm, quick little circles—up between eyes, out over eyebrows to your temples.

• • • • •

3 features: These 3 features make Pond's Dry Skin Cream so effective: 1. It is rich in lanolin—very like the skin's own oil. 2. It is homogenized to soak in better. 3. It has a softening emulsifier. 89¢, 49¢, 29¢—Trial size 10¢ (plus tax). Get your jar—today!

MRS. ERNEST L. BIDDLE says, "I find Pond's Dry Skin Cream indispensable—perfect softening care for dry skin."

Start this truly remarkable correction of Dry Skin today!

Sectional sofa in strikingly modern Lipstick Red BOLTAFLEX.

I PINCHED MYSELF, BUT THE BEAUTY AND THE PRICE STAYED THE SAME!

NO WONDER I thought I was dreaming . . . here was furniture a millionairess would go for and even I could afford it! Here was lap-of-luxury beauty and comfort at a pygmy of a price!

The colors alone would excite any woman . . . such a fabulous range of true decorator colors and patterns! Boltaflex-covered furniture looks soft and inviting . . . and it is! Boltaflex is as tender as a kitten's ear, yet as wear-defying as an elephant's hide.

Boltaflex won't chip or peel and it resists staining, scuffing and fading. And, just think, smears and smudges wipe away with soap and water! Small wonder leading manufacturers cover their finest furniture with Boltaflex beauty.

Your favorite stores carry Boltaflex by-the-yard and feature Boltaflex-covered furniture. Look for the Boltaflex tag. It's your guide to the smartest styles at good old-fashioned prices.

Boltaflex sells BY-THE-YARD at all leading department stores. It is also available in SEALTUFT, the stitchless, quilted plastic. For further information, store names and descriptive folder, write Dept. J-510. BOLTA PRODUCTS SALES, INC., LAWRENCE, MASS.

Wing chair in washable Bouquet, one of the magnificent BOLTAFLEX Multi-Color Prints. Note BOLTAFLEX with SEALTUFT on headboard

Sofa bed in rugged Gold Dust, rich new BOLTAFLEX finish flecked with gold. Note SEALTUFT on wall.

Boltaflex* means Covered with Lasting Beauty

*ALL-PLASTIC MATERIAL

(Continued from Page 235)

ıp, slowly, wearily, and his great head around and he nibbled tentatively.
ad came just to the top of hers, and od there and fed him all the grass, her humping excitedly within her.
r a while she began to talk to him, just words, not words that meant anyeally, just sounds that she wanted to ıd she rubbed her hand along his neck leaned a little against her. Her hand ery dirty from rubbing him. She there in his stall for a long time, and he realized that she must get home,
e gave him one last pat.
l be back, Ben," she promised, and she n home. She had another friend now.
ıd Ben.
dreamed about him that night. Ben ery lovely. Ben was her horse. She what she was going to do the next day.
ıer father.
next day was the every-other-Sunday,
r father was very busy working in the
and it was not until afternoon, quite ıat she dared to say, "Will you go for with me?"
put down the spade and mopped his
"Good idea," he said, and she said, nt to show you something."
had planned just to take him up and him the awful stable and let him see ust let him see him, so that someday, ay a lot later, she might get the coursuggest something more. That was all d planned, but it did not work out that Getting him to the stable was, of , the most important thing, but on the omething else hap-

ey were walking
one of the paths
the sound of a horse
up behind them.
moved to one side,
hen she saw that it
he girl, her friend
the bus. The very girl with the brown and the smile. She ı a very handsome horse, and he had ad up and was alive and alert and the ıt very straight and her coat fitted fully. When she saw Pat, she waved, ıat smile broke wide.
ho's your friend?" Joe said, as the girl eared down the path, and Pat said, name is Nancy Carver. She lives up d us. I ride on the bus with her." father did not say anything for quite le. He seemed very thoughtful. It ice to find that Miss Carver liked too. She had not known about that.
hen they came to the stable. Her fanorted.
fine kind of a place," he said dislly.
re was a big crowd standing around se it was Sunday, the day everyone out from town to ride. Her father d to move on, he did not like the place, e said, "Oh, please, just a little while," se she wanted him to see Ben. If she
And then—Ben came in.
came in with a whole crowd, riding and he was dripping wet, exhausted.
suddenly, as he came closer, she saw.
she cried out, involuntarily, a strange urt and anguished choking little cry.
se he was hurt. Hurt badly.

had fallen, obviously, and the sharp
s had cut his knees and one shoulder, ey were bleeding, dirty with ground-in l, and she ran to him, Patricia did, not ing to think of the people crowding d, not thinking of anything except that s hurt. Her horse was hurt.
e man on his back was saying, "You got ve, renting out a horse so tired he can't up. You got a nerve," and she was wip-the cut legs with her hand, and there people all around and she did not even em. She did not know that they were until she realized that her father's hand n her shoulder, and then she moved with him and she could not see because as crying, crying so hard.

Besides Socrates and Jesus, the great teachers of mankind are mankind itself—your parents and mine.

—JACQUES BARZUN:
Teacher in America, Atlantic Monthly Press, (Little, Brown & Company).

"Never mind, Pat," her father was saying. "Just let's keep away from a place like this. Just let's keep away," and she could not stop crying.

"But he's hurt," she said, "he's hurt and they won't do anything for him. He's hurt and he's my horse. He's Ben."

Her father looked at her. "Your horse?" he said, puzzled, and she told him.

SHE told him, and the words broke out through choking sobs, and she told him things that she had never meant to tell him, had never meant to worry him with.

"I fed him," she said, "yesterday I fed him. And he loves me and I want to have him. I want to take him and keep him because—because he's unhappy here. Unhappy and tired and no one takes care of him or loves him. Can't we get him? Couldn't we?" And her father looked at her.

"Keep him, Pat?" he said. "But we couldn't. Where?"

"In the shed, Joe," she said, "there's room in the shed. And I want him so—more than anything that I have ever wanted. Because"—and now she was telling him the things hidden deep in her heart—"because it's lonely there, Joe. Lonely when I come home and you aren't there. Lonely on Saturdays and on the Sundays you're away. Maybe—maybe a house, just by itself, isn't enough home. I need him so, Joe. Just to talk to him. Couldn't we?"

Her father stopped there by the broken fence. He seemed very tired suddenly. "I was afraid you were, kid," he said slowly. "I was afraid you were lonely." And she tried to tell him that it was only when he wasn't there, and he just nodded and his mouth was very grim. "A man can't do it alone," he was saying, almost to himself, "a man just can't do it alone."

And then he had her hand tight in his, and he was saying, "Yeah, kid, you can have him. I don't know how, quite, but you can have him. Wait here." And he was gone, back to the group around the stable, and she stood there alone, trying to make the sobs stop coming, trying to make her eyes clear again so that she could see.

Her father was talking with the man who owned the stable, and he did not look like the father she knew. His face was red, his jaw set tight, and the man moved back a step, suddenly very respectful. She went closer.

"There's a law about running a place like this," her father was saying, "and either you sell me that horse and clean this place up, or you'll be in trouble. Plenty. Get it?"

The man's eyes shifted. "Well, O.K., officer," he said. "O.K. I try to run a decent place. I——"

Her father cut him short. "You send me down a bale of hay and some grain," he said, "if you've got any in the place, and some straw, to get me through tomorrow. And have it there soon. Understand?"

And then they were walking off down the path and her father was leading Ben. He was leading him and they were going home now, the three of them, and he was her horse. Ben was her horse. It couldn't be true. And it was true.

They worked all that evening, cleaning his legs and shoulder, putting antiseptic on them and, when the truck arrived, bedding him deep in straw, giving him water and hay, and just standing there looking at him. Her father mopped his brow.

"Honey," he said, shaking his head, "I don't know why I did this." He looked at her then, and his smile went very soft. "Or maybe I do," he said, "maybe I do. But—this is an awful old horse," he told her. "He's old and his back is gone and maybe other things. He's in bad shape. Honest, in bad shape."

And she said, "But I don't care, Joe. I don't even want to ride him. Not for a long time. I—I just want to keep him here and take care of him and . . . see if I can't make

Every step a fairy-tale... every stitch was fun

Mommie and Daddy hooked these picture book rugs by hand with Minerva Yarn

You can do the same! It's easy, economical, a lark—not a labor—to make costly looking hand-hooked rugs in your spare time. Let the whole family work. Watch the stitches whiz along like a breeze Minerva offers you a Rug Manual with complete instructions for every type of rug making. Use Minerva Sparkletone Rug Yarn to give your treasures rich, radiant color and lustre!

▪ Call Western Union by number and ask Operator 25 for the name of your nearest Minerva dealer or mail coupon below for the Minerva Hooked Rug Manual.

James Lees and Sons Company
Dept. MR-3A, Bridgeport, Pa.

Lees

Please send me Minerva Rug Manual Vol. 78—75¢. I enclose remittance in coin (no stamps, please).

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____ CITY_____ STATE_____

OTHER FAMOUS PRODUCTS...LEES CARPETS AND RUGS

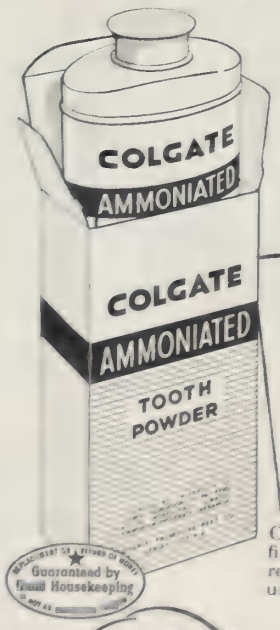
Dental Research Indicates You Can Help

Prevent Tooth Decay With COLGATE Ammoniated Tooth Powder



DENTISTS THEMSELVES USE and recommend ammoniated dentifrices as an aid in controlling tooth decay, especially for growing children. For cavities already formed, and to safeguard mouth health, visit your dentist regularly..

Watch Colgate's Scientific Dentifrice Remove Film, Get Teeth Wonderfully Clean...Tastes Grand, Too!

Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder will make a hit with your whole family. One—because its foamy cleaning action gets teeth so clean you can see and feel the difference. Two—because its delightful flavor refreshes mouth and breath. And three—because laboratory tests indicate that using it regularly, as directed, may help you avoid pain, worry and expense of needless tooth decay.

Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder, a product of Colgate-Palmolive-Peet research laboratories, is based on a formula developed by University of Illinois scientists. Contains the wonder-ingredients: Dibasic Ammonium Phosphate and Carbamide. Large-scale clinical tests are now being conducted to confirm its full benefits in preventing new cavities. Start using it today!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

3 Definite Benefits
TO HELP PREVENT TOOTH DECAY

1. Using Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder after meals and before retiring helps neutralize destructive mouth acids considered by many dental authorities ■ leading cause of tooth decay.
2. It inhibits growth of acid-producing bacteria, Lactobacillus Acidophilus.
3. It helps dissolve and remove from teeth gluey film in which acid-producing bacteria thrive.

GUARANTEED BY COLGATE: Try Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder. If you don't agree it's the finest ammoniated dentifrice you ever used, we guarantee to refund your purchase price in full, plus postage. Just return the unused portion to Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., Jersey City 2, N.J.

4oz. 43¢ 2oz. 25¢

COLGATE
Ammoniated Tooth Powder
With a Flavor the Whole Family Will Enjoy him happy. He ought to be happy. Especially if he's old, Joe."

Her father nodded. "O.K., kid," he said, "O.K."

And that night she lay in bed and she could hear the black horse moving in his shed, and she said, "Thank you, oh, thank you," not saying it just to Joe, sleeping in the next room, but saying it up to the stars, to everyone.

In the morning it was even better. In the morning it was real again, and she had to hurry out and make sure that it was real. Joe was cleaning the stall, getting water.

"I can do that," she said stanchly, "I can take care of him." And Joe said, "Sure, sure, kid. You'll do it mostly," and she was so busy that she almost forgot the bus. She barely caught it. The girl was on the bus when she finally did get to her seat, breathless.

The girl smiled at her and said, "Wasn't yesterday a beautiful day?" and Patricia said, "Oh, it was wonderful. It was the most wonderful day." She couldn't stop the words. She had to tell her friend.

"I have a horse," she said. "I—we got him yesterday. His name is Ben. He's black." And her friend was excited, too, and listened. And, as she listened, her eyes went very soft and she turned away, just for a second, and looked out the bus window.

"I'm going to make him happy," Patricia said. "I'm going to make him so that he looks happy."

And the girl, Nancy Carver, said, "I know you'll make him happy, Patty. Very happy. He's a lucky horse."

That day was very long. So very long. Because there was Ben to come home to.

It was a wonderful summer that stretched ahead, wonderful because now there was Ben in his shed, Ben to take care of, Ben to talk to. He was stiff and lame from his cuts for a long while, and he moved slowly on the rope that she took him out on every day now that school was over. Then her father fixed a fence so that Ben could get out by himself, and he stood in the warm sun on the soft turf and she brought him apples and carrots and talked to him for the long hours, talked to him and patted him, and the sounds that she made were strange and, again, not words, but sounds that the old horse came to know.

So that it was not long before he would turn at the sound of her voice and come over to her, standing contentedly as she brushed at his dull coat and combed out the thin mane. She had a box that she climbed up on to brush his back, and he did not move.

"Aren't his eyes happier?" she said to her father. "Doesn't he look happier?"

And her father said, "Sure, kid, he looks great. He's a swell horse."

It was August before she got on him. Her father brought an old saddle from in town and, on an every-other-Sunday, he put them on Ben and . . . she got up. She was very nervous, but she was not afraid. She rode him up the block, up to where her friend, Nancy Carver, lived.

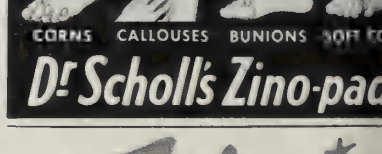
"Isn't he lovely?" she said, when Nancy Carver came out, and Nancy said, "He's beautiful, Pat. Really beautiful." After a while she rode him home, and that was just the beginning.

Because now she could ride her horse out into the woods and paths, and the days were not long enough. They never could be long enough. And they explored back into the deep hills, not coming home sometimes until very late, until time to get dinner for her father. She could talk only about the days they had together, she and Ben.

Her father watched the old horse very carefully. The horse was not getting much fatter. He never would. And his back winced under sudden weight. Not much, but it was not good. Her father did not say anything. There was nothing he could say. Until the Friday night that he came home and Patricia was waiting for him, so eagerly.

"They're going to have a horse show," she said. "Nancy Carver told me. She's going to be there. Sunday. At another place. A good place. And I want to go. I mean, could we? Could I ride Ben?"

NOW!
FASTEST RELIEF EVER
Corns
CALLOUSES · BUNIONS
TENDER SPOTS
SORE TOES



Pad instantly relieves painful shoe pressure Medicated Disk qu removes Corns, Cal

NO OTHER METHOD DOES AS M THINGS FOR YOU AS DR. SCHOL

1. Instantly Allays Pain—No Faster Relief Possible This Easy Way...
2. Quickest Corn and Callous Removi Action Known to Medical Science.
3. The Proved Method That Stops Cor Calluses Before They Can Devel

No wonder Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads ar world's largest selling reliefs for corns louses, bunions and sore toes—for no method does as many things for you a Scholl's. So join the millions who alread joy instant relief this modern, scientific Get a box of Zino-pads today! Sold everyw is the Tampon with rounded ends... the only Tampon "Quilted" for comfor "Quilted" for safety

Fibs*

Next time try Fibs (internal sanitary protecti

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

SAVE up to 50%
On HUNDREDS of High-Quality
SEWING ESSENT and DRESSMAKER FABR
Compare—and save! Whatever yo for every kind of home-sewing, w Pages and pages of illustrated ite save time—save labor—and SAVE See for yourself—send postcard fo CATALOG today
SEND FOR FREE CATALOG TODAY
SEWING ECONOMY, INC. 50 Eldridge St., Dept. LH-1, N.Y.

By Welsh
The Original and Only "BOODLE BUGGY"

Mom and Sis share the fun when Each has a
"BOODLE BUGGY"

A DOLL CARRIAGE...A BABY CARRIAGE, BOTH HAVE THE SAME FEATURES...CONVERT INTO A TRAVEL BED OR BASSINET. EASY TO FOLD, PACK AND STORE!

☆

Mother! SEND DATE OF YOUR BABY'S BIRTH TO WELSH CO. FOR AN INTERESTING HOROSCOPE

AT LEADING STORES
WELSH COMPANY
Largest Manufacturer of Folding Baby Carriages
1535 S. Eighth St. St. Louis 4, Mo.

or become—malignant. Second, because a cyst sometimes becomes twisted at the point where it is attached to the broad ligament, from which it receives its blood supply, like an apple hanging by its stem; and having its blood supply cut off, it becomes gangrenous, as would any other part of the body under the same circumstances. That would constitute a real emergency."

"I suppose you are working up to the point where you are going to advise me to have this tumor taken out."

"I certainly am."

"Then I'm going to surprise you by saying, right away, that I'm going to follow your advice."

"It certainly does surprise me to find a patient so sensible. I'm sure you'll not regret it. Go to the hospital tomorrow. We'll operate the next day."

(To Be Continued)

IF WOMEN WERE IN CONTROL

(Continued from Page 67)

"Time we discarded the clichés about women, their having to have the last word, their bargain hunting, telephoning and general scatterbrainedness. They're not valid, nor are they even funny any more. Like jokes about beards. Actually I suspect that women could do no worse than men. Maybe better. Women, if less creative than men, are sharper. Have a better sense of detail. Having learned to be less cavalier in their speedy affections, the well-brought-up girls are more dignified.

"Also they're better-looking. The male politician is unattractive and wears those awful neckties. Women will give us charm in government. I think that might save the world. Charm doesn't negate tough-mindedness. It's a combination of manners, smiles and diplomatic consideration of the other fellow.

"No, the idea proposed isn't comical, it's practical. But like all practical suggestions, it will never be adopted by men."

—Howard Dietz.

"I believe women are more beautiful, more intelligent and sometimes are better managers than men. But if they ran the world I think everything would go to pot.

"I come to this conclusion for the simple reason that women talk too much. They make four phone calls where one would do. Gossip is their chief occupation—over the back fence, across the tea table, under the drier.

"Everything must wait on words. If women were in charge they'd talk the world to death. Therefore I think the world is better off being run by dumb, homely men than it would be if it were run by beautiful intelligent women." —Rube Goldberg.

"How wonderful when women take over: I can stay home and do my own writing without feeling responsible for the poor women staying at home. No more listening to the cries of how lucky men are to be choosing their interesting jobs. How comforting to have women in the superior positions, no longer feeling inferior to men, able to release their frustrations (which surely must go back to the days of 'Now you stay in the cave, dear, and I'll take care of the tigers') in direct action.

"How romantic to receive government notices which have a faint odor of verbena and tax forms with a tiny smudge of red where the lipstick has sealed them. Suddenly all our male drabness will be illuminated with the feminine glow rising out of the darkest and most dreaded offices—where we pay our dog licenses, our sewer tax, our paving assessments. But won't women be paying them?

"The best of all possible worlds will then arise, for men will be freed of responsibility while women, because physical changes will certainly not occur, will go on having to bear children.

Genuine Evenflo Costs Less!

Baby Sitters Know and Like Evenflo Nursers!

Mothers who feed their babies with Evenflo have an advantage with baby sitters. Because these popular nursers are used by the majority of mothers, baby sitters are familiar with and know how to use them. Thus, in addition to Evenflo's being easier to nurse and handier to use, other people can feed baby quickly and efficiently when you're away.

Get Evenflo Nursers at baby shops, drug & dept. stores, only 25c. Genuine Evenflo Nipples only 10c each. Costs less than 1c a day to nurse the Evenflo way!

Evenflo®
America's 25c Most Popular Nurser

"IT BREATHES AS IT FEEDS"

THE NURSERY'S NEWEST JOY!

New addition to Johnson's Baby Products is a joy in the nursery, too—

JOHNSON'S COTTON TIPS!

FROM the very first day you bring baby home to his own nursery—you'll welcome these fine, new cotton tips.

Extra-soft, extra-gentle. Made by the makers of your favorite baby products, Johnson & Johnson.

Maximum Protection for your baby!

You know Johnson's Cotton Tips are safe. They're sterilized right in the box, by the famous Johnson & Johnson quality-control method.

Made of the finest, purest absorbent cotton, the same kind you prefer for your own medicine chest.

Extra Conveniences!

Thrifty double tips: Johnson's Cotton Tips are ideal for cleansing for applying Johnson's Baby Oil or Lotion.

Cotton firmly anchored: The cotton on Johnson's Cotton Tips is spun directly on the sticks —stays firm in use.

Handy new drawer box: Easy to open—fits on a narrow shelf. Protects Johnson's Cotton Tips till the last one is used.

Add Johnson's Cotton Tips to your nursery tray—today!

29¢ and 49¢ SIZES

Johnson & Johnson

The Best Cooks Use Stokely's Finest Foods

Mrs. Carroll H. Hudson, 8065 El Manor Ave., Los Angeles, chosen by Women's Association, Covenant Presbyterian Church.

VOTED "BEST COOK"

Flavor comes first with Mrs. Hudson. And flavor comes first with Stokely when they select peaches and cocktail fruits to label Stokely's Finest. Only perfect fruits will do. Sun-ripe, juicy-sweet, orchard-fresh. That's what you get when you reach for Stokely's Finest Fruits, for "picture" desserts like:

PARTY MERINGUES WITH ALMOND FRUIT SAUCE: To syrup from No. 2½ can Stokely's Finest Fruit Cocktail or Cling Peach Halves, add water to make 1½ cups; stir into mixture of 2 tbsp. sugar, 1½ tbsp. cornstarch, ⅛ tsp. salt. Stir while it boils slowly, 5 minutes. Add 1 tbsp. butter, ¼ tsp. almond extract. Cool. Fill 6 meringue shells with chilled fruit; serve with sauce.

"Men will then become treasured and indulged creatures, kept apart from the rigors of the world, useful for the unavoidable task of keeping generations going, but without the actual burden of childbearing. Under those circumstances I will be perfectly willing to be as gay as I can when the weary woman comes home at the end of a day's work.

"And how glorious to contemplate the humiliation when men will have to be consulted in a few matters. As men take three hours for lunch with a few hands of cards afterward ('Sorry to break up the game, but I've got to get home before my wife does.'), I'll be grateful for a woman's world.

"Once women take over, clothes will become efficient and practical for them, while 'style' will be devoted to the pampered men who can lie around reading fashion magazines. Color and line will return to men's clothing; we can once again wear red and yellow and the bright witty colors with flowing lines and ease of wear and, above all, whatever variety we want, freed at last from the rigid monkey-mimicking 'business suit.' Let women wear the pants; I'm glad to give up anything so tight and awkward and unattractive."

—Paul Engle.

"The women would do just as bad a job as the men and none would notice the difference."

—Gerald Warner Brace.

"If women ran the world, we would very likely go along pretty much as we have in the past. I wouldn't expect very many radical changes. It is difficult for either men or women to escape the traditional patterns of thinking which have been built up over a period of many generations.

"I do think there would be less corruption in government and more efficient service if women were in charge. In fact, everything considered, I think women could do a better job than men."

—George Gallup.

"God help us!"—William L. Shirer.

"I don't think there'd be much difference in the relations between labor and management in American industry. The problems that arise from our economy unfortunately are not susceptible to solution merely through substitution of the charm and wit of womanhood for the less charming, less witty character of American men.

"That is not conjecture. Women have been active leaders of many CIO labor unions. Like the men, their attitudes and abilities vary with the individual; they are right wing, left wing, energetic, lackadaisical, capable and not so capable. Women industrialists and businesswomen are like other employers, some generous, some stingy, some broad-visioned, some narrow-minded.

"I think that the emergence of women into key positions in labor and industry is fine—but, by itself, it will not effect many fundamental changes."

—Philip Murray.

"The quiz shows would probably give away a live man to every jack-pot winner."

—Arthur Godfrey.

"Why ask us to imagine a condition which is already in effect—except for the vote, which men still retain? From early Massachusetts days, this great country has been ultimately run by woman's public and private opinion; and it is, I dare say, a very tolerable tyranny." —Jacques Barzun.

"If women actually came into complete power, the immediate and obvious effect, of course, would be the piling of unutterable chaos upon confusion. All vestiges of honor, fair dealing, noblesse oblige and idealism, as we know them today, would be under suspicion, and the she-Gestapo would make every effort to extirpate them once and for all.

"But this would be only a situation. What would follow is the important thing. This would be the damnedest conspiracy and revolt the world ever saw. A few brave and determined men, I among them, would plot and scheme, against the most terrible odds, to restore a decent world. We would fight the matriarchs, the crones, the polyandrists, the jill-flirts, the frustrated fan dancers, the amazons, the transvestites, the Hokinson characters, the Eleanor-worshipers—fight the whole kit and caboodle: in the forest and on the bathing beaches, in the chaparral thickets and the deserts, in the caves and in the cocktail lounges, in the alleys and atop the penthouses. And we would win. We would be fierce in battle, stern but just in victory. And if the world lasted another million years, thoughtful historians would still say, wonderingly and admiringly, 'There, by the Eternal, were Men.'"

—Stanley Walker.

"There would be no more government by pal or crony; women don't work that way. There would be no more sacred cows around unless they gave milk. The need for a good five-cent cigar would vanish. The pork barrel would be in the cellar instead of in the Treasury Building. Pants would probably be still hanging in the closet, but surely there would be no bow ties hanging over the mirror. The presidential chair would no doubt be done in chintz and equipped with rockers, and I'm afraid the inaugural ball would be knocked for a home run.

"And, finally, I predict that no more than a single term would be needed to prove to a smashing plurality that a woman's place is really in the home."

—Bellamy Partridge.

"In the nature of things one sex must be more refined, more delicate, more persuasive than the other.

"If women people the smoke-filled rooms, browbeat minorities and pass out the checks, then every evening they will have to reckon with the menfolk, who, after a day of watching the kitchen gadgets do their work for them, will become at last the dominant sex. Women will be as wax in their caressing hands.

"You can see I am all for this revolution. A clean apron and a quiet day will be a great relief to me.

"You have given me a gleam of hope."

—Ellery Sedgwick.

"I fear we would be in a constant state of civil war. For if there is one truth that has been well established by ten thousand generations of our ancestors, it is that no woman ever willingly takes orders from any other woman." —Paul I. Wellman.

"I believe we would be better off than we now are. I base this opinion on a long list of

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Nocturne

By Marya Zaturenska

And now no more. The evening song is over,
The silver night with many shining eyes
Of starry light descends. The moon's flambeau
Floods widening terraces in a deepening glow
And the lake waters sing as to a lover.

Pierced by the keen, articulate surprise,
We'll go no more where tranquil waters flow,
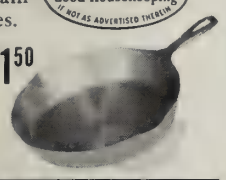
Or where the enchanted hills drink
burning snow,
Or where long-stemmed and lovely,
white and cool,
The water lilies tremble on the pool.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



food won't stick... won't burn in Wagner

cast iron skillets

▪ Browns food beautifully. Gives a avor and taste that can't be beat in any ther utensil. The favorite fry pan in most omes for 59 years. It's modern cast iron, eady to use on all ranges, including elec- ic. Get at least ONE Wagner Skillet— rove its value. 5 popu- ir sizes, from 75c up, at 1,000 hardware—chain nd depar[illegible] stores.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Fami'at D[illegible]ected at $1.50

If you ca[illegible] this 10½" family size skillet near you send $1.50 ($1.85 west of Rockies) to —

Wagner Manufacturing Co.
Dept. R, Sidney, Ohio

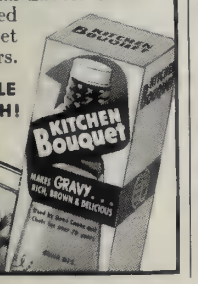
POP SOME FOR HALLOWEEN

JOLLY TIME POP CORN

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

HIP-O-LITE 45th YEAR

The ORIGINAL Marshmallow Creme



FREE Perfect for cake icings, candies, on sundaes, gelatines, etc. Ready to use. Recipe Book of Unusual Desserts. Write Hip-O-Lite, Dept. L-3, St. Louis, Mo.

USE KITCHEN Bouquet

TO MAKE GRAVY EXTRA RICH· BROWN·DELICIOUS

It's easy to make your gravy extra-rich, extra-brown, extra-delicious every time. Just stir in Kitchen Bouquet! Ah! What rich, brown color and how it brings out that true meat taste! Adds no artificial flavor. Good cooks have used Kitchen Bouquet for over 70 years.

COSTS SO LITTLE —ADDS SO MUCH!

facts; our researches indicate that the female sex is:

"1. More intelligent. Girls and women make higher scores on intelligence tests; they speak earlier and better, have larger vocabularies; read more books from college and university libraries than men students.

"2. More peace-loving. By their nature, they have proclivity to gentleness. Traditionally women have invented and nurtured the household arts, have hated war because of its devastating effect upon family life. Women are more optimistic about the future and more self-sacrificing.

"3. More prudent in the management of money. Women manage the family budget in America; they own, incidentally, the majority of the stocks of our great enterprises. They pay the taxes on their homes to the tax collector. They predominate in an attendance at P.T. A. and community meetings that discuss school budgets, and so on. It is quite possible that with their firsthand knowledge of the value of the dollar they would do something constructive about the deplorable state of the national debt.

"4. Less eccentric. Women inmates in institutions for the feebleminded and the insane are fewer than male inmates. There are also fewer female geniuses, that species of Homo sapiens that has always caused most of the world's headaches.

"5. Fast being saddled with higher responsibility. As the premium on brawn in modern civilization has gone down, the premium on brains has gone up. and this accounts for the ascendance of femininity, rather of feminine leadership.

"America is thus fast becoming a matriarchy. American business is virtually managed by the secretary, the boss' boss. Women carry heavy responsibility with fewer stomach ulcers, with less fatigue. A chorus girl requires much more endurance than a prize fighter. Any man who believes women are the weaker sex was born yesterday." —James F. Bender, Ph.D.

"The country is in bad enough shape without having women going around asking men what the country would be like with the women running the country the way they run men now." —Tom Lea.

"I have thought long and hard about this calamitous suggestion. Now I am calm again. Should the women take over, I doubt if it would change anything much except two details.

"Men would of course be compelled to do the stenographic work, and the quality of typewritten letters would greatly deteriorate. But they would also be compelled to do all the cooking, so the meals would be much better; and since meals are more important than letters, on balance it would be an improvement. But please give us two weeks' notice." —Rex Stout.

"The male sex has done all the swaggering and made the big decisions and run the earth. The records show that until recently, at least, its representatives have not made out any too well. I cannot imagine the female of the species doing worse. I can't fancy a diplomacy of women trafficking in the lives of their sons and husbands.

"Of course, there are some terrible shrews and monsters among women, too, and I could name a few American horrors among candidates for the Ilsa Koch Award; but by and large women seem less cold and cynical in their approach to life and its problems than men. Their hysterical tendencies are more than compensated for by a deeper understanding of the dignity of life; for after all, they grow it in their vitals."

—Norman Corwin.

"Women would insist that the American 'economic system' should stop being a slogan, should become a system, and should become economical. They would insist that it cease to be either a rat race, a lottery or a shell game, and that it be judged solely by whether it enabled the American people to feed, clothe and house themselves and one another.

A Black Bottom Pie ...for your favorite guy

IT'S NOT ONLY HEAVENLY . . . but it's easy-as-pie to make! All you do is use a package of your favorite chocolate pudding—the kind you get at your food store. Prepare in your usual way . . . then add a few drops of rum flavoring. When cool, pour into baked pie shell. Top with meringue and plenty of Durkee's Coconut. Pop in oven until brown. Ummm, dee-licious!

Durkee's Coconut adds that extra sparkle to other fine foods. Its sealed-in sweetness stays fresh till the last bite.
And you can buy it in the regular carton—or extra moist, in the can.

Glidden QUALITY PRODUCTS

Sprinkle Durkee's Coconut over puddings for a rich, tropical flavor.

Snow under fresh or canned fruits with Durkee's Coconut.

Frosting makes the cake... Durkee's Coconut makes the frosting.

Durkee FAMOUS FOODS

©1950, The Glidden Company

SALAD to tempt every Eve you know!

RITZ CRACKERS

Apple Cup Salad

Clear away the cards for the winning trick of all! It's easy and effective this salad right from Eden. Just core and score an apple into cup-shape—mix diced ham, pineapple chunks and mayonnaise for filling—then bed it down on greens. Add RITZ CRACKERS and pass a peerless party plate! No other cracker is so crisply crunchy—so tangy-tasting that it gives "flavor flair" to every other food. Order RITZ CRACKERS today . . . it's "in the cards" you'll love 'em!

"NOTHING TASTES AS GOOD AS RITZ—BUT RITZ!"

You buy the best when it's baked by Nabisco
NAtional BIScuit COmpany

"They would remember that the word 'economics' so glibly used today is ultimately derived from the Greek word for housekeeping, and that neither sales talk, double talk nor trick bookkeeping can be eaten, worn or lived in.

"They would never subscribe to the masculine delusion that hunger for profits creates employment, which creates purchasing power, which creates more employment, which creates heaven. They would know that intelligently directed human labor creates the food and clothing and shelter that women—and even men and other children—need.

"They would judge harshly any 'economic system' under which a willing worker could not get plenty to eat, enough to wear and a house to live in. And, given the resources of the national household, they would think of a better gag than 'Where would the money come from?' And they would have time left over to keep the children off the streets and maybe even keep the men out of mischief.

"I don't know why I am so optimistic about women except that women have babies, and I should think that anybody who had given birth to another human being would know that something more important than another customer had entered the world, something more important than additional purchasing power, or a proletarian, or a party member, or a potential sales manager."

—Stringfellow Barr.

"God forbid!" —Bruce Barton.

"I disagree with those who say leadership by women would bring an end to war. Women are basically bellicose; there is truth, more than humor, in the old symbol of the poised rolling pin. Ninety-five per cent of all spite fences have been built by women, or because of women, and spite fences are, in one form or another, the cause of most wars.

"In my opinion, however, women would do better at governing the world than men. So would cocker spaniels, or tree shrews, or armadillos, or katydids."

—H. Allen Smith.

"Women are tough, resilient, stable. They don't live in the cake-and-soup fairyland which is the abode of many men. They're less inclined to be pious frauds. If they believed in free enterprise and competition, I'm sure we'd have it. I don't think they would yell for it in public and, like some men, work day and night to destroy it in private.

"Women can be despicable in small things, but they usually rise to the occasion in great. I don't think they would carry their petty concerns to important things. Government in their hands would probably be much more truly representative of people as a whole and not so much the agency of favored pressure groups—agriculture, labor, industry.

"I think war would fade away. Women have no desire to see their homes broken up, their men roaring off on some dubious crusade.

"Most important of all—women are interested in ideas. The world could stand a few ideas in government."

—Mark Hanna.

"Gynecocracy, or rule by women alone, was even envisioned and feared by the ancient Greeks. Actually, there is nothing fearful in such a situation. Perhaps direct political rule by women would be a relief for males; for men then could address themselves to lobbies, hunting, clubs and business."

—Frank C. Hibben.

"The prospect of a completely dominated and disenfranchised male bodes happy days at last for all of us in pants: a bit of peace and quiet, a corner to lie in, a roof overhead and a bit of casual affection along with daily bone. Goodness knows we've had bit of quiet coming for some time now.

"Yet that same prospect raises the do right sinister possibilities of just what suc conquering matriarchy might venture u to obtain unbroken males. Certainly s women aren't going to be content any lo with the beaten and fawning creatures of corners. What will no doubt be as hig prized to them as a case of true Scotch t bootlegger in 1925 will be the unridden untamed male of the hills and the caves the open plains.

"No legal obstacles are going to hin such amazons from actual man rustling. sheer adventure of hauling a young clawing wild male out of his mountain a will provide a satisfaction over and beyo his actual cash value on the open market. what you're running into head-on, you is the very real danger of reviving the slave traffic with its raids and midnight t ror along whatever barbarian coasts wh the male still stands up on his hind legs barks back. Please reconsider your plans."

—Nelson Algren.

"Absolutely the worst thing I can th of—the world would be exactly the same."

—Irwin Shaw

"Everything would be ju[illegible] And it is n Because women apparently want things as they are now. Yes, even war.

"A woman can get a man to do anyth she wants him to, and if women didn't re want war, if women really wanted a be break for more children, if women re wanted a better life for more people, would have it tomor even if women never h the vote. The sad, ha cold fact is that wom are content or too la to make their influe felt.

"Never underestima the power of a woma if and when she rea wants to use it. Which am sorry to say, is often enough on t things which really matter."

—Gabriel Heatter.

We have failed to grasp the fact that mankind is becoming a single unit, and that for a unit to fight against itself is suicide.

—HAVELOCK ELLIS: My Confessional. Copyright, 1934, by Havelock Ellis. Reprinted by permission of Random House, Inc.

"I have a notion that if women exclusive ran the country, they would be so busy w matters strictly feminine that this nati would never be in trouble, never be bother by or even interested in hot or cold wa never afflicted by depressions."

—Howard Collins.

"Whenever women, as a group, have h an opportunity to express themselves a exercise independent judgment, they ha been on the side of right. They are the r progenitors of idealism and their comm sense approach has never been given its served recognition. For the proof we need no further than survey the homes where mothers have managed to hold their famil together in the face of, at times, seeming insurmountable obstacles. When homes ha failed, for the most part, it has been becau of outside forces and over the protests a objections of good mothers.

"When women have either by their ow choice or by force of circumstances soug careers in the business world, in medicin in public affairs or in other walks of life, th have given an excellent account of their ab ities. Certainly if they were in control ma of the harrowing events of the past where women have been the first to suffer would more vigorously resisted in the future. T emancipation of women, and the recogniti of their rights, historically parallels society greatest advances. I believe if women took more active part in civic, state and nation affairs a greater security and progress wou inevitably follow." —J. Edgar Hoover.

"It is inconceivable. Women were made be seen and felt—not heard."

—Elmo Roper.

THE E

RELIEVES PAIN OF ADACHE • NEURALGIA
URITIS
FAST
e way usands of ysicians
l dentists ecommend

acin® relieves headache, neuralgia, neuritis n fast because Anacin is like a doctor's preption—that is, Anacin contains not just one,
n combination of medically proven, active redients in easy-to-take tablet form. Thou-ds have been introduced to Anacin through r own dentist or physicians. If you have er used Anacin, try these tablets yourself incredibly fast, long-lasting relief from
n. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

WARNING!
Great Danger To Children
Neglected Minor CUTS, BURNS
ible infection, painful swelling may spread fast small cuts, burns, scratches, scalds. Help off infection, ease pain, speed healing with rresting Oil-O-Sol. Wonderful first aid suc-
50 years. Mosso's Oil-O-Sol at all drug stores.

It's Yours FREE!
New 1951 Gift Catalog
Hundreds of exciting, useful gifts for everyone. You'll enjoy thumbing through this wonderland of fascinating items for home, kitchen, garden, toys, etc. Jammed full of latest gifts you've never seen before! Surprising discoveries from all over the world. Shop the easy way, right at home. We deliver free—right to your door. Write today. Satisfaction guaranteed.
ncroft's, 536 So. Clark St., Dept. 926, Chicago 5, Ill.

"I'm able to be on my feet in spite of Varicose Veins!"
says Mrs. Robert Lehman, Oshkosh, Wis.

you suffer from the pain and un-ntliness of surface varicose veins swollen legs, you, too, may find w relief, new beauty with Bauer & Black fashioned Elastic Stockings.

Made of genuine two-way stretch
stic for firm, comfortable support.
ightweight, neutral color and hentic fashioned leg and ep—they're almost isible under sheer se!

Ask your doctor's vice...then get Bauer & Black
astic Stockgs for real ief and auty.

At drug, department and surgical stores

Elastic STOCKINGS

A product of
BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company

--WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET!--
UER & BLACK, Dept. VO-10
00 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16, Ill.
lease send me your new FREE book-about varicose veins, "New Comfort d Relief for You."
ne_____
dress_____
_____Zone____State_____

HOW COULD I KNOW

(Continued from Page 40)

someday —— But it was not only possible, it was a fact. Phil Ransom was engaged. The wedding was to be held sometime in December.

Even now she could remember, with a kind of painful gratitude, that Jim had taken her dancing that night. They'd gone to the Cascades, and sat together at a small wooden table, and Jim had told her his dreams. Before long, he'd said, he hoped to start his own electrical-contracting firm; he thought he could get a GI loan, and there was sure to be a building boom. . . . And in his fine gray eyes she had seen a humble pledge: Everything I have is yours.

He hadn't asked her to marry him that night, but she'd known he loved her. She wasn't alone, she wasn't completely rejected. . . . Yet was it fair to Jim? Even now she didn't really know. But she'd made him happy. She was sure of that.

Now, watching the dry leaves swirl over the ground, she wondered, suddenly, if she weren't being rather childish and melodramatic about this whole thing. An old friend was in town on business; a family dinner would be of inestimable value to her husband. Why not be offhand and casual about it? Show herself, and Phil, too, that the past had been simply a pleasant interlude, with no regrets, no resentments, no heartbreak.

What's a couple of months out of a lifetime? she thought flippantly—remembering, nevertheless, with a heavy heart, the way the surf had pounded on the beach.

She chose eleven as the best time to phone; and when the hour arrived she rang the Barberry House, and asked for the Ransoms. A woman's voice answered, but she'd been prepared for that.

"Mrs. Ransom?" she said. "This is Mrs. James Farwell. Linda Farwell, that is. I used to know Phil several years ago. And when my husband and I learned you were in town, we thought it would be awfully nice if we could see something of you."

"Why, how thoughtful of you, Mrs. Farwell!" Lorraine Ransom's voice was well modulated, and pleasantly cordial. "I don't know just what our plans are. I'll have to speak to Phil."

LINDA laughed easily. "You'd better tell him Linda Barton. That was my name in those days. And we'd love it if you could come to dinner, any night this week."

After that she had to wait a full moment, and for the first time it occurred to her that they might refuse. If that happened she would have done her best; no one could blame her. It wouldn't be my fault, she thought. But her heart was beating too fast.

"Phil says of course he remembers, Mrs. Farwell, and we'd love to come. Would Thursday do?"

"Thursday would be fine," Linda said, in a voice as pleased and well modulated as the one on the other end of the wire.

A little later Jim phoned. "I just wondered," he said, "if you'd had a chance ——"

"Yes, they're coming Thursday."

"They are? Well, good! And look, Linda, I want you to buy a new dress, like that green velvet you had a couple of years ago. I suppose that's too short now?"

She laughed. "Yes, it certainly is."

"Well, get another one, honey. It just matched your eyes. Make it special."

"All right."

A new dress, and fried chicken, and Mrs. Wade to serve. And after that, possibly—probably, in fact—a contract for Jim. His firm needed it too. The building boom hadn't materialized. Everything had been very slow. But, as Jim had explained to her at the breakfast table, this was a real break. The first they'd had.

And of course there was no reason to feel so troubled. It had all happened too long ago—a pleasant interlude, an episode. Now she was older, almost twenty-six—a member of the women's club and the church guild, an excellent cook, a fair housekeeper. And what was it Phil had planned for them? That they

Most make-ups shout: "Made-up!"—
Magic Touch whispers: "Natural beauty"

Replace that heavy "made-up" look with natural-looking loveliness by using Magic Touch. No puff, no sponge.

39c and 1.00 everywhere
6 magic shades

Magic Touch is NEW . . . a tinted cream make-up so sheer your skin glows through . . . yet it hides each tiny blemish while it smooths and softens and adds glorious color . . . Apply with fingertips (with or without powder)—so quick, so easy, so naturally lovely!

LAVORIS
MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Pre-prepare for your day!
Tangy Cinnamon-Clove Flavor

Lavoris removes germ-harboring film from mouth and throat safely
A Clean Mouth and Throat Means a Fresh Pleasant Breath
FOR A FRESH, CLEAN MOUTH and THROAT

I Have $50 For You!
Make $50 fast! Sell only 100 sensational value 21-Card $1 Christmas Assortments! FREE Book tells you how to get big orders easily. Also show Gift Wraps, Stationery, Children's Action Books, Address Book and over 70 other fast selling items for all members of the family. Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards 50 for $1 and up. Start earning with FREE Imprint Samples, Assortments on approval. Extra Profit Bonus Plan! Write now! Send No Money.
PHILLIPS CARD CO., 457 HUNT ST., NEWTON, MASS.

YARN SAMPLE CARD FREE
Over 200 samples finest quality yarns —all colors— send only 10c for handling—mailing. Write Dept. L.J.
SOFT-SPUN YARN CO., 219 Broome St., New York, N.Y.

TALL GALS
SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOKLET
BUY DIRECT! MAIL PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR OUR NEW FREE ■ PAGE BOOKLET LL
Stage, Screen Stars, Society buy Shoecraft Tall Gals 5th Ave. Shoes! Famous for Fashion and Fit in sizes 9 to 12; AAAAA to C. Money back guaranteed if returned unworn in 10 days.
SHOECRAFT 603 FIFTH AVE. - NEW YORK 17

Hi-A beauty bra by Marja

Figure insurance without compare with Hi-A . . . wonderful uplift brassiere that accents your beauty. Marja's exclusive round-and-out stitching, double on the bottom of the bust cup, is the magic formula for a youthful, glorious figure. Cups AA, A, B, C . . . 32 to 42. Pima broadcloth $2.50. Nylon satin $3.50.
At fine stores, or write for store nearest you
Marja Brassieres • Jacksonville, Texas

"What I need in a corset is control . . ."

"What I like is a lightweight foundation that's really comfortable..."

"I expect a girdle to give me the lines of fashion . . ."

"I can't hold my tummy in all by myself . . ."

But they all, no matter age or type, want a foundation made with Lastex ...the yarn that helps them all to finer figure lines with ease and comfort.

Lastex
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

...the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
1230 Avenue of the Americas • New York 20, N. Y.

would buy another sailboat, a bigger one, and sail around the world. "We'll stop at some of the islands and stay as long as we please. Do you think you'll like the South Seas, darling?"

When Thursday came she spent the morning shining silver, and part of the afternoon explaining various details to Mrs. Wade. Jim returned early from the office, to build a fire.

"They'll probably be late," he said; "New Yorkers generally are."

"That's true. But we can't count on it."

"We can't count on anything," he said firmly. But she knew he was thinking of the contract, trying to steel himself against a possible disappointment. "It isn't often a small firm can get in on the ground floor of a thing as big as this," he added. "That's why personal contacts are important."

"I suppose that's so."

Her head ached slightly, and mingled with the dread was a vague resentment. Jim shouldn't have let her in for this—but of course he hadn't known. And she was the one who had misled him, quite deliberately. "How well did you know the guy?" he'd asked that morning at breakfast. And she'd answered, with superb casualness, "Oh, there was a crowd of us. We used to go sailing and swimming together." And then, to complete the picture, she'd added an embellishing touch: "Phil was crazy about a friend of mine, Mary Watts, though a few months later he married someone else." Jim, so single-minded himself, so steady and predictable, had believed every word of it.

Now she saw that he had chosen, inevitably, his one hand-painted tie—her last Christmas present—and was knotting it with meticulous care. "How about the new dress?" he said. "When do I get to see that?"

"Right now."

She lifted it from its hanger, and slipped it over her head. He watched critically, and then he grinned. "I wish I could buy you a new dress every week," he said. "With a figure like that you deserve it."

Linda turned away abruptly, and stood in front of the mirror. Her arms and shoulders were faintly tanned, her eyes were as green as the dress, and her hair curled softly behind her ears. . . . And what was it Phil had said? "You're the loveliest thing that ever happened to me."

Now, remembering that, she thought angrily, Tonight I'll show him. I have a good husband and a good home. I'll show him it didn't mean a thing.

BUT of course that wasn't possible, because tonight she was going to be a gracious hostess and serve a delightful dinner. And afterward Jim would have a contract, the kind that really started you off in the world. . . . The strange part was that she had never really resented Phil before. Perhaps because the loss had been too devastating, and too complete. And certainly this was no time to begin ——

It startled her when Jim put his hand on the curve of her neck, and she jerked away. "Watch out," she warned. "You'll muss my hair."

"Don't be nervous, honey," he said. "Everything is going to be fine. Do you want me to go downstairs and take a last look around?"

"Yes. I wish you would."

When he had gone she did her make-up all over again. Then she joined Jim in the living room, and saw that everything was in perfect order—cigarettes, silver matchboxes, three vases of flowers, a brand-new fire on the hearth. Jim was looking around him with vast contentment.

"Maybe in a few months we'll be able to buy this place," he said.

"You mean if you get the contract?"

"That's right. So we'd better not count on it."

"But you are," she accused him. "I know you are."

Jim sighed. "When a thing means so much, you can't help hoping, Linda. And having a chance to entertain Ransom in my own home is a real break."

"Well, here they are," she said, pressing down hard on a sudden flame of bitterness. Because this never should have happened. Jim shouldn't have let it; or perhaps she was the one at fault. . . . But she'd wanted to see Phil, just once more. She acknowledged that, now that it was too late.

Jim's voice boomed out cheerfully. "Hello, hello. Do come in. Watch that step. We had some rain this afternoon ——"

Linda stood beside her husband in the open doorway, welcoming their guests. "How do you do?" she said to Mrs. Ransom. (And she saw that he hadn't changed in any way. He was still powerfully built, with strange jutting planes to his face. He was still the most attractive man she'd ever met.) "Hello, Phil," she said. "This is my husband, Jim Farwell."

She showed Lorraine where to put her wraps, settled them all comfortably, then went out to the kitchen to get the hors d'oeuvres, which were rather special and had to be grilled.

The evening started well. In fact, Linda assured herself, nothing could have been more promising. The fire crackled prettily on the hearth, and before long Phil and Jim were deep in conversation about the Chamber of Commerce, town politics and the new development. "Perhaps you can help me out in some of these matters, Farwell. You know the town, and the way things are run around here."

Linda's heart skipped a beat. This was exactly what Jim had been hoping for—a chance to be in on the ground floor. And of course that was much more likely to happen when you were sitting together before an open fire.

She found Lorraine very friendly and easy to talk to. She wasn't a particularly pretty girl, and she was almost certainly older than her husband. But the simple beige dress she wore was exquisite, and the diamond on her finger so large that it looked like glass.

They talked about a summer cruise the Ransoms had taken. "It was heavenly," Lorraine said. "All up through Norway and Sweden. Phil loves salmon fishing, so we concentrated on that." She glanced at Phil, and he smiled at them both indiscriminately.

"Linda is partial to the sea too," he said. "I hope she hasn't forgotten the Pandora!"

"The sailboat?" Linda's heart thudded against her chest. "Of course not."

"Nor have I," he said.

She wondered angrily if he was making fun of her, or just what he meant to imply. But then she told herself that it was her own fault, inviting him here.

She stood up. "I think dinner is ready," she said.

The candles gleamed on the table, reflected from their best crystal glasses. And while Mrs. Wade was passing the fried chicken, Phil said to his host, "I hope you aren't too tied up with previous contracts, Jim. We're after quality above everything else in this project. So your firm would be right down our alley."

"I'd certainly like to look over the specifications," Jim agreed.

"Come around tomorrow, then, any time after eleven. Our offices are in the Brent Building."

"All right, I'll be there."

Just like that! she thought. Everythin actly as they'd planned!

Phil Ransom dropped his napkin, bent to pick it up. And for a brief mo his hand rested on her thigh. It was fleeting, the vaguest kind of caress, an one could possibly have noticed. But Li nerves tightened angrily. How cheap! how ridiculous! But it wasn't only ange felt, for the whole room seemed to have d ened, and for a moment even the candle flickered. Yet she didn't seem able to any of it—the feeling of tension, or the lessness, or the weak remembering.

Lorraine was talking to Jim now, and was helping himself to gravy. But when finished he looked up, his eyes seemed in way to possess her, and he said, very "You're more beautiful than ever, Lin

SHE pretended not to have heard. joined in Jim's conversation with Lorr about the Russians and the United Na and television. But her heart was beatin fast, and she couldn't sort out her thou She could not understand any of it. Th after all she was the one who had invited here, and four years ago she had loved desperately and completely.

Certainly he was behaving badly, but didn't seem to make any difference. Fo kept remembering, remembering. And was going to start all over again, the h ache and the desperation, she simply cou endure it.

"Let's have our coffee in the living ro Jim said. (As though they hadn't planne that minutely!)

"The strawberry mousse was delic Linda," Lorraine added.

"It's easy, and you can make it ahead sides, it's always been one of Jim's favori

The distance from the small dining a to the center of the living room was app mately ten feet. It wasn't necessary for to tuck her hand through his arm, to down at her, to press her elbow agains side. And probably if anyone else had that she would have laughed it off and some kind of joke. But now she couldn' cause his whole presence was so unbea familiar.

"Four years is a long time," Phil "But Linda in a sailboat was somethi man could forget. She was good at it, Jim. We ran into a storm once, and Linda to take down the jib. She was drenched –

Don't tell anything more, her heart ple with him. For now she knew what Phil like—cheap, dreadful, impossible. But knew something else too. For if they alone, and he wanted to take her in his a she would have no way of resisting.

Perhaps Lorraine was accustomed t husband's actions, for already she wa ting on the sofa with a rather strained on her face.

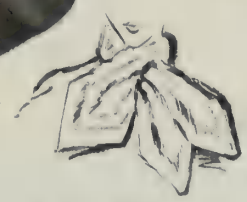
Linda poured the coffee. "Sugar?" said. "Cream?"

(Continued on Page 250)

"Oh, what a beautiful morning, oh, what a beautiful day ——?"

If you're particular...
you'll particularly like

PRINTZESS



BUTTONED "PARENTHESIS" POCKETS

Casual, but impeccable by Printzess. In smooth or tweedy wool with parenthesis pockets; wonderful flip-up collar. Basic and bright colors. Sizes 8 to 20; 12½ to 24½.
ABOUT $50.

Printzess tailors the trim and tidy collar of beautiful Bombay lamb, adds a double up-pointed yoke for emphasis. Sheenglo wool; black and fall shades. (Also with Persian, squirrel or muskrat.) Sizes 8 to 20; 12½ to 24½.
ABOUT $80.

POINTED FUR COLLAR . . .
POINTED, DOUBLE YOKE

THE SWATHED LOOK—
THE FUR TIPPET

Fashion revives the fur tippet. Young, soft, Printzess-perfect silhouette in Sheenglo wool with Silverblue or mink-dyed muskrat. Black and colors, sizes 8 to 14.
ABOUT $85.

SINCE 1893 . . . A MARK OF FINE TAILORING INSIDE AND OUT

Printzess

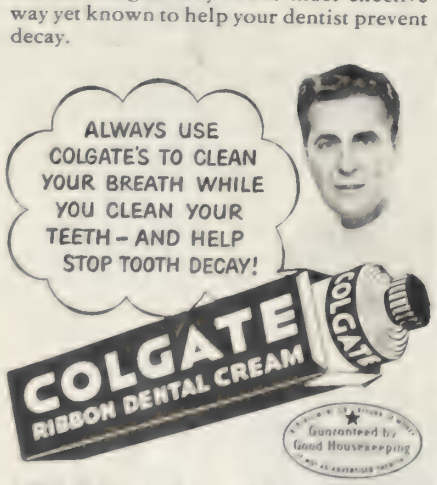
RINTZESS FASHIONS are sold in one good store in each y. For name of store in your locality, write to The Printz- ederman Company, Printzess Square, Cleveland 3, Ohio.

Canada Printzess Fashions are manufactured by Lazare & Novek, Ltd., Montreal

PRINTZESS FASHIONS
at these and 1500
other fine stores:

ALBANY, NEW YORK
John G. Myers Co., Inc.
ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO
Kasler Commerce & Co.
ALEXANDRIA, LOUISIANA
Weyland's
ANNISTON, ALABAMA
Ullman's
AUGUSTA, GEORGIA
Cassby's
BINGHAMTON, NEW YORK
Fowler, Dick & Walker, Inc.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS
Chandler & Co.
BURLINGTON, VERMONT
The Bonat
BUTTE, MONTANA
Imel Motors
CANTON, OHIO
The Stein and Mann Company
CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA
The Killian Company
CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA
Belk Bros. Co.
CHICAGO, ILL.
Marshall Field & Company
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Mabley & Carew
CLARKSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA
Exclusive Garment Shop
CLEVELAND, OHIO
The Halle Bros. Co.
CLINTON, IOWA
John D. Van Allen & Son, Inc.
COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA
Hallowanger's
COLUMBUS, GEORGIA
J. A. Kirven Co.
COLUMBUS, OHIO
F. & R. Lazarus & Co.
DAYTON, OHIO
Leakas Furriers, Inc.
DENVER, COLORADO
The Denver Dry Goods Co.
DETROIT, MICHIGAN
The Ernst Kern Co.
DUBUQUE, IOWA
J. F. Stampfer Co.
DUNKIRK, NEW YORK
The Safe Store
ELGIN, ILLINOIS
Joseph Spiess Company
ELMIRA, NEW YORK
Rosenbaum's
ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA
Trask's
FLORENCE, ALABAMA
Rogers, Inc.
FOND DU LAC, WISCONSIN
The O'Brien Dry Goods Co.
FORT SMITH, ARKANSAS
Hunt Dry Goods Company
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA
Wolf & Dessauer
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
The Monnig Dry Goods Co.
FRANKFORT, KENTUCKY
Kagin Bros. Inc.
FREEPORT, ILLINOIS
F. A. Read Co.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN
The Wurzburg Company
GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA
Ellis-Stone & Co., Inc.
HAMILTON, OHIO
The Princess
HAMMOND, INDIANA
Edward C. Mmas Co.
HANNIBAL, MISSOURI
The Famous
HELENA, MONTANA
Flugelman's
HICKORY, NORTH CAROLINA
Spainhour's
HIGH POINT, NORTH CAROLINA
Rosaine
HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA
Dunnavant's
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA
Morrisons
JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI
Vogue
JONESBORO, ARKANSAS
House of Fashion
KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN
Mahoney's
KINSTON, NORTH CAROLINA
L. Harvey & Son Co.
KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE
Mayme McCampbell Shop
LAFAYETTE, LOUISIANA
Saloom's
LANCASTER, PENNSYLVANIA
Watt & Shand, Inc.
LA PORTE, INDIANA
Olga Anderson
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY
Purcell's
LINCOLN, NEBRASKA
Gold & Co.
LOCKPORT, NEW YORK
Williams Brothers Company
LORAIN, OHIO
Smith & Gerhart, Inc.
MADISON, WISCONSIN
Olson & Veerhusen Co., Inc.
MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE
J. Goldsmith & Sons Co.
MIDDLETOWN, OHIO
The John Ross Store
MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA
Montgomery Fair Store Co.
MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA
Hunt Dry Goods Company
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE
The Cassner-Knott Dry Goods Co.
NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA
D. H. Holmes Co., Ltd.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
B. Altman & Co.
NORFOLK, VIRGINIA
W. G. Swartz Co., Inc.
ONEONTA, NEW YORK
Bresee's Oneonta Dept. Store, Inc.
PEORIA, ILLINOIS
The B. & M.
PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA
Kaufmann's
PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY
Rosenbaum Brothers
PONTIAC, ILLINOIS
Nelle Louis Crouch
PORTLAND, OREGON
Meier & Frank Company, Inc.
RACINE, WISCONSIN
Friel's
ROANOKE, VIRGINIA
Joseph Spigel, Inc.
ROCHESTER, MINNESOTA
I. A. Knowlton Co.
ROCK HILL, SOUTH CAROLINA
A. Friedheim & Bro.
ROCKY MOUNT, NORTH CAROLINA
Baldwin's
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
Joske's of Texas
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA
The Emporium
ST. JOSEPH, MICHIGAN
Rimes & Hildebrand
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI
Wareham and Rhodes
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA
Fine's
SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA
Cleland Simpson Company
SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
Frederic & Nelson
SHREVEPORT, LOUISIANA
The Hearne Dry Goods Co., Ltd.
SIOUX CITY, IOWA
Younker-Davidson's
SPARTANBURG, SOUTH CAROLINA
The Aug. W. Smith Co.
STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT
Mantel & Marion
TERRE HAUTE, INDIANA
Meis Bros. Company, Inc.
TOLEDO, OHIO
The Lion Dry Goods Company
TOPEKA, KANSAS
Nightingale's
TUCSON, ARIZONA
Jacome's
TULSA, OKLAHOMA
The Vandever Dry Goods Co.
TUSCALOOSA, ALABAMA
Louis Wiesel Inc.
WACO, TEXAS
The Goldstein-Migel Co.
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Lansburgh & Bro.
WATERTOWN, NEW YORK
Smith & Percy Inc.
WATERVILLE, MAINE
Emery-Brown Company
WICHITA, KANSAS
Walker Brothers
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
The G. M. McKelvey Co.

READER'S DIGEST*
reports the same research which proves that brushing teeth right after eating with
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST



Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Published Reports!

Reader's Digest recently reported on one of the most extensive experiments in dentifrice history! And here are additional facts: The one and only toothpaste used in this research was Colgate Dental Cream. Yes, and two years' research showed brushing teeth right after eating with Colgate Dental Cream stopped decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene! The Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever reported in all dentifrice history!

No Other Toothpaste or Powder Ammoniated or Not Offers Proof of Such Results!

Even more important, there were no new cavities whatever for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate Dental Cream correctly! Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results! No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay.

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! While not mentioned by name, Colgate's was the only toothpaste used in the research reported in July Reader's Digest.

(Continued from Page 248)

Suddenly Phil had an idea. He looked at them all as though something really splendid had just occurred to him. "Lorraine, why don't I run back to the hotel and get those blueprints? Then Jim can have a chance to look them over. . . . Linda, you come along and keep me company."

There was a moment of rather constrained silence. Jim said nothing. Lorraine said nothing. Phil stood up.

"Come along," he said. "It won't take long."

"But it's too stormy," she protested quickly. "I think I'd better stay here."

"Because of a little rain?" he asked in astonishment.

She realized it would look foolish to refuse, out of all proportion to the request. Nevertheless, she turned to Jim. But he was offering Lorraine a cigarette, then cupping his hands to light it for her. He was smiling, too, and wearing his hand-painted tie, and he was going to get his contract.

"All right," she said.

It was dark and wet out, but Phil shielded her, helping her down the slippery walk and into the big, comfortable car. He shifted gears easily, and drove off.

"I had to think of some way of getting you to myself," he said. He glanced down at her. And then he said, "That husband of yours is a nice guy, Linda. And I'm going to see that he gets the biggest contract he can handle." He took her hand and held it on the seat between them, firmly, but gently too, caressing her fingers with his thumb. She shivered. "Cold, honey?"

"No. But it is a stormy night."

When they reached the hotel he said, "Come up and help me find that stuff."

"No," she said firmly. "No, Phil."

He smiled, and even in the dim street light she could see that look of possession in his eyes. "You think you're just a small-town wife, darling," he said, "but I happen to know better."

He swung off into the hotel then, a big, powerful man, a man she had never recovered from. Linda watched him helplessly. And she thought that perhaps when you have experienced something, it becomes part of you. Perhaps the love she had felt for Phil, the devastating shock when she'd lost him, was something she would never be without. He's no good, she thought, he's no good. But still she watched the door of the hotel, because soon she would see him again.

He was back almost at once, sliding in under the wheel of the car. "How's that for quick work? I didn't want to waste any time."

He drove through town to the outskirts, parked the car, and took her in his arms. Simply, but not casually at all. Linda put her hands against his chest to push him away. But it wasn't any good. Because she mustn't make him angry; Jim had to have that contract. And somehow the resentment she felt was all mixed up with this heavy, aching knowledge in her heart.

"Just one kiss?"

"All right. All right, Phil."

"You see, I haven't forgotten. You didn't think I'd forget?"

"How could I know?"

He held her a long moment, hard against his chest. "We'll have to find some better way of seeing each other," he said. And then he started the car.

They were gone less than an hour, but it seemed much longer; so that it was surprising to find Jim and Lorraine in the very same places before the very same fire.

"Here are the blueprints," Phil said jovially as they came in the door. "I'd like to know what you think of them, Jim."

After that the two men studied specifications, the two wives chatted, and the fire burned cheerfully. And though Lorraine still had that strained look about her mouth, she talked pleasantly about any number of things.

At an appropriate hour, just before twelve, the Ransoms said they must leave. Lorraine held out her hand. "It's been such a pleasant evening!" she said. "I've enjoyed every moment of it."

Phil turned to Jim. "Come in tomorrow," he suggested, "and we'll draw up a contract. How about eleven o'clock?"

"I'm afraid not," Jim said. "I'll be pretty busy. The fact is, we have all the work we can handle."

Phil looked puzzled. "Make it next week, then. But I'd like to have you in on the ground floor of this thing."

Jim shook his head. "I think you'd better count me out," he said firmly.

"You mean you're passing the whole thing up?" Phil asked in astonishment.

"That's right. I can't include it in my schedule."

There was a moment of blank silence, and Linda started to protest. All the words rushed in a blur through her mind. Don't do it, Jim. This is your big chance, your future, the thing you've been dreaming about all these years. But she couldn't say any of them. Her throat seemed to lock shut.

Phil said finally, "Think it over, Farwell. Take your time about it. But we want you with us. I know a good man when I see one."

Jim's smile was as friendly as when they'd arrived. "Thanks, Ransom. And good luck. It's been nice knowing you."

It was dismissal, firm and courteous, and somehow very final. Phil Ransom even looked slightly foolish as he put on his hat, and took his wife's arm to help her down the steps.

As soon as the car had driven off, Linda turned to him. "Jim, why did you do it? How could you?"

"I had no alternative," he said.

She watched him empty the ash trays and straighten the screen in front of the fire, working methodically, but looking very tir
And there was fear as well as shock in confusion of her thoughts. For she felt n as though she didn't know him at all.

When she couldn't stand it any longer said, "Jim, are you angry with me?"

He glanced up at once, and smiled reass ingly. "Of course not, Linda. You were love with the guy once, and he took adv tage of you. Some men are like that."

"I know. I suppose that's true," she sa
But she was still frightened. For Jim had assured her with a smile, but he had touched her. . . . All along she'd thought h so predictable, but suddenly he had beco like a stranger, a tall, serious young m quietly arranging glasses on a tray. A m who just a moment before had turned back on all his dreams. . . . She said, " can ruin you, Jim. Force you out of busines

"In that case we'll go someplace else a start again."

"Just because he made a few passes me?"

"Put it that way if you want to."

"But I don't want to," she cried. "I wa to understand. I want to know what y think and how you feel." And she added easily, "I didn't mean to hurt you, Jim."

"I know you didn't, so let's forget abo it."

"But we can't!" she said desperately.

He looked at her, and she couldn't end
the sympathy that she saw in his fa
"What's the matter, Linda?" he asked gen
"Are you still in love with Ransom?"

"No! No!" she protested. "I don't kn why I ever was." And she realized, wit vague feeling of surprise, that that was tr
Phil Ransom was expert and counterfeit, a wholly predictable. Because if you prob beneath the surface, you wouldn't find a thing at all. . . . And how easy it was fo man to be cheap and ruthless, to force wife to sit quietly by, with a strained sm on her pale lips! "I don't know why I e was," she said again, in a low, unstea voice.

But Jim still hadn't touched her, and in face she could see pity and discernment, b nothing more. She wondered if she had l him, if she had let all the good in her life s
by. And she knew suddenly that sympat wasn't enough, and discernment was enough. She had to have Jim's arms arou her; she had to know that he still belonged her.

But when he did put out his hand, it w
only to give her shoulder a reassuring p
"We'll weather this," he said.

Linda trembled slightly. As though it h happened a long time ago, she remember the wind-swept car, and Phil's arms stra ing her close. But even the faint repugnan she felt faded almost at once. She turned look at her husband, and she had never so lonely.

"We'll weather this," he said again, che fully enough. And then he picked up the tr of glasses. "I think I'll rinse these out. I be easier in the morning."

Foolishly, inadequately, she followed h to the kitchen. She saw that he was clum rinsing the glasses, and that his big should were slumped with fatigue.

He turned around finally and said, "Y look tired, Linda."

She managed a smile. "Do you still like m
dress?"

"Of course. It's first-rate."

She kept on smiling. "And do you still lo me, Jim?"

He regarded her steadily. He said, "I ways have and I always will, Linda. Y know that."

She sighed, and her voice was strained.
didn't know how it felt before. I didn't kn any man could be so good, or any wife much in love." And she added unhappily, just didn't know."

"Well, it isn't always easy."

"I know that now," she said.

He took her in his arms then, in the midd of the bleak, untidy kitchen. He put his ha on the curve of her neck, and ran his fing through her hair. And she thought, I am j beginning to live.

THE E

A Little Boy Died

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

The little boy I knew was no longer there,
It was a narrow man in dungarees
Made for a boy but taut now with deep quiet
And like old bronze in their worn seat and knees.

He drew his bead beside the man
he wanted
To prove he was a man to. His tin gun
Was only an air rifle, but he turned it
By bulging passion to a blue-steel one.

I was not sure I wanted a fellow man
Instead of a boy with dew upon his ears;
There are too many rampant
random boys
Lost to those inveterate thieves,
the years.

I wanted to shout, to tell him not to fire,
I ached to tell him what the risk would be
Being a man, but it would have been leaning
My weight against the leaning weight of the sea.

His ears stood still, he bent with one eye tight,
The one upon the barrel opened wide,
He fired, split the target,
straightened up,
And never knew a little boy had died.

When you see this on this —buy it!

. . . because Durene★ means extra strength, extra comfort, lasting lustre, and easy washing—not only in underwear but also in socks, sweaters, T-shirts and other top quality merchandise. And you can count on that because anything bearing the Durene name is backed up by Durene's Quality Control Plan, which includes regular, impartial laboratory tests. That's why you can be sure of complete and continued satisfaction—why merchandise made of Durene is always a better buy!

★ All Durene is mercerized cotton, but not all mercerized cotton is Durene...only certain selected yarns which meet Durene's specifications of quality are trademarked Durene.

THE NEW-FORMULA

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Proved by exhaustive clinical study to be an unusually effective preparation to PREVENT IMPETIGO

PREVENT RAW BUTTOCKS PREVENT DIAPER RASH
PREVENT HEAT RASH

Now, with regular daily use of new Johnson's Baby Lotion, you can help safeguard your baby from discomfort of the four major skin afflictions of infancy!

This new-formula lotion offers protection never before available. It actually kills the germs that commonly cause impetigo and diaper rash. And it is highly effective in the prevention and treatment of excoriated buttocks and heat rash. A soothing, snow-white lotion that won't irritate tender baby skin.

Give your baby the advantage of new Johnson's Baby Lotion care!

New Lotion halts impetigo epidemic in hospital!

Doctors impressed by results. An impetigo epidemic had been raging for four months in an Eastern hospital, affecting as many as 70% of the babies. All ordinary methods of treatment failed. Then new Johnson's Baby Lotion was tried. Within a week, the epidemic was over!

Reduces many kinds of skin irritation. Tests in 8 leading hospitals for over 15,000 cumulative baby days showed that new Lotion care reduced skin irritations to an average of less than 2%. (With other generally accepted methods, irritation in some instances ranged as high as 55%.)

Give your baby Johnson's Baby Lotion care!

Keeps skin functioning better. A few velvety drops of Johnson's Baby Lotion smoothed over baby's body after bath and at diaper changes will keep him soft, smooth—free from troublesome rashes and painful irritations.

Prevents "ammonia diaper" odor, too. This amazing new Lotion ends that unpleasant nursery odor, keeps baby sweet, fresh, and cuddly. No other product known offers such complete protection. Start using it on your baby now!

Available in 49¢ and 98¢ sizes

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson

PHOTOGRAPH BY MYRON I

Today's babies can get virus pneumonia and live. Aureomycin has almost eliminated the dread of the disease.

Virus Pneumonia—
A New "Miracle Drug" Reduces its Dange

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

ONE more disease with special dangers for youngsters has now been brought under control. One more cause for maternal anxiety has been largely eliminated. Virus pneumonia, which is just another sickness for grownups but may be fatal to babies and serious for small children, has met its match in a recent "wonder drug," aureomycin.

It was not until World War II that this ailment was first distinguished from other illnesses affecting the respiratory tract. Doctors noticed that one of the most widespread infections was one which involved the lungs, and yet was plainly different from the recognizable forms of pneumonia. The onset was gradual, whereas typical pneumonia strikes suddenly. The symptoms were less severe, but persistent. It was not often fatal, except for babies; and seldom attended by complications, except for infants and very young children. In this, too, it differed from typical pneumonia. None of the known pneumonia bacteria were ever found in the sputum coughed up by those who were ill. And none of the "miracle drugs" available after the war—the sulfonamides, penicillin and streptomycin—so marvelously effective with many respiratory conditions, seemed to be of any particular value in combating this one.

Yet in other respects the mysterious malady resembled pneumonia. It was therefore given the imposing label "primary atypical nonbacterial pneumonia." Later it was found that a virus was responsible, and the title was shortened for general purposes to the much more manageable one of "virus pneumonia." It is also called "pneumonitis."

Since World War II ended, the dis has been increasing. The virus—an org ism so tiny that it cannot be seen thro an ordinary microscope—is passed f person to person in droplets of moist sprayed into the air from the nose mouth. But this kind of pneumonia c not appear in seasonal outbreaks. It oc in summer as well as in the winter mon Apparently the organism that causes present a great deal of the time, so as there are no specific control or preven measures to (Continued on Page

GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 50 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Information on prenatal care is given in BEFORE THE BABY COMES, No. 2383, which is priced at 50 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Bringing Up Baby

Hints collected by Mrs Dan Gerber
(Mother of 5)

WHY PLAY HIDE-AND-SEEK with those opened containers of Baby's foods? A muffin pan will help you keep them all together in one convenient spot in the refrigerator. Be sure to use your pan for large-size muffins. And cover each container of Baby's fruit, vegetable, meat and dessert.

NEW USE FOR ANOTHER OLD STANDBY. If your doctor should prescribe aspirin for Baby, grind the required dose into a fine powder. Mix with a bit of Gerber's Applesauce or one of the other Gerber's Fruits you have on hand. This plan makes it easier for Baby to swallow his medicine.

NOTES ON MUSIC. Anything short of a brass band probably won't jar your tot out of his much needed sleep. So you don't have to stop playing the radio—just keep it from blaring too loudly when Baby's in Dreamland. The sooner he (or she) gets used to regular household sounds, the better for all concerned.

DON'T RUSH ME! Keep mealtimes happy, unhurried, so that Baby's early eating associations are pleasant. Allow at least 20 minutes for each meal. Of course, many babies clean their plates faster than that, particularly if Mom serves a variety of good-tasting Gerber's. These True-Flavor Fruits, Vegetables, Meats and Desserts are all prepared to retain natural goodness plus a high degree of important nutritional elements.

SWEET THOUGHT: Honey will give that bit of extra sweetness to Baby's foods when and if he seems to require it. Many infant nutrition experts prefer honey to sugar for tiny folks.

GOOD START—FREE! Long before your young hopeful is ready to enjoy the wide variety of Gerber's Strained Foods, you can start him on Gerber's Cereals with the Perfected-Texture tots like. I'd be delighted to send you samples of Cereal Food, Strained Oatmeal and Barley Cereal. Just drop a card to Mrs. Dan Gerber, Dept. 810-0, Fremont, Mich. In Canada, Gerber-Ogilvie, Ltd., Niagara Falls, Canada.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

First step towards grown-up foods—

Unsure of his feet—but mighty sure of what he likes to eat. With thousands of babies, Gerber's are lip-smacking favorites right from the first Cereal feedings. It's the Perfected-Texture that pleases their tender tongues. Then as Baby's sense of taste develops, the natural goodness of Gerber's Strained Foods gets gleeful acceptance.

Next step forward—the gradual change-over to Junior Foods. Gerber's tiny, tempting, bite-size particles make trying out new teeth lots of fun. And while Baby learns to chew, he gets the same important vitamins, minerals and proteins from Gerber's Junior Foods, as from the Strained.

Walking off with honors at every meal. Gerber's True-Flavor Vegetables, Fruits, Meats and Desserts. They're strained to a purée smoothness for beginners; evenly chopped for juniors. And, all Gerber's are accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

Babies are our business . . . our only business!

Gerber's
BABY FOODS

(Continued from Page 252)

be taken against it. During the years that virus pneumonia resisted our efforts to understand and cure it, about all that doctors could do was to lessen the discomfort of the sufferers as much as possible.

It is therefore a great pleasure to report that aureomycin is effecting the miraculous cures with virus pneumonia that penicillin has brought about with the other types. Furthermore, it seems to be just as useful when taken in capsule form as when it is injected into a muscle (though the latter may be done occasionally). In most cases it does not produce the unpleasant reactions or "side effects" that have sometimes interfered with the usefulness, with children, of some of the other new drugs. This latest chemotherapeutic agent seems to have been designed especially to relieve mothers of worry and of nursing a long, serious illness. But of course they need to know the danger signals so relief measures may be started quickly.

Usually the first sign of virus pneumonia is a hard, dry cough that comes on gradually and grows in severity. After a few days, there may be pain in the chest when coughing. With infants, before aureomycin came to our aid, death might come within a few days.

In older children, headache, chilly sensations (as opposed to definite chills), "achiness" or general sickness is felt. The temperature may rise to 102 or 103 degrees, or even higher, by the end of the week. This is when the infection spreads to the lungs.

The doctor, tapping the chest with fingers, hears a dull, flat thud instead o hollow, resonant sound of the normal c Listening to the chest sounds with his st scope, he may hear râles, or rattling no from the affected areas. In general, the onset as opposed to a sudden one, the pe ence of symptoms and the hard, dry c are usually enough to tell him that a has virus pneumonia.

When allowed to run its full course lung involvement often lasts from one to weeks or even lo But that was b aureomycin. This l miracle drug us clears up the disea from 48 to 72 hours in some cases has it disappear overn When a baby's dry cough is broug the doctor's atte early enough, the ger of death is gr lessened, if not away with altoge

"Will my child to go to the hospi This question ca be given a positiv swer where virus p monia is concerne most cases, hospita tion may not be essary, especially now that aureo can so greatly shorten the course o disease But in any particular case advisability of hospital care depends the severity of the symptoms, the home ditions, the general condition of the and, above all, the doctor's judgment a the likelihood of additional complicatio

While aureomycin rarely has reac that may follow when other drugs are it does cause nausea in some cases, and few instances this may be accompanie

SMALL FRY

George Klump, 9, of Goshen, Indiana, heard a Salvation Army speaker tell of the need of self-denial, then went home and mailed the Salvation Army a package. It contained 561 sticks of bubble gum.

Jimmy Hopkins, first-grade scholar, Atlanta, Georgia, after being assigned the job of learning to print his name, raised his hand. "I believe you will have to give me another name," he said. "I can't write this one."

Fifth-grade students in Oklahoma City, asked how they stood on punishment, voted 34 to 1 in favor of a spanking rather than a friendly talk.

—HAROLD HELFER.

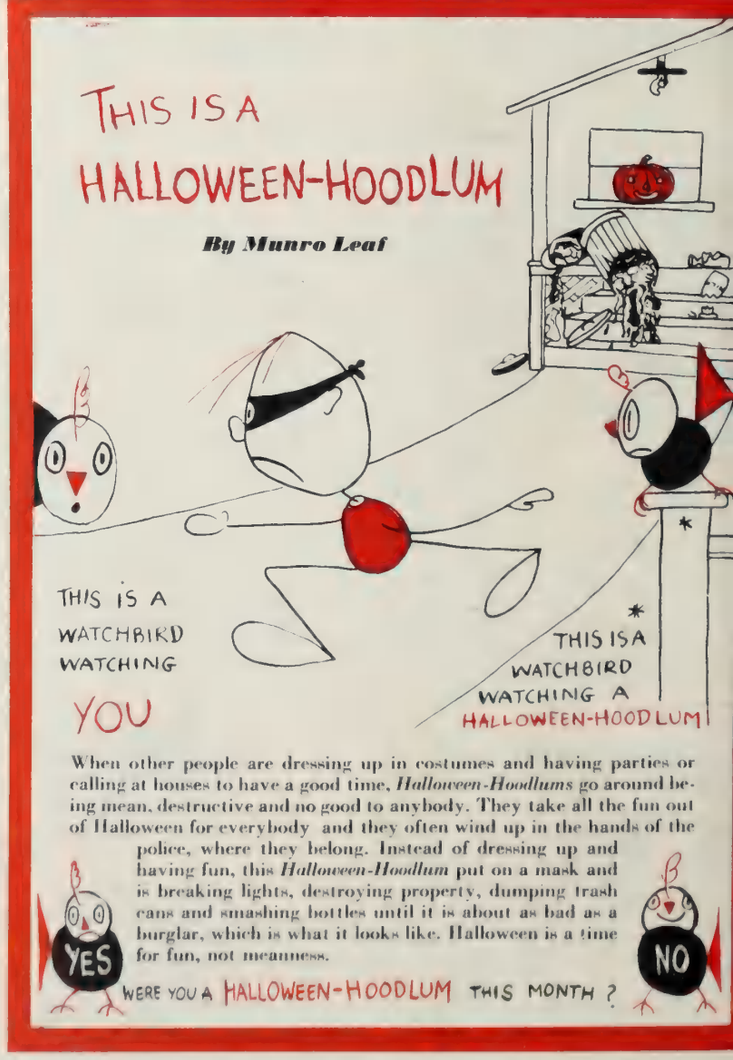
Warming up for an E-Z sleep!

Mothers wink at a little fun, especially if youngsters are warm as toast in E-Z Sleepwear. Dreams are sweeter when children snuggle in E-Z sleepers of soft knit fabric. Choose two or three piece Sleepers in pastels or red.

A wide range of E-Z pajamas for girls and boys, too.

E-Z HOSIERY FOR HAPPY YOUNG FEET

Kids feel gay in colorful E-Z socks, knit to fit them perfectly. Bright, bold stripes or good-looking solids in a full range of styles. Take your pick!



E-Z MILLS, INC., EMPIRE STATE BUILDING, NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

E-Z UNDERWEAR SLEEPWEAR HOSIERY

"for any child at any age"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Look, Mom!
Are you using the Swab that Doctors use?

Q-TIPS

Doctors know best about swabs for baby—and more Q-Tips have been used by doctors than any other prepared swabs. Q-Tips are so gentle . . . so safe . . . so handy for swabbing baby's nose, eyes, throat, ears. Made of softest cotton, only anchored at both ends, sterilized. Ask for Q-Tips by name. 29¢, 49¢, and 98¢ pkg.

Q-TIPS®
for years the largest-selling sterilized swabs

Q-TIPS INC., LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG
Dresses & suits for morning, street, afternoon, or sports, $2.95 to 22.50. Also maternity corsets & lingerie. (Catalog mailed in plain envelope.)
CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A, 729 Balt., Kansas City 6, Mo.

FREE samples of knitting YARN
COLONIAL YARN HOUSE
CHERRY ST., PHILA. 7, PA.

This sturdy, reversible wagon will develop his perception, hold his interest! On one side, he learns to fit four differently shaped colored pegs into corresponding holes. On the other side, he has a wagon on which to load the blocks. Pediatrician-approved for tots 1½ to 3 years. At better stores. $2.00

HOLGATE TOYS
TRAIN AS WELL AS ENTERTAIN

FREE Folder showing large assortment of Holgate Toys. Or send 10¢ (to cover mailing cost), for complete 24-page catalog, including selection chart showing toys suitable for each age from 6 months to 8 years.
HOLGATE BROTHERS CO.
Kane, Pa., Dept. L-100
Name
Address
City Zone State

abdominal pain and diarrhea. Any of these reactions should be reported to the doctor right away. If the nausea is severe enough to cause vomiting, the drug will have to be injected so it will be absorbed, and it may be necessary to take the child to the hospital for a few days.

But except for unusual circumstances such as the foregoing, if home conditions are proper, the child's need for nursing care can often be met as well at home as in the hospital. As a rule he needs to be kept quiet in bed, given lots of water and orange juice, and encouraged to eat a normal diet, with plenty of milk, fresh fruits and vegetables. Your doctor will tell you what you should do; follow his directions faithfully.

In addition to the medicine he will give to combat the infection, the doctor may prescribe aspirin to keep fever down and reduce general discomfort. If coughing is especially severe or painful, he may prescribe a medication to relieve it.

However, as in any serious illness, this rule should be observed: Don't give aspirin, cough medicine or any other remedy without the doctor's approval. He knows best whether, when and how such remedies should be given.

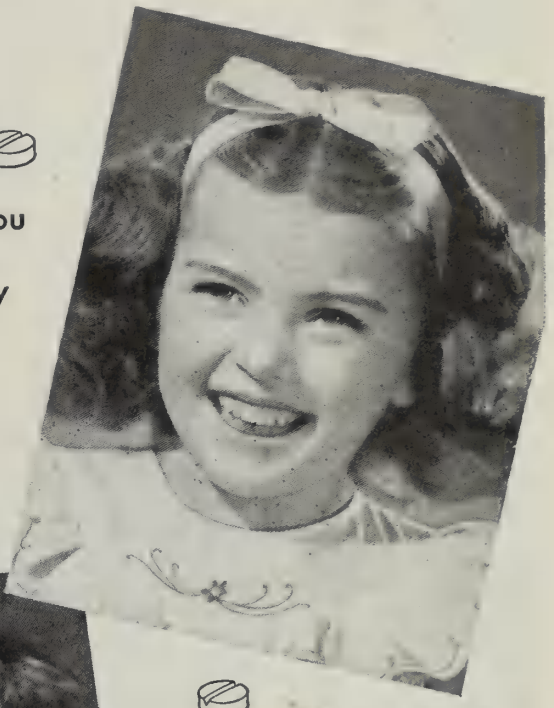
In the case of aureomycin, the doctor will leave explicit instructions as to how much is to be taken, and at what times. Follow such instructions to the letter! I am frequently astonished at the otherwise intelligent mothers who will give a sick child a capsule whenever they think of it, instead of at the intervals the doctor has ordered; or who read "after meals" for "before meals"; or who give more or less than the amount of medication prescribed. Hospitalization could often be avoided if doctors could be sure that mothers would obey simple instructions as carefully as nurses do.

Finally, although aureomycin quickly reduces fever and clears up the lung infection in virus pneumonia, the cough may last for several days afterward. When it does, the child must be kept quietly at home, though not necessarily in bed.

While there is no way known at present to prevent the spread of virus pneumonia, children have a better chance of avoiding it if they are well fed, are not allowed to become chilled or overfatigued, and are not exposed to crowds needlessly. Keep in mind also that a hard, dry cough which gets more severe should be brought to your doctor's attention at once. If it is virus pneumonia, aureomycin can very often turn a serious attack into a comparatively light one.

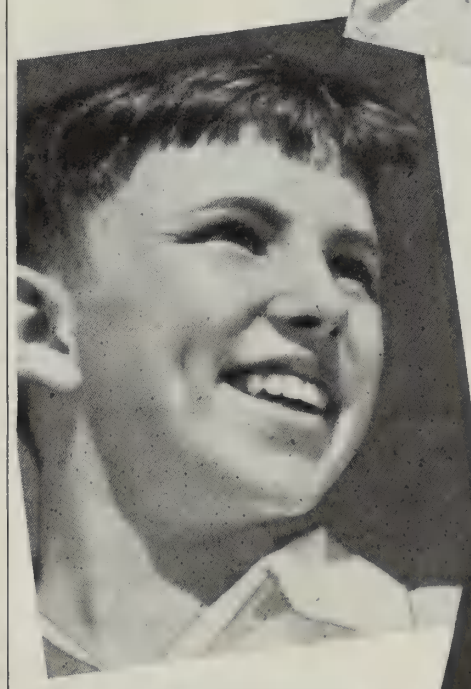
NEWS ABOUT CHILDREN

By Irma Simonton Black



R. S. Illingworth, writing in the British Medical Journal (4645:96), says that much needless worry is caused by calling a child underweight when he may be perfectly normal for his age, sex and birth weight. Tables of average weights do not usually take birth weight into account, but Doctor Illingworth found it an important factor in assessing the physical growth of more than 1000 children up to three years of age.

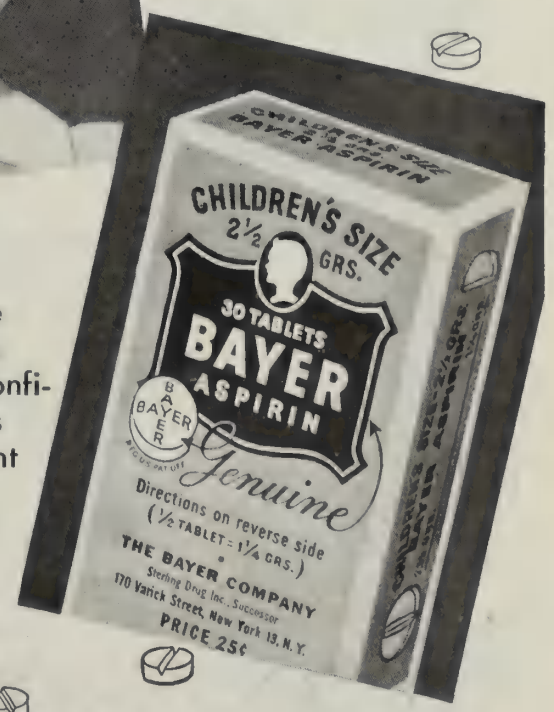
He found, for example, that a boy weighing 5½ pounds at birth will normally weigh 20 pounds 12 ounces at one year, whereas a boy weighing 9½ pounds at birth will normally weigh 24 pounds 7 ounces at one year. This does not mean that the larger baby is necessarily healthier or better developed than the smaller one.



The prevalence of poliomyelitis in camps and boarding schools is no greater than among boys and girls of the general population, according to Thomas H. Ingalls and A. D. Rubenstein (American Journal of Public Health, Vol. 40, No. 5). They base their opinion on observations made on 46 occasions when the disease was introduced into camps and schools. In 32 of 36 instances when only one case developed (or was recognized) during the first five days of the outbreak, no secondary spread occurred. THE END

3 Ways Best for Your Child

BAYER ASPIRIN
Children's Size Tablets



Best because each tablet assures you of the proper dosage as often prescribed by your doctor, for each tablet is "half an aspirin"— half the amount of regular size Bayer Aspirin.

Best because each tablet is uncolored and unflavored—cannot be mistaken for candy.

Best because each tablet is genuine Bayer Aspirin—can be used with complete confidence. Bayer Aspirin's single active ingredient is so gentle to the system that doctors prescribe it even for the smallest children. 30 tablets, only 25¢.

CHILDREN'S SIZE BAYER ASPIRIN

BREEZY DOES IT WITH Snap knitwear

Dressing's fast as a wink, when toddlers' clothes have snap fasteners. They're more convenient to manipulate, put an end to button fumbles. And these fasteners are on to stay through many wearings and washings. When choosing knitwear—or any wearables for wee ones—ask for the "breezy-does-it" styles that have Dot Snappers.

SMART SEW-AT-HOMES!

Put Dot Snappers on the clothes you make, with the Dot Snappers Kit. Complete with professional attaching tool, at notion counters. $1 a box.

Laundryproof DOT SNAPPERS ®

UNITED-CARR, FIRST IN FASTENERS, CAMBRIDGE 42, MASS.

NEW GIRL, SUMMER NIGHT

(Continued from Page 36)

There'll be hikes, swims, picnics. "Cathy." Her voice came high and gay, then, from the hall. "That was Muriel Shannon calling, and little Peggy is home. We're invited to tea."

"That's . . . lovely, mother." Cathy's voice was muffled.

Peg Shannon turned out to be a pretty girl who called "Hi" to them when they drove in. She had eyebrows like dark wings and her tongue raced, leading them to a terrace at the back of the house. "The folks had me in stir, you know." She reported it gaily. "At my grandmother's out in Ohio. Too many late hours." She tilted her head back, laughing. There was something infectious about it, and suddenly Cathy was laughing, too, and Myra released her breath in a long, relieved sigh.

"Just think"—Cathy leaned her head back in the car going home and her voice was changed—"I have a date and it's in a foursome, and Peg fixed it up by phone. We're going to a barbecue party. The boys are Johnny Case and Link Forrester, and Link is what they call 'between girls' here in America. It's all a little different"—Cathy's voice slowed—"and do you suppose I shall do all right?"

"I don't see why not," Myra said heartily. "High-school boys aren't too ——"

"They aren't exactly high-school boys." Cathy explained it more fully in the kitchen, helping with dinner preparations. "They're through with Shroon Hill High, and have had a year at a prep called Chilson. They're ready for universities, or in them—Peg's friends. Peg . . . seems to think it important that I do all right." Cathy moved just a little closer to her mother. "If Link Forrester invites me to a certain beach party tomorrow I'll be 'in,' Peg thinks. In Shroon Hill there's just one crowd, really ——"

"Child, you're babbling." Myra called it gaily. They must hurry, she reminded. It was so late, and what would dad say?

TIM Weston didn't say anything at all for a while, looking down at his wife on the porch at about nine o'clock. "Let's get this straight," he said at last. "Who went to the party?"

"Don't be silly, Tim. Cathy went to the party. Well"—she laughed a little—"perhaps Cathy's mother went, too, in a way. She's been waiting so long."

"Waiting to see a child take off at nine at night in a contraption like that one." Tim was merely reflective. "They seemed to be spilling out of it. A couple of those boys must have been twenty or older."

"I'm sure it's all right, dear." Myra's faint smile lingered. "They're the little Shannon girl's friends. You don't suppo she laughed to cover a catch in her vo "I'm going to lose Cathy here in Amer

"Ah, to be a mother," Tim teased. " worried sick over a child's loneliness. going to lose her on one party."

"You know what I mean, Tim." N voice sobered. "We were so close, the of us, all through the European years. American parents have the opportuni had to mold a child."

He did know what she meant, Tim He'd come up behind her and she reach to cover his hand on her shoulder. moved the lass right into the adult co at age eleven, didn't we?" His chuckl tender. "If you ask me"—a note tha humbly proud sounded in his voice worked out all right too. Cathy's stanch loyal ——"

"And independent and warm of he Myra added it softly. Their silence hel a while.

As they drove out into the country wind whipped the laughter of Peg Shan friends backward. The car raced along was guided nonchalantly by but o Johnny Case's arms. Top down, it was toward the farm where a boy called Morgan summered with his parents.

This crowd was too young and carel be frightening, Cathy decided tentat Link Forrester was just a tall, nice-lo boy who liked to razz her, and every she looked up at him it was to see lau lurking in the gray eyes behind short, c lashes.

"'Do you want to meet a girl n Cathy?'" Link quoted Johnny Cas lightedly. "'She's been more places th GI.'"

"She hasn't ever been to a barbe Cathy's dimple began to show.

"She's going to one now."

The car seemed filled with a freigh laughter and its freight kept spilling ov all spilled into one big pool of mirth they reached the Morgan farm. Kip gan's parents were out of town. There some talk about Kip's married sister an husband coming home sometime, but talk was a little vague and the party ceeded in high gear.

Link went on teasing. He went on just a nice boy something like Oliver dock, and about eleven o'clock he se final seal of his approval upon Cathy viting her to go to the next day's beach with him. After that, since there was to dance at the beach in the evening, the t them practiced dancing on the farmh porch. A juke box was blaring in a base

"I'm certainly glad your French is so good!"

reated for Safety

designed for Comfort

uaranteed by Housekeeping

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

BABY sleeps within the blanket not under it, yet baby is able to move about unhampered. Approved by pediatricians and hospitals. Available at leading stores everywhere in three fabrics . . . 100% NORTH STAR pure wool . . . Sanforized suede cloth . . . Sanforized broadcloth in three colors, pink, blue and maize. From $2.95 up. Write for the name of the stores nearest you.

Trundle Bundle PRODUCTS CO.

Duluth, Minn. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

ABY'S SAFEST SLEEPING GARMENT

ROM Peggy-Sue COATS

ree!

ite for ghter's rn-and- " Coat-Chrome klet! Cut-out pictures and fabric tches to make her most flattering colores! Great for girls from 3 to 14—and her too! For clubs, Y's, schools, etc., e teacher or counselor write.

TLE EMPRESS COATS, Inc. Eighth Ave., Dept. JO, New York City

WARNING!

s show that npooing tangles and s mohair or human h doll wigs!

ai Dolls only ve Washable on Hair!... nylon hair lly improves with washing PLAY-WAVE KIT EVERY Ideal DOLL shampoo, curlers wave-lotion, nstructions.

Doll is made by IDEAL $1.98, $1.98, $3.98

T BETTER DOLL DEPTS.

CORNS

Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your gist. Money refunded ot satisfied. Moss Co., hester, N. Y.

removed by MOSCO

AKE EXTRA MONEY NOW TILL CHRISTMAS

SUPPLY EVERYTHING To help you get started at once.

REE
- Package of Colorful Christmas Gift Cards.
- Samples of 50 for $1. Christmas cards with name.
- 32-page CATALOG of over 100 "sell on sight" Christmas Cards and Gift items

ust send your name nd address for our 1950 deluxe assortment on approval

SPECIAL FUND RAISING PLAN FOR ORGANIZATIONS

NMOUR Corp. Dept. L-X 200 FIFTH AVE. N.Y. 10, N.Y.

playroom and its music could be heard over half the farm.

"Now was that bad?" Link would stand swinging her hand between records. "What"—a certain hypnosis of new girl and summer night kept slowing his voice as he looked down at her—"are you laughing at now?"

"There it g-goes again. The—the juke box." Each time a new burst of music came Cathy had to catch at her lip helplessly. It never did any good and her laughter went on pealing up here on the porch just as it had in the rumpus room. "Link, please—couldn't we go down and watch it?"

"We could not." He caught her other hand, held them both. "Never did take a girl out and have her fall in love with a juke box before."

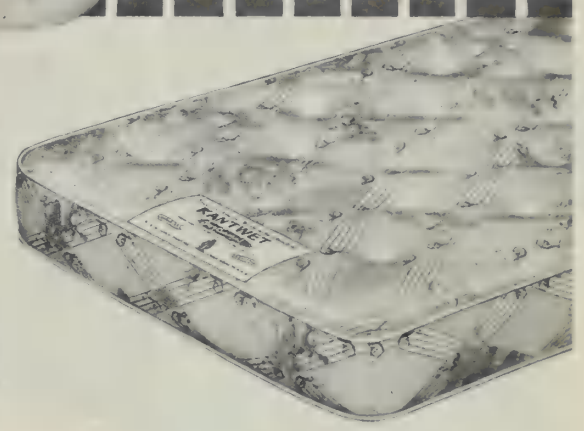
His voice was bemused and a fleeting wonder showed on his face. It was the sort of wonder that comes to a man sometimes when he is just about to turn nineteen. It's very young and tender. It hasn't anything to do with things like the cans of beer stacked in laundry tubs full of ice in a farmhouse basement—still less has it anything to do with small bottles like those beginning to show here and there as the Kip Morgan party rounded midnight. As to the lost couples in the big living room inside—the TV screen long since dark—Link's look was in a far country from those.

He and Cathy watched the moon from the end of the porch for a while, and Link wanted to know if she'd had moons like that at any of her whistle stops. "Whistle stops?" she asked gravely, and "Cathy, Cathy ——" Delighted laughter caught him. "Baby, are they buzzing down there now." He spoke half to himself, watching portions of the party still milling down by the barbecue pit. "Cathy Weston." He held her hand rather carefully under his on the porch rail. "And Kip Morgan's." He was quiet for a moment. "But you'll get hep, won't you?" His voice changed, and was careless again. A new record sent music splashing. "The next voice you hear will be Forrester from the middle of the Sahara," Link chanted. "Come on." He pulled her, laughing, all the way down to the Morgan laundry. He fished in the ice water and brought up bottles of beer and pop.

It was very late then, and Peg Shannon was moaning things around the finger with which she smoothed her lipstick in front of a dressing table upstairs. It was after one o'clock, Peg moaned, and they'd collected two more to take home. "Darling"—she took time out to shake her head wonderingly at Cathy—"that juke-box act of yours was out of this world."

Juke-box act, Cathy thought sleepily. Out of this world. "Link wants to take me to the beach party tomorrow," she said softly.

"Wonderful," Peg approved. "Link and Johnny like to double-date," she said thoughtfully, "but Sally Vincent's mother packed her off to a camp."



All Cathy's thoughts were sleepy and happy ones, riding home. It was exciting to ride through the June night with her hair blowing and with Link singing. "I'll call you in the morning, sugar," he said at a quarter past two, and sugar—her lips trembled with smiles over it, tiptoeing up the stairs. Cathy's first party in America was over, and the backfiring of Johnny Case's car sounded like pistol shots down the street, and her mother was a ghostly figure standing in the upper hall.

"Gracious, mother." Cathy smiled mistily at her. "Nothing happened. We were a million miles out in the country and we took a million people home. . . . Something did happen, mother," she corrected it softly, after a moment. "I met the nicest boy in America, I expect."

It was the beginning of Cathy's rush. The days raced into weeks and she was Link Forrester's girl and invitations rained upon her. The Weston drive was clogged with cars and the Weston phone rang continuously. Tim and Myra joined the vast army of American parents pushed out of their living rooms, circumscribed in their use of telephones, wishing they might have more sleep.

America's Best Cared for Babies Grow up with KANTWET Nursery Needs

KANTWET Posturized Innerspring Crib Mattress

Your baby's back grows straight and strong on a KANTWET Posturized Innerspring Crib Mattress. Only KANTWET has all these important posture features — Dorsal Pad for permanently firm level support; improved patented FLEX-O-LOC innerspring construction; double sealed tufting.

KANTWET Trim Set

Here's protection for your baby, and a daintier, more attractive crib. Quilted Vinylite plastic in pink, blue, yellow or green with white plastic lace ruffle. An ideal baby gift.

Matching KANTWET pads for High Chair and Play Yard

Gay in color, charming in design — well-filled and sturdily constructed to give years of good service and the utmost comfort. Washable Vinylite plastic.

KANTWET Basket Liners

Frills and ruffles to show your baby off, and protective quilted Vinylite plastic liner. KANTWET, of course, to assure the very highest quality.

You give your baby the finest of care, comfort and protection, when you trust KANTWET for your nursery needs. Look for the KANTWET label before you buy.

KANTWET NURSERY NEEDS

Rose-Derry Co., Newton, Mass. • Chicago • Los Angeles

You sleep, too, when he goes Pullman

Ask him to GO PULLMAN

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE AND-ABOVE ALL-SAFE!

RAILROAD TRAVEL AT ITS BEST

©1950, THE PULLMAN COMPANY

They were philosophical about it, at first. "What on earth cooks?" Tim had held in for nearly two weeks before giving way to a minor explosion.

"I don't know." There was a frown between Myra's eyes. "I have to sort of feel my way, Tim." She said it uncertainly. "We're—we're sort of rusty as American parents, you know."

For the most part they were patient. There'd been a certain number of inescapably lonely times for an American child in Europe, and Tim and Myra didn't forget these. They weren't in a mood to cavil, or to look too critically at the children of their new friends and fellow members of the nice Shroon Hill Golf Club. The children tore around in cars all the time, and that seemed to be the accepted thing. Well, it was vacation time, and summer, and there were huge distances to be contended with about this new Eastern city. Now and then the Westons' eyes would meet frowningly, though.

Why can't they get home at nights? Tim summed it up in his second explosion.

Two weeks, and three, and all traces of Tim and Myra's first amusement had fizzled out. They'd become watchful. A certain perplexity kept gnawing at them. Uncertain conversations got started in the Weston house, and these were never finished.

"I'm sure it's all right, Tim." A weary edginess was creeping into Myra's voice. "Muriel Shannon always knows the score."

"Does she?"

"You sound so short."

"Do I? Oh, I want Cathy to have friends and a good time too." Tim would assert it grouchily, thrusting at his hair. "Where is she tonight?" he'd ask, or "Does the Forrester boy live here?"

It was at about eleven P.M., of course, that the climate of the Weston house changed, with Cathy out. The tormented waiting period set in at about that time. Nothing about Cathy's new social life seemed quite so casual after eleven, and by midnight the wellsprings of light comment would have run completely dry in Tim and Myra.

The engaging adolescents of Shroon Hill—Myra would think of them frowningly, slipping out of bed sometimes and pacing out her vigil in another part of the house, in order not to disturb Tim. The adolescents who seemed to have figured out to the last iota just what the traffic in parental worry would bear. A series of too late nights, and then a few early enough to take all the wind out of one's sails, she thought ruefully. The adolescents who had whole gushers of luminous and ingenious alibis on tap, and who seemed to have shared with Cathy the secret of touching these off at will. "Hard for one girl to say when everyone is to start home. . . . Mother, do you realize where Kip Morgan lives?"

Myra didn't know at just what point the definite bur of unease moved in upon her daytime life, too—just when tires grinding on the gravel, phonograph needles playing the same record over and over, and the phone's incessant shrilling set up an actual friction against her nerves. There was a nagging loneliness too. No more talks with Cathy, and no more huddles of three Westons over a kitchen table at bedtime now. Cathy hadn't touched the treasured collection of books Tim and Myra had brought out of storage, and neither had she so much as dipped into their cherished store of records. Her failure ever to touch the piano remained a sore spot in Myra's heart, and no doubt she was being silly about at least some of all this.

It's midsummer, she'd remind herself dryly. What sort of an old fogy are you turning into, Myra Weston? Just so the child isn't—isn't charting her course in America. One flippant and superficial summer, one gay vacation season of playing the great American game of running away from oneself wouldn't harm Cathy too much. But a certain wistfulness settled about Myra's mouth, watching.

"It was time for Cathy to tie loose from us." She pointed it out to Tim lightly one night.

"Tie loose?" He tried to match her grin. "She seems to have latched on to a flying saucer." They were having a bedtime snack for two and Tim went for fresh coffee. "Seven kids hurt in two car accidents within a twelve-hour period right here in the vicinity of Shroon Hill." He said it with his back turned and his voice tight. "Six picked up with liquor in their car and taken to the police station night before last, and all under age. Sam Hastings had to drive down to that Gretna Green across the state line and bring —— Oh, never mind." He came back with the coffee and was trying his grin on again. "Here we are back home," he said with mock solemnity. "So let's get out all the soapboxes and beat all the drums about the younger generation, huh?" His eyes sought the clock, though, and fatigue and worry seemed to have washed some of the color out of them. "Have another try at making the curfew stick," he mumbled.

July was very hot in the Shroon Hill section, and early August was worse. Tim sat on the edge of his bed one night and smoked a cigarette while Myra stood at the window looking up the street and, though it was half past one in the morning, their poses weren't too unfamiliar. In the half-light the Westons seemed perhaps a little lost, blurred.

Going Away

By Ann Batchelder

How can I leave my lilacs
That perfumed all my spring?
Now they are sweetly sleeping
Like a bird with a folded wing.

How say farewell to my roses
Each in its mossy bed?
They are only resting as bluebirds nesting,
They are waiting, they are not dead.

How shall I leave my garden
With no word said?

"No dance and no particular party." Tim crushed out the cigarette he had barely started. "Just a routine summer night. Is this the only bunch of kids in this part of the country, Myra?"

"It's the top bunch, and when were you young last?" she said dully. "And Alice Thurston said they had run into the same thing with their three girls in three different parts of the country," she added after a moment.

She pleated folds in the curtain, and thought how hateful the view from a certain window could become. From this window she couldn't see the border out of which she had picked an empty liquor bottle the morning after Cathy's party, though. The border was under a den window. The punch bowl had been in the den. Tim didn't know about that episode.

Myra leaned her head against the window frame now, closed her eyes. "It must have belonged to the boys who crashed the party, mother. They call them the Midnight Boys. They're always crashing."

She had to trust Cathy, didn't she? Suddenly Myra Weston didn't know, standing at her bedroom window between one and two o'clock in the morning. Had Cathy's face been too carefully blanked, too much on the defensive, talking about party crashers? Myra didn't know that either.

"In the men's locker room out at the club ——" Tim stopped short, and rubbed at his face tiredly.

"What, Tim?"

"Oh, nothing. Lot of old hens, probably. Talk about drinking, even among the high-school kids." He yawned miserably, tried to push it from him. "Beer at parties the accepted thing. This roadhouse selling hard liquor to minors and that one losing license because of ——"

"Here the children are now, Tim."

"All right, but don't call them childre He was grouchy with relief. "Children do bat around in the middle of the night. I'll starting at six tomorrow, Myra, and it be a hard drive." He checked on his ala clock again. "I'll wire you if I can't mak back tomorrow. Come to bed, Myra. you want me to go out and ——"

"No." Myra came slowly from the w dow. "Get some sleep, Tim. I'm going have a talk—to end talks—with Cathy morrow."

It was nearly noon next day, and was dressing for a bridge luncheon for benefit of the local hospital with her fing all thumbs. There'd been no chance for sort of talk with Cathy. A carload of yo people had descended upon the house bef she was up and they had more or less ta possession. The house throbbed with pla music, and Myra's head throbbed with She'd gone to great pains to make the yo people feel at home in the house. She had remind herself of that, moving her should as though to dislodge a weight.

She was a smartly slender woman gett ready for a luncheon, and having trou with the clasp of her wrist watch beca her fingers were shaking. What's the ma with me? She put the question to the mir There are always problems. Tim and I s them together. Tim and I, and Cathy.

She missed her favorite cologne, went i Cathy's room. The girls must have smo her daughter out of bed, and she started clean their ash trays one more time, mov in slow motion. It wasn't that cigarettes w so important. She shook her head impatien over the stacked crimsoned ends. A sixte year-old's taking up smoking to impress new gang wasn't enough to rock M Weston's world, either. Yet she came t dead stop, holding Cathy's bedside tray was a young face, changed and inscruta and half lost behind cigarette smoke—t was what was important. That was what minded. Cathy's changing. Myra had to st in the girl's room and hold the burdened tray and face up to something. Why talk Cathy and ask her things, and seem to and prod? She emptied the tray with sud weariness. Why tempt Cathy's voice into new and careful range, the one even had been able to do nothing about?

Downstairs she had to call above a rec asking Cathy what her plans were. Th were no plans at all, the girl called b hazily.

The bridge luncheon was being held at Women's Club building and Myra dr there miserably enough. She parked car and retouched her make-up before go in. She tried to summon a smile, advancing a group of women clustered about a c table. She became conscious of a voice, she stopped uncertainly, and her smile fad

"—— racing on the Beach Road." clear and carrying voice was caught betw shock and laughter. "The Case boy dr one car and the Morgan lad the other the police had set up a road block ——" voice was lost and then it emerged ag "—— not a thing but beer, the boys s as though —— How the Morgan stat wagon could leap the ditch and not t turtle ——"

Eva Mont's voice, and it became part a continuing and intangible summer nig mare, and Myra ate her luncheon and t played cards mechanically. The Case boy— It kept repeating itself stupidly in her mi "We had to take Kip Morgan home." could hear Cathy saying that, over and ov

She felt reasonably brisk and efficient ready to cope again by the time the pa was over. It was a shock to find the ho quiet and deserted. Tim's wire, pushed un the door, said that he would not be able get back that night, after all. Cathy's no tacked to the kitchen bulletin board, sta that they were all off to the beach. "Tried call you at club but line busy –home earl was the way the message ended. Myra sto

(Continued on Page 260)

WOOLWORTH'S ... store of wonders has the most WONDROUS TOY GUN in a decade

JET AUTOMATIC REPEATING RIFLE

ONLY $3.50 COMPLETE INCLUDING 6 COLORFUL HOLLOW PLASTIC BALLS looks like a bazooka...

es 6 shots in one loading...
perfectly harmless

Great guns! Woolworth's has the greatest of 'em all. It's the new Jet Automatic Repeating Rifle ... fires 6 plastic hollow balls in one loading. Just insert ... start shooting. Repeater action! Easy ... any child can work it. Safe ... will not damage bric-a-brac or glass. Authentically designed with polished aluminum barrel, durable plastic stock. Rifle closed measures 28" ... in shooting position 33". See this sensational Jet Automatic Repeating Rifle at Woolworth's now. Get one for your youngster, and if you want to be a really bright Santa, get several extra for Christmas giving.

POP, POP, POP ... here's a toy repeater rifle any boy (and girl) will enjoy.

EXTRA AMMUNITION— 12 colorful plastic balls in cellophane bag, only 50¢

AT YOUR NEAREST WOOLWORTH STORE

F. W. WOOLWORTH CO.

EVERY YOUNGSTER you know will want this wondrous new toy gun. It's loaded with fun for everyone! And it's perfectly harmless. See it now at your nearest Woolworth's.

© 1950, F. W. WOOLWORTH CO.

don't sacrifice HEALTH for beauty... or BEAUTY for health!

No two figures are exactly alike! That's why you can't get both beauty and health from a ready-made or altered-to-fit support. They're made in "average" sizes . . . so naturally give only "average" results!

Some "style" foundations change figure outlines at first, but soon lose shape and conform to your sags and bulges. They don't help even minor posture imperfections . . . which can lead to serious health disorders.

And it's no fun wearing a heavy "health" garment for abdomen, back or breast problems. A support that's merely "fitted" can't give full or lasting health benefits. What's more, you sacrifice figure beauty because the bulk ruins the lines of your clothes.

She was miserable in supports made for her "figure type". Now she's a "new woman" in her light, flexible Spencers—created for her alone!

Spencer INDIVIDUAL DESIGNING gives you BOTH!

Spencers are not designed for figure "types" or "sizes"! Yours will be created especially for you . . . from detailed descriptions and measurements of your figure. Will not just "fit" your form as it is . . . but will gently re-mold it to graceful, healthful posture.

For keeps, too, because every Spencer is guaranteed never to lose its shape! To our knowledge, no other support can give this amazing guarantee!

BEAUTY! Spencer will give you priceless new loveliness . . . youthful breast contour, trim waist and hips!

HEALTH! Spencer will give you new vitality, relief from muscle strain and fatigue, better body functioning . . . because internal organs are properly supported.

ECONOMY! You save money because your Spencer Body and Breast Supports last longer . . . and are guaranteed never to lose shape!

See Your Doctor! See your doctor regularly for a check-up. Thousands of doctors prescribe Spencer Supports to improve health by improving posture; to aid treatment of back derangements—arthritis and other chronic diseases—displaced abdominal organs—breast problems—post-operative and other conditions.

Write or Phone for FREE Information! Mail coupon below for fascinating booklet showing how Spencer will help you! This exclusive designing service available only through a skilled Spencer dealer—time and place at your convenience. Phone now! Look in yellow pages under "Corsets" or in white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" and "Spencer Support Shop". (Never sold through department stores.)

To SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn.
(Canadian Address: Rock Island, Quebec) 10/50

Please send your FREE booklet. I have marked my posture problem at left. (Print your name and address.)

MRS.

ADDRESS

CITY & STATE

Lordosis ☐ Breast ☐ Ptosis ☐

Want to Make Money in a professional type of business? Experience not needed—we train you. Profitable—interesting. Check for information ☐ individually designed SPENCER SUPPORTS

(Continued from Page 258)

reading and rereading it, and biting her lip, and the false feeling of efficiency vanished. She moved listlessly then, straightening up the house. "Home early" was a phrase which didn't mean a lot in Cathy's book these days. If she had to wait up tonight she would do it without Tim, and doubtless Eva Mont's high voice would be ringing in her ears.

Myra got into gardening clothes, fixed a little food, and ate it in the kitchen. She began to think of kitchens in Europe. There'd been one with a big built-in bench piled with worn cushions and there Cathy had nestled with a book. There'd been one with an old wooden table worn into shining hollows and the three Westons had gathered about it at bedtime, sipping treasured chocolate and talking energetically.

For goodness' sake! Myra moved briskly, shook things back into focus, and rinsed her dishes. She worked in the garden until it was too dark to see. At midnight she was merely wandering through the house again, and at one she was at her upstairs-window post. At two o'clock she was trying to write a letter to Helen Murdock in London, and at half past two she had left the letter and was moving rather uncertainly toward the telephone.

"Will you be all right, Cathy?" Kip had leaned against the car at the entrance to the lane leading into the Morgan farm. "Forrester can always drive, you know. Come on, boy." He'd reached in and had given Link a shake behind the wheel, and Link had sat erect. "There you are. All okay." Kip, relieved, had vanished quickly into the darkness of the lane.

Link could always drive. Cathy had tried to hold fast to that thought through a tortuous two miles of weaving from side to side on the highway. In the end she'd had to give up, and coax and cajole Link into pulling the car off to a level space, half in and half out of a field. It had taken some doing, and she'd had to lean back to draw in a long and painful breath when they were finally stopped and safe. "You promised, Link. You promised." It was merely a miserable half moan, and addressed to no one. There was no answer, and immediately Link was asleep.

She had locked the car doors and had settled herself to wait, staring straight ahead at the highway, ducking down a little when the lights of an occasional late car swept around the curve ahead. She'd kept feeling a little sick through the first hour of her wait, thinking of her mother, checking the watch on Link's limp wrist. Home early. She had underlined it in her note. If Link slept for an hour, though—surely then he would be able to drive. She'd eased him around, settling him in the most comfortable position possible against the back of the car seat.

It got to be three o'clock, and it was still impossible to rouse Link sufficiently to be able to trust him at the wheel, and Cathy was snapping his cigarette lighter order to be sure of the time. The hand watch were racing now.

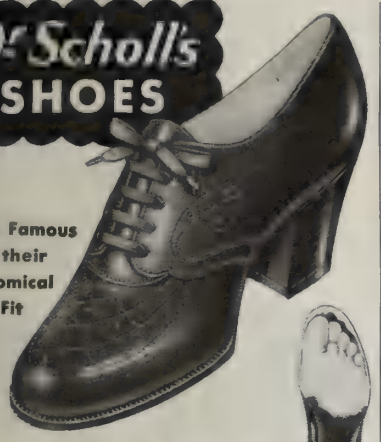
Cathy's thoughts didn't race, bu kept up a painful and steady marchin went over the evening, and over it Link had broken two promises. He that they wouldn't be with Kip again, and that he, Link, wouldn't dri thing at all. They had brought Kip the shore, though, and Link had give Kip's pressure about stopping at t House, and at the Log House they into Kip's sister's crowd. "High" wa they called it here in America. Th crowd had been high. Not that a pa to be that way to close in on Link lighted and possessive sort of way. considered it soberly, her mouth wis was a thing which happened all the

She snapped the lighter again and at the sleeping boy's face. Curled aga back of the seat with his hair rough his mouth serious now, none of the Link had taken to be a good fellow crowd at the Log House showed. cocktails, and not the stuff someo brought from Mexico in a bottle.

America was a lot of things, she uncertainly. It was a girl marooned with a boy who had passed out, a rounded by moon-washed fields and of woods. It was a girl touching th hair rather sorrowfully, and remem things. "I've met the nicest boy in A mother." It was still true, and her fir spangled summer would always be Link. He had shown her her first A moons and oceans and beach bonfir taught her to square-dance, and t dive, and to samba. The night filled his laughing voice. "We're going to down, woman. . . . That's a Coke flo We've got a lot of American dancing to Now look, it's your backhand we're on. . . . Every whingding of the winte dated up for. . . . Mother, come dow Cathy Weston!"

Link had too many friends. It was the leader of the parade to turn bac Cathy supposed. She tried to rou again, sadly this time. She leaned aga back of the seat herself then, and sle next she knew of anything, Link's rue contrite voice was in her ears and fog was seeping over the fields.

The light looked lonely in the hall a too, and her mother's voice was "I won't cry if you're all right, cert She was moving toward the telephon have to call back and tell the police been no accident." Her voice was "Do go to bed, Cathy."

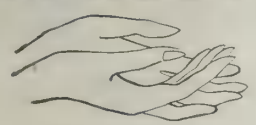


It didn't seem possible to go an that note in her mother's voice, and lingered. "Should I . . . have let Link she asked haltingly. There was no and she tried again. "You've been to Aunt Helen, haven't you, mother

Other views, sizes and prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 62 and 63

Vogue Design No. 7186. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38, 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7172. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 34 waist, 50c.
Vogue Design No. S-4119. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38, $1.00.
Vogue Design No. 7194. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38, 60c.
Vogue Design No. 7207. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38, 75c.
Vogue Design No. 7168. Waistcoat or blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38, 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7193. Jumper dress or one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38, 50c.

Dr. Scholl's SHOES



World Famous for their Anatomical Fit

If your feet hurt—or are "hard" to fit—Dr. Scholl's Shoes will give you glorious walking ease—free of painful friction and pressure points on your feet and toes. Their style distinction give no outward hint of their inward scientific design.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet—women's, 2½ to 13, AAAA to EEE; men's, 5½ to 16, AAA to EEE. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe and Dept. Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable in your city, write for catalog.

Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Ill.

HOUSE-WORK HANDS?

Try this different lotion. A famous Canadian formula that swiftly soothes and softens. Provides beneficial oils and medically proved protective ingredients to help prevent redness, roughness, dryness. Extra rich and concentrated. One drop serves both hands.

At cosmetic counters—25¢, 50¢ and $1.00 ■ bottle

Campana Italian Balm

How To Hold FALSE TEETH More Firmly in Place

Do your false teeth annoy and embarrass by slipping, dropping or wobbling when you eat, laugh or talk? Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH on your plates. This alkaline (non-acid) powder holds false teeth more firmly and more comfortably. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. Does not sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH today at any drug store.

FOUND!

OVER 100 WAYS TO MAKE EXTRA MONEY and FRIENDS

Sell friends newest Metallic Christmas Cards, Gift Wrappings, Novelties, Gifts, Children's "Action" Books. Profits to 100%. Bonus. Special Offers. Request Feature samples on approval. FREE samples 50 for $1 up Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, 100 for $1 Stationery, Napkins and FREE Catalog.

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS North Abington 317, Mass.

CHRISTMAS MONEY!

Now is the time to earn money to pay your Christmas bills, representing the Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill and other popular publications. Generous commissions. For details write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
356 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

■ complete removal of superfluous hair use ZiP Epilator

Zip-it's OFF because IT'S OUT

Safe for face, arms, legs. Good stores, or send $1.10 to Jordeau Inc., South Orange, N. J.

touched the letter on the hall table. "What a fat air-mail letter." Her mother didn't turn from the phone, and Cathy went slowly up the stairs.

Tim had driven through without dinner next evening and it had been an exhausting trip in the heat. Now that his late dinner was before him he didn't touch it, but sat looking frowningly at his wife. He kept saying "I see" in a fagged sort of voice. "Come and sit down, Myra," he said at last. "I'm sorry you had such a bad night. We always talk these things over together, though, so we'll wait for Cathy."

"We won't wait for her this time." Myra's voice was colorless and defeated. She stood turning a letter over and over in her fingers. "Out all night"—she winced—"and the police searching the shore road. I just want you to read this letter before I mail it. It's to Helen Murdock, and I'm asking her if we may send Cathy back to her in London."

"You're asking ——" Tim pushed his hair back confusedly. "Wait a minute ——"

"Helen would be glad to have Cathy even if she didn't need the money. As we know, she could use that very well. One year or"—Myra's head was down and she bit at her lips to steady them—"or two, and Cathy can finish school with Sheila. She can go on with piano under Buehler. I'm not able to stand . . . seeing her changed and spoiled —— What are you doing, Tim?"

He'd crossed quickly and had taken the letter from her. "I'm tearing up this brainstorm," he said. He started to tear it, but then stopped and stood smoothing it thoughtfully. "This isn't the answer, Myra." His frown deepened. "You wanted to get Cathy back to learn to live in America," he reminded. "Now she's back and, so help me, she ought to learn to live here. Shroon Hill's America. These are American boys you seem to be plowing under."

As we grow in wisdom, we pardon more freely. —MME. DE STAEL.

"I . . . don't know what you mean."

"I just mean we're giving it a little more time." He sat down, went on frowning at the letter. "We're leaving it to Cathy."

"You're leaving it to a sixteen-year-old girl to keep a car from pancaking, to handle a boy who's —— Tim, Tim—it's not good enough."

"It's good enough if the way we brought Cathy up was good enough," he said patiently. "You're saying it's not. Seventeen years of the best we could muster, and now you don't trust it. You don't trust your daughter to come through in a situation which could well have caught her off balance. I do. I say she's going to work it out. Just give her some more time. Cathy's too much an individual to run all the way with any pack, or that's my bet. We'll stand by. We'll certainly work on the curfew ——"

"You can't expect ——"

"I do expect." He said it stubbornly. "You see, Cathy's a girl I know. We've been hashing things out together for a long time. You keep this letter." He smoothed it again. "You'll be bringing it to me to make a little bonfire of, and before too long. Heads up, now. Where's Cathy tonight?"

"She's baby-sitting—next door." Myra's head refused to come up. Her voice was heavy. "I suppose that after last night even the fabulous Forrester ——"

"Baby-sitting." Tim exulted. "Does that mean we get a full night's sleep, by any chance?"

Myra heard Cathy come in from next door at about eleven-thirty. She didn't hear anything else until just before six in the morning. Something startled her then and she sat up and blinked at her dresser clock. The sounds coming up from downstairs turned out to be real ones, and not dreamed, and the fragrance of coffee was real too. If Cathy were planning to run off with her Veto Gives All-Day Protection Against Perspiration and Odor —In Just 5 Seconds!

New Veto positively says no, no to underarm "O" (unforgivable perspiration moisture and odor.) Stops odor instantly . . . checks perspiration more effectively! It's an exclusive "wonder-formula."

Veto is light, fluffy—smooths on and absorbs as easily as vanishing cream. Never cakes or dries out in the jar. Has a delightful fragrance you'll love. And it's mild, won't irritate sensitive skin. Harmless to even finest fabrics. Guard daintiness from bath to bath. Use super-effective Veto daily. Get it now at any cosmetic counter.

Veto Protection Lasts from Bath to Bath!

*Based on an embarrassing episode of Mrs. Edna M. Dunbar of Fort Belvoir, Virginia, to whom we have sent a check for $50. Sets of 3 slips have gone to five other letter writers

W-H-H-I-S-S-H! came the breeze...C-L-I-C-K! went the shutter...up went eyebrows (and our pretty model's color!), for a too-revealing photograph. Now she knows about and wears only Mary Barron slips...a very wise if somewhat tardy choice.

When a Slip becomes a social error ... switch to Mary Barron

For Mary Barron design means perfect fitting and dependable behavior in every situation. No crawling up... no twisting 'round nor tugging down on straps. You may be sure that your Mary Barron always will stay where it belongs.

If not available at your favorite store write to Mary Barron

Nylon lace edging with shadow nylon net insertion give a charming touch around top and bottom of this nylon tricot slip. Colors...White, Pink, Black. Sizes ..32-42. 31½-39½.

Mary Barron Slips
in Rayon $3.00 up
in Nylon $6.00 up

*WIN $50.00 for your most embarrassing slip moment if used in our advertising. Five other awards of 3-slip sets. Mail to Mary Barron, c/o The Davidson Brothers Corp., 180 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N.Y.

When "Childhood Constipation"

makes your 9-month-old weepy . . .

When baby weeps and fusses because of "Childhood Constipation," give her Fletcher's Castoria. The mild yet thorough laxative that's made especially for her delicate little system. Your doctor will tell you Fletcher's Castoria does not contain a single harsh drug. So gentle, it cannot cause griping, diarrhea or discomfort. So pleasant tasting even very young babies take it willingly.

or your 9-year-old listless . . .

When your growing child is listless and out of sorts because of "Childhood Constipation," remember this: Strong, adults' laxatives . . . even in reduced doses . . . may be too harsh! Give Fletcher's Castoria. It's thorough and effective—yet so gentle it will not upset sensitive digestive systems. And children like its pleasant taste. So play safe, keep Fletcher's on hand at all times.

give Fletcher's Castoria

The laxative made especially for infants and children . . . children of all ages!

Chas. H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

"From high chair to high school!"

crowd to the beach again, and without having said a word ——

Myra stood in the kitchen doorway, pulling a robe about her, having to swallow something that felt like tears. Here was the girl she no longer knew, and she was moving about the kitchen with a grave and rather defensive expression on her face—and Tim was wrong, wrong.

"Can't you wake up, mother?" Cathy laughed a little. "Come on in and have some coffee. I thought I was being so noiseless."

"You were." Myra moved slowly. "It was a shame I had to wake up. You might have stolen away on one more all-day and all-night ——"

"Please, mother." Cathy came over and touched her arm. "It's just a—a bird walk I'm starting out on. It's a sort of club anyone may join, and the directions for meeting at the end of the Merriam trolley line were in the paper. Now drink this." She looked young and awkward, setting the coffee down. "I suppose I shan't be going to the beach again, or anywhere else with the crowd. I don't imagine"—her voice caught—"I'll be going anywhere, ever again, with Link." She talked now from the window, her voice even and her back turned. "That's the way it is, mother. I'm sorry."

"Sorry?" Myra said it stupidly, burning her tongue on the coffee.

"Sorry it didn't work out better. I . . . shan't be the popular sort of American girl. If I kept trying a long time . . . it was because of Link. But in the end I have to be friends with Cathy Weston, and proud of her, and never—never lonely with her. You and dad helped teach me that. Now—now you're stuck with it."

"I can't think of anything more lovely to be stuck with, darling."

"I'll be quite the drip, and don't think it isn't going to show up in Shroon Hill." Her voice came small from her window post. "I took out a library card, though." She straightened a little. "Five mothers can use me for baby-sitting right on this block. We might look up a piano teacher, too, and not wait. . . . Oh, mother! It's Link"—it was a frozen sort of murmur—"he's coming up the walk. You talk to him." She turned in a panic. "Tell him anything ——"

"I think you'll have to handle it yourself, dear."

Myra opened the door to find Link picking up pebbles to throw at Cathy's window. One of the engaging youths, she thought with some bitterness. One of the frightened kids was the helpless thought that followed, as Link stood looking at her and trying to smile. His eyes were darker than usual and he asked in a none too steady voice if Cathy were up. He saw Cathy then and went slowly into the kitchen and stood motionless there. The girl stood without moving, too, and Myra began to feel invisible as their silence held.

They talked in short and almost rude sentences then. "I told you not to come," Cathy said. "I can't go to the beach. You were silly to drive over ——"

"I didn't drive over. I hitched a ride on the paper truck. I'm not driving for a long time. My father says I can't be trusted with a car, and he's right. I signed that paper, Cathy"—Link took a step forward—"the one promising my father not to drink anything for five years. You—you can't be a lush and a doctor. You can't be a lush and know Cathy Weston, either, can you?" Link's mouth twisted into an anxious smile. "Now look—you said something about a bird walk, and when do we start?"

"You don't care about bird walks, Link." Cathy twisted her fingers.

"I just invented them, that's all. My egg collection's in junior-high museum right now."

"The bird walk . . . is only one thing." Her voice had slowed. "I'll be coming home

When a man finds not repose in himself it is in vain for him to seek it elsewhere. —ANON.

NOW cover your own

PRIMS® BUCKLE

and COMBINATION BUTTONS

In seconds... No tools, no paste, no fillers needed! Only 25¢ a card

U. S. and Foreign Pats. Pend

BECAUSE OF THE GREAT DEMAND fo buckles of the same simple design as th PRIMS Cover Buttons, we now present ou washable and rust-proof buckles as well a the two-toned Combination buttons. At you leisure you can quickly and easily give you clothing that rich effect that only cloth covered Combination Buttons and Buckl can create.

PRIMS Cover Buckle and Buttons are available in a wide range of sizes at your notion or button counter.

PRIMS®

COVER BUTTONS-BUCKLE

William Prym, Inc., Dayville, Connecticu

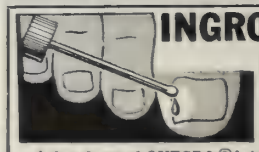
BRIDAL

Fabrics at Wholesale

Write for FREE catalogue and swatch book

Schenfeld & Sons

97 Hester St. (Dept. L) N. Y. 2, N. Y.



LET'S NAME the BABY

750 Boy and Girl names, what they mean, where they come from. New 32-page book includes horoscopes, birthstones, birth flowers. Everything you need to Name The Baby! Send 25¢ coin or stamps to:

LET'S NAME THE BABY

114 E. 32nd St., N. Y. 16, N. Y.

INGROWN NAIL

Hurting You

Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

EXTRA DOLLARS THE EASY WAY

Show unusual Christmas cards—they sell themselves! YOUR PROFIT—up to 50¢ a box. Wide selection for naime imprinting, sell 25 or 50 for $1 up to 25 for $6.75, perfect for bu ness concerns. ALSO: 4 different "feature" boxes 21 unique cards; sorted plastics, color metallics, fine etchings, humorous, religious, wrappings, children's books, plus big every-day selection of new n elties, personalized stationery, napkins. Big Commissions. Ask samples on approval & FREE light-weight kit. Write Dept. B-2

RICHAR GREETINGS, INC., 41-43 Crescent St., L.I. City 1, N.

Rooms Smell Nice Quick with

VAPAIR

ROOM DEODORANT

Bomb or Wick

VAPAIR BOMB

For instant killing of odors just press the button

VAPAIR WICK

For continuous killing of odors Just pull the wick

Now Two Sizes

$1.59 98¢

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Full 10 oz. 69¢

at night. I'll be studying piano. My wanted to take me places like Gettys- and Valley Forge, and we'll be going week ends. I ——" can dust off my violin. I'd love to go to ysburg and Valley Forge, if anyone ed me. Cathy ——" He waited. "Mrs. on, don't you think she ought to try me ist one bird walk?"

t's up to Cathy. I do think"—Myra n to move lightly about the kitchen; a ng note had come into her voice—"I do that if you are going on a bird walk you t to eat some breakfast, Link."

e had bacon sizzling and toast browning he wink of an eye. A delighted sort of nuring was getting under way at the behind her. This got off to a slow start it was interrupted by frequent silences, but when Myra turned with plates of hot food she saw that the silences were all right too. Link and Cathy looked into each other's eyes during these. Their lips kept struggling with laughter.

She stood in the doorway then and watched them hurry across the porch, and what stretched between them and the bus stop was easily the most beautiful morning of the summer.

Halfway down the walk Link turned, and made a magnificently sweeping gesture westward with his thumb. "If the gang shows," he called gaily, "we went thataway."

"There's not a chance," she called back.

"You'd be surprised." He megaphoned it. "It's a new bandwagon, and they climb on fast." He set his hand against Cathy's elbow and they sprinted for the bus.

NITED NATIONS: SHADOW AND SUBSTANCE

(Continued from Page 12)

s, each must abandon the sovereign to do as it pleases; courts must subte judgment for violence; and internaal decisions must be enforced by the lawing majority against an outlaw. If the sed outlaw can sit on his own case and lidate judgment, every principle of law ks down. St.-Pierre proposed that an essor be defined as one who refused to rate or accept judgment. Like most eenth-century thinkers, including the rican founding fathers, St.-Pierre was nable and logical.

: Have all projects for Leagues of Na- against war provided for enforcement?

: Yes, without exception. Enforcement, e have seen, is implicit in every concept order substituting justice and law for chy and violence. The inherent diffies of enforcement were always, however, mous. In the domestic affairs of states, reakers are individuals or groups of inluals, who can be brought before the bar stice by relatively peaceable means. If, ever, a sufficiently large number of armed ens flout the laws of even their own s, the result is a civil war which cannot ettled by a law, a judge and a lightly d police force, but by armed force—war.

he same difficulty attends attempts to ce laws governing the relations between reign states. If a state transgresses a law ibiting armed violence in settling rela- with another state, and refuses to acjudgment, it is not individuals who must rought to justice, but the whole state . The enforcement, therefore, of laws ibiting war implies recourse to war if ns of arbitration and reconciliation fail. ming, however, that all members of a ed Nations sincerely agree that aggres- as defined in law, is a punishable crime, are sincerely committed to bringing a reaking state into line, the combination rce against a would-be aggressor would ys, theoretically, be sufficient to deter aggression by its mere existence and t, since states do not embark upon agions except upon a fair chance of success. t this condition implies, of course, such national limitation and regulation of uments as would prevent one state or bination of states from becoming powerough to defy all others.

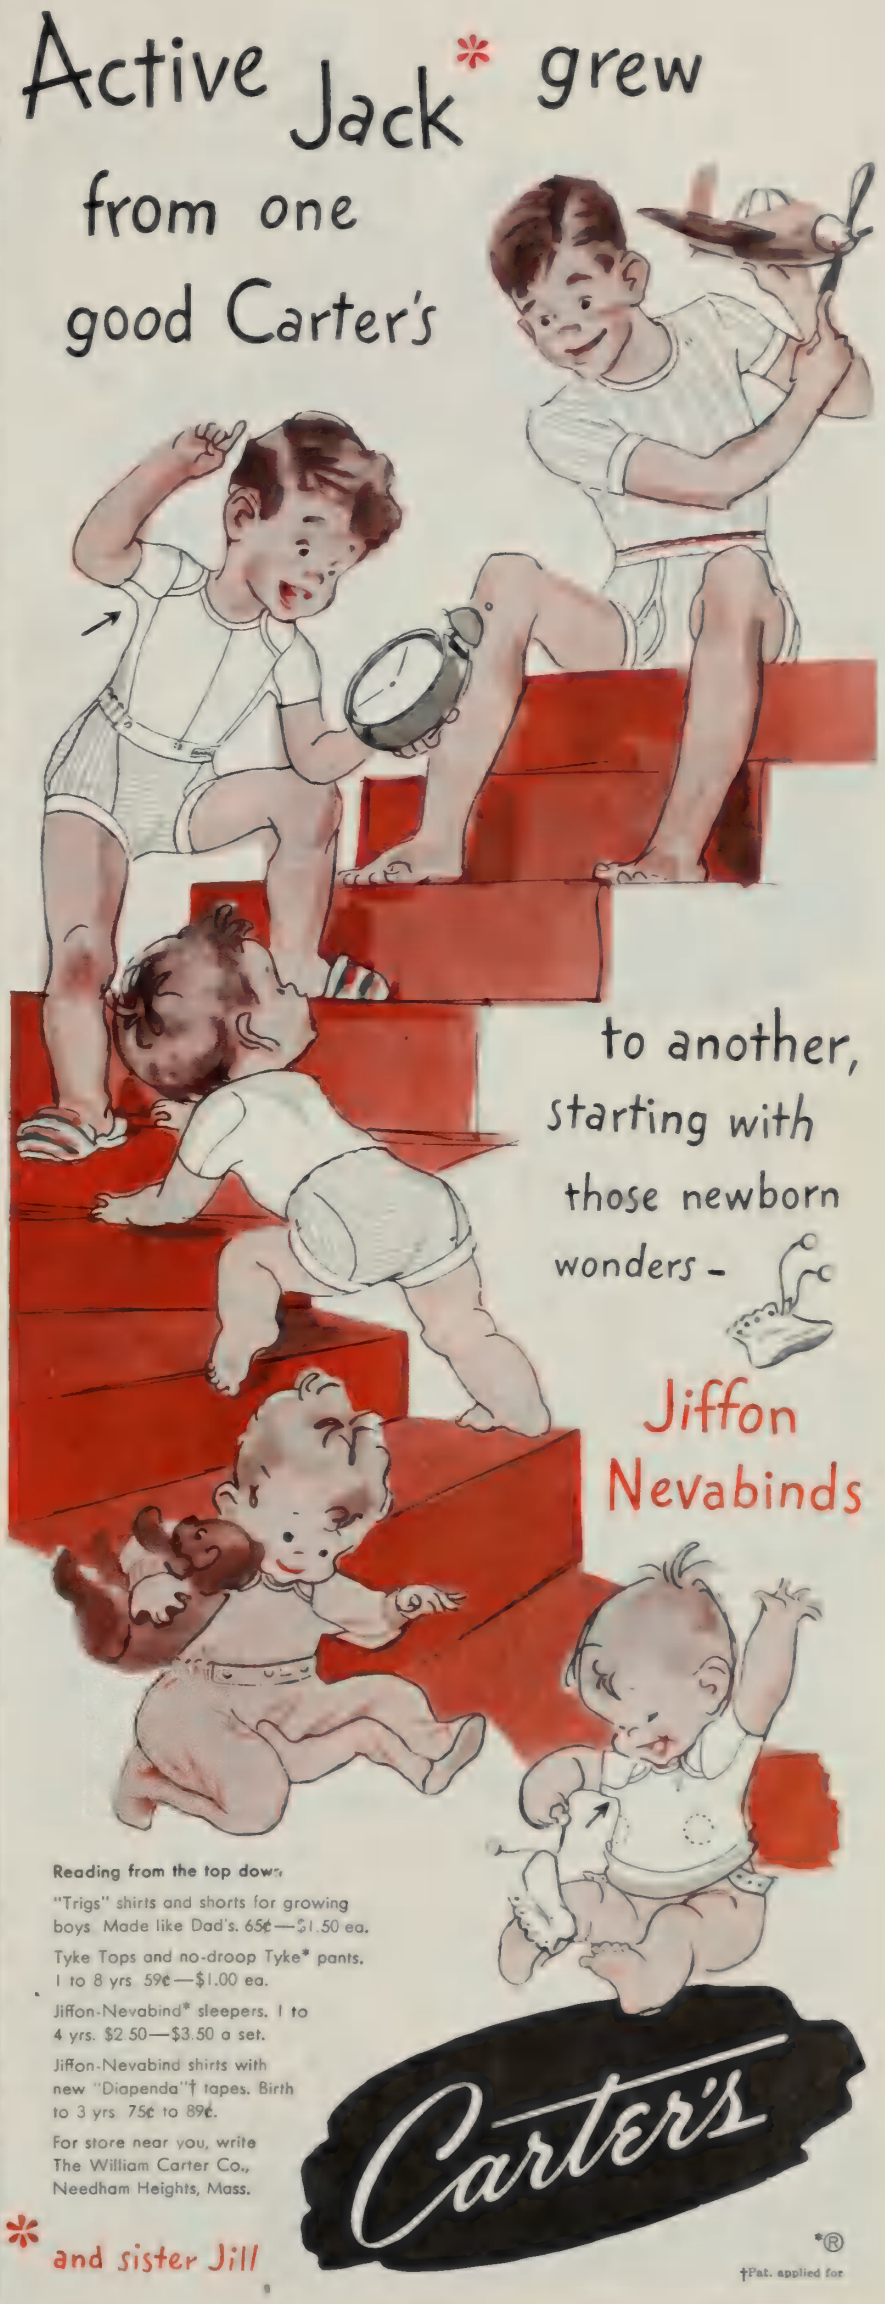
: Why did the League of Nations fail?

: Students of the defunct League ade many explanations, in all of which, no pt, there is an element of truth. Among e are that the League started, originally the United Nations), as a League of rs, banded together to enforce peace ies, which, being dictated by conquerors not negotiated, were regarded by the uished as having no foundations in ce; that although it brought to a temry halt much political anarchy, it did ing to halt economic rivalries, which ened clashes of interest; that the First ld War contributed psychologically to cult of violence; and that the absence he United States rendered the League otent.

However, almost all students are agreed that the unwillingness of member states to stand together, in a showdown, in unitedly enforcing sanctions against an aggressor was the basic reason for the League's demise.

The dissolution of the League followed a whole series of unpunished aggressions: the Japanese invasion of Manchuria; the politically inspired murder of Chancellor Dollfus in Austria, and the consequent conquest of that country; the conquest of Abyssinia; the remilitarization of the Rhine; the participation of League members on both sides of the civil war in Spain; the German invasion of Czechoslovakia; the Russian invasion of Finland, and so on. In each case, confronted by the need of coercion, League members backed down.

In the League of Nations, as in the United Nations, there was no international force responsible directly to the international body, but member states had to commit their own forces. Nor was there any legal compulsion upon them to do so. And, until directly menaced themselves, none cared to accept the responsibility.



Regarding the British and American attitudes toward the original invasion of Manchuria, where the United States was apparently, though not a member, prepared to back, with force, a League of Nations action, the British and American Foreign Minister and Secretary of State gave conflicting reports. The British were justifiably dubious whether an action proposed by the State Department would, in a showdown, be ratified by the American Congress. But Sir John Simon also said, "The object of my policy is to keep my country out of trouble." And later, when Abyssinia was attacked, he refused "to risk one ship for the sake of Abyssinia."

None of the League members—except the weakest and smallest—was willing to entrust its defense to the League. Each had, or made, its own separate agreements and alliances. France, obsessed by fear of Germany, rested her security in an alliance with Germany's surrounding eastern states—Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania—while these for reasons of "hereditary enmity" excluded the strategic link of Austria.

The existence of this eastern anti-German "cordon" was the chief impediment to a fundamental reconciliation between Germany and France, which was the enlightened goal of the German and French foreign ministers, Gustav Stresemann and Aristide Briand. When, however, a German aggression occurred upon one of the members of this French alliance, Czechoslovakia, neither France nor the League moved, nor did they when Germany took the directly menacing move of remilitarizing the Rhineland. Finally, French and British treaties with Poland involved them in war.

League members made unilateral moves without consulting each other. Britain, for instance, signed a naval treaty with Hitler Germany permitting limited naval rearmament, without consulting France.

And, in the final crisis, the Soviet Union made an agreement with Hitler Germany

Quality is its own Toastimonial

We could tell you about "Toastmaster" Toasters that are still serving faithfully after twenty years. We could show you letters, repeat all sorts of nice things that satisfied users have said.

But you'll never really know "Toastmaster" quality until you experience it yourself.

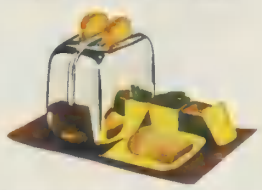
There's no substitute for your seeing and savoring the twin toast-pairs, color-matched as if by magic, that pop up time after time after time.



Nothing equals your own realization, years hence, that here is extra-thick chromium, staying mirror-bright long after its beauty could have gracefully waned.

There's no match for the gilt-edged impression you make with a gift of the "Toastmaster" Toaster. Folks look at it a little longer, finger it more fondly, guard it a bit more carefully.

So see your dealer now. Ask him to show you the "Toastmaster"* Toaster. Compare it. Then you'll begin to see that, in toasters, quality is its own toastimonial.

TOASTMASTER "Hospitality"* Set, for parties that almost give themselves! Invites self-service, frees the hostess for fun. Walnut-veneer tray. Four party plates, three relish dishes of handmade crystal make the simplest snacks exciting. With the "Toastmaster" Toaster, $32.50

TOASTMASTER "Toast 'n Jam"* Set, the perfect snack service for after school or after the show. Handsome walnut veneer tray, gay colored jars and toast plate of fine Franciscan Ware, and the famous "Toastmaster" Toaster. A wonderful gift! $27.95

TOASTMASTER
Automatic Pop-Up Toaster

*"Toastmaster," "Hospitality," and "Toast 'n Jam" are registered trademarks of McGraw Electric Company, makers of Toastmaster Toasters, Toastmaster Electric Waffle Irons and other Toastmaster Products. Copr. 1950
Toastmaster Products Division, McGraw Electric Company, Elgin, Ill

which completely shattered the remains of any common front.

Each successful aggression made the aggressor more powerful to commit another. Thus, from being the only disarmed European country in 1918, Germany was, by 1939, the most militarily powerful country in Europe, having acquired this power in a step-by-step process at the initial points of which she could have been halted, probably by the mere threat of combined League force, certainly by the use of it. Eventually, of the League members in Europe, France and Britain, and in 1940 Britain only, stood alone against anti-League forces infinitely more powerful than they, and the balance was swung only by a member outside the League: the United States.

Finally, the peace-loving League members failed to see that commitment to a rule of law involves not only the will, but also the means to contribute to its maintenance. Between the two wars the concept of peace as an order protecting the law-abiding and the weak against the lawless, and involving strong responsibilities, gave way to a vague hope of peace based on universal reconciliation even with lawbreakers, accompanied by the disarmament of the law-abiding. Under pressure of economy, of public demands for ever-increasing social services, of pacifist groups that perennially fail to see that unilateral disarmament has never brought peace but is a standing temptation to war, the democracies allowed their defense forces to lapse, or, as with France, sought refuge, exclusively for themselves, in an outmoded system of trench fortresses called the Maginot Line, to the point where, even if willing, they were unable to fulfill their League obligations. And when war came, overwhelming force was not on the side of the League, but on the side of the aggressors.

Q.: Why do you give so much space to pre-League and League of Nations history instead of to the United Nations?

A.: History is valuable to the extent that we can learn from it, and we are likely to be more cognizant of the errors of the past—and of others—than of the present, and of ourselves.

THE United Nations has been, from the first, afflicted with the same diseases which ultimately consumed the League of Nations, but in an even more virulent form

Even more than the victors of World War I, who founded the first League, the victors of World War II were divided, from the outset, on basic issues of principle, in government, justice and law. The closing months of the war saw a series of concessions of principle by the democracies, in the hope of attaining permanent reconciliation with the Soviet Union, even at the sacrifice of other small wartime allies. The recognition de facto of the conquests which the Soviet Union had made in alliance with Hitler Germany, in Finland, the Baltic States, Rumania and Poland, was based upon no principles of reason, equity, justice or the rights of nations. The setting aside of the Polish government in London, involving the dissolution of the army of General Anders which had fought heroically against the common enemy, could not be justified by any principle whatever. The division of Poland in the east, without the consent of any Polish government and in violation of prewar treaties between the Soviet Union and Poland, led to the division of Germany, again without regard to any principles of nationality or equity. At Yalta, the concession to Stalin in Manchuria of all the conquests and concessions that nineteenth-century Russian governments had won from a weak China, and which had been denounced by Lenin himself as indefensible Czarist and Russian-bourgeoise grabs, was also indefensible in principle.

It is an error, I believe, to attribute these concessions primarily or fundamentally to pro-Russian or procommunist influences on western negotiators, though these were certainly present and played a role. But President Roosevelt was, I think, so concerned to create the United Nations together with Russia that he—very largely unwittingly—sacrificed to that end the very substance of a

● Don't miss this excitin fer! This useful spreader long, with a brilliant stainless steel that will never tarnish, rust or dis Handle is polished imported rose with brass rivets. Start your set Send the foil wrappers from 2 He Bouillon Cubes, with 25¢ and your and address, to The Pure Food Co.
Box 1055, N. Y. 46, N. Y.

Offer expires December 31, 1950

Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUB

MAKE $50. plus FREE
COUPO

FREE!
42 Sample Imprints. Xmas Cards Stationery Napkins—Notes Gift and Sample Catalogs

Sell only 50 boxes imprinted Cards. Sensational profit-s plan gives you choice of o gifts, and guarantees han cash profits an complete line today! Send no money! Deluxe on approval.

CREATIVE ART PUBLISHER
45 Warburton Ave., Dept. R-3, Yonk

FREE recipe booklet. Write Westgate-Sun Ha
1995 Bay Front, Dept. J7 San Diego 13, Cali

ssful United Nations, which must be equity and justice, as equally for the and even for the defeated as for the strong he victorious.

e United Nations opened at San Fran- . in fact, under ominous circumstances. luncheon-meeting of the three foreign sters, Mr. Eden, Mr. Stettinius and Mr. tov, the Russian foreign minister lly announced that the Polish under- nd noncommunist parliamentary lead- who, according to the Yalta agreement n response to the suggestion of President evelt, had presented themselves to the ian forces, to co-operate in forming a Polish government, had all been arrested transported for trial to Russia!

it again the shadow of great-power unimity" seemed preferable to the sub- e of equity and law. While the delegates framing a charter affirming the uni- l protection of human rights, no one ed more than the finger of feeble protest fense of loyal and innocent men who still n Soviet prisons—if, indeed, they live at gain, the aggressions which the United ons was called into existence to prevent not even clearly defined in the charter. maintenance of "fifth columns" and the nting of civil wars within other coun- are obviously incompatible with any gue or Union of countries aiming at e with one another, and clearly violate y law of nations. Yet before hostilities ceased the Soviet Union gave open notice the Comintern, dissolved by Stalin in ement with Roosevelt, was being revived s prewar form, under another name.

TIONS committed to living at peace with another do not draw down "iron cur- s" over all their plans and doings, or t spies in the government services of one her, but these the Russians did, and n the substance of deeds was obscured by shadow of a United Nations actually in se at its outset.

nd while a struggle was honestly—even ically—being made by some of the ted Nations to evolve a law protective of equal rights of states and persons to life, ty, equity and happiness, the responsi- y for enforcement was, again, evaded. counselors of states, civilian and mili- , were unwilling that their nations should mit their own armed forces to the up- ing of law. The so-called "veto right"— ined only to the great powers—was, in nce, a desire to avoid such commit- its, as, in the case of the United States, mpatible with the right of Congress alone declare war. But no international force provided.

gain, as in the League of Nations, pro- als looking toward universal disarmament e torpedoed by the desire of each mem- state to abolish the chief weapons of others, but not its own, and to avoid external control of its interior affairs, including armaments.

Again, alliances and blocs formed within the new League, first the so-called "Eastern bloc," eventually countered by the Atlantic Alliance.

And, again, the same public pressures which influenced the statesmen representing democracies in the League led to these assuming ill-defined commitments while dissipating the means for their execution.

THE United States, in particular, while assuming commitments to uphold United Nations law, all but totally demobilized its Army, Navy and Air Force, depending upon its great industrial potential and the atom bomb to deter aggressors. But a force potential is not a force in fact; stopping aggression is not the same as reversing it; and no one knows how you can reverse aggressions with atom bombs without destroying the aggressor and the aggressed-upon alike.

Thus outlaw states have again succeeded, even while remaining juridically within the United Nations, in building a preponderance of force against, not in behalf of, law. Again, therefore, the awful choice of liberty and civilization, or war, confronts all nations. But this time the choice is narrowed. For liberty and civilization would appear to be the probable fruit of neither victory nor defeat.

Q.: Does this mean that all framers of league-of-nations projects were Utopian dreamers?

A.: No, unless the very concept of nations united in liberty under law is a hopeless dream. If it is, civilization itself is a hopeless dream, and man himself, whom the Creator endowed with the powers of reason, one of His least fortunate experiments.

And this writer believes that whatever waves of barbarism and darkness may eclipse the earth, somewhere, somehow, in some minds and breasts, the dream will live on, awaiting another birth, when another Age of Reason will produce its own St.-Pierres, Benthams and Kants, for states that will have learned from the disasters of their predecessors this great human and political lesson, expressed in the words of Gilbert Murray:

"There are but two main tests of a social order (national or international). These are, first, how far it protects the weak, reduces human suffering, and promotes good will; and, secondly, what heights it reaches or is capable of reaching, in the things of the intellect and spirit."

There is no protection of the weak, without the good will of the strong. No good will between nations and no reduction of human suffering are possible under the menace or in the reality of war. And every cult of violence is the extinguisher of mind and spirit.

THE END

"Look what the 'leaders of tomorrow' are doing today. . . ."

LITTLE LULU

You can take up makeup better with Kleenex*!

Little Lulu says: IT'S A MELANCHOLY DAME WHO DOESN'T KNOW KLEENEX KEEPS DELICATE COMPLEXIONS HAPPY! SOFT, STRONG KLEENEX TISSUES SAVE YOUR FACE AS THEY WHIZ OFF "TIRED" MAKEUP. SO ABSORBENT! EXTRA GENTLE—THANKS TO A SPECIAL PROCESS.

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO. ★T M REG U S PAT OFF.

Relieve Pain Instantly
Combat Infection from minor Cuts
WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions, Pimples*

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! Apply soothing CAMPHO-PHENIQUE. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use CAMPHO-PHENIQUE also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites, pimples.* Many doctors, dentists, nurses prefer this colorless liquid antiseptic. Doesn't stain the skin. Children like it, too. It's soothing, doesn't smart like ordinary antiseptics. Recommended over 50 years. Get it today!

*Due to external causes.

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE
(PRONOUNCED CAM-FO-FIN-EEK)
THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

The table here is a round slate core on a concrete block, and the chair is Chinese rattan; the tea set, Spode paste.

Personality Plants

By RICHARD PRATT

A LITTLE garden like this in a protected corner can be as intimate as a boudoir, and can be furnished with plants that have the personal quality of prized possessions. Colorful caladiums, bright begonias, a feathery palm or two perhaps. And no other kind of garden can be easier to keep. But the place should be chosen with care—out of the wind, and out of the way; a mild amount of shade, dappled rather than dense, such as you would get through a trellis (above) or an overhanging branch of a lightly leafed tree, like a dogwood or mountain ash or laburnum—flowering trees with an intimate quality themselves. The garden should be dry underfoot—gravel, flagstone, brick—with room enough for a small table and chairs, to make it a pleasant place for reading, knitting, tea, talk. The plants you can get from a grower, in pots, or you can grow your own begonias and caladiums from bulbs, in the ground if you wish, but preferably in pots, to be stored away over winter and started afresh in the spring. You can get the feeling about both caladiums and begonias that you would get from any personal collection of beautiful objects. From a mixture of caladium bulbs you will find yourself with a collection of fancy-colored leaves, from a pale green, almost white, to dark-veined greens and reds; delicate tints like the green-veined pink ones in the corner above, and others with richly mottled effects. While with begonias, of course, the varieties and types are endless—the most spectacular bloomers being the tuberous kinds, like the pink and the yellow in the picture.

Excitingly new . . . utterly different . . . graceful, fresh and gay as a garden of wind-tossed blossoms! A solid silver pattern of lasting loveliness . . . a promise of joy for the years ahead.

Dancing Flowers

A Gay NEW Pattern in STERLING by

REED & BARTON

Write for free Dancing Flowers folder. Or send 10¢ for helpful hostess booklet. Box 990 L, Taunton, Mass.

Nan was ready to weep on husband Bob's shoulder. "Just look at my floors!" she wailed. "Ugly worn spots are beginning to show—and they were so lovely!"

"Looks bad, all right," Bob said. "And no wonder! Look at the punishment floors take, day after day, from scuffing feet! Floors get more wear than any other part of the house."

"But here's a tip, honey!" Bob went on. "I've heard that real wax is the best bet to protect floors—because the hard wax surface takes the wear, not the floors. Let's try it!"

Nan's happy now—knows ther nothing like a gleaming coat of genu Johnson's Wax to beautify and prot her floors. Now they look like new—a will stay that way!

One timely tip made Nan's floors bright...her heart light!

Nothing else gives floors such lasting beauty and protection as genuine wax!

Floors stay like new when protected with a gleaming carpet of genuine wax—Johnson's Paste or Liquid Wax. Because it's the wax that takes the wear!

Scuffing feet can't mar the hard, genuine wax finish. Dirt and water don't penetrate the tough, protective wax film. A dry mop whisks dust away. Wood floors never need costly refinishing. And linoleum lasts 6 to 10 times longer!

If you really care about your home, you just can't afford to use anything but genuine Johnson's Paste or Liquid Wax. It takes a little more time to use than self polishing waxes. But you need apply it far less often. And the results speak for themselves.

Genuine Johnson's Wax comes in two forms—Paste and Liquid. So many people like Paste, because it's highly concentrated. Liquid is especially easy to use, and dry cleans your floors besides. Both protect and beautify your floors with a hard, lustrous film of genuine wax. It's a good idea to keep both on hand. You'll be delighted at what genuine Johnson's Wax will do for your floors!

For lasting beauty and protection insist on genuine

Johnson's WAX

(Paste or Liquid)

It's 10 times faster with a Johnson's Wax Electric Polisher! You can rent one almost everywhere—available in 50,000 stores. Or you can buy one for $44.50.

For advice on any floor care problem, write to Consumer Education Dept., S. C. Johnson & Son, Inc., Racine, Wis.

"Johnson's" is a registered trademark. ©S. C. JOHNSON & SON, INC., Racine, Wis., 1950

Sister Annestasia

By VIVIAN COSBY

THEN I first saw Sister Annestasia standing in the corridor outside my hospital room, I thought she was the severest-looking woman I had ever seen. I judged her to be in her early fifties. She was tall and slender. The white overall apron she wore to cover her dark blue Sister of Charity habit, and the white coronet with stiff wings on her head, gave her a regal appearance. Indeed, she was a queen over all she surveyed, for the entire hospital was under her supervision from 7 o'clock in the evening until five the following morning.

Every night she followed a routine of looking in on each patient to extend a curt good evening, then she was quickly on her way. During the first eight months of my stay these momentary glimpses were all I had of Sister Annestasia. Then to my surprise, one evening she stood a bit uncertainly at my door, looking at some flowers in a vase standing on my bedside table. Without uttering a word she walked to the vase, took out the flowers and methodically rearranged them. This action was so contrary to her brittle personality that I began to wonder what she was really like as a woman.

A hospital is a world of its own where the only concern is the business of life and death; and like all communities, it has its share of intrigues and gossip. I had been in the hospital so long that the staff regarded me as a member of the institution instead of a patient. My room became a sort of haven for the interns and nurses, a place where they could come to rest a bit and listen to a record or two on my portable phonograph.

During their visits I asked about Sister Annestasia as much as I could without seeming to pry. Feelings among the hospital staff were mixed. Some feared her and dreaded being under her supervision, for she was a strict disciplinarian. Others respected her and gave her great credit, for besides having a thorough knowledge of the physical body, she had a wonderful understanding of the human mind. One intern told me that she was liked more by men patients than by women. "She wastes no words of sympathy when a patient is suffering," he said, "but asks some pointed questions, then sharply issues an order to administer something to relieve the pain."

Early one morning, while I was having breakfast, a nurse stopped in to chat a few moments before going home. It had been a hard night, for her patient had passed away—a young mother who had given birth to her first child.

Her husband just sat by the bed staring at her," the distressed nurse said. "It was as though he was trying to will her to live. I felt sorry for him, but I didn't know what to say to him. Then I was amazed to see Sister Annestasia come in with a cup of hot coffee for him. Her thoughtfulness gave him more comfort than any words I could think to say."

In time, Sister Annestasia and I became good friends, and from observation I discovered that little thoughtful acts were her key-note of living. Invariably she would neatly fold my discarded evening newspaper to give to a patient having a sleepless night, and when I offered her candy she never refused. These sweets, however, I knew Sister never ate but instead took them to some sick child to help soothe the pain.

Whenever her duties were not pressing she would sit in my room and visit with me. On these occasions she would talk about herself, and so I learned that her father was a florist and she had developed a phobia about seeing flowers poorly arranged. In her middle twenties she had joined the order of the Sisters of Charity.

"This order of sisterhood interested me more than any of the others," she said, "because they devoted their time to caring for the sick and helping humanity."

"Don't you ever get tired of people?" I asked.

"When I'm feeling very weary I sometimes wonder if humanity is worth helping," she replied. "But after I've had a good sleep things look different. All people have some good in them. Sometimes you have to dig deep to find it, but no matter how bad the outer crust looks, there is a spark of good buried inside."

DURING the daytime I did a lot of thinking about Sister Annestasia. Getting to know her as a person was like putting together a jigsaw puzzle, for it was a gradual process built up by gaining knowledge through many small things. Even though we lived under the same roof, I had no idea what her living quarters were like, as none of the staff were allowed in that section of the hospital. But I imagined that they consisted of only the bare necessities, with absolutely no luxuries. I wondered how this really affected a woman who had been used to the niceties of life, and I knew that Sister Annestasia had. Not that she ever mentioned it, but the fact that she always smelled my perfumes and noticed whenever I had a new bottle made me realize that though she wore the habit of a Sister, underneath she was still a woman.

Often during our visits Sister would just relax and look at movie magazines. She had a keen interest in movie stars who were patients in the hospital. In fact, her eyes would sparkle when she talked about them, as their goings on were always a source of amusement to her.

This I could well understand, for Edgar Bergen brought his own dishes to the hospital and had his meals cooked by a Chinese cook. Dolores Del Rio insisted that her room always be filled with gardenias. Hedy Lamarr, on a diet, threw a tantrum over having to eat cottage cheese, and Bing Crosby crooned a song as he was being wheeled to the operating room. All this Sister Annestasia would tell me with great delight. But what she did not tell me was that she handled these celebrities with the same firm hand she used on the other patients.

One evening the night switchboard operator telephoned my room to inform Sister Annestasia that she was wanted in the lobby. The night operator's name was Ruthie, and whenever I could not sleep and her board was not busy we would talk. So it was from Ruthie that I learned what happened in the lobby that night.

Rosalind Russell had come in so tired she could hardly walk. She had been under a terrible strain of work and was suffering from insomnia, so she decided to come to the hospital where she could have some peace. The attendant at the desk informed her she could not be admitted without an order from a doctor. Miss Russell thought this a silly rule and said so.

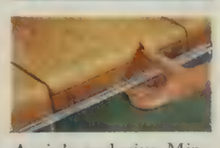
When Sister Annestasia arrived on the scene she explained to the actress why it was necessary for a patient to be admitted by a doctor. Rosalind listened quietly. Taking a small black book from her handbag, she passed it to Sister Annestasia.

"There's a half a dozen doctors listed in there; take your pick," she said.

New master-styled

Arvin dinettes

beautify and blend with any setting!



New PRIMAVERA pattern in exclusive plastic coated Super-Arvinite—colors, gray or toast.

Distinctive new "style slant" table corners, new Trylon table legs, stainless steel trim.

Arvin's exclusive Miracle Leaf stores automatically beneath table top—slips into place at a finger-touch.

Plastic coated Super-Arvinite tops won't crack, warp, peel, ripple, fade or stain!

ARVIN'S inspired styling now brings metal dinette sets "out of the kitchen" and into complete harmony with the most fashionable home furnishings—at prices so low you'll look twice to make sure!

Plastic coated Super-Arvinite—Arvin's own engineering triumph—gives wonderful worry-free wear. Whatever you spill, the effect is nil!

Set 3363/6, above, has a large table 33 x 63" extended; 33 x 51" closed. Newly styled upholstered chairs have higher, roomier, form-fitting backs. All Arvin dinettes provide ageless beauty and durability. Prices are from $39.95 to $150.00. (Slightly higher in West and South.)

Withstands heat up to 450°—Can't be harmed by any fruit acids, foods, beverages, alcohol, hot grease, hot dishes.

Send for free illustrated folder LJ-10

ARVIN INDUSTRIES, Inc., COLUMBUS, INDIANA

(Formerly Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc.)

New, exclusive PALM-WEAVE pattern in plastic coated Super-Arvinite, choice of honey, green, gray. Featured in Set 3354/4, with same style table top as above (slightly smaller), tapered tubular V-legs, richly upholstered chairs in harmonizing colors.

put a new face on your figure with

PROFILE

flexees ingenious new girdle

LOOK 3 TO 7 YEARS YOUNGER!

PROFILE . . . Flexees remarkable new Girdle . . . creates a younger you, because it narrows the profile view . . . by which people judge your "figure-age." PROFILE sleeks your hips and thighs; flattens the tummy; controls the derriere. Diamond-shaped side panels give greatest control at the widest part of the hips. A joy to wear—wisp-light, boneless PROFILE, of Nylon power net. $10.95. Ask your favorite store now to fit you to Flexees PROFILE.

Sister Annestasia calmly took the book and with a sweet smile said, "Let's pick the best-looking one."

Miss Russell could not help but laugh, and she realized that hospital rules must be enforced for the protection of all people. She called a doctor and was properly admitted, then Sister Annestasia marched her off to bed.

There were many things that Sister Annestasia did which took me a long time to understand. Whenever a patient was the least uncooperative, she always passed by his room without bothering even to peek in the door. She never verbally expressed an adverse opinion of a person, but her actions in regard to him spoke volumes. Neatness was almost a mania with her, and if the night table next to my bed was cluttered when she came into my room, she would just bid me a professional "Good evening" and leave. I soon learned that if I wanted her to visit with me, my room had to be in perfect order.

Her most perplexing eccentricity, though, was that if she found an intern visiting me she would immediately find some work for him to do elsewhere. This was rather odd, as the Sister in charge of my floor during the day did not object to my friendship with the interns, so I did not see why Sister Annestasia should.

The reason for her strange behavior finally crystallized in my mind through a chance remark one of the interns made to me. He said:

"I passed by last night and heard you playing The Beer Barrel Poker, then a few minutes later I saw Sister Annestasia come out of your room. Is that her favorite record?"

I could not help but smile, for I now realized Sister had pulled a clever little trick. She could not relax in front of the interns, so she put them to work in order to get them out of the way for a while.

After that it was tactfully agreed between the interns and me that they would never come to visit during the time Sister Annestasia made her rounds. Therefore I was amazed when a haggard intern rushed into my room one night. He was dressed in a surgical gown, so I knew he had been assisting at an emergency operation. He did not speak—just paced the room. I offered him a cigarette. His hand shook as he lit it.

"I just saw a patient die on the operating table—from the anesthetic," he said bitterly. "What good is skilled surgery if that can happen?"

"What are you going to do about it?" Sister Annestasia asked from the doorway. I wondered how long she had been there.

"I'm going to give up being a doctor and go in the real-estate business with my father," the intern replied.

SISTER ANNESTASIA waited a second before she spoke. "Don't you think it would be more sensible if you studied to be an anesthetist? I'm sure you can manage it along with your other work, and the knowledge will be invaluable when you become a great surgeon. Suppose you sleep on the idea."

Although Sister Annestasia never mentioned the incident again, I felt she was secretly pleased when the intern took her advice. For when he left our hospital he became the head anesthetist in a large Los Angeles hospital. During the war he served as a doctor in the Canadian army, and his knowledge of anesthesia helped save many lives. Today he is on the staff of a large Chicago hospital. I know he is grateful to Sister Annestasia, for if she had not said the right thing, today a good doctor might be buried in the real estate business.

On occasion Sister's keen perception of human beings brought results the top doctors in the medical profession could not achieve. One case in particular became a hospital legend. A wealthy old man, with a terrible temper, was brought to the hospital after having suffered a slight stroke. To anyone who would listen he would loudly proclaim that he was of Irish descent, and he seemed to think this excused his bad disposition. If he did not like anything a nurse did he would start throwing things until she was forced to leave the room for safety's sake. Whenever members of his family came to see him he was rude to them and issued an order that they be barred from his room.

TRYING to give him medicine that was absolutely necessary to help his condition was an ordeal every nurse dreaded, for it meant they were on the receiving end of plenty of abuse. During one of these medicine-taking episodes Sister Annestasia walked into the room. Before the old man could open his mouth to speak, Sister told him off in a torrent of words, then took the bottle of medicine from the nurse, poured some into a spoon and ordered him to open his mouth. To the nurse's amazement he obeyed, then smiled at Sister and said, "My, you're quite a lass."

He and Sister became firm friends. He was always thinking up new stories to tell her, and because he knew she would be pleased, he kept the altar in the little chapel beautifully decorated with flowers.

Things went on this way for about five weeks and the doctor in attendance was very pleased with the old man's improvement. He ordered the nurse to get the patient out of bed to start using his legs. But the stubborn old man refused to budge. It was the first real vacation he had had in years and he intended to go on enjoying it. At this unexpected turn of events the doctor was at a loss as to how to cope with the situation. There was no way of knowing how the patient had responded to his treatment until he knew how well he could use his legs. But no amount of reasoning could make the old man get out of bed.

That evening Sister Annestasia came in to see him as usual and he told her a new story. She laughed, then said she was in a rush because two new patients had just checked in. As she walked toward the door somehow she tripped and would have fallen on her face if the old man had not jumped out of bed and caught her in the nick of time. Sister thanked him, straightened her coronet, then leaving the room, hurried down the corridor to the floor desk. Here she picked up his chart and wrote, "10:15 P.M. Patient walked."

Sister Annestasia was always thinking up various ways to help the poor. One summer day a nurse took me up on the roof in a wheel chair so that I could get some sun. Here I visited with the hostess whom I affectionately called Granny. It was a terribly hot day and I remarked about it. Granny pointed silently to a box standing on a nearby table. A sign read, "Anyone mentioning this miserable weather kindly put five cents in this box for the poor." Boxes like these were all over the hospital, and during that hot spell the take for the poor was excellent.

Along about Christmas the boxes were again very much in evidence, for at this time people were usually in a happy and generous

(Continued on Page 272)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Nothing is Finished

By Joan Aucourt

Clearer than crickets, the leaves
click together,
Slower than dreaming, they fall
and lie still.
The mist and the sky are a single gray weather,
A wall and a ceiling on top of the hill.

Black as snuffed candles and straighter than sorrow
The trees stand and wait in the valley's cool room,
While patiently leading us back to tomorrow
The leaves at our feet light a path through the gloom.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Community

THE FINEST SILVERPLATE

*TRADEMARKS OF ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, N. Y. COPYRIGHT 1950. ONEIDA LTD.

For keeps—fall brides will cherish every gleaming piece of precious Community*, the finest silverplate. They'll love Community's richly beautiful patterns, value the honest wear protection of Community's solid silver "Overlay." And you'll be happy when you find Community—famous Community—in dinner services for eight at your jeweler's as low as $49.75. No federal tax!

PATTERNS TO LIVE WITH . . . PATTERNS TO LOVE

...Low-cost KENTILE is guaranteed as long as you live in your home!

DON'T THINK YOU HAVE TO PAY high prices for colorful, distinctive floors. Let Kentile save you money! Kentile, with its choice of 25 beautiful, up-to-the-minute colors, can be installed in any design you wish... giving you a truly "different" floor your friends will admire... at lower cost than you ever dreamed possible.

And remember, once Kentile goes down, your flooring problems end. Kentile resists dirt... cleans in a twinkling... gleams like new with occasional no-rub waxings. Lifetime colors can't come off—they go right through the tile—which is so long-wearing it's guaranteed as long as you live in your home. See your Kentile dealer for today's best buys in guaranteed floors.

This KENTILE FLOOR in your living room may cost as little as $64.50*
INSTALLED

*Prices quoted are for ■ 9' ■ 11' kitchen and ■ 12' x 15' living room. Your Kentile floor may cost even less or slightly more depending upon the Kentile colors you choose; design, size, type and condition of your floor; and freight rates to your city. Get a FREE estimate from your Kentile dealer. Look under FLOORING in your classified directory for his name and address.

KENTILE®
The Asphalt Tile of Enduring Beauty

David E. Kennedy, Inc., 72 2nd Avenue, Brooklyn 15, N.Y.
KENTILE... KENCORK... RUBBER TILE

(Continued from Page 270)

mood. It seems strange to speak about happiness in a hospital, but Sister Annestasia, along with the other Sisters, always made the Christmas season a joyful event.

Each floor in the hospital had a large tree which was lighted at night. Sister usually brought me several small trees to trim for the rooms of the patients who were bedridden and could not get out to see the large tree. Among these was a young boy who had had polio for several years. Along with this he had a bad heart condition, so the possibility of his ever recovering was very slight. However, his heart was set upon having a pair of braces so he could stand up. It was a subject he talked about a great deal during the day, and I am sure he dreamed about it at night.

The people in charge of him decided that in his condition spending money for the braces was foolish. Yet one Christmas morning the boy awoke to Christmas carols sung by the choir of student nurses walking along the halls, and beside his bed he found the braces with a big red bow tied on them. And I am sure that everyone in the hospital agreed with Sister Annestasia when she said, "Even if they only give him ten minutes of happiness it is worth it."

Starting with my second year as a patient in the hospital, Sister Annestasia always gave me a Christmas remembrance. The first year it was a lovely prayer book, the second a knitting bag containing yarn and needles, and she herself taught me how to knit so I could make sweaters for her poor children. Her third gift, a fancy pair of satin bedroom slippers, puzzled me. It seemed a ridiculous thing to give to a person who could not walk. In spite of myself I could not help mentioning this to Sister. Her reply made me ashamed.

"When you were brought into this hospital after your accident four years ago, you were asked about your religion," she said. "You replied that you did not have any particular creed, but you did have tremendous faith in God. Doesn't that faith make you know that someday you'll be walking in those slippers?"

I looked at her a moment before I could speak. My eyes filled with tears and all I managed to utter was a choked "Thank you."

No matter where you are on this earth, love is something that just seems to come up. In this hospital it was no exception, and I watched the progress of many romances. One that especially interested me was that of a student nurse who was engaged to be married to the current resident doctor. They were to be married as soon as she graduated. As she gave me my morning bath she would tell me all about their plans for the future. She was naturally a pretty girl, but being in love made her almost sparkle.

Then one day I noticed deep circles under her eyes and she became strangely silent. By prodding I finally got her to tell me what was wrong. A wealthy young woman was a patient on another floor and her fiancé was paying a lot of attention to her. Without her telling me I knew what was going on in her mind. Young doctors, as a rule, need money to get started in practice, and she was afraid of losing him.

The girl's unhappiness bothered me so much that at the risk of being reprimanded I spoke to Sister Annestasia about her. She listened, but did not make any comment, and I wished I had kept quiet. A couple of days later the student nurse disappeared from my floor. I was afraid I had got her into trouble. Hoping to straighten it out, I asked Sister what had happened to the student nurse.

"Oh, I made arrangements to have her transferred to the floor that the other young lady is on," she replied. "At least that gives her a fifty-fifty chance."

I did not see the student nurse again the graduation exercises were held i small hospital chapel. The minute I sa come down the aisle looking so pretty white cap and gown I felt that every was all right. When she passed my chair I caught a glimpse of a diamond ri her engagement finger, and I am sure Annestasia, who was sitting in front o saw it too.

MAYBE Sister's gift of the slippers act magic, for four months after I received the doctors decided to try another oper which might possibly give me back th of my legs. To my great joy, the oper was a success, but this happiness was s lived, for when I started to learn to again the pain was almost beyond endur Every day a nurse would stand me o feet, hold me by the hips, and walk me a the room and back. Each time this pened I was glad to get back to bed. routine went on for about two weeks, one day the torture of the effort mad decide that I did not care whether or ever walked again.

All I ever thought about was to get from pain. I looked forward to takin sedative that was administered to me i afternoon and evening, for sleep repres a wonderful opportunity of escape. In f retired so early that for several eveni was not awake when Sister Annestasia her rounds. Then one evening the nur formed me that Siste going to bring me usual sedative.

The waiting for to arrive seemed en and when she finall come she carried a tray upon which was of hot chocolate. though I was happy t her, it was an effo smile. But she smiled passed me the hot c late; then, taking a y capsule from her po she put it on the nigh ble. As I sipped the c late, Sister talked. He remark, however, baffled me, for she wa to know if I had finished knitting the sw for one of her poor children. Surely, I tho she must know that right now it was im sible for me to put my mind on knitting fore I could answer, she went on to te about the graduating student nurses' pi They had played baseball and she had b pitcher. The mental picture of Sister p ing a ball game made me laugh so ha would have dropped the cup if she had rescued it. As she continued talking she my knitting from the bag and worked o sweater. In a short while I began to little pain, and glanced at the capsule o table.

Sister noticed my glance and asked, what does that do for you?"

"It puts me to sleep," I replied, thin her question a bit silly.

"Well, supposing you wait until af leave before you take it," she ordered.

Reluctantly I agreed and silently wat her make the knitting needles fly. I beg feel drowsy and soon it was a struggle to my eyes open.

The next morning when I awoke fr good night's sleep, I saw the sedative ca still lying on the night table, and besi was the sweater with a note pinned which read, "Why don't you try to finis today?"

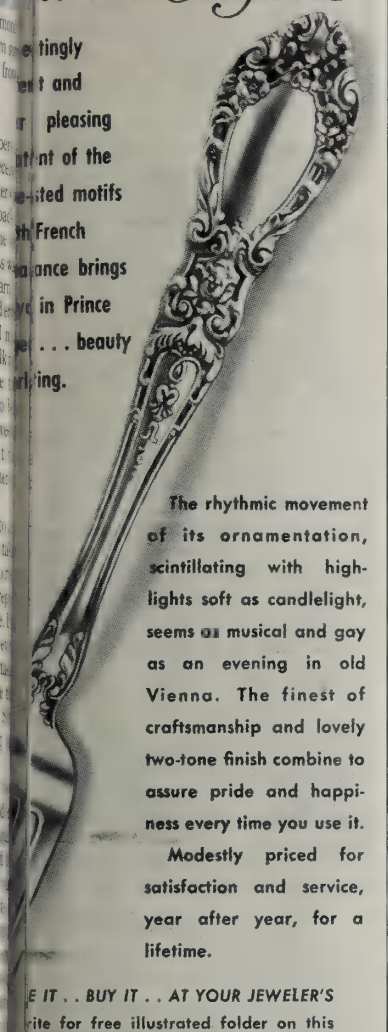
When I finished breakfast I started to and became so interested that it was lu time before I realized it. And after lun fell asleep before the nurse had a chan bring me a sedative.

That evening when Sister Annestasia in I proudly held up the finished swe

"Good girl," she said. "Now, I ha seen you walk yet, so how about gettin of bed for a while?"

I started to say no, but the look o face warned me that it would do me no I let her help me into my bathrobe an

A spy at Little, Brown reports that one of their hoity-toitiest English authoresses had just swept out onto Beacon Street when a bemused pedestrian bumped into her squarely amidships. He apologized profusely, but she froze him with a look, and muttered, "How gauche!"



"Simply fine, lady," answered the pedestrian. "How gauche it with you?"

—BENNETT CERF.

EV ALVIN* STERLING

*Prince Eugene

tingly
t and pleasing nt of the sted motifs
French
ance brings in Prince
. . . beauty
ring.

The rhythmic movement of its ornamentation, scintillating with highlights soft as candlelight, seems as musical and gay as an evening in old Vienna. The finest of craftsmanship and lovely two-tone finish combine to assure pride and happiness every time you use it.

Modestly priced for satisfaction and service, year after year, for a lifetime.

E IT . . BUY IT . . AT YOUR JEWELER'S rite for free illustrated folder on this d other ALVIN patterns . . . Chateau se*, Southern Charm*, Chapel Bells*, dal Bouquet*, Della Robbia*, Chased d Plain Romantique*.

IE ALVIN SILVERSMITHS

akers of Exclusive Silver Designs for over Sixty Years

ROVIDENCE 7, RHODE ISLAND

RA MARKS

HOOKED RUGS

Rug Making Booklet with fun-to-follow picture ins and our distinctive designs. FREE samples of our finer . Direct mill-to-you savings. Send 10 cents for handling.
REMNANT CO., Box 181K, Canal St. Sta., N.Y. 13

CERAMICS

tiful Ceramic figurines and serviceable items for personal or home decoration, for gifts or for resale right in your ven! New type of clay—Ceracast—makes this possible.
rful glazes oven-dry to hard, glossy scratchproof finish!
ve regular Ceramic Slip and Castex, the new Sensational akes Unbreakable Castings! Send 25¢ today for our big strating over 300 useful Molds, Ceramic and Plastic d decorative materials, etc. Valuable book on Casting tive Novelty sent Free with our catalog! Send for your PLASTICAST CO. (Dept. 6) P.O. Box 987
ted St., Ill. (Write to nearest address) Palo Alto, Calif.

EW DENNISON BOOK FILLED WITH

ift Wrapping Ideas

re is the finest book on gift wrapping er offered. 24 pages of ideas and instruc-ns on wrappings for holidays, birthys, showers, weddings, anniversaries, ecial occasions. Shows how easy it is wrap beautiful packages. 25¢ at stanery counters or use coupon below.

nnison Dept. K-1, Framingham, Mass.
5¢ enclosed
end "How to Gift Wrap—The Dennison Way".

Christmas slippers and then I stood up. She took her place in back of me and I started walking slowly across the room. When I reached the opposite side she said, "That was wonderful." Something about her voice made me turn around. To my amazement, she was not in back of me, but on the other side of the room. For the first time in four years I had walked alone!

I stood looking at her, undecided.

"Walk to me," she quietly commanded. "You can do it."

Unsteadily I walked to where she was standing, then she helped me back to bed and remarked, "Lack of confidence is the most destructive thing in the world."

After this I was happy for a while, but without my knowing why, my outlook on life began to change. Maybe it was because I had been incapacitated for so long, or the strain of being a shut-in had finally gotten on my nerves, but I became gloomy and melancholy. If Sister Annestasia was aware of my different attitude, she never indicated it by a look or a word. Every evening she would come in as usual and sit awhile, thumb through the movie magazines, listen to records or knit. Neither of us spoke very much. Most of the time I would lie looking at the ceiling, feeling sorry for myself.

One day during this dark period a head nurse unjustly accused me of breaking a hospital rule. Ordinarily, I would have dismissed this incident immediately, but now I brooded over it. My mind was in a turmoil. I disliked the world and the people in it. It had even ceased to be important to get well and live a normal life again.

When Sister Annestasia came into my room that evening she stood at the foot of the bed looking at me. She said, "Time heals everything." When I did not answer she continued by asking if I would do her a favor. In a room down the hall there was a very sick patient who was terribly frightened and lonely. Sister wanted me to spend the night with her. I agreed.

THE patient was a pretty, sixteen-year-old Italian girl named Rose. This was her first time away from home. I sympathized with her and asked her to tell about herself. Grateful for company, she talked about herself and family. She knew they were frantic with worry about her sudden illness. She had gone to school that morning feeling perfectly well, then, while in her French class, without any warning she was seized with sharp pains. To try to keep her mind off her pain I kept her talking until the wee hours, when we both were so tired we fell into a healthy sleep.

Back in my own room the next morning, the head nurse who had accused me of breaking a hospital rule came to apologize. It had been a case of mistaken identity. I accepted her apology, but somehow the incident did not seem important any more. My mind was on Rose and what the doctor would find wrong with her after looking at the X rays they were taking that morning. With all my heart I prayed that her ailment would not be serious. All that day I asked every nurse who came into my room for news of Rose. But they either did not know or would not tell me. So I anxiously waited for Sister Annestasia's nightly visit.

It was almost midnight before Sister came. She was hardly inside the door before I asked about Rose. Without answering she calmly crossed to a chair and sat down. I looked at her impatiently, waiting for her to speak. Instead, she picked up a new movie magazine and looked at the cover. Then she quietly told me that Rose's ailment could be cured without surgery. I was so relieved that tears came to my eyes.

Sister Annestasia smiled. "You're feeling better," she said.

It was then I realized that she had shown me by an action rather than by words that if I took my mind off my own troubles and helped someone else, when I again looked at my troubles I would find they had disappeared. This lesson and the many others she taught me were to serve me well when three months later I left the hospital, at her urging and with her blessing, to start my life in the outside world again. THE END

"I know what I like ...and I've got 'em!"

"I'm a one-brand woman about sheets...I've always used Pequots! Alas, during the war I had to fill out with another brand. But...my old pre-war Pequots are still whiter, smoother, firmer. Was I glad when I could and did get my beloved Pequots again!"

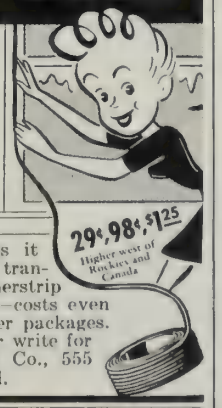
Mrs. B. Christman, Springfield, Ohio

Try amazing plus-service Pequots. You, too, will truly love their fresh and lasting beauty and the lovely way they mellow through years of extra wear. Pequot Mills, Salem, Mass.

PEQUOT SHEETS PILLOW CASES

Pronounced 'PEE-KWAT'

PEQUOT plus-service SHEETS



WOMEN WANTED

Women wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill and other popular publications. Big commissions. For details write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
354 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

Mortite KEEPS THE COLD OUT

SAVES FUEL AND MONEY

Cordlike and pliable, Mortite is the perfect weatherstripping. Goes on in a jiffy without tools or tacks. Keeps out wind, dust, dirt. Anyone can press it around windows, doors, transoms, baseboards. Weatherstrip a whole window for 29¢—costs even less if you use the larger packages. Get Mortite at stores or write for circular. J. W. Mortell Co., 555 Burch St., Kankakee, Ill.

29¢, 98¢, $1.25
Higher west of Rockies and Canada

RITZ CLOTHS

won't Stretch or Sour

ITEM SHOWN Ritzie 3 for 69¢

RITZ

Since 1892

There's a Ritz Cloth for every household cleaning purpose at your local department or hardware store.

JOHN RITZENTHALER, 73 Franklin St., N. Y. 13

New!

exclusive opener makes it easier to clean TOILET BOWLS

● Today you can chase the embarrassing and stubborn "Ghost of the Past" from your bathroom faster than ever because the new exclusive Expellid opener makes VANiSH quicker to use—to clean toilet bowls . . . to freshen and make bathroom air fragrant.

Fragrant VANiSH Kills Toilet ODORS As it Cleans

No more need for coins or tools. No broken fingernails. A flick of the finger and VANiSH can go to work immediately. Snap airtight lid back on can to keep VANiSH from hardening.

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORP.
Dover, New Hampshire

ONLY Sunbeam AUTOMATIC MIXMASTER

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

gives you all these advantages

Sunbeam Mixmaster does a perfect mixing job because the bowl revolves automatically, the beaters are in correct relation to the bowl and the mixture goes into and through the beaters for EVEN mixing every time. Your hands are always FREE to add ingredients in correct proportion.

Only the new Sunbeam Mixmaster gives you all the special advantages you want and deserve when you buy a food mixer. So be sure the mixer you get (or the one you receive as a gift) is the original and the ONLY Mixmaster. There's only one by that name. Mixmaster puts that EXTRA deliciousness, EXTRA success into every recipe. Over six million enthusiastic owners are its best advertisements. It is also the mixer for which you can obtain such marvelous attachments as the combination Food Chopper-Meat Grinder, Hi-Speed Drink Mixer, Butter Churn and others. On sale wherever good electric appliances are sold. See your dealer.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50
Canada: 321 Weston Road, Toronto 9

Famous for Sunbeam TOASTER, IRONMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, SHAVEMASTER, etc.

My Wife and the Monetary System

By ROBERT S. LEE

BEFORE I start spilling all this, I want you to know that I didn't marry my wife for her brains. She's a good kid and I like her a lot, and I don't want to give anyone the false impression that her astounding lack of brilliance is in any way a disappointment to me. Rather, it is a source of constant amazement.

A dollar is such a tangible, calculable thing to me. I mean it's not nebulous—like a philosophy, for instance, which lends itself to free interpretation. A dollar is made up of one hundred pennies, or twenty nickels, or ten dimes, or four quarters, or two fifty-cent pieces, or a combination of any of these monetary units which, with a little elementary-school training, can be added together to make up the correct amount: one dollar.

But my wife doesn't see it that way. Being a totally feminine female, her fund of information on life in general is based on Feeling. She relies continually on something she calls her Insight. I appreciate that Insight, and God forbid that she ever lose it. Because it must surely be this special facet of her incomprehensible make-up which enables her to keep me from stepping beyond the last inch of sanity—on which I now stand.

But I can't help wishing that she could supplement her Feeling with just a smidgen of Fact; that instead of living in the twilit realms of the poetically abstract, she could tie her colorful mind to the dull hitching post of Reason. I don't ask that she repress her true personality in all instances. Only one—that being in her strange relationship with the monetary system.

Before we were married I sat her down for a discussion of my finances. I used reasonably simple terminology, employing such common words as "income," "budget" and "standard of living." She listened intently for a while. Then, quite suddenly, she broke in with:

"None of this matters at all, darling. If ever you can't swing it, I can always support us on my poetry money."

"I didn't know you made that much writing poems," I said.

"Oh, I just sold two," she told me.

"I know," I said, "but how much do you make per year?"

"Well," she answered thoughtfully, "I've never figured it all out on paper, but T. S. Eliot isn't starving. Maybe I could make . . . say, thirty thousand?"

SEE what I mean? I should have taken that small clue as an indication of things to come, but its real import was too fantastic to assimilate in a time of romance. Blindly I made my bed, and now I lie in it—until the little men in white coats remove me.

Let me tell you about her bank account. Now, I'm well aware that female bank-account stories are an overdrawn dime a dozen. Claudia couldn't balance hers, and no man in his right mind should expect that much of the woman he loves. I would count myself thrice blessed if it were merely a matter of balance. But listen to this.

One day last year I'm sitting happily in my office and I get a phone call. The harassed voice on the other end belongs to the comptroller of one of the big department stores in our city. "Mr. Lee," he says, "in going over our accounts this month we've discovered that Mrs. Lee has a credit amounting to four hundred dollars. Since we have no record of original charges for chases, and no record of the return of purchases, we can't figure out how accumulated four hundred dollars' wort credit."

I felt a little like a white rat on his day in the food maze, but I assured him I would have the matter straightened ou no time.

That evening my wife greeted me wi stricken face and two rubber checks: on $5.95, the other for $2.50.

"How could they possibly bounce?" wailed. "I've got about four hundred do in that account!"

"What account?" I asked her.

"The Gimbel's Bank," she answe "You know that."

INSIDE of about fifteen minutes of hyst I got the story. Gimbel's, the departm store, runs a separate establishment: nam Gimbel's, the bank. Both businesses place in the same building, with diffe street-number addresses. My wife, not kn ing the exact address (and probably ass ing that the telephone book lists only phone numbers), felt it would be "safer send her deposits to just plain "Gimbe There they were received and automatic credited to her store account. My naturally thought that a smart man Mr. Gimbel would realize what the mo was for. I say "naturally thought" bec that type of thinking is part of her nat

Well, things went smoothly for a months. (I guess she got scared when I all the windows and turned the gas on.) T one morning, I get another phone call. time it's the comptroller of Wanamak He can't understand it, he says, but Mrs. has a credit for $80 and there is a recor only one returned purchase in the amo of $5 made five months ago.

"Oh," I say, "have you got a bank to He thought I was being funny.

That one took me three whole day solve. In March of 1949 my wife return gift a friend had given our son for his b day. Since she had not used her ch account for some while and there was th fore no balance owing, the $5 credit c not be deducted from it. The follo month she received a bill with "$5.00" ty in the credit column. I have always told to pay her bills promptly, so she immedia sent Wanamaker's a check for $5. The month she received a bill with $10.00 in credit column. Still the methodical h housewife, she sent Wanamaker's a check $10. The month after, the bill came in w ing "$20.00." In went the check. Th days later, back it came: forty smacker was after the remittance of a check in last amount that Wanamaker's began worry. . . .

But things are not so black as they w seem. Just recently she made a real effo impress me with her financial prowess. stead of throwing her canceled checks the trash basket, as she usually does, matched them with her stubs. After whole Sunday morning she called me in handed me four sheets of typewritten fig with items and costs sitting neatly in t respective columns. I checked her total the bank statement and literally al passed out. It balanced! Then, just ou id curiosity, I went over her list of s: Eggs-chicken Farmer—$3.85; Milk-—$11.25; Cleaner's—$4.60; and so forth.

ything was clear except for one item
ng E.S.P.—$24.56.
What does E.S.P. mean?" I asked warily.
Error Some Place," she answered.

y one consolation is the fact that I don't to bear my burden alone. I have Mr. bel, Mr. Wanamaker and the president e National Bank of Narberth right in e with me.
hat's more, I always have those wonder-eelings of hers to fall back on. Ask her 6 times 7 is: she'll tell you 43. And ve got to give her credit for having a ng it was somewhere in the forties. By t's a dull, pedantic 42, and I have no ings whatever. Men are inferior that . They just don't have the imagination.
ut life to my wife is just one long line of rful conclusions—unscathed by science logic. At present she is in the midst of a iant campaign to get us both to Paris.
funds for this project she accumulates mptying my pockets of any change or
I may have left at the end of the day.
ing the past three weeks she has scav-
d a total of $50.00.
You see?" she says. "Before you know
'll be sipping absinthe on the Left Bank, the money will have come from nore!"

"Nowhere, alias the National Bank," I tell her. "Every day I find myself penniless and have to pay for my lunches with bank checks!"

"You live to eat," she says. "You have no soul."

The other day I had lunch with a friend of mine (he paid for it) and I tried to explain the situations I have just described to you. I chose him as my confidant because he has had four wives and I believed he would understand and commiserate with me. He didn't.

"Stop complaining," he told me. "Your wife is a genius. Put her on her own and chances are she could run the U. S. Treasury singlehanded. She just pretends to be incompetent because she realizes you're happier that way. She knows that the Emancipation of Women was brought about by women, not by men. She has the insight to understand that men have always felt and will always want to feel that they're the brains of the outfit. My first wife was a Phi Bet, my second was an industrial chemist, my third managed her own frozen-food firm, and my fourth ran for Congress. But not one of them was smart enough to play dumb. You're a very lucky man, Bob."

Can you beat that? I always did think that guy was peculiar. Imagine a darling, adorable, dopey little dame like my wife being able to sit down and figure out a complicated theory like that!

ONCE UPON A BEGINNING

(Continued from Page 35)

d-shoe way can hurt you so and you hurt
, and it's nobody's fault. I was really ng now.
hat was the first night. The night of fourteenth, when I was just fifteen. I mber that that was how it was and I mber it because it was the beginning.
t breakfast next morning neither Patty
I said anything. We sat across the table each other, with our books propped up nst the lazy Susan, reading with public entration.
hen Biddy came in with the scrambled
, she said, "My gracious! Now the two ou put your books down right away and up like decent folks. You'll be having n indigestion trying to use your stomachs your minds all at one time."
atty just said, "Umm-m-m," and turned page because she was reading The Lady ished and I think had got as far as
of the scenes.
ut I wanted com-
and sympathy,
besides, I was just
g dull summer
ing for school, so I d Biddy whether her was having le in over the week
Biddy always vs earlier than we ecause of The Menu
blem. Biddy said
wasn't rightly sure,
it was as likely yes
o. No help in that direction, I thought.
went back to Manfred's silliness in The le of Otranto.
I have a friend coming over," said Patty,
pectedly and in an unfriendly tone.
t made me more sorry about last night
use Patty would have been telling me t who and why and how by now, not ing The Lady Ravished (no matter what ter she was on). I threw in the towel.
I'm sorry about last night, Patty."
iddy backed out through the swinging with the cereal bowls, passing the er of my eye, as Patty said, "Last t?" as if trying to remember . . . last t? . . . last night? . . . "Last night? Oh,
's all right. If you want to closet yourself n a flood of tears, it makes no never d to me. Except that I do think it's pretty of people to ignore someone when they just trying to help."

I didn't want to bare my new soul in explanation, so I said, "It was just one of those inexplicable crying jags women are subject to, I suppose."

"Which one of mother's books are you on now?"

"I like that!" I said. "Just who are you to talk I'd like to know? Who's reading rot about naked, ravished, seduced women, pray tell?"

It was friendly to have our relationship back on its old familiar footing.

I forgot all about the friend Patty had coming over and only remembered it as I was coming back from swimming at Ellen's. My hair was wet and it was a warm, thunderish late afternoon of the kind June loves. Novels always say, if she had only known then, if she had only known; if only I had known that afternoon, oh, if only I had known.

But I didn't.

I went in the front door, absent-mindedly drying my still damp hair and wondering whether the friend was sufficient enough for Pat and mother to work up something special. I hope so, I was thinking—I can remember that distinctly—when I walked straight into someone standing in the front hall. It's dark in there anyway, and after the bright outside it was like a tomb.

"The pleasure is all mine," said the person pleasantly, before I had a chance to apologize or even gasp a ladyish Oh!

"Mother! Please say I'll be down in just a sec!" shrieked Patty from upstairs, as mother came down at that dignified gallop which ladies-over-forty-in-a-hurry have, with Biddy right behind her.

"Mr. Williams . . . I am Mrs. Cooper," said mother, advancing, hand forward. "Why, Sheila, what are you doing here? . . . This is my youngest daughter, Sheila. Sheila, this is Mr. Williams. Now you run along upstairs, dear, and dress. Dinner is at seven-thirty promptly tonight, and we'll be having cocktails out on the terrace if you're ready sooner. Won't you come into the living room, Mr. Williams? Pat will be down in just a moment." All this was said in mother's most characteristic no-pause-for-breath voice.

A disgruntled schoolteacher handed in her resignation with the following comment: "In our public schools today, the teachers are afraid of the principals, the principals are afraid of the superintendents, the superintendents are afraid of the board, the board members are afraid of the parents, the parents are afraid of the children, and the children are afraid of nobody."

Sunbeam
RADIANT CONTROL
TOASTER

Automatic Beyond Belief!

RADIANT CONTROL automatically adjusts itself for every kind of bread . . . moist or dry, thick slices or thin.

This is the entirely new toaster that has completely changed people's conception of what an automatic toaster should do! Only after you've seen it make toast can you appreciate the sheer magic of its carefree operation.

No levers to push—no popping or banging. Just drop in the bread and let the Sunbeam take over. The bread lowers itself, turning on the current. When perfectly toasted, the toast comes up silently, and current turns off. It's that sensational.

The new Sunbeam even regulates the toasting automatically, depending on the kind of bread. If the slices are moist it toasts them a little longer than if they are dry. If they are thin, it toasts them quicker than thicker slices. Moist or dry, thick or thin—you always get the same uniform golden color you want—automatically. Ask your dealer to demonstrate the new Sunbeam Toaster for you.

Only Sunbeam has patented RADIANT CONTROL. The heat radiated from the actual surface of the bread is focused on a sensitive strip of bimetal. When the bread reaches the scientifically correct temperature for perfect toasting, sufficient heat is absorbed by the thermostat to shut off the toaster. The toasting is always the same no matter what kind of bread you use, regardless of line voltage, once you set it for the brownness you want.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50 ■ Canada: 321 Weston Rd., Toronto 9

Famous for Sunbeam MIXMASTER, IRONMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, SHAVEMASTER, etc.

BRILLO

gives TWICE the SHINE in HALF the TIME!

New "Scorchy Pan" Tests prove Brillo shines crusty pots and pans faster and brighter than other types of cleansers tested! Scientific shine-meter records show Brillo actually gives aluminums twice the shine in half the time!

Brillo has spunk! A square, metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap just whisks off gummy crust! The "jeweler's polish" in Brillo soap gets busy right away at the shiniest, fastest polishing job ever! No scouring! No soaking! Clean pots and pans with Brillo every day. Get twice the shine in half the time!

★ RED box—soap-filled pads
★ GREEN box—pads and cake soap

There's jeweler's polish in BRILLO

They retreated, leaving me with my towel still half under my hair, and I'm sure my mouth was open. I may have thought the stupor I was in was just surprise. I tore upstairs to change and reached my room as Pat came out of hers to go downstairs.

"One would think you were still in diapers, the way you behave," she said, wobbling on her newest pair of high heels.

My room was hot and green-shadowed from ivy grown too summer thickly over the window. It was right over the terrace and I could hear them talking below in the soft June hum of wind, leaves, birds and the sound of brittle crickets in the dry grass. There was the smell of the alfalfa they had raked in the pasture that afternoon. I wondered whether Pat had met Him at college or at one of her dances. He must be at least six feet, the way he towered over mother . . . oh, I remember how the room smelled, and how it sounded, the green shadows lying over the sound of their voices. I remembered what I wrote in my diary just the night before.

When I was dressed, I went downstairs and we had dinner.

. . . and that was the second day. . . .

In the weeks which followed, Bill came over to play tennis, to swim, to walk and to look at Pat (while I looked at him and tried to pretend I couldn't see what was happening). I wrote a list of alternate reasons why he might be visiting us so often, besides the real reason, and I put it in my diary:

1. He may think Pat is just a nice girl—the kind to play with.
2. He may just be lonely and want company while his family is away.
3. He may like mother. (Not a plausible reason, but possible.)
4. He may like me. (I wish, I wish I wish!!!!!!!! God, let him, please!)

. . . that was the third, fourth, fifteenth, twenty-fifth day. . . .

Often, when he was waiting for Patty, Bill would talk to me. He always treated me like a woman. Never like a child. Mother would come in late from one of her meetings and find us sitting on the back lawn under the cherry tree, or by the Big Rock, and she'd say, "Hullo, you two. Where's Pat?"

And one of us would say, "Up changing," or "Just coming," or "Doing her hair."

Pat had stopped telling me now about What She Did on Nights When She Went Out. If it had been anyone else but Bill, I'd have been sorry, but I suddenly didn't want to hear how He had tried to kiss her and how she had said, "Don't you dare!" I didn't want to know for sure that Bill had ever tried to kiss her. This way, not knowing, I could keep pretending. I could almost fool myself. Besides, I'd have had to tell Pat my secrets for hers, and I had only one now.

She didn't go out with Sidney Peabody any more, nor David Wesley. I'd hear her telling them that she was too busy, or too tired, or too hot. After a while they stopped calling up and only Bill came. One day, when Pat was in town shopping with mother, Bill came over. I was shelling peas for Biddy on the back lawn, sunburning my legs and listening to Road of Life on mother's portable.

Bill said, "Nobody home?" and I jumped so that I upset the pan with all the shelled peas in it. Biddy would have said, "Lawd, what a child for clumsiness!" but Bill said, "Here, let me help you," and we bent over together, picking up peas from between blades of short green lawn grass and brown curls of the mown. I picked up ants and bits of grass and the peas in the sieve were a mess.

Bill laughed in that way changing his eyes and mouth and not making a sound. I didn't want him to see me looking at him so, and bent quickly forward to finish collecting the spilled peas just as he did and we banged our heads.

"Ouch!" I said.

"Ouch," said Bill. "That hurt. But your head's softer than mine, so let me kiss you better."

And there, on our lawn in the summer, with Biddy singing, "You ta-ike the hi-igh road, and I'lll ta-ike the lo-ooooooow road" in the kitchen and Doctor Brent saying, "No you won't, not while I'm in charge of this hospital!" Bill kissed me. A tear that felt like a knife jumped up hot behind my eye. . . . Oh, Bill, oh Bill, oh Bill, Bill, Bill, you've ruined everything for me for always, always and always.

Then mother and Pat came home from town and we all four went over to Ellen's to go swimming. Patty was wearing a new bathing suit of yellow and she looked slim, brown and pretty in it. Ellen poked me in the ribs and said, "Is Bill in love with your sister?" and I said, "How should I know?" but both of us could tell without asking because Bill just looked at Patty and my stomach would have squashed inside me if he had ever looked at me that way.

That night I wrote in my diary:

I won't die of love because I am too young. But I'll wish a million million times that I was dead (just the way I wish now). When you are dead and dried up inside this way, you might as well be dead.

I wonder whether he kissed me because of Pat, or because of me. I am glad that the first real time a man kissed me, it was Bill. I may have lovers, lots of them later, but none of them will ever mean what you do to me, Bill. None of them will ever kiss me that way.

Oh, I could cry and cry and cry because I hurt so . . .

and I went to bed without having washed my face since afternoon.

On the third of August, Pat and Bill were going to a dance together. They had been out to luncheon somewhere and Pat came home about five o'clock to rest and dress.

I was sitting in my room, finishing up The Castle of Otranto (sillier as it goes along) and wondering whether I had gotten any more sunburn that day, and whether mother had been able to persuade Pat and Bill to stay to dinner with us, instead of going out. It was hot and sticky. I heard Pat call mother, and then call her again with still no answer, so I went along because of her tone of voice. She was sitting in her "boudoir chair," so called, looking green and heavish. Her hair was all sticking to her forehead, soaking wet.

I said, "Something the matter?"

Pat just managed a weak "Get mother!," got up and wove into the bathroom.

I went to find mother, on the double. She was down in the kitchen with Biddy, saying No No No the way she does when she is losing the battle. I said, "Patty wants you. She's sick to her stomach."

"Oh, gracious heavens!" said mother, starting to run to the door. Then, remembering, she stopped with her hand on the [illegible] and said with the command of a general who has unexpectedly found an extra regiment in the back pocket of his army, "I can't [illegible] now, Biddy, but remember what I said, I want the consommé jellied, not hot. Do you understand me?" and she continued victoriously up to Patty.

That night Patty lay unceremoniously with a hot-water bottle on her tummy, [illegible] no oysters left in it, while they danced their hearts away and the shoes off their feet at the party where she should have been. Bill had dinner with us and said he'd make up his mind later whether he wanted to go on to [illegible] or not, without Pat.

. . . and this was the night. . . .

Mother was upstairs with Pat, poor thing, in this terrible close heat. Bill, in his evening clothes, was playing the Andante Cantabile dreamily on the piano and I was sitting outside on the swing under the apple tree, trying to remember La Belle Dame Sans Merci instead of thinking about Bill. That swing under the lopsided old tree is the thing I remember farthest back into childhood.

It was dark, with the under-the-blanket dark-that-is-half-light, and the frogs were buggin' down in the hollow . . . chug-a-rum, chug-a-chug, chug-a-whee . . . there were about a million stars; as I looked up [illegible] were there between the leaves of the tree. Small, gold, nighttime fruit of country trees, and very bright and hard:

Ah, what can ail thee, wretched wight
Alone, and palely loitering?

If I were Patty, I would never be sick on a night like this. If I were Patty, Bill would come out and find me here, under the tree, and he'd put his arms around me, with his face in my hair, and his arms around me so that I would be close, and he'd tell me he loved me. He'd tell me he couldn't live without me . . .

. . . Maybe, if Patty loved someone else or was away, or wasn't at all, Bill would come out tonight under this very sky, to the apple tree, to me. I closed my eyes. I [illegible] achingly inside.

(Continued on Page 278)

"—— white side walls, French horns, maroon paint job, radio—honest, Peg, he's real cute."

Ladle up the Libby goodness!

Get Libby's...for real garden goodness at thrifty prices!

Peas • Corn • Lima Beans • Beets

Spinach • Asparagus • Tomatoes

Mixed Garden Vegetables • Peas and Carrots

Pumpkin • Stringless Beans

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

LOOK TO Libby's FOR PERFECTION!

Mother's helper

The telephone—always a fast, efficient helper for Mother and the family—is now helping the Nation in its hurry-up job of defense.

There is more to do—and more to do it with. Since 1941 the Bell System has increased the number of telephones by more than 16,000,000 and spent billions of dollars for new, modern equipment. The number of Bell Telephone employees has increased to more than 600,000.

This growth and size are proving of extra value right now. One reason this country can outproduce any other is because it has the most and the best telephone service in the world.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

(Continued from Page 276)

And sure in language strange she said,
"I love thee true."

Just then I noticed that no one was playing in the house any more. Bill must have gone on to his dance, without Pat and without saying good night to me. There was no reason why he should have said good-by, but that he hadn't made me very sad. It was as if the knight had deserted La Belle Dame, in the middle of the Wild Wood, or as if he hadn't palely loitered afterward. Mother's radio was playing up in her room, so she must have gone to bed already. Life was too awfully wonderful to be lived that night—with the dark, and being in love, and all alone and knowing it was all too useless. It made me want to cry and so I did, and finished up the poem aloud to the frogs and the sleepy birds and the wind in the apple tree . . .

. . . the sedge is withered from the lake,
And no birds sing.

with the tears pouring down my face and beginning to get in the way of my voice.

"Hullo, Sheila," and it was the same voice and the same dark that had met me in our own front hall so many weeks ago now, at the beginning.

I died quietly inside right then. All of myself turned to cotton wool, and softer, and there was real pain that was an agony of tears saved up in my chest. Oh, Bill, Bill, Bill, go away or I will make a fool of myself and Patty will never forgive me and mother will be ashamed and I'll want to die. Go away! I could see the bright tip of his cigarette, where he must have been sitting for some time, like a low orange star fallen off my tree. Oh, Bill!

"Hullo," I said, but a sob caught it in the middle and made a silly humpbacked word out of it.

"Anything I can do?"

"Nothing," I said. "Please go away."

"In a while," Bill said, "after I've had my cigarette. Come over here by me."

I got up and walked over as if someone were leading me, with the tear tracks still drying on my cheek. When I reached him, Bill put out his arms and took me down into his lap. My head was on his shoulder. My face was against the fine roughness of the dinner jacket, which smelled of other girls' perfumes, countless smoked cigarettes, and lots of parties that I had never been to.

"Oh, Bill!" I cried. And Bill didn't say anything but only tightened his arms and put his head down in my hair and the way he did it I knew he knew. Now I didn't even have my secret any more . . . And sure in language strange she said, "I love thee true."

So I had told him all about it, what I had written in my diary the first night; and how I had grown up when I'd come home from that movie so long ago where the girl marries the wrong man in Scotland and they walk up the road together holding hands; and how I'd gone to bed without washing my face the night he had kissed me in the garden. I told him all that and lots more about never loving again, and knowing a great deal already from books about how it felt, and not minding that I should ha known everything so young and that should have been over for me before I h really ever lived. "I'm not a child, y know, any more."

And he bent over me, so that I don't kn or remember what or how . . . and he kiss me. He kissed me on my mouth, the way one ever has, except relations by accide And he said, "I know you're not."

We stayed there, maybe a minute mo maybe an hour.

It was all quiet now because there w nothing I needed to say, nothing more. Bei there with Bill made me think, The thi I've read about and guessed about are real, they aren't real the way I thought they would Bit by bit . . . Bill talked, and it was as if wasn't talking to me at all . . . about how was young on a farm and how he felt wh he shot his first possum and it fell out of t tree, down . . . about the Army . . . abou lady in England who said good-by to h because there wasn't anyone else. Abo Patty . . . and how she looked in her bl dress that night (the taffeta which moth says is much low) . . . and h she talks . . . a the way she dr her eyes to the s when she is emb rassed. I'd nev thought of Patty t way. It was que She seemed son thing royal for a m ute. . . . "But this doesn't me much to you, guess, Sheila. I just my rather la way of telling a n girl to hang on ti for a while. We have to ride t bumps at the beg ning and maybe t is quite a tough on What was it wanted? What was

"And any ti you want a frien ear," he went "come talk to y brother-in-law-to- who loves you and is proud of yo Now . . . won't y dry your eyes a give me a smile? How is everything

"Just fi-ine," managed.

Bill jumped to feet, bouncing me mine, with his ha around my waist keep me from falli "Here's a small k for the trip," he said, "and another you pass along to Pat in the morning." Th he held me there, standing in front of hi "Thank you again for giving me someth and so much."

Then he bent and kissed me, like a l brushing, and walked around the dark t race and through the gate in the wall, stead of going into the house. A few minu after I heard the starter of his car catch a the motor turn over. All of a sudden I f awfully, widely, terribly empty and lone Bill!

And then I ran into the house and strai upstairs to my room. I could hear moth calling me to ask if I'd locked the doors, bu didn't stop till I had my own door lock behind me. I turned on the light and pul the books off the second shelf, took the k from where it was safety-pinned inside t pocket of my bathrobe and opened my dia On the third of August I drew a big line red pencil across the top of the page a wrote:

THE END

and then, right underneath it:

THE BEGINNING

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Sonnet

By Rhina P. Espaillat

Your memory is brief, and yet I miss
Your footsteps where we two have never gone,
The words unsaid, the things we left undone,
And the imagined sweetness of your kiss.
What folly, or what miracle is this:
That the blind man should turn him to the sun
And mourn for glories that he has not known,
Describe the rose, and sense what heaven is?

Love's memory is strange, in that it peers
Not back to meager joys lived in the past,
But onward to the days of other years,
And counts the winnings ere the dice are cast—
And so we breathe the scent of next year's flowers,
And miss the lips that have not yet been ours.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Printed in U. S

OVEMBER, 19

JOURNAL

The Magazine Women Believe In

Undiscovered

AMERICAN BEAUTIES

Rumer Godden — begins a new serial — Breath of Air

Good reasons Why I Like Women — by G. M. White

Richard Rodgers — the man who wrote the South Pacif

The girl who nearly died cheating the doctor — by Maria

We started with a bed and 3 barrels

Pull the curtains and wardrobe shelves are right in front of you with everything within easy reach. Close the curtains, and they're hidden away. Always on view is the floor of Armstrong's Spatter Linoleum—smartly beautiful and wonderfully easy to clean. Even those little bedroom fuzz-balls wipe up in a hurry when you have Armstrong's Linoleum on a bedroom floor. This floor is Tuscany Tan, Style No. 5007. There are seven other stunning color effects in Armstrong's Spatter Linoleum. Write for free room plan.

THE NIGHT Tim asked me to marry him, he told me how much money he had saved. "Don't know whether it will be enough to completely furnish a place to live, but . . ."

"Of course, it's enough," I said. "We'll get along."

Down at the furniture store, I began to wonder. I'd never realized how many things it takes to furnish a home.

"Let me give you a bit of advice," the salesman said. "Don't spread your money too thin. Buy good things that will last even if you have to wait for other things."

"That's what I've been saying," Tim agreed. "Take that floor in our bedroom. If we go ahead and put in that Armstrong's Spatter Linoleum we were looking at, we'd have something that would last for years and years. Any makeshift would just be a waste of money in the long run."

"But then what will we do for furniture?" I asked, remembering how much money I'd budgeted for the bedroom. "Of course, I do have that old bed of mine . . . but I did have my heart set on those barrel chairs."

"We've got the three barrels that your wedding presents were packed in," Tim grinned.

He said it as a joke, but to me it was an idea—and the start of a lot of others. With a little prodding, I got Tim to do the carpentry work to turn two of the barrels into chai and the other into two hassocks. I found a gay chintz for m upholstering, and when I discovered that I could buy th rest of the bolt at a bargain price, I used it on one wall, to

Instead of building in a big wardrobe closet, as we originally planned, we saved money with curtain-covere shelves that are as handy as can be.

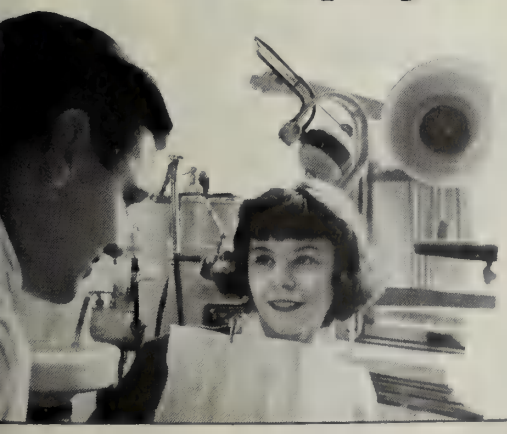
After the room was done, Mr. Collins came out from th store. "I'm glad you put in this Armstrong Spatter Linoleum Looks fine now, but it will look even better when you bu your regular furniture."

You should have seen Tim's face. He's so proud of h "barrel" furniture that he can't imagine my ever wantin anything else, so I just winked at Mr. Collins when Tim back was turned. Blond mahogany is going to look wonde ful with my Armstrong Floor.

Write for the "Decorator's Answer Book"— it's packed wi thirty-two pages of full-color illustrations of beautiful rooms designe by the noted decorator, Hazel Dell Brown. There are decorating an remodeling ideas for every room whether your house is new or ol Slip 10¢ into an envelope right now (outside U.S.A., 40¢) and mail Armstrong Cork Company, 5011 King Street, Lancaster, Penna.

ARMSTRONG'S LINOLEUM FLOORS

for every room (A) in the house



MADE BY THE MAKERS OF ARMSTRONG'S QUAKER RUGS, ARMSTRONG'S ASPHALT TILE, AND ARMSTRONG'S LINOWALL

To keep your mouth and breath more wholesome, sweeter, cleaner, guard against tooth decay and gum troubles both. Never risk halfway dental care. Use doubly-effective, doubly-protective Ipana care for healthier teeth, healthier gums — better all-around protection for your whole mouth.

Fight tooth decay and gum troubles both—to keep your Whole Mouth Wholesome!

Teach your children doubly-effective Ipana care

To help your youngsters grow up with healthier, cleaner mouths, show them how to fight tooth decay and gum troubles both. Remember, tooth decay hits 9 out of 10 children before the age of six. And later in life, gum troubles cause more than half of all tooth losses. So start your children today on the Ipana way to healthier teeth and healthier gums both.

Only one leading tooth paste is designed to give you this double protection!*

If you want a healthier, more wholesome mouth, take the advice of dentists—fight gum troubles as well as tooth decay.

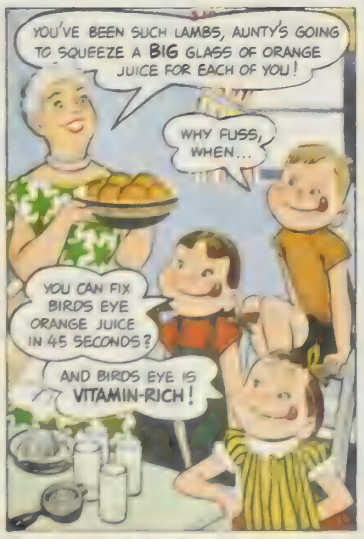
With one famous tooth paste—*with Ipana and massage—you can guard your teeth and gums BOTH.

No other tooth paste—ammoniated or otherwise—has been proved more effective than Ipana to fight tooth decay. And no other leading tooth paste is specially designed to stimulate gum circulation—promote healthier gums.

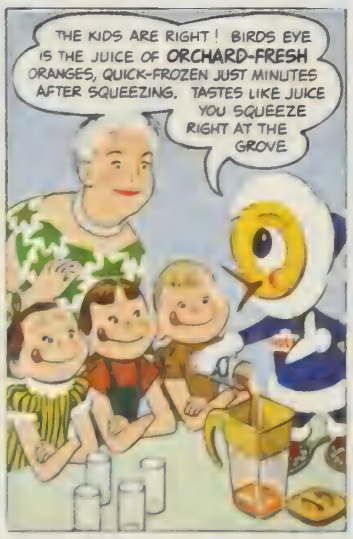
Remember, Ipana is the only leading tooth paste made especially to give you this doubly-protective, doubly-effective care.

Now, today, start this double protection—keep your whole mouth "Ipana wholesome." You'll like Ipana's wholesome, refreshing flavor, too. Get Ipana!

NEW!
Big economy size Ipana saves you up to 23¢



Product of Bristol-Myers



IPANA

For healthier teeth, healthier gums

BIRDS EYE ORANGE JUICE!

Copyright [illegible] General Foods Corp

PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

BIRDS EYE - BOUND TO BE BETTER!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeep

VOL. LXVII, No. 11

CONTENTS

NOVEMBER, 1950

Miss Leech and luggage

From time to time the JOURNAL cover features an Undiscovered American Beauty—a girl who has never previously modeled for money. Nominations are submitted by photographers throughout the country.

Patricia Leech is the most elusive Undiscovered American Beauty it has yet been our pleasure to feature. Daughter of a Marine Corps colonel, she has followed her father from one post to another, and managed to attend a different high school each year.

Pat now lives in Norfolk, Virginia, but she was discovered by a JOURNAL scout during the intermission of the Monday-night hop during June Week at West Point. She was photographed in New York by Fashion Editor Wilhela Cushman, then sailed to Europe on a Holy Year pilgrimage of 750 young Catholics. They toured France, Germany, Austria and Italy, saw the Passion Play at Oberammergau and had an "audience" with the Pope.

We tried to catch up with Pat for an interview in Paris, but she had laryngitis, so we had to wait and meet her aboard the S. S. Roma as it pulled into New York Harbor, with the result you see above.

Pat has completed two years at Mary Washington College of the University of Virginia, but doesn't plan to return. She's aiming instead for a husband, and has one all picked out—although he doesn't know it. ("He'd die if he knew.") We're doing our best to drop him a hint.

Betty Hannah Hoffman

"I landed a job on the JOURNAL as a secretary shortly after graduating from Smith in '39. Ten years, one husband, two children and many pages later, I still love to go buzzing across country in search of another How America Lives (Page 179)."

Book Condensation Complete in This Issue

I Took it Lying Down . . . . . Marian Spitzer 42

Fiction

A Breath of Air (First part of three) . . . . Rumer Godden 34
Men Like Marcia . . . . . Ruth Henning 36
I Would . . . I Would Not . . . . . Alberta Hughes Wahl 39
Highly Eligible Bachelor . . . . . Mel Heimer 40
Every Sunday Morning . . . . . Henrietta Daniels 64

Special Features

On Living Dangerously . . . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
Two Faces . . . . . John A. O'Brien, Ph.D., LL.D. 11
Tell Me Doctor—No. 10 . . . . . Henry B. Safford, M.D. 31
Our Own Young Marrieds—No. 3 44
With Songs in His Heart . . . . . Lincoln Barnett 46
Let's Face it and Get On . . . . . Walter Lippmann 56
There's a Man in the House . . . . . Harlan Miller 60
Why I Like Women . . . . . G. M. White 61
Baby's First Year . . . . . Photos by Wayne Miller 144
How America Lives: Country Doctor . . Betty Hannah Hoffman 179

General Features

Our Readers Write Us 5
Under-Cover Stuff . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
School Housing Crisis . . . Is Met in Longview, Washington . . 23
State Help Lags . . . . . Margaret Hickey 23
Reference Library 24
Making Marriage Work . . . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
A Penny for Your Thoughtfulness (The Sub-Deb) . . . . . Edited by Maureen Daly 28
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal ▪ Journal About Town 33
Diary of Domesticity . . . . . Gladys Taber 121
What to Do About Acne . . . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 133
This is a Wrong-Reader . . . . . Munro Leaf 135
Ask Any Woman . . . . . Marcelene Cox 167

Fashions and Beauty

Paris Points to Feminine Fashions . . . . Wilhela Cushman 48
There's Something About Her . . . . . Wilhela Cushman 52
What Do You Make of Your Basic Dress? . . . Nora O'Leary 54
Clubwoman's Wardrobe—$94.70 . . . . . Cynthia McAdoo 188
Keeping Up Appearances . . . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 191

Food and Homemaking

Planned for Perfection . . . . . Gladys Taber 63
Favorite Meals of Our Editors . . . . . Ann Batchelder 66
Line ▪ Day . . . . . Ann Batchelder 68
Meals That Wait . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 186
Conversation Piece . . . . . Ruth Mills Teague 212
Quick and Easys for Two . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 232

Architecture and Interior Decoration

Family Living Room Renewed . . . . . H. T. Williams 58
Top Buys in Ready-Built East to West . . . . Richard Pratt 124
Audubon Dining Room . . . . . Henrietta Murdock 192

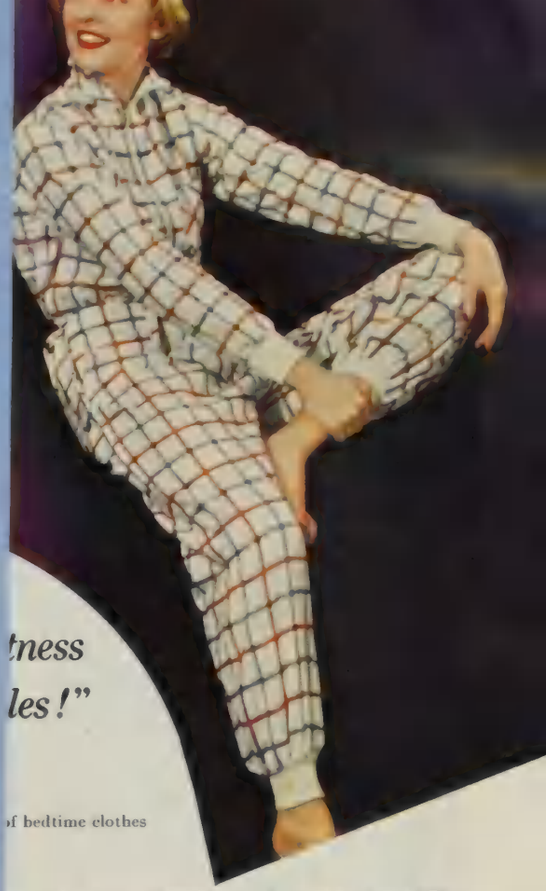
Poetry

Elizabeth Coatsworth 88 • Fern Mary Munsell 104 • Bette Richart 127 ▪ Georgie Starbuck Galbraith 138 ▪ Elizabeth Chesley Baity 155 • Jessie Farnham 172 • Helen Harrington 194 ▪ Elizabeth McFarland 201 ▪ Elizabeth-Ellen Long 206 ▪ Eleanor Halbrook Zimmerman 214 ▪ Jehanne de Mare 222 ▪ Hannah Kahn 229 ▪ Abigail Cresson 234 • Joseph Auslander 244

Cover Photograph by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.



Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1950 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered ▪ U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered ▪ Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters ▪ all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U.S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U.S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager ▪ Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

ORY FLAKES

diant Action longer-famous y about clothes

ghtness!

Your daytime dresses pick up a sunny new radiance. All your party-pretty washables—fine silks, nylons, precious wools have a bright future when you wash them gently in new Ivory Flakes with "Radiant Action." It's the mildest, safest soap you can buy—the only flake soap with the famous Ivory name! You'll find helpful washing directions on every package.

Longer wear for nylons. Change from strong soaps to gentle, nightly care with Ivory Flakes and keep stockings looking fresh up to twice as long!

Perfect for dishes, too! Gentle Ivory Flakes speeds your dishes clean, yet it's so very kind to hands! Get a box of new Ivory Flakes—America's largest-selling flake soap—today!

3-piece Tommieset® $18.95 . . . Tommies® Coverall $5.95
At fine stores everywhere

If it's lovely to wear...it's worth Ivory Flakes care

99 44/100% PURE!

...of cou
it's elect

estinghouse Laundromat®
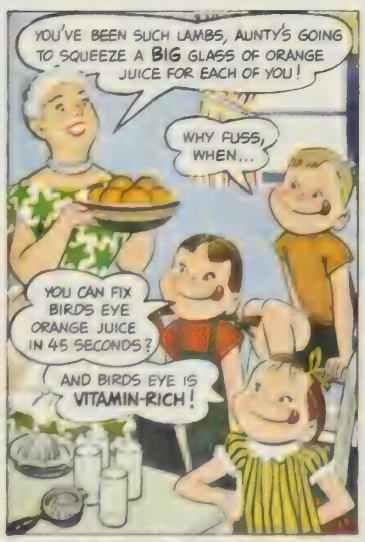
AUTOMATIC WASHER



YOUR CLOTHES
YOUR MONEY

Door that ve precious wash.
WEIGH-TO-whether the m or large.
ater Saver,
the correct
ch, not too
ns of water
's no guess-
, with the s completely
t it!
dromat gets clothes so sparkling clean. Thanks to the inclined washing action . . . found in no other washer . . . clothes are kept constantly in motion during the entire washing cycle. Gently and thoroughly, they are washed dirt-free. Then the dirty, soapy water is drained away from the clothes . . . never through them. Clothes are triple-rinsed (equal to 1,500 hand rinsings). Come out as clean as a whistle and damp-dried . . . many ready to iron immediately.

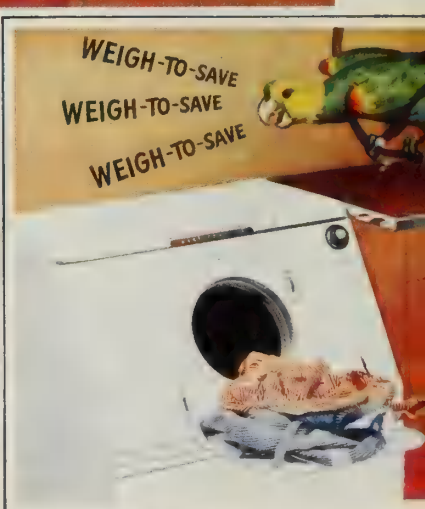
Arrange to see a load of your clothes washed the Laundromat way. It's free. Phone your Westinghouse retailer today. Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Appliance Division, Mansfield, Ohio.



ow . . . "Westinghouse STUDIO ONE" . . . Every Week

RE .. IF IT'S Westinghouse

Copyright 1960, General Foods Corp.

FIRST* . . WEIGH clothes on WEIGH-TO-SAVE D few pieces or a full load is accurately we
You know exactly the weight you are wa

NEXT* . . READ load size on WEIGH-TO-SAVE
Small, medium or large . . . you can be sure ing right amount of water and soap for th

THEN* . . SET Water Saver for size of load, on scale. No wasting hot water and soap thrifty Water Saver measures the water r

Our Readers Write us

uestion for Thanksgiving

Lakeside, California

Dear Editors: What do we as Americans ılly want? Ask the next person you see ıat he would ask for if God granted him st one wish. I have been doing this among / relatives, friends and acquaintances. Do Americans want peace above all e? Maybe I don't ask the right people— ey are just middle-class Americans as I ı, of average intelligence, earning aver- e incomes.

Peace, nor any related desire, has not en mentioned yet. Material things top e list by 90 per cent.

To me it seems that we put our prime erest in financial security. Everything ints to getting the best job at the most oney. How many of us have been taught ıt what happens to our souls is more im- rtant than what happens to our pocket- oks? If we are willing to die for our ıntry, couldn't we do much more for it living courageously by true democratic eals? Death of the body is not nearly so gic as death of the spirit.

Sincerely yours,
ROSEMARY RUSSELL

r Husbands to Steal

Portland, Oregon

Dear Editors: The Rebecca West article the British National Health Service ngs to the women of America some new as which their husbands, as George rnard Shaw once reminded, will even- lly steal from them.

Every issue of your magazine makes ry substantial contributions to good nking and good living in America and I ve been meaning for a long time to let u know that here is one man who ad- ts to reading the LADIES' HOME JOUR- L. Very truly yours,

CARL E. HOPKINS
Associate Professor of Public Health and Preventive Medicine, University of Oregon

other Has Ideal Vacation

Oakland, California

Dear Editors: Let me highly recommend ıding the family away from home while other has her vacation. I have just ex- rienced such a vacation and I never felt relaxed and refreshed after any other cation!

I spent five blissful days at home, alone cept for the cat. I slept as late as I ased and sometimes I even went back bed after breakfast (better than having ull-time maid!). One memorable day I pped into the kitchen only because it s the means of getting to the car in the rage. Of course, being a woman, I invar- ly spent much time shopping. Not hav- to hurry home to prepare dinner or ep an "eye" on the youngest, I didn't ctly save money.

Lest I give the impression that I don't e and enjoy my family, let me hasten to l you that one of the best parts of my y came when the cards arrived from the ldren, saying, "Having a wonderful ne. Please send me some more money. th love ——" Yours,

JESSIE G. TOBIAS

ggable Huigs

Haarlem, Holland

Dear Editors: Here are some pictures of bsie and Marcelien Huig, who live in Dutch coast village of Landvoort. th have blond hair and blue eyes. Gabsie hree years old; Marcelien is four. They e to make coffee for their parents and y themselves are fond of sweet coffee th much cream. Sincerely,

KEES POT

COPYRIGHT KEES POT

Gabsie grinds the coffee beans . . .

And adds boiling water.

Marcelien pours for daddy and mother.

Ready for bed, they brush their teeth.

And daddy tells a bedtime story.

"Wonderful! Gives sparkling new brightness to your fine washables!" says TOMMIES of New York, world-famous maker of bedtime clothes

New IVORY FLAKES
with Radiant Action

"Simply amazing! Gives new life . . . longer-lasting beauty to lovely washables!" famous manufacturers of fine clothes say about this new washing care!

Now, after washing, gay sleepytime clothes wake up with a sparkling new brightness!

Your daytime dresses pick up a sunny new radiance. All your party-pretty washables—fine silks, nylons, precious wools have a bright future when you wash them gently in new Ivory Flakes with "Radiant Action." It's the mildest, safest soap you can buy—the only flake soap with the famous Ivory name! You'll find helpful washing directions on every package.

Longer wear for nylons. Change from strong soaps to gentle, nightly care with Ivory Flakes and keep stockings looking fresh up to twice as long!

Perfect for dishes, too! Gentle Ivory Flakes speeds your dishes clean, yet it's so very kind to hands! Get a box of new Ivory Flakes—America's largest-selling flake soap—today!

3-piece Tommieset® $18.95 . . . Tommies® Coverall $5.95
At fine stores everywhere

If it's lovely to wear...it's worth Ivory Flakes care

99 44/100% PURE!

where elegance is good taste . . .

Cambridge etched Crystal

Do you aspire to be a perfect hostess . . . with the finest of table appointments for your family and guests? Then, please do consider Cambridge Etched Crystal. Of beauty rare, this exquisite American handmade glassware is truly the crowning touch for festive settings, and the most appreciated of bridal gifts. The delicate lace-like designs are etched on clearest crystal and highlighted for extra brilliance. Choose from eight exclusive open stock patterns, available in complete settings, moderately priced.

Cambridge Bridal Place Setting

Goblet, Sherbet, Cocktail and Salad Plate in your bride's chosen Cambridge Etching. Attractively packaged for convenient giving, and for protection too.

The Cambridge Glass Company, Cambridge, Ohio

GENUINE HAND MADE Cambridge

Westerner's Viewpoint

San Francisco, California

Dear Sir: Of all the bigoted, presumptuous letters I've read, that one titled Southerner's Viewpoint is the worst! Since when has poverty or even untidiness been an excuse or a reason for segregation? Negroes are Americans and have been for generations. They should have the same rights and privileges as any other American, and not have to prove themselves any more than other citizens to obtain what is rightfully theirs—equality!

I live and work right among colored people and my observation is that they, and especially their children, are neater, cleaner and better behaved than the same economic group of any other class of people.

Yours truly,
EDNA RUTH WITTERS

Can You Bake a Muddy Pie?

North Hollywood, California

Dear Journal: I wish you'd take a survey to discover just how many of your readers have fun with their children. I've recently become a housewife, after eight years of teaching, and I'm having the time of my life.

I have two children, aged three and one, both girls, and I spend most of my time making mud pies with the older one and taking walks with the baby.

What bothers me is the absolute grimness of the women living near me. They spend most of the day cleaning house. I have a housekeeping schedule, but I usually don't follow it. When I vacuum, Gayle wants to help, so it is usually she who pushes the cleaner around the floor. She does a terrible job, but who cares? I think the neighbors disapprove of my "careless ways," but I notice they never laugh with their children or take time out to play with them.

Sincerely,
ADELE HALL

Unwed Mother Looks Back

San Antonio, Texas

Dear Editors: So many people just "look down their noses" at unmarried mothers. They usually think—or say, "Of all things, what a disgrace to the family and the town." . . . "Why, that girl isn't fit to live on earth." I have heard all those remarks—not through gossip but from people who are "better than everyone else." Most of those statements have been thrown directly in my face sometime or other during the past year. You see, I am one of those unmarried mothers.

I love my daughter dearly and no force on earth could take her away from me. I'm sure that as she grows up she'll never be as lonely as I was as a teen-ager, even though I lived in a house full of people. I want my daughter to have love and understanding during her growing years, as well as all through her life. That is something I guess I've never had, or maybe it was from such a distance I didn't recognize it. I don't think I've kissed or been kissed by my parents more than a couple dozen times in my almost twenty years of life.

What I know about sex, I found out by myself. My mother told me very little. When I became the datable age, which was seventeen to my folks, I dated. Where I went, with whom and when I came home seemed to make no difference to them. When I told them I got teased. I soon became quite sensitive and told nothing. I never even discussed my problems with them as they always seemed so distant. I tried to figure them out as best I could, but the reasoning of a teen-ager isn't the best.

If you don't give your children the love, understanding and the secure feeling they need, your daughter may be the next unmarried mother, or your son the cause of one.

Yours sincerely,
(Name withheld by request)

Talking It Up

Chicago, Illinois

Dear Editors: Like many other women, I appreciate being considered intelligent. I never get the feeling that I'm being "talked down to" when I read your magazine. I admire the courage you have in tackling controversial subjects—things most magazines and most people find easier to ignore.

Sincerely,
MRS. ROBERT VILLWOCK

(Continued on Page 8)

1

Gentler bleaching action . .

added protection for linens! Come w day, U.S.A., millions of housewives r for Clorox. For Clorox makes w cottons and linens snowy-white (br ens fast colors), removes stains, dec izes, makes linens sanitary, too! Cl does even more! It conserves costly li
. . . it's free from caustic, extra gent fabrics . . . made by an exclusive for protected by U. S. patent.

2

Greater disinfecting efficien added protection for health! Don a dirty dishcloth wipe germs onto dishes. You can make your dishc clean-looking, fresh, and sanitary with Clorox. For Clorox bleaches moves stains, deodorizes and disin

And your family gets extra health tection in Clorox because it's extra cient . . . kills germs quicker than any product of its kind! Directions on

Copr. 1952, Clorox Ch

CLOROX AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH
HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTAN

Fall Festival

OF IRISH LINENS

Leading Stores to Celebrate with Lavish Pre-Holiday Displays at Most Inviting Prices!

It's really an event when you can get luxurious Irish Linens at today's attractive prices! And just look at the lovely new patterns and colors . . . right in time for Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's entertaining . . . and for yuletide giving, too!

Now, at the Fall Festival of Irish Linens, you can have all the real Irish Linens you want. But be sure you get the genuine . . . marked "Irish" or "Made in Ireland".

THE IRISH LINEN GUILD
1270 Avenue of the Americas, New York 20, N. Y.

IRISH LINEN

You'll find endless variety and unusual values in genuine Irish Linen place mat sets at the Fall Festival of Irish Linens.

uisite damasks in traditional, ning white, in beautiful modern rs, and in gorgeous hand-painted gns . . . the choice is yours at the Festival of Irish Linens.

Ask to see Irish Linen luncheon cloths in soft, new pastel tones, in gay patterns, and in dramatic solid colors.

Beautifully embroidered luncheon and bridge cloths and napkins of real Irish Linen . . . and so modestly priced!

Small wonder more women use Dorothy Gray creams than any other salon creams in America! For at Dorothy Gray, not the whim of a single cosmetician, but the combined know-how of many beauty scientists creates cosmetics you can trust.

Trust Dorothy Gray

For skin as lovely as yours can be . . . follow this famous "Rule of Three"

1. Cleanse.

Dry skin? For you, wonderfully effective Dry-Skin Cleanser. For normal skin there's luxurious Salon Cold Cream. If your skin is oily, it needs the beauty-cleansing ritual of Cleansing Cream (Liquefying). Priced from $1 to $4.

2. Stimulate.

Both dry and normal skins take on a glowing, younger appearance from patting with Orange Flower Skin Lotion. Oily skin gets the same stimulating "lift" from Texture Lotion. Priced from $1 to $3.75.

3. Lubricate.

If skin is either dry or normal, coax it to a more perfect softness and smoothness with Special Dry-Skin Mixture. $2.25 to $8. If oily—yes, oily skins do need lubrication—smooth in that very special Suppling Cream, $1 to $2.75.

All prices plus tax

(Continued from Page 6)

She Knows the Answers

Kensington, Maryland

Dear Editors: Mother found my problems big, I guess; she got the JOURNAL for its Sub-Deb Page (for me) when I was just fifteen. I "bought" the Sub-Deb articles on clothes and boys and what's the best retort when girls are mean and boys are fresh. I can still quote them all.

One day The Man arrived on the scene and liked the verses and quotable quotes I had saved for just that day! Now I am a more ardent JOURNAL fan than ever. No other women's magazine has such coordinated, timely, open-minded reading matter. Yours sincerely,

CHARLOTTE EASLEY REEDER

Eternal Triangle

El Paso, Texas

Dear Editors: Why don't you publish fiction that an intelligent reader won't gag at? There's more in the world than the eternal triangle. Same old formula—all alike—ad nauseam! You underestimate the public. Sincerely,

ROWENA BRIDGERS

Some Do, Some Don't

El Paso, Texas

Dear Mrs. Gould: Just why is there a supercilious attitude taken toward triangle stories? After all, they fill a psychological need. It is usually the happy wife who enjoys them. She says to herself, "Well, it hasn't happened to me—yet—but if it does I'll show her." Give us some good triangle stories, and may the best member of the triangle win!

Yours very sincerely,

MAUDE PROTZMAN

Beauty by the Barrel

Alhambra, California

Dear Ladies' Home Journal: My mother buys the JOURNAL and I see all the pretty girls on the cover, so I want you to see my sister. She is 21, and I think she is very pretty. She can cook too.

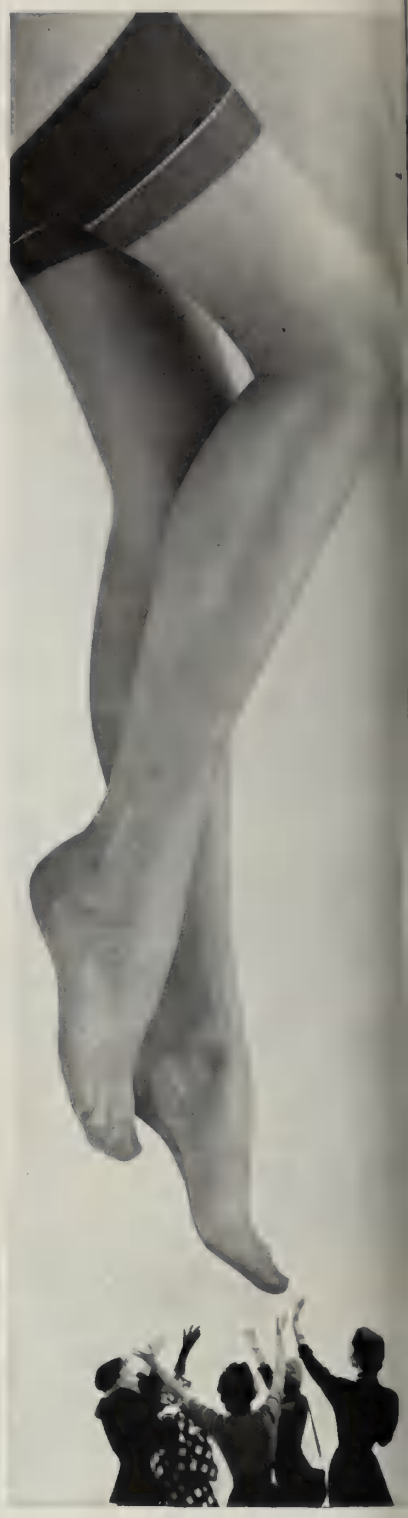
Yours,

MARK FRICKER



Americanized Daughter

The Duke's Cottage, Rudgwick, England

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: Daughter June duly arrived home for her vacation, and I can never thank America enough for all it has done for her. She looks so well, so happy and so smart. (American girls, says June, manage their glamour much better than English girls!) Her reactions to England are amusing. The food, except at home, she finds horrible. She notices the sad absence of young people, inevitable in so small a country after so large a war, and she is amazed at the politeness of everyone. In the small village where we shop, and have done so for the last twenty-five years, everyone knows her, and everyone, as she says, disconcerted her very much by bowing from the waist when she appeared. ("I am not," said June, "accustomed to being saluted by the cops.") She has now hired a gimcrack old car, and gone off for a tour, driving, as she now says, on the wrong side of the road.

With my love to you all,

DOROTHY BLACK

more women ask for

GOTHAM GOLD STRIP

nylons than for any other bra

Clear, flawless . . . made with t finest twisted yarns . . . the clear fashion-right colors.

At fine stores everywhere.

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC.
200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.
GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.
DOMINION SQUARE BUILDING, MONTREAL

GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE
BEAUTIFUL STOCKINGS

How could he treat her this way?

HER FIRST DATE with a most attractive man . . . and here she was, back home, and on the point of tears, by half-past ten. What had she said . . . what had she done to change his eagerness to indifference? She would never know . . . didn't even suspect!

Can You Be Sure?

How dare any woman assume that her breath is always beyond reproach?

Halitosis (unpleasant breath) has a habit of cropping up when you least expect it . . . of putting you in the worst sort of light when you want to be at your best. And you, of course, may not know when you're guilty.

Isn't it foolish to risk offending when Listerine Antiseptic is such an extra-careful, wholly delightful precaution?

You merely rinse the mouth with it night and morning, and always before any date and, lo! your breath becomes fresher and sweeter. Moreover, it stays that way, too . . . not for seconds . . . not for minutes . . . but for hours, usually.

While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes. LAMBERT PHARMACAL CO., St. Louis, Missouri

Before any date

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

. . . the extra-careful precaution against offending

NOTHING LIKE TIDE!

TIDE WASHES CLOTHES MIRACLE CLEAN

WITHOUT RINSING!

Just wash—wring out—hang up! Cuts washday work in half!

No other washing product is made the way Procter & Gamble's Tide is made. Just try Tide without rinsing! Take your wash out of the suds—wring it out—hang it up! You see, Tide keeps the dirt suspended in the sudsy water. When you wring out the clothes, the dirt runs out with the washwater . . . and clothes come bright, white, and clean! And they dry soft and fluffy . . . iron easily! What's more, this method saves wear and tear on clothes. Saves time, work, and hot water! Get Tide today—and remember! Other products may look like Tide . . . others may talk like Tide . . . but they just aren't the same as Tide!

WHICHEVER WASHING METHOD YOU USE...

with-or without-rinsing

TIDE DOES A BETTER WASHING JOB THAN ANY SOAP ON EARTH!

Two Faces

By JOHN A. O'BRIEN, Ph.D., LL.D.
The University of Notre Dame

In his letter to the Galatians the Apostle Paul brings the ethical teachings of Jesus to a superb and dramatic climax. "Be not deceived," he says, "God is not mocked. For what things a man shall sow, those also shall he reap. For he that soweth in his flesh, of the flesh also shall reap corruption. But he that soweth in the spirit, of the spirit shall reap life everlasting."

This is a truth which needs to be kept forever before the eyes of men, especially the young. It expresses a law of the moral universe, which is as basic and inescapable as is the law of gravitation in the physical universe. He that soweth in the flesh reaps corruption, ugliness, misery and death.

This truth is illustrated by an incident in the life of Leonardo da Vinci. Determined to paint a picture of the Christ Child, the artist searched for an appropriate model, a youth whose innocence and beauty of countenance would inspire him to capture and imprison upon the canvas the radiant face of Christ.

At last he found in the choir of the Florence Cathedral a youth, Pietro Bandinelli, whose striking beauty and innocence of countenance held him spellbound. Into those fair blue eyes no foul image had ever entered; on his cheeks the very glow of heaven seemed to rest.

Many years later da Vinci was painting a picture of Judas. He had found an appropriate model: a criminal with a dissipated countenance, repulsive in its sinister ugliness. Something about the model struck a chord of long-buried memories and brought them struggling to life again.

"Where have I seen the profile of that face before?" he asked.

Then the horrible realization dawned upon him with all its stinging bitterness.

"No! No! God!" he cried. "It can't be! It can't be! And yet . . . those eyes! That face! That profile!" Turning to the ugly, evil-looking man with the Judas face, da Vinci asked: "Your name is ——"

"Pietro Bandinelli. But drunkenness and sensuality have changed me from a Christ Child model to a Judas . . . bound for hell."

It was but a striking illustration of the age-old truth enunciated by the Apostle Paul: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is life everlasting in Christ Jesus our Lord." THE END

On Living Dangerously

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

AMERICANS visiting the "Old" World are struck with the relative calmness with which Europeans view a situation obviously much more immediately menacing to themselves than to Americans. This is not because they are less cognizant than we of the circumstances. Everyone in Western Europe is thoroughly aware that with nine East European states actually or factually absorbed into the anti-European Soviet Union, adding over 100,000,000 former Europeans, together with their immense resources, factories and armies, and with West Germany a vacuum of power between this juggernaut and themselves, the Europeans of the west are in desperate danger.

It is quite unnecessary to remind an Englishman that if a great power which stretches from the heart of Central Europe, across land to the Pacific, and whose rear is secured in China, were to reach the English Channel, Great Britain would be the world's most vulnerable target for atom bombs. The people of Great Britain have not forgotten the "Blitz" of World War II.

Yet Americans, with their similar awareness, often seem to Europeans to be "hysterical." And when I asked a European, recently commenting on this, for an explanation, he replied, "Americans have never had to live dangerously."

That has been true in the American past. Never has any country had such a break from history as the United States.

Geographically we inhabit (together with other nations of the Americas) the only world islands of continental size. Nowhere have we ever had powerful and rapacious neighbors who could seriously threaten us on our own frontiers.

We won our independence and nationhood under the lucky circumstances that those who opposed it were embroiled in continental wars in Europe, diverting their ships and armies.

In America itself we had to overcome only a sparse population of semisavage tribes; nations, to be sure, but nations hopelessly inferior in organization and weapons to the white Europeans who had landed on these shores, determined here to build a new nation, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The consolidation of the continent created the American heroic, epic period. It entailed adventure, sacrifice and blood. It created the American myth, and most of the American folk ballads. But it was never "dangerous," in the sense that our very survival as a nation was in question.

In our beginnings, we were possessed of such leadership as it has seldom been the good fortune of a nation to throw up at one time. That a handful of colonies, living under rude conditions,

And—

New tests by leading skin specialists PROVE the amazing mildness of Cashmere Bouquet on all types of skin!

Yes, in laboratory tests conducted under severest conditions on normal, dry and oily skin types . . . Cashmere Bouquet Soap was proved amazingly mild! So use Cashmere Bouquet regularly in your daily bath and for your complexion, too. It will leave your skin softer, smoother . . . flower-fresh and younger looking! The lingering, romantic fragrance of Cashmere Bouquet comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes, far costlier than you would expect to find in any soap. Fastidious women cherish Cashmere Bouquet for this "fragrance men love".

Cashmere Bouquet —In a New Bath Size Cake, Too!

could produce such a galaxy of statesmen and soldier-philosophers as Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, Franklin, Madison, Jay and Clay remains a mystery of sorts. For they were men not only of great vigor, but of extraordinary culture and learning, by the most refined standards: men who could give an account of the human past and did not conceive or build a state by rule of thumb.

Almost exactly midway in our national life as so far run came its only tragic period. That was the great War Between the States.

But there, again, history was kind to America. The greatest threat that hung over us was foreign intervention—specifically British intervention—to tip the scales in behalf of a permanently, or long to be, divided country. It came perilously close to occurring, before wise conservative counsels prevailed in Great Britain. And so again America escaped serious danger to its survival—though this period produced the only American President with a profoundly tragic view of life (despite his humor): Abraham Lincoln, who knew that no nation and no civilization has an eternal lease on life, and that in the mystery of time and within the great cycle of birth, growth and death, states and civilizations, like human beings, rise, flourish, wane and die.

America has not yet fought a really dangerous war, of dubious outcome to her very survival. America has never been invaded by an implacable fanatical foe of more than equal strength. In both the First and Second World Wars, the balance of American strength was computably sufficient to redress the imbalance of the contending foes. This might not have been so—it is dubious whether it would have been so—had Hitler's Germany been able to maintain a status with Russia, to protect the German rear, or actually to expand a benevolent "neutrality" into an outright military alliance. But when we entered World War II, Germany was already deep in Russia; Japan was engaged in China; and the balance was swung by America.

We should all be interested about the future, because it is where we are going to spend the rest of our lives.
—CHARLES F. KETTERING.

All this experience has colored the American mind. It has made us profoundly, even recklessly, optimistic. It has given us the half-conscious feeling that no matter what happens, things will always turn out all right for America. It has made us impulsive. Suppose our leaders in impulsive optimism do make grave errors: we become indignant when the result of the errors is demonstrated—but then, we think, errors can always be undone! Are we not the richest, best-fed, most technically advanced, most scientifically adept and happiest people on the globe? Has anyone ever dared to pick on the United States with impunity? Where are our enemies of yesteryear? Where is Germany? Where Japan? Where Great Britain, the original foe of our national freedom? What would she do today without America? Does not the whole free world today depend upon our material and military aid? Is that not proof enough of our power?

But this characteristic optimism contains an element of great weakness. Suppose this picture is not quite true. Suppose destiny, hitherto so beneficent, may turn away her face. Suppose, instead of an "ever-expanding" economy, we may face great restrictions. Suppose the balance of military power may already be turned against us. It is difficult to realize that never before has the United States, or western civilization, faced an unchecked foe controlling in one centralized integration the land mass of Eurasia from Central Europe to the gates of India. Suppose errors have been made that cannot be redressed, or can only be redressed at the most hazardous sacrifice, without any certainty at all of what the outcome may be. Suppose we are going to have to live dangerously, really dangerously, possibly for years, possibly for decades. Are we prepared for that? Can we gaze into the abyss, without the abyss gazing back into us? Do we know how to live dangerously?

Peoples who have had perpetually to live with danger develop, I think, a philosophical fortitude lacking in younger and more fortunate peoples. They love their countries not only for their glorious achievements but as Desdemona loved Othello, "for the dangers he has passed," and as he loved her, "that she remembered them."

In more ancient countries the sticks and stones of ruins perpetually testify to the passing of all earthly glory.

Where is the glory that was Greece, and where the grandeur of Great Rome, whose empire only encompassed the civilized world? Where the empire of "the Golden Horde" that once ruled from the gates of Muscovy to Peking and the heart of India? Where lie Alexander and Philip of Macedon? Where the vast realm of the sultans that once stood astride the whole Mediterranean basin? Where is not only the Third Reich but the first one, the "Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation," which once ruled Europe from France to the Balkans?

One treads the soil of the "tight little island of Britain," and remembers the original Britons and Celts who gave way to Saxons, Romans, Vikings and Normans—and yet there was always an England, and there were always Englishmen.

And out of melancholy memories of defeat comes a stubborn strength, less brittle, I think, than a more facile optimism produces. Winston Churchill, in the spring of 1941 when London was being ravished by bombs and there was nothing but bad news from every front, said to me, personally, something very great. In answer to a question he said candidly, "I do not know how we are going to win this war. I am only concerned now not to lose it." Then, after a pause, and almost in a whisper, "But if we lose, we shall be remembered. Ages from now, new states will be founded on Anglo-Saxon principles, because we shall be remembered." Mr. Churchill believed that no matter what happened, something English and immortal would fuse itself again into the life of mankind.

In Vienna, posed precariously between the frontiers of two hostile worlds, people say, "The Romans came, and stayed, and went away; the Turks came, and stayed and went away; Hitler came, and stayed and went away; and now the Russians have come, and they, too, will go away."

In Greece, one of the most touching demonstrations of response to danger is the immense building activity going on. People do not ask themselves, "How long will we last in this outpost position? And what good is it all?" They simply assure, in the face of most dubious evidence, that they will last. Greeks speak of the Turkish occupation as though it were a rather trifling incident in a national history that began centuries before Christ. It endured for over four hundred years, yet in a profound sense it was only an incident.

Optimism thrives on substantially founded hope. But those who have learned to live dangerously live on faith, which is deeper and greater than hope, for it is "the evidence of things not seen." And they live on love, the greatest of the abiding things: the love that encompasses the neighbor, the village, the city, the nation, the civilization of which it is a part, the consciousness of its ideals, its hopes, its strivings, its great thoughts, its errors, its defeats.

No civilization is lost as long as its people, or enough of its people, remember it and pass on the memory to others. For as long as it is remembered, it can be re-created somewhere, somehow, in some time. Such memory never concentrates around

(Continued on Page 143)

"Just what we've all been wanting!" says ANTONIA DREXEL EARLE

"This new Angel Face case is a darling! Perfect to tuck into handbag—or muff!" says Mrs. Earle. "A delightful way to carry the makings of a new complexion right along with you!"

New!

Angel Face by POND'S

in a slim and lovely Mirror Case

Foundation and powder all-in-one
—in a perfect case for your handbag

Just out! Just enchanting! Your beloved Angel Face—now in this exquisite, new Mirror Case! Sleek and firm as polished ivory with golden tracery. Nicely clasped and hinged. Inside—a mirror, puff, and luscious, soft-tinted Angel Face! Ideal to carry, Pond's Angel Face is foundation and powder—blended into one velvety, easy make-up! No water . . . no greasy fingers. Goes on with a puff, clings much longer than powder! Can't spill! 6 heavenly skin tones. In its lovely new Mirror Case, Pond's Angel Face is only $1 PLUS TAX

In the much-loved blue-and-gold box—now in two sizes, 89¢, 59¢, plus tax.

Electre steem

All Plastic Base ONLY $5.95
AT DRUGGISTS and electrical appliance dealers Safest Vaporizer Ever Made!

Now announces the FIRST and ONLY

10 to 24 HOUR* VAPORIZER

that triples as a ROOM HUMIDIFIER-DEODORIZER

Split-second steam action helps give almost instant relief from stuffy, distressed feeling of nose and chest colds . . . Absolutely safe! Water in "remote water reservoir" never becomes boiling hot, can't burn or scald. Only 1¼ oz. water in heating chamber. "Insuwall" construction keeps base cool . . . Automatically shuts off when water evaporates. Operates on AC only.

* Furnished with 48½ oz. jar for 10-hour vaporization. Use 1-gal. Mason-type jar for 24-hour continuous vaporization.

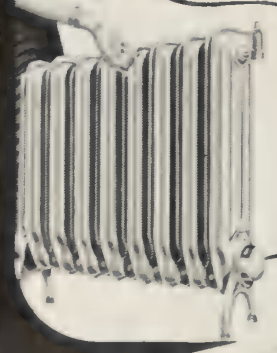
DeLuxe Model: Satin-finish aluminum, ceramic, plastic base $6.95

Both models test run for over 12,000 continuous, grueling hours!*



LIKE MAGIC! PORTABLE STEAM HEAT FROM ANY WALL PLUG!

and the

SAFEST SUPPLEMENTAL HEATER IN ALL THE WORLD!

Why risk the danger of burns from exposed, glowing element or flame-type heaters? Why chance carbon monoxide asphyxiation from faulty gas heaters?

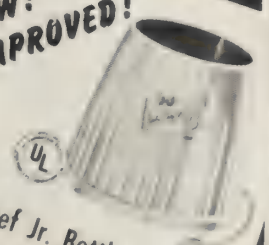
Get an Electresteem — the original steel Portable Electric Steam Radiator for any average size room in your home that's hard to heat . . . for your office on holidays, for cabins, shops, motels, hotels, theatre ticket booths, etc.

8-Section Electresteem $34.95
(Walnut or Ivory Finish)

Smaller and larger models also available.
If your dealer doesn't have one, write us direct.

Electresteem BABY PRODUCTS

NEW! IMPROVED!



8 Baby-Bottle Sterilizer

Easier To Keep Clean
Only popular priced sterilizer that sterilizes 24 hour supply at once. Automatic safety shut off. AC Current. $7.95

NEW! IMPROVED!

Baby Chef Jr. Bottle Warmer

America's finest. Safest. "Insuwall" construction keeps sidewalls cool. Boils baby's nigg. Automatic shut off. AC Current. $1.99

ELECTRIC STEAM RADIATOR CORP.
No. 1 ELECTRIC AVE. PARIS, KENTUCKY

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

"In a democracy such as ours, Clinton, I am free to vote for any candidate your mother and I like."

WITH elections close upon us, it's interesting to read in a pamphlet on THE OHIO WOMAN SUFFRAGE MOVEMENT, by Florence E. Allen and Mary Welles, that the first murmurs sounded just about a hundred years ago. It was in 1850 at the Akron Convention for Women's Rights that a tall old colored woman named Sojourner Truth stood up in meeting, took off her bonnet, and among sneers and snickers that soon died out into complete silence, had her say.

"Well, chilern, what dat is so much racket dar must be somethin' out of kilter. I tink dat 'twixt de niggers of de Souf and de womin at de Norf, all talkin' 'bout rights, de white men will be in a fix pretty soon. . . . Dat man ober dar say dat womin needs to be helped into carriages, and lifted ober ditches, and to hab de best place everywhar. Nobody eber helps me into carriages, or ober mud puddles or gibs me any best place. And a'n't I a woman? Look at me!

"Look at my arm! I have ploughed, and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me! And a'n't I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man—when I could get it—and bear de lash as well! And a'n't I a woman? I have borne thirteen chilern, and seen 'em mos' all sold off to slavery, and when I cried out with my mother's grief, none but Jesus heard me! And a'n't I a woman?"

The women of the country made a good fight and got what they wanted in 1920, and resolved their suffrage party (most of them) into the League of Women Voters. Now they work in factories and in offices and in the professions, they have their husbands and their children, and they live richer and fuller lives—thanks to a handful of their great-great-grandmothers who a hundred years ago didn't mind being laughed at and scorned.

■

We've always taken a dim view of books written by children. There are enough books, we always say, without

(Continued on Page 16)

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"Mother, did you know you're a member of the lost generation?"

Enjoy this beauty on a modest budget

Luxurious Cushionized® Sofa and Chair

by KROEHLER

Make your living room more enjoyable and distinctive with this new Kroehler Crescent-Shaped Sofa and Chair. You'll love the beautiful deep sculptured "French-Knot" Mohair Jacquard Frieze . . . the soft moss edging . . . the heavy bullion fringe. You'll revel in the deep-seated comfort of Kroehler Cushionized Furniture. Ask your Authorized Kroehler Dealer for Suite No. 468-11. You'll be surprised at so much beauty at such a modest price. Choice of seven fashionable colors as illustrated.

®Trade-Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

KROEHLER
CUSHIONIZED FURNITURE
Since 1891
WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS

WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURER

KROEHLER

(Say KRAY-LER)

Furniture

Kroehler Mfg. Co., Chicago 11, Ill.
In Canada, Stratford, Ont.

ONE name quality price

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

Every Home Needs a Piano

The genuine Betsy Ross Spinet is the perfect piano for your home because it is a superb instrument built in the quality tradition of the world's best materials. Here is an instrument famous for musical excellence and enduring performance . . . yet priced to please most families.

Knowing how to play builds self confidence and poise in your children . . . assures them a richer, fuller life. Both youngsters and adults find true playing pleasure in the glorious tone and responsive touch of the Betsy Ross Spinet.

See the newest models now . . . your dealer will arrange terms. Look for the Dampp-Chaser . . . Lester's exclusive moisture control feature.

Priced from $545.00; model pictured $595.00 f.o.b. Lester, Pa.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 13, Pa.
Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
Zone No. _____ State _____ LHJ

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. M. ASTLETT & CO., 39 Broadway, New York 6, N.Y.

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

(Continued from Page 14)

taking authors out of the nursery. Give them a few years before they join the literary army. But there is an exception. HANDY GUIDE TO GROWNUPS is by Jennifer Owsley, an eleven-year-old girl growing on twelve. It is very short, as it should be. And authentic. No one but a child could possibly arrive at the point of view here displayed.

"Relatives are all the people in your family like parents, uncles and aunts, and grandparents. Some aunts and

REPRINTED FROM JANUARY 1948 ESQUIRE. COPYRIGHT 1947 BY ESQUIRE, INC.

"We're sent to bed without supper for less than that!"

uncles are very nice to be with because they know all about you and like you very special the same as parents and yet they do not have to be bringing you up. If they have children too, though, it can sometimes get to be very complicated. Your cousins' parents like them better than you, no matter how good you are being or how much they like you. You might as well understand this and not try to do anything about it."

"The worst kind of teachers to have are the kind that like some children and don't like others. These teachers make a lot of trouble among the kids themselves."

"Adults like to talk more than children do. It is their chief amusement. The longest hours in life are spent when your mother has you by the hand and stops to talk to some friend of hers on the street. Or maybe when she is telephoning is worse. Hardly any mothers will stop talking until you bother them quite a lot. I think it is perfectly fair to bother them as much as you have to."

Jennifer wrote this book of advice for her friends. The camaraderie of the young is unmistakable. And it is almost too bad that grownups are going to read it.

•

"Peter Pan," with Jean Arthur and Boris Karloff, is out in a record album. And an abridged version is to be adapted for children of four to eight. We'd say, stick to the complete version for any age.

•

Children's Book Week—one of the few "weeks" we approve of—runs from November 12th to November 18th. We learned this from the Children's Book Council (50 W. 53rd St., New York 19), which gets out a quarterly Calendar with news and views about children's books, and also a small book: MAKE FRIENDS WITH BOOKS, which has sound articles from Dorothy Canfield Fisher (On Choosing Books for Children), Munro Leaf (Wean Your Child Off the Zip-Zam-Zowie Reading Diet), and many others. Both excellent items, we'd say, for librarians and teachers, booksellers and parents.

A new series of illustrated history books for children, nine to thirteen, is just being

(Continued on Page 18)

"TEN times the valu for just a few cents more?"

Right, young You're that much
when you buy CLOTH window instead of substitutes. Window shade pretty much alike when new. The ence is below the surface. CLOTH w shades, whether oil-painted or coated, have a base of firmly woven fabric—a strong, flexible backbone m take the punishment of constant ha and exposure. That's why CLOTH w shades in thousands of windows stil their original, straight-hanging beaut years and years of service and many ings, while shades of substitute ma get shabby and misshapen in a few months. CLOTH window shades sa money every time!

Feel that Fabric! At your de
the Joanna Western-Quality Demon turns window shades "inside out".
you feel the difference between CLOTH and substitute materials.

Joanna Western Cloth Window Shades
...tell the world you're a smart housek

JOANNA WESTERN MILLS CO. • CHI

Has your child met the Presider of these United States?

Chances are the answer is, "No." But child would not be thrilled to meet American Presidents—and at the sam learn all about these history-making

Here's how your child can b America conscious

"MEET THE PRESIDENTS" is the 1950
sational historical game with a map b giant spinner, and a set of 32 g presidential coins — a collector's ite itself. Everybody should know the int ing historical facts of all 32 presi from George Washington to Harry Tru Here's the game that's American al way through.

On sale at all leading to department stores. Ge game today. Only $3.

S&R Selchow & Righter
200 Fifth Ave., New York 10

Set-for a Couple or a Crowd with Samson folding furniture

'O, at cozy meals . . . or celebrations. Table tops atch dust. Smooth-as-glass n't snag nylons.

UR, at cards. Roomy Sambles and spring-cushion, e-shaped chairs make for a g evening.

X OR SIXTEEN – the more rrier. And the more Samson and chairs you have, the njoyable your parties!

rong enough to stand on!

Get set for a season of hospitality—for open house when friends drop in, for holiday dinners and party buffets. You'll treasure your Samson folding tables and chairs for extra seating and dining space—so smart in your decorative scheme. Vinyl Samsontex upholstery wipes clean with a damp cloth. You'll appreciate the sturdiness of Samson's electrically welded, tubular steel legs and frames. Choose any of the smart, new designer colors.

Folding Chairs, $7.95 each—Folding Tables, $12.95 each

Complete set of 4 chairs and table only $44.75.

Other Samson folding furniture space savers!

Piece Economy Set
mart, new designer ors. Electrically ded, tubular steel s. Chairs $5.95 h. Tables $5.95 h. 5-piece set only .75

Folding Armchair by famous designer
All-steel construction. Outdoor or indoor use. Weather-resistant enamel . . . Patio Green, Azure, Coral, Chartreuse. Only $7.95 each.

King-Size Folding Table
Seats six . . . for cards, entertaining, dining. Electrically welded tubular steel legs, frame. Smart, new designer colors. Only $17.95 each.

Folding Armchair
Spring-cushion seat, foam rubber padded seat and arms. Covered with stain-and-mar-resistant, washable vinyl Samsontex. Only $14.95 each.

There's a Samson institutional chair for every public seating need. For special quantity prices, ask your public seating distributor or write Shwayder Bros. for name of nearest dealer.

YAYDER BROS., INC. ▪ FURNITURE DIVISION, DETROIT 29, MICHIGAN ▪ ALSO MAKERS OF SAMSONITE LUGGAGE ▪ LUGGAGE DIVISION, DENVER 9, COLORADO

3 TIMES YOUR MONEY BACK

if you don't agree with Mrs. David Colin (below) of 2613 E. Shorewood Blvd., Milwaukee, Wis.

Biggest Thing in Ironing since Starch was Invented!

SATINA

What it is . . . How it works . . .

It's blue in color—yet takes the "blues" out of ironing.

It's lightly perfumed to make clothes smell fresher.

It comes in a bar of four little sections—one section for each starching.

It's quickly, easily melted in boiling water or a boiling starch solution.

Added to hot starch, SATINA lends miraculous ease and speed to ironing.

No sticking! No pulling! No caking! Because SATINA gives starched things a satin-smooth finish that really adds wings to your iron!

Yet this "Little Miracle" of ironing costs you only pennies a month!

—AND LOOK AT THE RESULTS!

Ironed with ordinary starch! messy, rumpled, soiled after ordinary wear!

Starch plus SATINA! dirt-resistant gloss helps keep clothes fresher, cleaner longer!

ACT TODAY on Sensational Triple-Your-Money-Back Offer

Offer is made for a limited time only to introduce millions more women to the "Little Miracle" of ironing! It's effective right now on your first purchase of SATINA!

Easy As 1-2-3

1. Buy SATINA at your grocer's—look for the little blue-and-white package with the Winged Iron!

2. Try SATINA in your next starching.

3. If you do not agree with housewives from coast to coast that SATINA added to starch makes ironing 3 times easier—simply mail unused portion to SATINA, Box No. 1540, New York 46, N. Y.—and you'll receive TRIPLE the purchase price you paid for your first package of SATINA!

A Product of General Foods

BUY-TRY SATINA NOW!

(Continued from Page 16)

launched. It is called Landmark Books, and even at our advanced age we'd like to read the lot. The first ten titles are:

THE VOYAGES OF CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, by Armstrong Sperry.

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS, by James Daugherty.

POCAHONTAS AND CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH, by Marie Lawson.

PAUL REVERE AND THE MINUTE MEN, by Dorothy Canfield Fisher.

OUR INDEPENDENCE AND THE CONSTITUTION, by Dorothy Canfield Fisher.

THE CALIFORNIA GOLD RUSH, by May McNeer.

THE PONY EXPRESS, by Samuel Hopkins Adams.

THE BUILDING OF THE FIRST TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILROAD, by Adele Nathan.

THE WRIGHT BROTHERS: PIONEERS OF AMERICAN AVIATION, by Quentin Reynolds.

LEE AND GRANT AT APPOMATTOX, by MacKinlay Kantor.

•

WALK WITH THE DEVIL, by Elliot Arnold, will no doubt make a super duper movie—a combination gangster-war-spy novel taking place in a sunny village and villa in wartime Italy. Complete with a beautiful woman, a sardonic German general, an idealistic American, and a ruthless Italian-American racketeer, it makes first-class reading excitement.

•

A short-short with a moral (Kindness pays—or does it?) is the story of Norman Butler, who did free plumbing for his old friend, Mrs. Skinner, for twenty-five years. Mrs. Skinner recently died at the age of eighty-four, and in her will left Mr. Butler her bathtub, sink and hot-water heater.

THIS WEEK

"I think I've located your trouble."

•

PARADE'S END comprises four novels (SOME DO NOT, NO MORE PARADES, A MAN COULD STAND UP and THE LAST POST) by Ford Madox Ford, now issued in one volume. This, you will remember, is the saga of Tietjens, "the last Tory, the man of principle who is a member of a virtually extinct species, who represents stability and a moral code, and who must now experience the anarchy of the present disruption." It is a story that reflects our own world, the disintegration of an entire way of life, yet it was written as the aftermath of World War I.

•

SON OF A HUNDRED KINGS, by Thomas Costain, should be enormously popular on three counts: its well-known author, whose name has come to be a guaranty of romance and excitement; its magnificent title—the best of the season; and its appealing story. This is not a historical novel, but

(Continued on Page 21)

Rid-Jid

OPEN MESH

makes all your ironing easier!

THERE'S ONLY ONE

Rid-Jid

AIR-FLOW IRONING TABLE

More than fifty million women have bought Rid-Jid ironing tables. And today, more than ever before, Rid-Jid takes the work out of your ironing.

Light and strong, the all-metal Rid-Jid Air-Flow is a lifetime product. Steam and moisture whisk away fast through its open mesh ventilated top. It's fire-proof . . . won't buckle or bulge, can't slip or wobble. It's available in adjustable models that provide correct height for easy ironing.

If it's faster, cooler, easier, safer ironing you want, be sure to look for "Rid-Jid"—a famous name in American housewares—on the ironing table you buy!

THE J. R. CLARK COMPANY

Spring Park, Minnesota

Have you heard what the GIRLS in the back room are saying?

...ALL-NEW MURRAY Matched Steel Kitchens beautiful!"

, every part of your new Murray hen . . . the marvelous cabinet s, the streamlined electric ranges as ranges, the spacious wall and r cabinets . . . are all beautifully e-matched to form one harmoni- picture.
nd there's a Murray kitchen ar- gement to suit your special needs!

"So silent!"

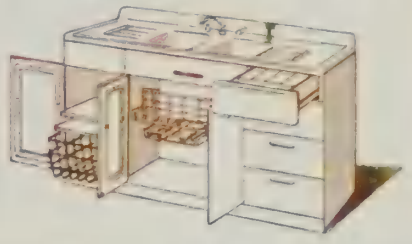
ll drawers on Murray cabinets glide on ass runners...for smooth, silent action. ou'll like the solid feel of the doors, o...all sound-insulated! Spring-action tches never stick. Chromium-plated nges are easy-moving. As with the urray ranges, all edges are rounded . everything smooth to the touch.

"So strong!"

And why not . . . when all frames—ranges and cabinets—are made of welded steel! And to further assure you lifetime service, all sinks and ranges are covered with rich porcelain enamel . . . stain and acid resistant. All cabinets are coated with highest quality hi-baked enamel!

"So convenient!"

The cabinet sink above, being admired by the girls, has a two-level bottle or utility rack, five full-sized drawers, two cabinets, handy vegetable basket, breadboard, and cutlery tray! Units like this, combined with ranges with every modern convenience...will make your "kitchen-time" a pleasure-time!



NO ONE MAKES KITCHENS LIKE

MURRAY

MURRAY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, Home Appliance Division, SCRANTON, PA.

MURRAY

CABINET SINKS form the heart of your kitchen . . . and so are designed to carry all important utensils . . . cleaning compounds . . . cutlery. They are made with double or single basins and drainboards. You can select the 66" long model (above), a 54" or 42" cabinet sink, depending on the size of your kitchen.

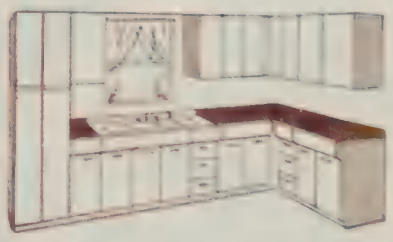
MURRAY

ELECTRIC RANGES for completely automatic cooking! Big 6-quart Deep Well Cooker allows cooking a whole meal at once! Lifts up to become fourth 7 heat surface burner. Giant oven, 17" x 18" x 20", is fully porcelain-enameled for easy cleaning. Oven, Deep Well, and Appliance Outlet (for coffee-makers, and so on) are automatically timed.

As with the gas ranges, you can choose from three 40" long models, a 36" and 20"... to suit your kitchen!

MURRAY



GAS RANGES, styled for easiest cleaning, finest cooking. Burner bowls are stamped right into one-piece top — no dirt-catching seams! "Waterfall" front, no seam at front top of range. Giant "smokeless" broilers, extra-large ovens. All ranges are fully Fiberglas-insulated, have welded frames, are finished with gleaming Titanium porcelain enamel!

MURRAY

MODERN CABINETS for every need! Whatever the shape of your kitchen...whatever the size...there's a Murray cabinet arrangement just for you. Floor cabinets have wearproof, stainproof Vinyl plastic tops. Wall units have adjustable shelves, concealed hand grips, provision for fluorescent lighting!

Wipe sticky drips from jugs, bottles, with damp ScotTowels. Helps keep cupboard, refrigerato

NEW ScotTowels—so strong when wet

YOU CAN USE THEM LIKE A CLOTH!

STRONG WHEN WET! ScotTowels are grand for scouring pots and pans—for dozens of chores. Use with cleansers, polishes, soap—ScotTowels don't fall apart when wet.

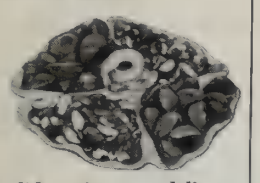
WORK-SAVING, TIME-SAVING! ScotTowels are so handy for wiping up spills, for keeping kitchen neat. After use—just throw towels away. No messy cloths to wash out.

WONDERFULLY ABSORBENT! Drain bacon and other fried foods on fresh ScotTowels. Grease soaks up fast—foods are crisper, more delicious. 150 ScotTowels to a roll.

SOFTER, MORE PLIABLE! Shine car windows and chrome with fabric-soft ScotTowels. So pliable, they mold to your hand like a glove. Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.

SOFT-TUFF

process keeps them soft, absorbent!



'T's BRAZIL NUT MAGIC

says Kernel Nut of Brazil

m Deep in Brazilian Jungles up far reaches of the Amazon come tic Brazil Nuts. And Nature packs m so cleverly in thick, protective ls, that once removed they defy empts to reassemble them!

zils—for Holiday
t Bowl

aditional at holiday time . . . deli-us nibbling any time . . . crunchy, ole Brazil Nuts make the nut bowl sistible.

e them for Candies and Toppings amorize the appearance . . . double tastiness of your favorite candy or e topping with sliced Brazil Nuts.

ated, Ground,
opped—for s, Cakes
d Cookies

y Brazil Nuts in handy cellophane gs to keep on hand in your kitchen.
e free recipe book tells how to use
m in dozens of exciting ways.

SEND FOR FREE ILLUSTRATED
RECIPE BOOK

zil Nut Association, Dept. LH-5
) Hudson Street, New York 13, N. Y. ase send free 32-page illustrated book, "A rade of Brazil Nut Recipes." (Attach this upon to post card if you like.) Please print.
ME.....
REET.....
Y.....ZONE.....STATE....

(Continued from Page 18)

a period piece. Subtitled a "novel of the nineties," it takes place in a town in Ontario, Canada—no doubt the town in which the author was born—and it has an air of provinciality which reminds one of Arnold Bennett's FIVE TOWNS. That it is the '90's you can never forget, what with the horseless carriages, the importance of the telephone, the dreadful architecture, and the rather charming ladies' costumes.

This is the story of a little English boy, sent to Canada with a sign sewed on his back:

THIS IS LUDAR PRENTICE.
He has no money.
He is going to his father,
Vivien Prentice,
at Balfour, Ontario, Canada.
BE KIND TO HIM.

Besides the inevitable comparison with Arnold Bennett, there is also an early suggestion of Dickens. We wouldn't dream of telling who Ludar really was, or what happened to him in Balfour, for that is the novel, but we recommend it to all who enjoy a leisurely, well-complicated story involving a bitter family feud, a love story that does not always go smoothly, a suicide, a murder, and some first-rate minor characters who enrich the whole with humor and tartness and sometimes with loving-kindness.

•

For the many readers of this column who have shown an interest in art books, we recommend IMPRESSIONISTS AND SYMBOLISTS, by Lionello Venturi, a study of the work of Manet, Degas, Monet, Pissarro, Sisley, Renoir, Cézanne, Seurat, Gauguin, Toulouse-Lautrec. An important book about one of the greatest epochs in the history of painting. Fairly expensive, because of its 217 excellent reproductions.

COLLIER'S

"Okay, now draw a house on fire with a fireman carrying a lady down a ladder and a little girl carrying a kitten out the door."

•

A Statement on Modern Art is a three-page statement of principles issued by three art museums "in the hope that it may help to clarify current controversial issues about modern art, which are confusing to the public and harmful to the artist." We recommend sending for it:

The Institute of Contemporary Art, Boston.

The Museum of Modern Art, New York.

Whitney Museum of American Art, New York.

•

A BOOK OF CHILDREN'S LITERATURE, which we reviewed in the August JOURNAL, is a single-volume edition, instead of a two-volume one, as we erroneously reported. Sorry!

Super-values for Christmas!

Arvin

ELECTRIC HOUSEWARES

America's most beautiful automatic toaster! Controlled heat makes every slice uniform—as light or dark as you wish; hinged crumb tray; cushioned pop-up, inspection knob. Insulated walls and handles. Exclusive Sta-Warm Shelf keeps extra toast warm. Operates on AC only. Underwriters' listed. $23.95

America's most versatile cooking appliance! Grills, fries, bakes, toasts! Best for waffles, pancakes, hamburgers, bacon and eggs, toasted sandwiches. Cooking area equals 3 ten-inch skillets. Waffle grids clip on easily. Fully automatic. Heat control; signal light; expanding hinge. Underwriters' listed. $27.95 (Including waffle grids)

Now—enjoy the convenience and luxury of a second oven at amazingly low cost! Bakes rolls, cakes and pies. Roasts fowl and meat. Serves as warming oven while you cook on the open "door." Chrome finish inside and out. Heat indicator. Table Oven with Lectric Cook, less waffle grids, only $32.40 Oven only $8.95.

Arvin Dual-Control Iron—Guaranteed 5 Years!

$13.95 Exclusive Magic Watchman guards against risk of scorching, ends wasted effort. 8-ft. cord, reversible for right or left-hand ironing. Double thumb rest. Weighs only 3 lbs. Underwriters' listed.

Arvin Automatic Iron, Guaranteed 5 Years—$10.95

ARVIN INDUSTRIES, Inc., COLUMBUS, INDIANA

(Formerly Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc.)

Wake them up to a— Real American Breakfast

Featuring CRISP BACON— with pancakes, butter and syrup!

Nourishing Meat for Breakfast

you knew it was good, but did you know it was this good?

Hear that bacon sizzle in the skillet and your appetite says, "Come on, let's eat!"

Meat for breakfast—bacon, sausage or ham—gives you a morning send-off with good, complete protein under your belt. And plenty of complete protein in the breakfast helps you keep feeling and doing your best until it's time to eat again.

Your body must have complete protein —to nourish nerves, to build muscles, to repair tissues, to keep you "going" all through life.

And meat gives you such an abundance of protein that it is called "a yardstick of protein foods." How right you are in liking it!

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE
Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U. S.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

SCHOOL HOUSING CRISIS...

State Help Lags

By MARGARET HICKEY

INTO kindergartens and first-grade classrooms this fall will be crowded the nation's biggest child enrollment. Many communities are unprepared for the school housing crisis. In too many places "war babies" will study in poorly lighted and ventilated basements, attics, corridors, churches, stores and other makeshift classrooms. This means danger to health and safety, impairment to education.

In Washington State, population has climbed from less than 2,000,000 in 1940 to nearly 3,000,000. Huge defense projects during the war, and later atomic-energy developments, added thousands to an already expanding population. From 1940 to 1949, the state's school enrollment increased by 88,586—enough children to fill nearly 300 ten-classroom buildings, according to Mrs. Pearl A. Wanamaker, who has been superintendent of public instruction since 1941.

Districts Tax Themselves

The Washington state legislature appropriated $20,000,000 in 1947 to help support the schools for the following two years. This money was stretched to help 67 of the most needy school districts—less than half of the number needing help. In 1947 there were 135 school districts that reported needing new buildings; in 1948 the figure had jumped to 185. By taxes and bond issues, people in the various school districts raised a total of $56,000,000 and expected the state to match it. But the 1949 legislature had to provide an unusually large budget for social security, so they slashed appropriations requested for other purposes. They allowed only about one seventh of the amount needed for school buildings.

Communities in the state are now awaiting the decision of the voters on two bills in the November general election. One would lift the restriction on the amount of bonded indebtedness for any school district from 5 to 10 per cent of its assessed valuation. The other would enable the state to float a $40,000,000 bond issue in order to match local school funds. Even if these two bills become law, it will not completely solve the problem, school officials say. The need grows faster than the money.

Education Comes First

Meanwhile, children must go to school. "We've had to compromise on buildings, but try to keep the number of children to 37 per teacher and to avoid double shifts," said L. D. Baker, superintendent of Highline, one of the new suburban school districts near Seattle. Highline will get the buildings it needs, Mr. Baker maintains, "because parents see public education as the first responsibility of the whole community and are willing to tax themselves to the limit."

"Next to a loving home, the best guaranty for the security of our children's future lies in the educational opportunities we make possible for them," Mrs. Wanamaker said. "Our parents must see to it that their children have the best."

THE END

Is Met in Longview, Washington

IN Longview, Washington, the Olympic School is a symbol—a symbol that when a group of parents take matters into their own hands, things happen. Big things. "Why, if you had told me four years ago that we'd be begging for an opportunity to increase our own taxes, I'd have laughed at you," a young married veteran said. "But that's just what we did. We had to have new schools for our kids."

The situation was serious. Longview's population had increased nearly 60 per cent in ten years, and was crowding 21,000. Five thousand school children were jammed into 129 classrooms. First- and second-graders, the hardest hit age group, shared classrooms on double shifts—one group in the morning, a second group in the afternoon. And school officials told the community that school enrollment would increase at least 400 pupils annually for six more years. "This is not a prediction," Superintendent of Schools E. J. McNamara said. "This is a fact. These children are already born. Our population increase, brought about mainly by expansion in our lumber mills, is not temporary. It is permanent."

In normal times the state of Washington could have been expected to pay part of the cost of a new school. But communities all over the state were begging for financial aid. And while state funds had helped to add eight classrooms to Longview schools in 1947, there was no chance of any state aid to meet present needs in time.

"We decided to take the bull by the horns and go after enough local money to build a new primary school ourselves," Floyd Brown, a school director, said. "It took a lot of nerve, but the school board voted to ask for two special levies of the legal limit of twenty mills each [a total of $700,000] at the primary and presidential elections in 1948. These elections were only three months apart, which meant we really had to get people interested and keep them that way. We didn't try to fool people either. We just showed them the figures and said, 'This is only the beginning, but if you don't help us now, heaven only knows what we'll do with all these children.'"

(Continued on Page 127)

A year ago primary pupils jammed classrooms beyond capacity. Today, half attend a new school. Concerned citizens, aroused by PTA mothers, voted twice to increase their taxes, build new schools.

This PLUS in his diet

puts SONG in his heart

STOP and think. You can't keep your canary happy on a humdrum diet—perhaps, not even healthy. He needs French's Bird Seed and Biscuit, which give him a complete and appetizing diet of 12 tested ingredients.

LOOK at him go for the Biscuit! There is one in every package of French's Bird Seed—chock-full of elements he would seek if he were out in nature. Feeding them in biscuit form is the practical way, and gives him extra exercise.

LISTEN for those glorious new notes after feeding this famous French's diet for ten days. More than likely, you'll be hearing trills you've never heard before!

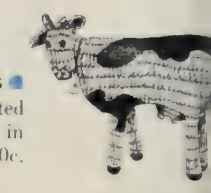
French's

BIRD SEED and BISCUIT

THE LARGEST-SELLING BIRD DIET IN AMERICA

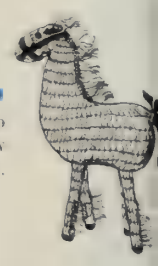
Reference Library

Delightful Christmas toys to make from scraps of cotton, an extra ball of yarn.



2120
MOTHER KANGAROO carries two babies in her pouch. 10c.

2304
MOTHER HEN, three chicks and nest are crocheted. 10c.



2119
HUMPTY DUMPTY is a cotton creation with embroidered face. 10c.

2305
MARTHA COW is a crocheted pattern to be made in two colors. 10c.

2116
ELLIE ELEPHANT can be made from plain material or polka dots. 10c.

2303
PETER HORSE is also crocheted. Add a bow on his tail. 10c.

2111
JERRY GIRAFFE can be made from cotton or oilcloth. 10c.

2300
HIRAM AND SUSAN are crocheted twins dressed in cotton. 10c.

2517
PEASANT DOLL is made in two pieces. Yarn hair, stitched joints. 15c.

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name _____
(Please Print)

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____

State _____

STARRING IN MILLIONS OF HOMES!

"fresh up" with Seven-Up!

ADVERTISED IN AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PUBLICATIONS

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

Mom and Dad enjoy the programs as much as their youngsters do. And naturally, all-family fun means chilled bottles of 7-Up—the all-family drink. Sparkling 7-Up with its fresh, clean taste and delicate flavor, appeals to all ages . . . children and grownups alike. Cheerful 7-Up is so pure . . . so good . . . so wholesome they all can enjoy that "fresh up" family feeling.

Let the happy all-family drink add to your all-family fun often. Keep tempting, lively 7-Up in your refrigerator always. Buy a case wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs on display.

Copyright 1950 by The Seven-Up Company

BUY A CASE TODAY!

FAMILY GAME BOOKLET Family fun suggestions for youngsters and grownups! Send 20¢ in coin to FAMILY FUN, 1523 South 10th Street, St. Louis (4), Missouri, or your local Seven-Up Bottling Company.

You like it... it likes you!

Making Marriage Work

The toughest customer in the world is the man who doesn't want to marry. Here are some of the things it takes to sell him the idea.

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Winning a Man

ALL of us know at least one attractive, marriageable girl who, although she has dates enough, somehow fails to get a husband. Just as a man seems seriously interested, he drifts away, and she is unattached again.

It's little use to say he wasn't the marrying kind. A man usually dates because he wants companionship and diversion, not a wife. But he becomes the marrying kind when some girl makes him realize that marriage with her would be far more agreeable and worth while than bachelorhood.

If a man's interest in you fails to progress, even after several months of dating, these hints may help you find out what is wrong with your approach. They are simple suggestions, practiced by every successful wife, but overlooked by many girls eager to become wives.

Put his convenience first. Wives must, and so should you, for any man worth considering as a husband. Make dates to suit his schedule, and be on time. Don't scorn last-minute dates, for they are today's trend. And if it saves time and energy to meet him away from home occasionally, do so, rather than insist on being called for. If he has to postpone a date, be reasonable and gracious about it.

Don't break dates, either with him, or with another man on his behalf! Though many girls think it good strategy, most men resent it as highhanded and less than honorable.

Avoid dating monotony. First dates usually are planned around definite activities, but regular dating often slips into a monotonous routine of evenings spent together with nothing to do. Consider his pocketbook and his tastes in suggesting something beside movies and dancing—playing cards with others, reading aloud a book you think will interest him, exploring an unfamiliar part of town.

Show that you enjoy yourself in his company. If you allow yourself to be moody, or lackadaisical, or critical, neither of you will have a good time. Be enthusiastic about diversions he suggests; show your interest in his ideas; be responsive to his friends. If he sees that you enjoy life, he's likely to feel that he will enjoy life with you.

Don't try to make him over. To do so is futile in marriage, but fatal when seeking a husband. Don't criticize him, correct his grammar or his manners; don't point out his mistakes, and don't make smart cracks at his expense.

Make him feel at home. Many girls overlook this point, or go about it in the wrong way. Having some of your dates in the setting of your own home is desirable, but your role is to put him at ease wherever you are. If you try to impress him or to act superior, you will both be under a strain. But if you act your natural self, so will he—and this is what he wants.

End the evening on a good note, and end it before he is tired. His last impression of the date will be his clearest, so avoid last-minute arguments. If problems must be settled, discuss them early. And remember that he has to go to work in the morning. If he finds it too taxing to date you frequently and keep up with his work, it won't be work he quits

Be responsive but not aggressive. Show your appreciation by telling him you enjoyed the evening, but don't ask when you will see him again. Such questions are his prerogative. Many girls have lost their chance of marriage by pursuing it—and a man—too aggressively.

Seeking Counsel

AS civilization grows ever more complex, increasing strains and pressures accompany the routine requirements of everyday living. A few families, stable and well adjusted to their environment, never experience serious psychological difficulties. But most families sooner or later are confronted by a situation which they feel inadequate to handle.

For generations, people have sought help in dealing with their problems, consulting doctors about physical ills, lawyers about legal questions, ministers about spiritual difficulties. By the same token, they need help in dealing with the problems arising out of human relationships and emotions.

To seek help in solving a problem is natural, but to seek it from a friend is not always wise. Before consulting an outsider about personal or family problems, consider these pointers:

1. Plan a program in advance, instead of obeying a series of impulses, such as confiding in a stranger at a cocktail party (people do!) or committing yourself to conferences with a "specialist" whose qualifications you haven't investigated.

2. Select your counselor carefully. Because of his special training and experience, a professional marriage or human-relations counselor is a desirable choice, but by no means the only suitable one. However, any individual whom you formally consult should have recognized professional status in a field involving human nature and human problems. Some psychiatrists and clinical psychologists meet this requirement; so do some doctors, lawyers and clergymen.

3. Be guarded about confiding in friends. Often merely putting your problems into words helps to think them out, and there's a good bit of wholesome relief in unburdening yourself to a trusted friend. There's probably little harm in doing so if the friend is carefully chosen, and if you confide in only one. (Don't broadcast your troubles to your entire circle.) But service your friend offers beyond that of a sounding board is likely to do more harm than good. Remember, the amateur has no background of experience against which to evaluate and interpret your situation. The very fact of your relationship disqualifies any friend as an impersonal and objective adviser. And remember, your husband may resent your "gossiping" (as it will seem to him) about your personal affairs, whether he is directly involved or not.

4. Co-operate with your counselor. Do not confide in any counselor until you find one in whose personality and qualifications you have faith. Then, having selected such an individual, tell him the whole story. Otherwise you limit his ability to help. Follow his directions meticulously; if you can't or won't, tell him so. Honesty in your relationship is essential.

Whatever your problem there's someone somewhere who can and will help you either to solve it or to face it. But the ideal adviser probably is not the woman next door.

Do You Trust Your Husband?

By answering these specific questions with an honest Yes or No, you can get one measure of how close-knit and understanding your personal relationship is to your husband.

Without his knowledge, do you:

1. Keep close tabs on his bank account?
2. Arrange to read his personal mail?
3. Question friends about his outside activities?
4. Search the pockets of his clothes?
5. Listen to his telephone calls?

Does he:

6. Volunteer reasons for any lateness coming home?
7. Seem to trust and believe in you?
8. Welcome questions you ask about his work?
9. Share confidential knowledge with you?
10. Accept your statements without question?

Do you:

11. Sometimes wonder if he is faithful to you?
12. Often feel sure he is lying to you?
13. Insist on reading letters he writes relatives?
14. Trap him into revealing things to you?

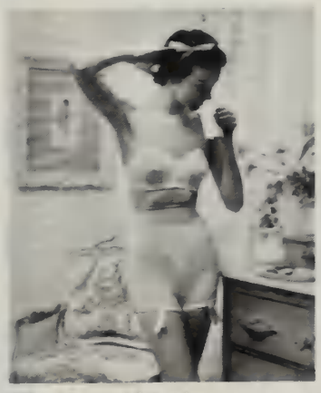
Questions 6-10 should be answered "Yes," all others "No." With a score of 13 or more correct, you two would seem to trust each other fully. Any score of 10 or less indicates an urgent need for better understanding. If he fails to confide in you, as revealed by answers to 6–10, it may reflect your lack of trust in him.

Do You Agree?

Do blond-brunet combinations make good or poor marriages?



Color of hair and complexion has no bearing on married happiness. General physical characteristics are unimportant compared with suitability of character and temperament.

Twice-the-Price Look! Slick, sleek you from strap shoulder to stocking holder. It's "Veil of Youth" and satin elastic with an exquisite nylon marquisette bra top. Low cut, too, for a bare-top view. Pink, black or white. Le Gant #3864.

My! What a buy! Satin elastic coming and going . . . airy "Veil of Youth" on the sidelines . . . long feather-light hipbones to the very top of its highwaisted hug. Pink or white with touches of blue. Le Gant #613. The bra: pink, black or white nylon taffeta frosted with nylon marquisette. #2299.

Thrifty nifties! (Eyes left) . . . all "Veil of Youth." Only 3½ ounces at that. White with blue trim. Le Gant #705. (Matching girdle #704.) Bra is white lace and broadcloth strapless #2083. (Eyes right) . . . Satin for flattenin' front and back. "Veil of Youth" on the sides. Pink, black or white. Le Gant #724. (Matching pantie, #725.) Cup-stitched white satin bra #2227.

Darling, you're right to be narrow-minded!

Be comfy, too, in Warner's "Veil of Youth" fabrics

Fashion puts the emphasis on that slim-as-an-exclamation-point figure. And Warner's . . . thanks to production magic . . . puts the emphasis on Veil of Youth.* It's Warner's fabulous, light-as-a-cloud elastic . . . yesterday treasured for only the costliest girdles . . . today measured into girdles that keep you slim on the slimmest allowance. You'll find many of them in your very own 3-Way-Sizes. At finer stores.

1. Your Warner's is your length . . . whether you're a short, medium, long or extra long.
2. . . . and your hip-size . . . whether you have straight, average or full hips.
3. . . . and your control . . . whether you like a little or a lot.

WARNER'S®
3-Way-Sized
Foundations and Bras

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT® • A'LURE® • STA-UP-TOP® • "FREE-LIFT" • WARNERETTE®
*P... S. Pat. Off.. The Warner Brothers Company, New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

Bandleader! Satin elastic fore and aft. "Veil of Youth" and light featherbones hold that hipline. Two-inch elastic top band. Pink or white etched with blue. Le Gant #653. White broadcloth bra #2076.

IT COSTS NO MORE TO OWN THE FINEST!

New SINGER machines start as low as $89.50

Small down payment • Balance on easy terms • Liberal trade-in allowance

No need to put off buying that machine you've been wanting. No need to take anything but the finest.

Now you can get a brand-new SINGER—a smooth-stitching Electric Portable—for only $89.50, case and all.

Or choose a handsome cabinet model. Enjoy all the wonderful SINGER features that add up to easier, lovelier sewing. Perfect lockstitch. Round bobbin, foot control, sewing light, enclosed motor. Adaptable with attachments for every detail from buttonholing to invisible hemming.

Whatever your choice, every SINGER is the finest value in its price range. For 99 years there's been no substitute for SINGER dependability—no match for SINGER stitching perfection—no equal for SINGER service.

When you buy a SINGER, you truly buy a lifetime of sewing happiness. Choose yours today!

Yours at no extra cost with every new SINGER* SEWING MACHINE!

- Famous SINGER Course in home dressmaking or decoration. Lessons given under supervision of expert instructors.
- Basic Set of SINGER* Attachments, including ruffler, binder, hemmer, gatherer.
- SINGER Warranty of manufacturing perfection.

Many beautiful models! Wide range of styles and prices!

SINGER Budget Portable is ideal for small-space homes, small-size budgets. You'll save so much making clothes and drapes, your machine will pay for itself in almost no time.

Handsome Desk Model makes ideal living room piece. Inside is a smooth-stitching SINGER, built to last a lifetime. Whatever your decorating scheme, there's a SINGER to suit it.

Newest SINGER Cabinet, a modern console with fluted front, matching stool. In polished walnut, mahogany, or blond finish. Beautiful as well as useful, typical of SINGER craftsmanship.

Only SINGER gives you all these advantages:

- Always-available service. No matter where you move—how many years from now—you can always get parts and service from any of a thousand SINGER SEWING CENTERS, coast to coast.
- Course in home dressmaking or decoration given with new machine under expert SINGER instructors.
- Lifetime dependability. Many SINGER Machines are used by second, even third generations.
- Stitching perfection on any fabric.
- Sew at any speed! Latest mo go forward and backward: sew pins, save basting.
- Non-glare SINGERLIGHT.
- Easy dials to adjust tension stitch length.
- Quiet SINGER* Motor, A-C or
- World's most beautiful cabin Styles to fit any home.
- Basic set of attachments with chine. Others available to handle tricky detail—even invisible hemm

FOR YOUR PROTECTION SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade Mark and the "SINGER SEWING CENTER" emblem on the window, and never through department stores, dealers, or other outlets.

At right is SINGER SEWING CENTER at 333 W. Main St., Waukesha, Wis. Hundreds more from coast to coast. For address nearest you, see classified phone directory under SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

*A Trade Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY Copyright, U.S.A., 1950, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries

PHOTO BY MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor —PART 10

"Just what can I expect with the change of life? So many women say it causes all sorts of illness."

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

THE doctor had an unusually pleasant greeting for the slightly graying woman who entered his consulting room.

"I am glad to see you, Mrs. Tow," he aid. "It must be several years since you've een here."

The patient smiled. "The fact is, Doc- or, I've been disgustingly healthy during he last several years."

"I am glad to hear that. I hope nothing ery serious brings you here today."

"Well, I don't know. I guess you should e the best judge of that."

The doctor leaned back in his chair. Tell me about it."

"Well, there are two things that have een troubling me. For the past three ionths I've been bleeding too much with ıy periods—something I've never experi- nced before. Then besides ——"

The doctor interrupted. "Suppose we ake one matter at a time. First of all, just 'hat is your age, Mrs. Tow?"

"I won't be forty until December."

"How old were you when you began to ıenstruate?"

"I was early—just about eleven."

"I have often noticed," said the doctor, that women who commence to menstru- te early in life finish early, while others ho start late—finish late."

"But I'm doing just the opposite. I'm ot stopping—I'm flowing too much."

"I understand. It could be, however, ıat you are working up to the stopping oint."

"Oh, I hope it isn't the change of life! ve been afraid of that ever since my next- oor neighbor had cancer with hers. And ıere are so many women I've heard of 'ho've had all sorts of troubles."

"The change of life is a great big buga- oo to many women. Certainly changes do ccur—the ovaries do gradually become in- ctive, with a resulting change in the alance of certain important glandular ecretions. But I've heard a lot of nonsense uilt up regarding insanity, heart disease, idney trouble, overweight, frigidity and ıany other things, to the point where even n intelligent woman like yourself gets ared at the very mention of the term."

"But my friend who died of cancer ——"

"It is true that cancer most commonly ccurs in late middle life," admitted the octor, "but I doubt if anyone can rightly ang it on the menopause as its cause. Call it a coincidence and you will be nearer right, I believe."

"I'm relieved to hear you say that, doc- tor, but—how about all those other things you mentioned?"

"Mostly wrong, or exaggerated. Frankly, I don't believe them. Take the matter of frigidity. In the course of my practice I've had a good many women consult me for that condition, and I don't remember that any one of them had reached the age of forty. In fact, it's been my experience that the average woman owns a greater sexual activity after the menopause than before, to the point where her life partner is often hard pressed to keep up, the reason probably being that she has had the fear of pregnancy removed. As to those other things—bosh! Some nervous phenomena—yes. Menopausal depressions—not uncommon, it is true. Paroxysmal vasomotor dilation of the surface vessels—hot flushes to you—yes. Indefinite muscle pains—possibly. But insanity and cancer and kidney trouble—all rot, in my humble opinion. Hobgoblins, in other words. Why, you know that the average man, too, has a change of life, don't you?"

"Doctor! You are trying to make it sound ridiculous."

"I'm not. It is a fact. Of course he has no menstrual changes, for obvious reasons. But he is likely to develop certain nervous phenomena, and he's quite likely to lose the edge of his sexual appetite before his wife does. Don't worry too much about these bugbears, Mrs. Tow. Now, let's get down to the matter in question. I'll make a guess right now that yours is a case of premenopausal bleeding."

"Wouldn't it be too early for that?"

"You mean as regards your age? Not at all. The average occurrence of the menopause is between forty-five and fifty. And you remember what I told you regarding your early menstrual onset."

"Yes. Tell me, if my trouble is due to approach of the change of life, what is it that actually causes the bleeding?"

"Most likely a hyperplasia—an overgrowth, that is—of the uterine lining, caused by a deficiency in the development of the corpus luteum—the egg capsule that is left behind in the ovary after ovulation has occurred, and which normally produces a very important hormone. Deficient corpus luteum—insufficiency of one hormone plus oversecretion of another hormone—overgrowth of the endometrial lining resulting. It's a rather complicated process, and opyright, 1950, by Henry B. Safford, M.D. This is e tenth of a series of articles taken from the book be published early in 1951 by Renbayle House, Publishers, Inc., New York, N. Y.

(Continued on Page 210)

GREATER POWER—GETS MORE DIRT!

The SINGER all-new cleaner with Dual Suction

This wonderful, easy-to-use, SINGER* Vacuum Cleaner is first to bring you two fans . . . for the greatest dirt-getting action ever! Call your SINGER SEWING CENTER for a free, home demonstration.

SO EASY TO OWN!

Small Down Payment! Balance on Monthly Budget Terms.

So easy to use—thanks to all these marvelous SINGER extras!

Magic Handle! A new vacuum cleaner design that puts all controls at finger-tip reach.

No unwinding of cord! Gives you extra cord as needed—gets it out of the way as you clean.

More cleaning power when you need it! Two-speed switch for heavy and light cleaning.

No more foot-pedal acrobatics! Touch the trigger—and adjust handle to any position.

Exclusive "floating" brush gently loosens deep imbedded dirt. Adjusts automatically to most any rug thickness.

Easy to carry with Midway Handgrip. Soft Vinylite bumper cannot mar furniture.

Gets under furniture—easily. Housing unit is only 5 inches high.

So easy to store! Hangs flat against wall. Requires no floor space.

For your protection SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade Mark and the "SINGER SEWING CENTER" emblem on the window, and never through other stores or outlets.

SINGER Vacuum Cleaners are sold only through your . . .

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U.S.A., 1950, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.
*A Trade Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

New Self-Washing

DREFT WASHES DISHES FOR YOU

SAVES WASHING...SAVES WIPING SAVES SCOURING

Just SOAK···RINSE···and you're through Dishes and glasses shine···even without wiping

Amazing "FLOATAWAY" Action Does It! It's true! New self-washing Dreft practically washes the dishes for you. You simply let dishes stand in warm Dreft suds for 2 minutes—give a swish of the cloth as you rinse—and you're through. You'll see your dishes and glasses shine—even without wiping.

These self-washing suds save washing, save wiping, save scouring. In fact, while Dreft is washing your dishes you can be doing other things . . . like putting the food away in the refrigerator, or sweeping the kitchen floor.

Even pots and pans soak clean without scouring. That's because Dreft's amazing "Floataway" action gets under grease . . . floats away grease as no soap ever could. Even stubborn grease rinses away without scouring.

Yet self-washing Dreft is one of the mildest suds in the world. Leaves hands beautifully white and soft. Try new self-washing Dreft today. Your dealer has it.

Dreft is safer, gentler for dainty silks, nylons, lovely new wool sweaters than the mildest soap flakes. ★ Leaves hands beautifully smooth and white—because it's so mild and your hands are in the water such a short time.

NEW SELF-WASHING dreft

PRACTICALLY WASHES YOUR DISHES FOR YOU

...rty Years Ago In The Journal

November, 1900, Wall Street aid off one million dollars in ·tion bets: McKinley was re-·ted. Butte, Montana, had forty
:s of smallpox, and in Paris, Oscar de died at the age of forty-four.

he November, 1900, JOURNAL, Ed- ·d Bok calls bric-a-brac "the curse the American home." He adds,
'he average woman is a perfect slave
he useless rubbish in her rooms, ch only offends the eye and accumus dust."

narks the JOURNAL'S health ext. Edward Warman, "I mount wheel at six a.m. daily and e a twenty-mile ride in a little r an hour. On my fifty-third thday I covered as many miles ore noon."

·getables for children: Until a d is three years old, vegetables uld be given very sparingly, ext for baked potato."

o keep lemons, put in a jar and er with cold water. Change the ter each week and they will keep e and juicy for one to two nths."

House for $6600: "The second y has five bedrooms and bathroom
the family and a servant's bedroom.
e latter has a bathtub with a lid. The ant's water closet is in the kitchen."

usecleaning: "Kitchen or pan-floors may be washed with skim lk."

shion note: "Beautiful are the new ite capes for visiting and great ture hats for evening of white felt h broad brims."

od health: "The head of the bed ould, when convenient, be placed vard the north, especially for per-ns suffering from nervousness."

Gossip about people you know, editors you like, and what goes on in New York

BLACK STAR

A big night for Gotham's balletomanes: Toumanova in Les Sylphides.

In the past decade this compelling city, which seems to get whatever it wants, has gradually wrested the honors away from Milan, Moscow, Paris and London to become the ballet center of the world; having now reached the point where, between the great ballet troupes and the finest modern dance groups, there are one or more major performances here practically every evening from the beginning of September to the end of May—not to mention matinees. Even so, it's a struggle to get in, as anyone can tell you here at the Workshop, filled as it is, like the country at large, with devotees of both the Markova and the Martha Graham schools. And it seems to us a reassuring sign in these troubled times that the art of the dance, like music and painting, should have never before in America enjoyed such widespread and passionate popularity. The only trouble is it's so hard to get tickets.

Hugh Kahler's wife has been coming with him into town from Princeton every Tuesday to do volunteer work up in a New York hospital library. Taking her book cart around from room to room one Tuesday, she came to a woman who was very unhappy about having to spend the remaining seven months of her pregnancy in the hospital, and told Mrs. Kahler, "Oh, you can't help me. What I want is an article in last May's issue of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL." So naturally, Mrs. Kahler called up Hugh, and the woman soon had the article she wanted—Pearl Buck's The Child Who Never Grew. Seems she also has a child like Mrs. Buck's, and wanted the article right beside her for the whole seven months, to read whenever she started worrying.

A real-estate man and part-time inventor we met here in town the other day has come up with what he calls his Part-O-Show scheme. If you don't like the movie, you simply walk out; picking up a partial-refund ticket at the door, good for a portion of your admission the next time you come. Up to now, no theaters have taken a chance, but our inventor tells us it's only a matter of time.

The younger your mother was when you were born, the longer you may expect to live, according to a new study. If she was 20 or 25, you may get 10 to 15 years more of life than if she was 40. Today the average life span in the U.S. is over 65 years. . . . There are a million and a half Smiths in this country, not including the Smythes, Schmidts, Smitts, Smeds, Kovacs, Kowalskis, Gowans, Taliaferros, Haddads or Psmiths—which all mean Smith in their native tongue. They even have an organization named TNSDUNSPHI—The National Society to Discourage the Use of the Name Smith for Purposes of Hypothetical Illustration.

We hardly think the 150 How America Lives families so far are ever likely to get together in a group like a convention, almost 700 strong, but according to Ruth Matthews, who tries to keep track of them, they do quite a little corresponding between themselves, comparing notes. She just heard from the Florida Coeys, who wrote her that on a motor trip north last summer they dropped in on the South Carolina Sheheens and the Farmers in Wiscasset, Maine, one of the earlier families in the series. "It was fascinating fun," they said. "We never knew that perfect strangers could have so much in common."

DOUGLAS

The Coeys meet the Sheheens.

By far the most spectacular visit ever made by a member of a How America Lives family was made by Max Conrad (of those extraordinary Conrads, from September, 1944) when he flew solo in his tiny Piper Pacer from Minneapolis to Europe to spend two weeks with Mrs. C. and the children, who are staying at Vevey, Switzerland. His was the smallest plane ever to fly the Atlantic. And if nothing keeps him from making the round trip as planned, he'll have pinned up a double record, and had a swell reunion with his wife and kids to boot. Nine children now, by the way.

Betty Hannah Hoffman, one JOURNAL contributor who always gets into conversations with her cab drivers, asked a driver the other day what he does when a woman starts to give birth to a baby in his taxi (a more common occurrence here than you'd think). "Do you just step on the gas?" Betty asked him. "Not at all," he said. "I stop the cab and deliver the baby, then get to a hospital fast." Seems he learned his obstetrics from a midwife when he was a boy, and has had two opportunities to put them to use—both successful. Says he always keeps a little sterile kit in his cab, just in case. "And what kind of tips did your patients give you?" Betty asked. "Tips!" he said. "Why, I didn't even get paid for their rides!"

It appears from figures uncovered by the homemaking department that Americans give more parties than any other people on earth—600 million of them last year alone. We know that here at the Workshop, when the Goulds have opportunities to step from their offices into the party atmosphere of the Entertainment Room to greet guests from the diplomatic world like Madame Pandit, the Indian Ambassadress; famous correspondents like Marguerite Higgins and John Gunther; movie celebrities like Samuel Goldwyn and Walter Wanger, and stage stars like Helen Hayes and Alfred Lunt, the widenings of acquaintance and exchanges of ideas which take place there in social surroundings inevitably benefit the magazine which you're reading now. . . . Our feeling is that the more parties everywhere, the better for everybody concerned.

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

H.A.L.'s Max Conrad takes off for Switzerland.

The moment was held in time; the sun shone; nothing there was no sound but the sound o
Then Charis knew it was her own sigh as she Valentine walk tou

Love, when it came to the islanders, was simple and decked with flowers. For Charis,

the only white girl on the island, it had to be different.

By RUMER GODDEN

part one of a three-part story

THE noise that the Water Star made as she came down out to sea sounded on the island like the humming of an insect, but it was in the very early morning when most insects are asleep. A few islanders, out early, looked up at the sky—they knew of airplanes—but, seeing nothing, they went on with their daily business. The men out with the fishing boats were more puzzled, but none of them was so far out to sea as the Hat, and no one saw her settle with a first splash on the water. They shrugged their shoulders and went back to their fishing.

The island was the island Mãnoa, now called Terraqueous, in the Indian Pacific, long. 123.15E, lat. 11.40S.

If a magician's stick had been waved and the island had appeared out of the sea, Valentine could not have been more surprised to see it.

"Did your father make a spell?" he asked Charis afterward. He laughed as he asked it, but then it had been no laughing matter.

They had been far out, over the sea, when the engine gave its first cough. Valentine did not turn back; instead, he flew on. "What made me fly on then?" he asked afterward. "It was stupidity. Perhaps I was lightheaded."

McGinty thought so. "You're flaming crazy!" cried McGinty. "If we come down on that sea we'll break up. And if we don't break up they'll never find us. Skipper! Val!"

Copyright, 1950, by Rumer Godden.

"Shut up!" said Valentine. He looked at the altimeter which had at last come to rest. It showed five thousand and dropping. The engine coughed again, and he looked down into the twilight gulf. "Look," said Valentine.

A mark lay like a slur on the horizon. Valentine had not seen it himself until that moment. The engine spluttered and in a minute or two ceased.

"Can you make it?" McGinty's voice was a whisper. His face was white.

Valentine did not answer. He was listening. As the engine ceased, the plane became all sound, the sound of flying; out of the air, muted, except for her own sound, the Water Star glided down on the island that seemed to rise, as islands in a transformation scene, out of the sea to meet her, assuming height and contours. Now Valentine saw it was too far away, but nearer was its satellite, a small rock island rising from a cream edge of lather, and as they circled, coming down on it, it was the shape of a hat, its brim the lather of breaking waves, its crown a hill of grayish rock from which floated a trail of smoke like a feather.

"Volcanic," said Valentine.

The other island was now impossibly far away, a long shape, blue with distance, rising into a mountain.

"We can't reach it," said Valentine, and presently, gently, he brought the Water Star down in the bay of the hat island. The water came up round the Water Star, deluging her, and then (Continued on Page 70)

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

A Breath of

Air

How much competition can a girl take and still believe in herself?

By RUTH HENNING

MEN like Marcia. She's in a class with South Pacific, the Notre Dame team, and swank convertibles. She's tall and slim, with honey-colored hair, deep blue eyes: and when she smiles—that's all brother! Yes, men—unless they have rocks in their heads—like Marcia.

Women like her too. That is, they would if they weren't afraid of her. But they all are. That is, all except me. I live with her—have for three years. I like her fine—and, as the lion tamer said as he was about to enter the big cage, I'm not afraid. It's common talk among my girl friends that I'm not very bright.

"Ellen Carr must be crazy," they say to one another, shaking their heads.

I don't think so. Contrary to public opinion, I'm not ready yet for the man in the white coat—and besides, if he does come for me, more than likely he'll take Marcia instead. Most men do.

Meanwhile, my roommate and I are very happy. We have a small but attractive apartment just off Central Park West. The rent is more than we can sensibly afford—but we think it's important for two girls alone in the big city to have a good address. Besides, our other expenses are practically nil. Except clothes. Without an attractive wardrobe, a girl can't expect to land a good job in the big city—not to mention a husband. (And what girl would be foolish enough not to mention a husband?) Well, to get back to expenses—a person always has to—that's about it: rent and clothes! We rely on the eager male population for our entertainment—and most of our food. Breakfast is only juice and coffee—our figures, you know—and that we stubbornly buy for ourselves. As for lunches and dinners, it's first come, first served. Let me say right here that any girl who isn't a zombi should manage to be taken out to dinner at least four or five times a week. If she doesn't, she might as well pack her bags and go back home, because she'll never make the grade here!

Marcia is a model. You know, cold cream, hand lotion, smart fashion magazines, and plenty of tooth paste because of that high-powered smile. She earns big fees when she works—but she's always broke. Clothes, of course. I really can't blame her, though, because with a figure like hers, what else can she do? I mean, you wouldn't put a Rembrandt in a dime-store frame, would you?

Not being so generously endowed by nature, I earn my living by my wits; i. e., writing advertising copy. I work for Sloan, Markham and Bricker—and my specialty is jingles:

Like salad with garlic? Or onions? Or cheese?
Then eat it—enjoy it—but don't forget, please,
It's Anti-Breath Gum for the man who is wise
And his girl won't be dancing with tears in her eyes!

Hold your fire, folks! After all, I didn't originate the darn things. I only supply the current demand, which, Allah be praised, is (Continued on Page 234)

ILLUSTRATED BY

"Well, what did you expect, you dope?"
my other self taunted me.
Like Marcia

She thought smugly,
"I look seventeen
at least.
But I even look older than Anne."

ELIZABETH brushed flakes of powder from the skirt of her new suit and took the clean white gloves out of her bag. She had never felt so grown up before, and, though she did not know it, she would probably never feel so grown up again.

It had all started last Tuesday afternoon. "There, you see!" Doctor Hendricks had said, handing her a mirror. "That's what you get for being such a good girl and coming week in, week out, for two years. Here you are, only—what are you, fifteen?"

She wasn't, quite, but she nodded, flattered.

"And I'm all through with you and you're a beautiful girl. Why, I've got some girls in college just starting to have their teeth straightened!"

Not bad! Not bad at all! she had thought complacently, looking into the mirror. It was worth having a sore mouth and a headache every Tuesday, worth not being able to chew bubble gum or eat cookies because of the elastics. Her mouth felt sort of sad and deserted now, and after hating it to begin with, she had got used to the toothy look the braces gave her; but just the very word "braces" had a babyish connotation that made her glad to be disassociated from it.

Honestly, it was wonderful the way things seemed to happen all at once! That very same day Anne's letter had come, asking her for the spring hall-dance week end at college. "I think I can get you a date for it from the Den," she had written—"the Den" being the favorite name for a small and famous men's college in the same town—"but if you'd rather just come for the week end and skip the dance it won't matter to me in the least."

The droop, Elizabeth had thought disgustedly. Honestly, just because Anne planned to major in political science wasn't any reason why she had to deliberately avoid these social occasions!

"It might be fun to go on a blind date," she said, "but only if it's understood she's not doing me a favor getting me a man."

"That's no way to talk!" Daddy rattled his paper scoldingly. "I think it's very nice of Anne to offer to have you."

But mother understood. She knew what a cross it was, having an older sister who was an eccentric. Elizabeth loved Anne so tremendously she would cheerfully be chopped into little bits to save her, but she would, even more cheerfully, be chopped into smaller bits before she would allow her sister to dominate, guide, advise or influence her in any way.

Honestly, it was amazing how big a suitcase seemed when it was empty and how teeny it turned out to be when you started to put just a couple of little things like loafers and a bathrobe in. Mother had mailed the new evening dress and slippers to Anne, special delivery, but she absolutely had to take her I Beckon nail polish and oily polish remover, and her little flask of Le Clair Mimosa and the bubble bath she'd got for Christmas. Anne lived in such a "life is real, life is earnest" atmosphere she probably didn't own more than two shades of nail polish.

Mother was very sweet and helpful, sealing bottles with cellulose tape and wrapping them in tissues, but she refused to even try to get the bunny-fur jacket in. "You can wear Anne's shortie." Over a blue-net evening dress? Now, honestly, I ask you! But she didn't argue the point, because, even as it was, she had to roll her jersey sack dress up into the bottom of her shoulder-strap bag. And, anyway, she had plans for suggesting wistfully to Anne that since she had worn her stenciled lapin coat all winter, wouldn't it be a "guestly" thing to let her sister wear it for just one night and wear the shortie herself?

Mother, as usual, had tried to foresee all eventualities. "I'm sure there won't be any drinking (Continued on Page 135)

ILLUSTRATED BY ALEX ROSS

By MEL HEIMER

THERE is a special brand of hot October sun that is dispensed over the Princeton campus on football afternoons, and Tim Carroway lolled in it lazily, on his seat in the top row of Palmer Stadium. By lifting his head, he could peer over the concrete guard wall and see New Jersey stretching out on all sides, cloudy green and golden. By dropping his head on his chest a bit, he could see the Princetons and the Pennsylvanians on the lush field, practicing passes and place kicks. And by turning his head slowly from side to side, like a cameraman making a panoramic photograph, he could see girls of all sizes, shapes and possibilities. It was enough to make a man feel young. Even a man of thirty-five.

Not that Tim was that imaginary character, the average man of thirty-five. There was an undergraduate air about him as he sat there in the October sun, head bare, pipe smoldering and, of course, flannel slacks gray. Birth certificates tell a grim tale and there is no denying them, but some men give in slowly, as in Carroway's case, to the Ravages of Time. You had to edge close to him to see the squint lines near the eyes from serving into the sun on too many Sundays, or to observe more surely the flat tightness of his tanned skin, long since pared of its adolescent fat.

If you had only his heart to examine, it is doubtful that you could tell. It was, you see, very light.

He put a fresh match to the pipe and peered through the clouds of smoke at the blonde in the dark blue wool suit, three rows below. There was a mum pinned to her lapel, but her hair was yellower than the flower. Tim thought, Princeton men don't date bleached blondes. Then he thought again. "Sweetie," that 52nd Street chorus girl had said, "Remember, I got to be back in town in time for that first show." Sic transit gloria mundi, circa 1937.

There was another blonde, five rows below, wearing heavy glasses and looking good. And a brunette off to the right. And another brunette about six rows down between two white-shod undergraduates. In the sky over the open end of the stadium's horseshoe another undergraduate was piloting a Piper Cub somewhat shakily, in his Saturday-afternoon flying lesson. The band left the field below and the stalwarts of the gridiron got ready to die for dear old Princeton/Pennsylvania.

Bud Kinnaird said, "Not Carroway?" The fat one paused, getting his breath after the climb, and pushed the girl with him onto the bench in front of Tim. "Carroway? At a football game here? I thought you said we could hang you by the thumbs before you came back to a game here."

"They're putting down the paddle-tennis courts at the club," Tim said (Continued on Page 222)

A girl just out of college may be in love with life, but she's more likely to be in love with a man

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

Bachelor

"I read in a book,"

he told her casually,

"that most young girls actually are scared of being kissed on a first date."

I TOOK IT LYING DOWN

By MARIAN SPITZER

When Marian Spitzer's doctor told her she had tuberculosis, would have to lie flat on her back for months, she pretended to agree, but crossed her fingers. "It isn't cheating if you don't get caught," she thought. Here is the story of a woman who cheated—and almost lost her life.

"I still have a checkup and X ray twice a year. So do my sons. To that extent, they're safer than children never knowingly exposed to TB."

IF anyone had ever suggested, before the blow fell, that I would spend more than a year of my life in bed, flat on my back and virtually incommunicado, I would have said he was crazy. Me, sick?

From earliest childhood I'd had what seemed an inexhaustible supply of energy. My working life began when I was just past sixteen. One of my classmates had an uncle in the publicity department of the old Fox Film Company. Somehow I talked him into getting me an interview with the No. 1 siren of the silent screen, Miss Theda Bara. That night, instead of doing my Latin, I wrote the interview and sold it to a fan magazine for $15.

Copyright, 1950, by Marian Spitzer Thompson. This is a condensation of the book soon to be published by Random House.

In Hollywood, Marian Spitzer wrote scripts for same studio where husband, Harlan Thompson, was a producer. . . . Facing page, on way to movie première.

After that, naturally, I was a writer. Actually I didn't write anything more until I got a job as a cub reporter on the Brooklyn Times so I could stay on in college. College, by the way, was the journalism department of New York University.

It meant getting up at six, traveling on two subways to Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, staying at the paper from eight in the morning until three in the afternoon (with no time out for lunch, just sandwiches brought in by a copy boy); another subway ride to Washington Square, classes from four to seven, a snatched dinner and back to Brooklyn to cover a night assignment, and the hour's ride back to Washington Heights. That was weekdays. Saturdays there was no school, but we got out a Sunday paper and the hours were from morn to midnight. The salary was $12 a week. But I loved it!

On Sundays there was a certain amount of helping around the house, and after all, a girl had to have some fun, didn't she? I was always out of breath from running, but I made it. And I laid a firm foundation for my future illness. I was not quite eighteen at the time, the great danger period for picking up TB.

I kept on running. A New York paper next, The Evening Globe, and after that several years of theatrical publicity.

Then it was the thirties (the century's and mine). Having by this time a husband, a son and a Hollywood contract, I had to run faster than ever. But I still loved it. It was no trick at all for me to get up at seven to play with Tommy before leaving for work, spend an eight-hour day at Paramount, where I was in the story department, drive six miles home to Beverly Hills, bid a breathless good night to Tommy, change my clothes and dash off to a party that would last well into the morning. And there was always a script to read just before turning out the lights.

Sometimes the party would be at our house, Harlan's and mine. Harlan worked at Paramount too; he was a producer.

"I never lie down," I would say with a smug, superior air. "I just don't know what it means to be tired."

Well, that was true enough. I didn't know what it meant to be tired. The fact was, though I didn't have sense enough to recognize it, I'd been tired for years.

And that's where the lung specialist came in. I shall call him Dr. Henry Marvin, a reasonable approximation of his name. I was dragged, under violent protest, to his office by our family doctor, after I had failed to make a satisfactory recovery from the birth of my second son, Eric.

Eric was only three weeks old when, disregarding Harlan's plea and the doctor's orders, I stepped out of bed and into a new evening dress and went to a dance. It was Adolph Zukor's Silver Jubilee and everyone in Hollywood would be there. I couldn't resist showing off my new slim figure. I couldn't resist showing off my recuperative powers. I just couldn't resist showing off.

But it wasn't much fun. I felt awful. Tired, weak, irritable. For once in my life I suggested going home early. Then it developed that Harlan had to go to New York for the studio, so I invited myself along. My weight kept dropping and my temper rising.

By the time I got back to Hollywood I had a full set of symptoms: haggard face, afternoon fever, night sweats and a small persistent cough. I still didn't think there was anything really wrong, but Harlan called our doctor. He took one look and called Doctor Marvin.

Doctor Marvin, an eminent man in his field, had an air of pleasant paternal authority. With bored indulgence I submitted to his questions, his proddings and his (Continued on Page 147)

Our own young marrieds

This is third in a series of articles by young marrieds on the JOURNAL's staff. In this piece—ten of their pet decorating ideas, long on ingenuity, that can be yours, or anybody's, for very little money.

FOR some of us, a house in the country with a garden and vegetable patch is where the heart is; for others, like Ellie and John Simmons, for instance, home is a two-storied city apartment. We're brownstone-dwellers, suburbanites and housing-development citizens—and some of us have been all three, at one time or another, for we've all moved at least twice since our marriages (John and Mary Adele Morris hold the record—they moved fifteen times in one year while John was in the Army). So we'd vote unanimously for emptying the furniture kitty at the outset into one or two big pieces that could be the foundation stones for furnishing any apartment or house, anywhere—like a comfortable bed (an essential luxury), a really good couch, big enough to sleep a guest if need be, or a sturdy, expandable dining-room table, maybe. For the (Continued on Page 130)

Ellie and John Simmons

Polly and Todd Cooke

Mary Adele and John Morris

Nancy and Fred Russe

Pink sheeting-by-the-yard becomes a graceful, inexpensive fabric for dressing up your windows. The coffee table was once a junk-shop find—a Jacobean bench transformed with lacquer, a new top.

Split-bamboo blinds with a very special touc can take the place of draperies. This on is woven through with ribbon and knitting wool, tasseled at the sides

Another fourth- or fifth-hand bargain—a grade-school desk, painted and lined with flannel, is now a cache for the family silver.

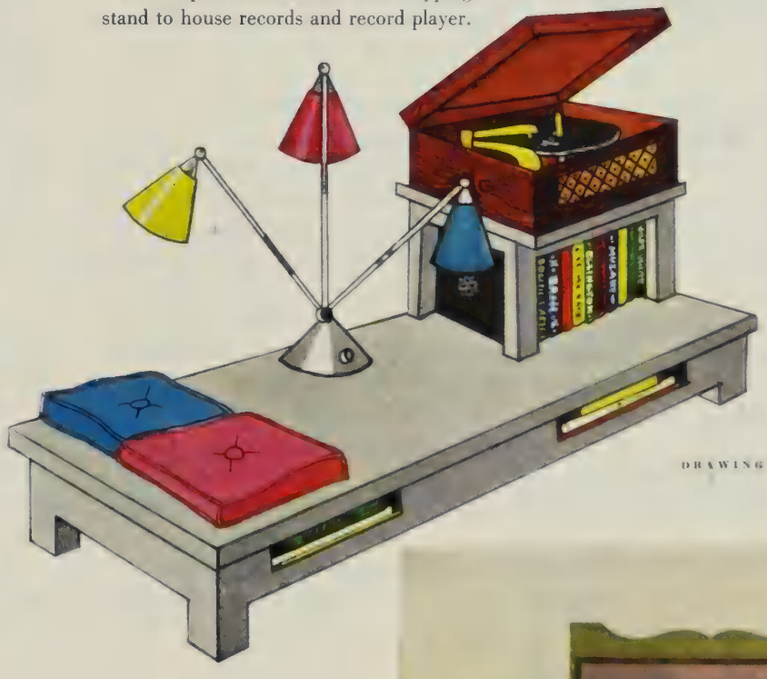
PHOTO BY HAROLD FOWLER



Two lamp bases to be made at home. These originated in a local lumber company: one, a sanded section of a 6″ x 6″ pine board; the other, a cut-down stair baluster.

Brick-and-board bookcases are an inexpensive solution for anybody's growing library—handsome too. They'll expand to fit your records, outsized books.

Two tables become one table-of-all-trades.
The base: a student table cut down to 14″; its superstructure, a cut-down typing stand to house records and record player.

DRAWINGS BY ELLIE SIMMONS

For a small Roy Rogers, etc., fan: a chest with leather drawer pulls,
a pegged board for hanging cowboy hats and Indian headdresses.

A chest of drawers and an upended bookcase become a two-in-one china cabinet; the top shelves for decorative, pretty things, the drawers for everyday dishes.

Refrain (slowly)

With Songs In

HALSMAN

THE STORY OF RICHARD RODGERS

His South Pacific music has become an obbligato to American life, but he once considered selling babies' underwear, decided against it because he's stage-struck.

by LINCOLN BARNETT

MOST critics agree that America has produced seven great popular composers. Four of these—Stephen Foster, Victor Herbert, George Gershwin and Jerome Kern—are dead. But the tradition they established is carried on today by three equally gifted men. Irving Berlin, Cole Porter and Richard Rodgers can each number his songs in the hundreds. Many of them will be heard as long as there is music on earth.

Youngest of the three is Richard Rodgers. At forty-eight—nine years behind Porter, fourteen behind Berlin—Rodgers finds himself now on a steadily ascending curve of success. His South Pacific music, which recently won him a 1950 Pulitzer prize, has been the obbligato of American life for the last year. Around the clock the graceful, unforgettable phrases of Some Enchanted Evening, I'm in Love With a Wonderful Guy, Bali-Ha'i and Younger Than Springtime arise sweetly from radios, phonographs and juke boxes, from bands in big hotels and small night spots, and from the lips of plain people whistling at their work. Soaring through the upper atmosphere, they circle the globe and bloom again into audibility in Cape Town, Melbourne, Tokyo and in lonely outposts by the Arctic and southern seas, wherever an antenna cuts the sky. Week after week last year they topped that barometer of popular esteem, the Hit Parade, which never before had been headed by so many songs by a single composer at the same time. Sales of the sheet music, according to a publisher whose house antedates Victor Herbert, have surpassed everything in the memory of the trade.

Granting that the qualities of music are difficult to translate into words, most musicians agree that Rodgers' melodies possess certain characteristics which set them apart from the work of other composers. Even untrained listeners vaguely sense the idiom that relates the music of South Pacific and Oklahoma!—and earlier Rodgers' songs like With a Song in My Heart, Blue Moon, Yours Sincerely and My Heart Stood Still.

"I could spot Dick's songs anywhere," Cole Porter once remarked. "There is a certain holiness about them."

By this Porter did not mean to attribute a liturgical mood to Rodgers' music, which is notably danceable; he referred to something rather more fundamental. A drama critic once defined it by saying, "Rodgers' melodies get inside people and do something to them." Tender and winsome, deeply romantic, delicate yet warm, his songs affect most listeners emotionally.

"Trying to compare different composers," a well-known New York music editor observed recently, "is like trying to compare different women, each of whom may attract you—or different jewels, say a diamond, a ruby and a pearl. All three of our great living

Songs from South Pacific

PHOTOS BY RICHARD TUCKER

Dites-Moi (Tell Me Why)

A Cock-eyed Optimist

Bali-Ha'i

His Heart

JOHN SWOPE

People ask Rodgers why he doesn't write more music. "If I wrote all the time," he says, "I suppose I could turn out a song every day. What would I do with them? Who'd want them?"

melodists—Berlin, Porter and Rodgers—have unparalleled natural talent. Berlin in particular has a genius for the pure, simple tune that will captivate your ear at first hearing and haunt you forever. Porter has written what is probably the most consistently witty, brilliant and sophisticated music since Sir Arthur Sullivan. But where Cole Porter electrifies you with his wit and Irving Berlin captures you with songs you will remember always, Dick Rodgers digs into your heart.

"You must not forget, moreover, that Rodgers is more than a song writer; he is a mature and versatile composer who can apply himself with equal facility to an overture, ballet music, musical dialogue or a valse brillante.

"To me the most astonishing thing about Dick Rodgers is that he is still growing; his stature increases with every score. I can think of no precedent in the entire field of music for this phenomenon of continuous self-transcending growth. After Oklahoma! many people felt he could never reach that peak again; now South Pacific is a still greater triumph. There seems to be no limit to the never-ending fount of his talent. But even if he never composed another note, he has added a chapter to this country's musical history. His music is timeless—it has already entered the realm of the folk art of America."

Among myths propagated by the movies and other sources of vulgar superstition is the notion that all composers fall into two types: the highbrow, a shrill and irascible aesthete with long, skinny fingers; and the jazz or popular composer who is generally a disorderly, profligate fellow with dirty nails and a taste for marijuana. Both types are completely impractical and sit up all night surrounded by unwashed coffee cups. In the light of this illusion, Rodgers is somewhat of a freak. He is a carefully barbered, punctual and punctilious man who likes to work in the daytime, drinks lightly, does not smoke at all, commutes between his New York apartment and a house in Southport, Connecticut, and dresses in well-tailored suits that run to Oxford gray with a pin stripe. He has been married only once and greatly enjoys the company of his wife and two daughters—Mary, who is a junior at Wellesley, and Linda, who attends the George School in Pennsylvania—both of whom have considerable musical talent. Rodgers is one of the best croquet players in the United States. He is also one of the most successful businessmen in the United States. His well-known partnership with Oscar Hammerstein II, over and above its fame as a happy artistic collaboration, is Big Business.

It is Rodgers rather than Hammerstein who is the active partner so far as actual routine is concerned. He signs pay checks, reads contracts, dictates letters and generally presides over the operations of their efficient office staff. These mundane activities rather puzzle Rodgers' friends, who often wonder why a man whose present and doubtless future fame rests securely on his musical accomplishments should choose to spend his time at a desk rather than a piano.

"He says he doesn't enjoy it," Hammerstein told a friend recently. "But he must. Otherwise why does he do it?"

Several reasons have been advanced. One is that Rodgers continues to adhere to his antecedents. He was not born to the theater. His father was a successful doctor, his grandfather was a successful businessman, and Rodgers has always cherished a great admiration for both of them. This allegiance to

(Continued on Page 194)

I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Outa My Hair

I'm in Love With a Wonderful Guy

Some Enchanted Evening

Stole-jacket fashion in Tattersall check by Schiaparelli. Suède-and-calf bag.

Sapphire-blue velvet bow pulled through a sealskin cuff. Fath taupe wool dress.

Pleated blouse, velvet jacket lined in mauve-pink chiffon. wool skirt, by Jacques Fath.

The touch of velvet on wool—rose-taupe with blue, Gres design: Matching gloves.

PARIS POINTS

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Parma violets. flower of fashion. Gloves in a slightly paler tone, worn with pale gray wool dress designed by Gres.

TO FEMININE FASHIONS . . . and American women will love them. Look for gray, and more gray—it's so wearable. For beautiful blues, violet, mauve and purple. Town-tweed suits have becoming velvet collars. Although straight and full coats predominate, the fitted coat is a coming trend. The newest silk is winter-shantung, and soft wools are combined with satin, velvet and taffeta. The small detail, the way of a neckline, the way colors are worn—these are the fine points of fashion which Paris does so well. Prettiness, plus wearability—the fashion and the forecast.

ıe coat with fur—Molyneux's luxurious taupe-gray wool with atching fox scarf-collar. Voluminous but not bulky. Pale gray gloves.

The scarf-suit in light gray flannel with a black pin-seal belt. By Dior.

Balenciaga's feminine town-tweed, velvet collar. Winged calot.

VIOLETS are in season, on hat or suit or dress. Scarves are everywhere, and little satin cravats. Belts are straight, and wider. The fashion for gray is reflected in a soft gray veil, pale gray gloves. A black coat may have a yellow wool gilet, a black jacket be lined with red silk. Small hats, half pillbox, half toque, are often in color—dark red with greige tweeds, blue feathered toque with matching taffeta.

PHOTOGRAPHED IN PARIS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

PARIS

Princess silhouette—Dior's façonné brown-and-black taffeta dinner dress, jet buttons and jewelry. Small black velvet Spanish-type pillbox.

Black accented with scarlet—red roses and scarf veil by Dior.

Pleats are still in fash

A winter-shantung by D

PHOTOGRAPHED IN PARIS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Dior's violet coat, significant ette for day or evening. Na

POINTS

Black fitted wool coat with a cape shoulder neckline, yellow wool gilet, by Gres. Dior's velours skullcap.

ack sheer wool afternoon dress, deep aped neckline, white roses. By Fath.

Slate-blue faille taffeta for evening—Fath's princess dress with fullness in the skirt, side pockets. Matching feathered pillbox in deep blue.

Mrs. Warren at home in Sacramento, in afternoon black chiffon. Below—her slim gray wool travel coat.

Governor and Mrs. Warren with their six children.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT HER

The Governor's Lady, Mrs. Earl Warren, of California. There are many things about her—her friendly smile, her pretty hat, her natural gaiety, her younger-than-she-is appearance . . . the resourceful way she handles her constantly public-and-private life with the kind of energy that takes her through many an 18-hour day.

Mrs. Warren's San Francisco suit, right for travel anywhere for fall, winter or spring—gray-mixture wool. Right: navy silk-faille suit, with velvet hat and bag.

Brocaded silk dinner-and-evening coat, worn with jeweled veil.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

Mrs. Warren has lived in the Governor's Mansion in Sacramento for nearly eight years. She has six children, four of them still at home. Her wardrobe follows a consistent plan, year after year. She is never without a chiffon afternoon dress, a silk luncheon suit, a lace or chiffon evening dress for dinners or receptions. She keeps them in black or navy blue, wears them with pearls, white gloves, suède or satin sandals. She adores hats, buys them impulsively, saves them "till they go with something." She has half a dozen rayon slip-on dresses, all alike, for breakfast and gardening. Her travel suit is usually gray flannel or worsted, her coat an all-season, all-occasion, not-too-heavy, straight-line style. • By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Mrs. Warren likes evening dress with sleeves and with graceful skirts that sweep the floor. This one is blue lace over taffeta, worn with pearls.

What do you make of your basic dress?

The most valuable dress in any wardrobe could be a well-fitting basic. We feel that by starting with a good black wool daytime dress or a black taffeta strapless evening dress, you would have not just two dresses, but several. We have chosen two classic, timeless Vogue Patterns, and have surrounded them with JOURNAL ideas to show you the possibilities of these black dresses. ▪ BY NORA O'LEARY

White linen collar and cuffs, braid trim, 2667. Velvet halo, 2668.

Plaid bag, fringed beret, glove cuffs, 2666.

Turquoise velveteen cowl, hat; ball-fringe trim, 2669.

Red corduroy hat, crocheted crown, belt and bag, 2670.

Your black wool basic is slim and unadorned. It buttons in the back and has a self facing at the neck. The pockets are optional. Vogue Design No. 7189, 12 to 20. It has excitement worn with a checked-lined matching stole and checked hat, 2665. It goes to the office with plaid accessories . . . to lunch with white linen braid-trimmed collar and cuffs . . . to dinner with a velveteen cowl . . . looks sporty with red corduroy.

To order Journal Accessory Patterns, 15 cents each, turn to coupon on Page 24.

White pleated organdy attached to a velvet ribbon looks pretty, 2673.

Velvet-appliquéd net border bolero with velvet tie at neck, 2674.

A yard of 4-inch-wide heavy Venise-type lace makes a pretty border around top.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LESLIE GILL

© VOGUE

Plaid ribbon or fabric tied in a bouffant bow on the skirt, 2672.

Your basic evening dress is a strapless black faille taffeta with sweeping six-gore skirt. (The pattern also has detachable sleeves.) Vogue Design No. S-4118, 12 to 20. For entertaining at home you might wear it with a tiny bolero of gold velveteen with black tassels, 2671, or with a velvet appliquéd net jacket. For more formal evenings, add a white organdy ruff, a border of heavy Venise-type lace, or a great plaid ribbon or fabric bow on the skirt.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. *(Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Other views and prices are on Page 209

Let's face it—

FOR many years—as a matter of fact, since before the First World War—it has been my business to follow carefully what public men and experts, what leaders of public opinion and journalists say about war and peace. I have learned how human it is to err. No one foresaw clearly the great wars and the tremendous revolutions of the twentieth century. No government has been well prepared to deal with them. No one has always been right. Even our wisest and most prophetic leaders, the men to whom the western world owes its survival, made many a serious misjudgment of the facts and fell into errors in policy that are costing us dearly.

In the sight of God we are all of us most fallible and no one has a right to say he told us so. I have noticed, too, that those who have most often been right—notably Winston Churchill—have been the least self-righteous about it. They remember how often they have been wrong. But those who have rarely foreseen what was coming are often the loudest and most unashamed in their hindsight. Senator Wherry and Senator Taft, for example, are not ashamed to make speeches in 1950 suggesting that if they, rather than Churchill and Roosevelt, had been at Yalta in 1945, how much better they would have handled Stalin! Two very baldheaded men selling a hair restorer would be equally impressive and convincing.

For my own part, I have come to feel queasy about anyone's estimates of the present and his predictions for the future until I know that he has faced up—at the very least among his intimate friends—to his own mistakes in the past. In these matters an honest man can be defined as one who is determined not to fool anyone, not even himself. The deep confidence which the country feels in Senator Vandenberg stems, I believe, from his honesty in recognizing instead of trying slyly to hide, how, why and when he changed his mind and his position. In this terrible century in which we are fated to live, a good working maxim is never to trust anyone who thinks he has always been right.

The world in 1950 and our own position in the world are very much worse than I thought likely when, in 1943 and 1944, I was writing a book on the settlement of the war. I have thought a great deal about where and how I went wrong. For myself at least this painful exercise has made somewhat clearer our present predicament.

My mistakes did not arise from thinking that the Soviet Union shared our ideals of world peace and of international collaboration. Before the war I had spent too many years of studying the totalitarian state in its Fascist, Nazi and Communist forms to have any illusions about that. The Soviet Union was an unexpected though, nonetheless, an invaluable ally in the war. But it was Hitler—not Churchill and Roosevelt—who made the Russians our allies. We were allies because we had the same enemy, and not because we had worked out an understanding and had entered the war as allies.

So in a book published in July, 1944, I advocated a showdown with the Soviet Union, using as a test of their intentions the response they would make to a proposal to incorporate in the United Nations Charter a bill of rights, saying, "If they refuse, we can still do our very best to get on with them, persisting through the ordinary channels of diplomacy in the effort to prevent a third world war. But if they refuse, it will be better not to deceive ourselves, and to become relaxed in the semblance, which will have little reality, of universal society for the maintenance of peace."

Even in 1944 it was evident that the Russians would refuse, that their ultimate aims were not compatible with our ultimate aims, and that our relations would at the best be difficult, tiresome and dangerous. So it was no illusion about Stalin and about communism and the totalitarian state which led me to think in 1944 and even in 1945 that the world situation could be made better than it now is.

My own mistake was, I think, fairly common at the time. I thought that immediately after the war Britain would be much stronger than she proved to be. I thought, also, that Chiang Kai-shek would hold a large part of China, even if not the whole of it.

The more serious of the two miscalculations was about Great Britain. Not realizing then how exhausting had been the brilliant and terrible exertions of Britain, I had always assumed, as I think Churchill and Roosevelt assumed at Yalta, that there would be two great world powers after the war closely allied on the main issues to keep the Russians in check. All the realistic hopes of 1944–45 rested on the belief that there would be at least three more or less equal world powers, and that two of them would be democracies. Even at that, the best I expected was an agreement to live and let live. Even that modest hope foundered when suddenly the exhaustion of Britain was disclosed. Britain had in fact been more badly hurt by the war than we realized she had been. And Russia, I might add, recovered faster from the war than we thought she would.

Our other disappointment was Nationalist China. We had counted heavily on China as a friendly ally on the mainland of Asia. Yet Chiang's government proved to be incapable of satisfying or of resisting the revolutionary forces inside China.

And so within a few months after the war ended it began to appear that there were only two great world powers left, the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A., and that all the countries of Europe and Asia in between were weak and were vulnerable. They had suffered too much. They had suffered too long before they were helped or rescued or liberated. They were too weak and too tired to be able to do much, even to think much, about settling the world immediately after the war.

Suddenly, not in the least expecting it or in any way prepared for it, Mr. Truman and this country were expected to contain Russia and to rebuild the shattered world. Yet during the war all our plans for the future rested on an understanding that in the British-American partnership each nation would, as in the conduct of the war itself, continue to have its special field of responsibilities. The Western Hemisphere and the Pacific north of the Equator had been recognized, of course, as the responsibility of the United States. The British had primary responsibility for the Middle East, (Continued on Page 174)

HOW MANY CHINESE?

Do you know the population of China? In a recent national survey, the Gallup Poll found that 52 per cent of all U.S. adults either have no idea what the population of China is or believe it to be less than that of the United States (150,000,000). Only one person in eight came reasonably close to the correct figure, answering between 400,000,000 and 500,000,000. The population of China, according to 1948 census in the World Almanac, is 463,793,418. Nobody knows, for sure.

Why and how has U. S. made mistakes in Asia?

Walter Lippmann shows us a way ahead which is "prudent.

and get on

By WALTER LIPPMANN

The men who must answer America's questions with their courage and skill face their future thoughtfully.

oderate, economical of American soldiers and of American wealth."

Family living room renewed

By H. T. WILLIAMS

When the children go into their teens, many families do a full-dress job on their living rooms for the first time. This family's furniture had grown up with them, but had not stood the wear and tear so well as they had. The house they owned and loved was a comfortable twenty-year-old suburban structure.

The living room was fine for lolling around in after dinner, for fun, but it never looked the way they wished it would whenever they wanted to entertain. This room will look familiar and unfamiliar to those who bought houses fifteen years or more ago. That windowed alcove used to be a sun porch. It darkened the living room and reduced its space. Throwing sun porch and living room into one accomplished great spaciousness along with separate entertainment centers for self-conscious high-school and college offspring. When the outworn, outdated furniture was replaced, bookcases built in and the fireplace restyled, a room of charm and comfort for family living was the result.

RASS TACKS. Getting down to ese includes: The over-all paint b. Woodwork and walls are all ne restful shade of dark green at increases the apparent size of e room and sets off the light wood d gay colors of these modern rnishings. The dark floor. Staining e floor boards dark has a similar fect. The mismatched rugs and rtains. No party is likely to crowd ne end of the room when two ctions of it are as clearly emarcated as here. In the main living om the large rug is of pinkish eige tufted wool; the curtains are ain white. In the alcove the throw g, accented with coral and green, orts a wacky lion design gnified, however, by its rly-American origin; the curtains e patterned in yellow and black.

PHOTOS BY HAROLD FOWLER

As the place for a good time, this room has everything: Bridge, canasta, chess. Table and chairs are provided (opposite page). Music. The chest (above) houses a record player, radio and space for albums. The grand piano, with one curve barely showing in the photograph, was the only piece of former furniture retained. Tea, supper, snacks. There are tables everywhere. Dancing. Plenty of room. Just roll up the rugs. Conversation by the fire. See left.

there's a man in the house

By HARLAN MILLER

I suffer from a tidiness complex, and won't allow even a guest's $4000 mink coat to disfigure the balustrade in our living room. (Anyhow, it's a bad thing for my wife to gaze at all evening; might put notions in her head.)

Our neighborhood's most caustic bachelor tells me there'd be fewer spinsters if women dressed and behaved to please the men instead of just one another. "Some women," he says, "would rather be ultrafashionable than married."

My Princess of Sheer Delight cherishes the delusion that I like black-bean soup, and I'm too tactful to tell her it's really white-bean soup I like as they serve it at the U. S. Senate restaurant. . . . But I get the black-bean soup so often that in a few years I'll doubtless grow fonder of it.

"What a college boy doesn't fully understand," says Peter Comfort out of the corner of his mouth, moodily eying the fallen leaves, "is that the gay sorority girl he's after will in a few years become a serious-minded leader of the alumnae chapter."

I detect signs of maturity in our ten-year-old. . . . When we dine out once a week I can now, with one dirty look, terrify him out of ordering the 60-cent shrimp cocktail and the $3 steak.

Since a juvenile movie star visited our town, our teen-age boys are a little more cheerful about their complexion troubles. He was having the same difficulties most boys do between fourteen and eighteen, and even his studio's complexion wizards couldn't save him.

My wife contends she likes to rake leaves. But I suffer from a guilty conscience, and so suspect that she does it to emphasize my dilatory laziness. (Still, I'd be the last to deny her a little pleasure.)

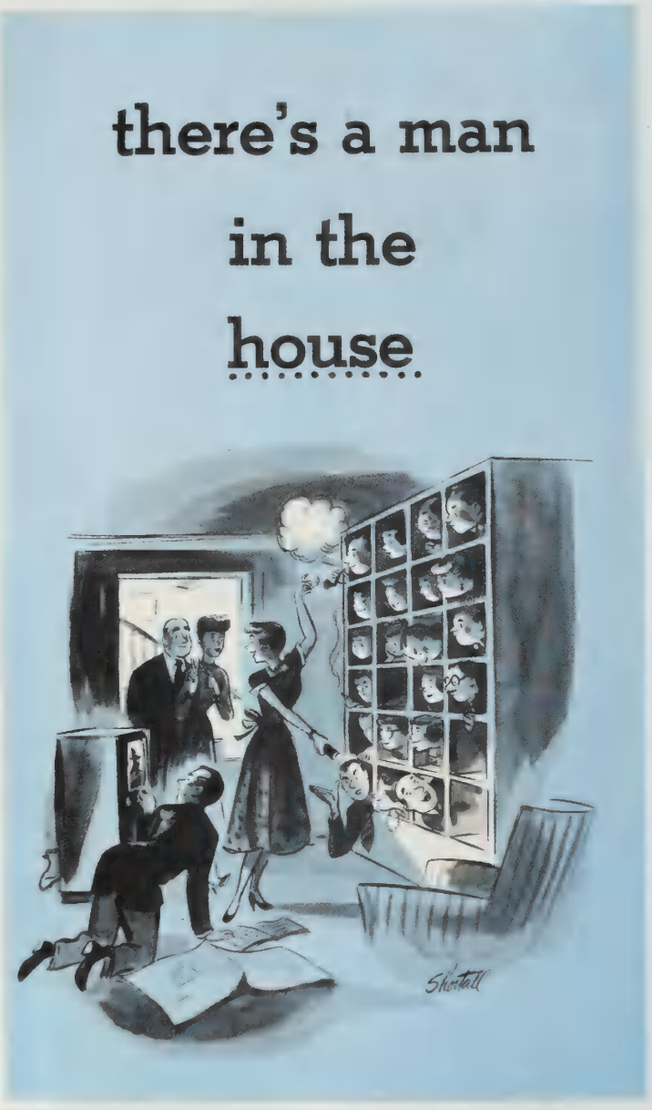
The man next door tells me confidentially he can save about $70 a winter on fuel by placing a warm aluminum lamp just below the thermostat, so his wife thinks it's 80 degrees in the living room when it's really only 70.



It's assumed at the club that a woman's toilette takes three times as long as a man's. But I notice that our daughter can give her red hair its weekly wash in about the same time it takes Junior to part his.

In our block there's always rejoicing when a new baby arrives, until the grim thought pops into the neighbors' minds that in another four or five years the little cherub may become the fleet and elusive scourge of every doorbell and garage.

We now have gayer times in our recreation room. It had fallen into a sort of disrepute until Junior renamed it the Plutonium Room, because it's our best rendezvous for an A-bomb attack.

When I'm in one of my peevish moods, I don't like any female garment that resembles a derby hat or a jockey cap or a man's vest or a Tuxedo jacket. . . . I'm always fearful that a woman wearing one may suddenly mount a broomstick and begin to gallop around the room.

Forgive my indelicacy, but I wonder why all the deodorant ads seem to be addressed to the daintier sex. Some men who haven't played football in fifteen years smell like a football squad's locker room.

So far we haven't discovered the perfect way to seat ten or twenty people so they all see our television screen at precisely the right angle. Short of converting a room into a miniature TV theater, the only solution I can visualize will be a six-tiered structure with a score of man-size pigeonholes in which all the guests can lie down with their heads aimed straight at the screen.

That faraway look in a husband's eyes isn't necessarily business worries or gastritis: it may be kindled by sudden memory of a girl who never learned to care, or a tune he never learned to carry.

Our block's ace philosopher can't understand why it's always his lawn where nine bicycles are parked, mostly on their sides. "Either my kids are the most popular in the neighborhood," he guesses, "or else I'm just an easy mark."

The man next door says he's satisfied with his television set even if he likes to watch only two shows a week. But for me they'd always come on nights we were dining out.

"My dearest friend is an advanced woman," confides Betty Comfort, deadpan, removing a cobweb from her front-door canopy. "She doesn't care how many intimate friends her husband has among the opposite sex, so long as they're all homely. Or at least not as pretty as she is."

One of the girls at my wife's bridge club quoted the punch line from Wendell Johnson's book, People in Quandaries: "Perhaps civilization is allergic to itself." (It's a tougher situation than that of the woman who got a divorce because she was allergic to her husband.)

Fashion hint: In 1951 it will again become modish for girls to be seen in public with escorts in khaki uniforms, or even to invite soldiers and officers to the house. Don't look now, but when you see nice people being cordial to soldiers it's a sure sign we're in trouble again.

Once a year a helpless bride in our town wins fleeting fame among her neighbors by melting a silver dish in the oven. But even the most experienced housewives in our block keep throwing some of their best silver away in the garbage. (I avoid getting blamed for that by not washing the dishes.)

When I ask Junior if he's read a certain magazine article and he replies by quoting its pithiest line: "No parent is fit to have children" . . . and our daughter quickly tops it with, "No child is fit to have parents" . . . or our ten-year-old brings me some fruit juice and a doughnut to my den, without demanding that I take him to the drive-in theater . . . and, at a moment when I seem manacled inside the doghouse, my Dream Girl smiles and the doghouse disappears . . . then I admire biology and marriage as splendid schemes which save children from inheriting their father's faults, and sometimes even endow 'em with their mother's looks and brains.

Why I Like Women

By G. M. WHITE

SURELY lots of men like women (which is different from liking two or four or six), but I don't know of any who have dared to give their reasons recently in barefaced print. Not long ago it was considered a news item when a Hollywood producer remarked, "I have known hundreds of women and discovered that most of them are above average." If that's news, things have come to a pretty pass and it's time for a little reaffirmation.

Traditionally, women have vexed and perplexed men. Usually it's because they think of women in a lump. Finley Dunne, editor and humorist, said that Mr. Dooley in his youth wrote a book about women. When he came to publish it in maturity, he found that all the change the original manuscript needed was to substitute "is not" for "is"; and "maybe," "perhaps," and "God knows" for "is not." The years do this to us.

Edward Bok, a young bachelor who in 1889 became editor in chief of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, was struck speechless by his experience of editing for women. When he told his mother he was taking the job, she warned him, "I am sorry you are accepting that position. It will cost you the high regard you have always held of your mother's sex." After his marriage, having edited the magazine for several years, Mr. Bok stated in a little book titled Successward: "It is an unfortunate fact that some men never get to the point where they understand women. The man who speaks of women in any but the most respectful terms is either a knave or a fool—very often he is both. And this is one of the few rules of life to which there is no exception." But, upon his retirement many years later, when reporters clamored for his opinion of women, he replied to one and all, "No, thank you. Not a word." He did not give his reasons and he said he never would.

A man spends a lifetime without making the acquaintance of more than a half-dozen women—only one mother, occasionally a sister, a sweetheart or two, a wife—and these color his views on all the rest. If he claims feminine friends in greater numbers, he is either a "sissy" or a "ladies' man," depending upon his age, and no one likes him much. According to the union rules, a man must regard all gatherings of more than one woman as a "hen party" and stay far away. We are forced to judge from a woefully small sampling and hearsay evidence. No wonder we resort to the fantastic fiction of the "inferior female" and pretend to scorn all those we do not pretend to love. Perhaps this cannot be changed. But I deplore it. Most men will confess, but only in private, "Of course I like women—one at a time."

That's the only way they come.

I like women: all women who do not go out of their way to make me dislike them—and few find me worth that trouble. I believe I should tell why I like them before I get old, confused, forgetful, or lose my voice. Though no two women are alike, there are certain qualities more characteristic of the female than of any other sex.

I like women because they are unpredictable and difficult to classify. I like women because they have puzzled so many men and thereby made a man's opinion of women interesting, for otherwise it surely would never be. I like women because they do not believe what they see, or say what they believe, or question themselves and give silly answers. I like them for being gay, for being practical, for accepting quietly what they cannot change immediately, but never giving up for a moment the idea that they will change it. I like women because they do not live by head alone. I like them for their patience, for their endurance, for their gentleness and for their toughness. I like them for their variety and for their ability to play so many roles. I like women because a woman can be both gamin and madonna at the same time. In them all human life first grows, and growth gives life meaning. I like women for these and many more, including all the obvious, reasons.

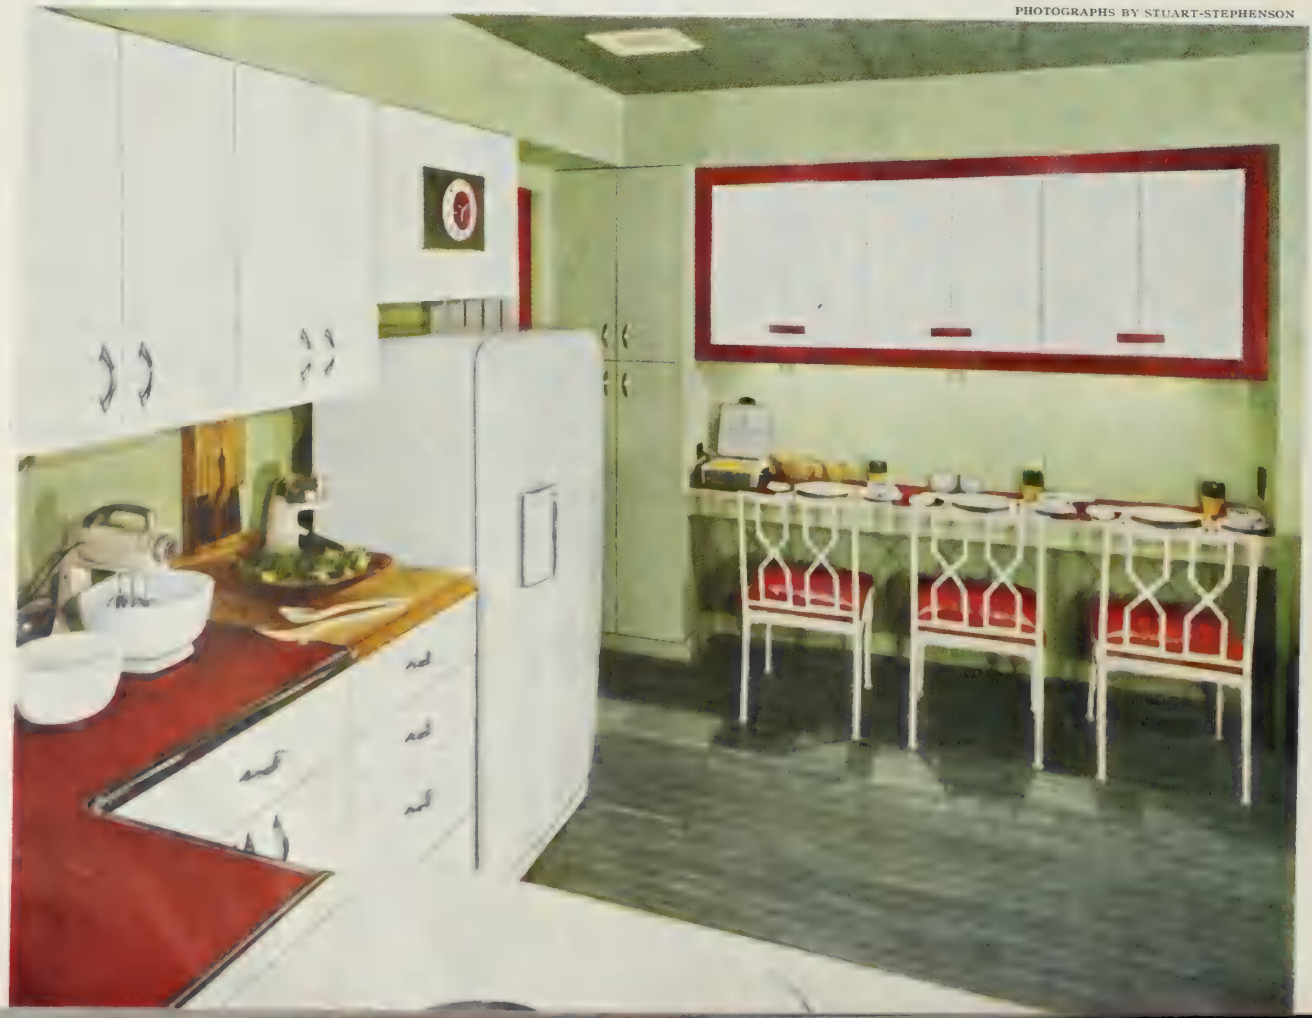
If I had to give just one basic reason for liking women, I'd say: their femininity. That all women are, to a degree, feminine is about the only valid generalization that can be made about them. The femininity of women is far more than physiology. The imperishable attraction to the male is as absolute in baby girls and bobby-soxers as it is in mothers, wives, prima donnas and little old ladies. By "femininity" I mean all the aspects of sexuality which permeate the female personality, including her "way of thinking," dressing, walking, talking, the hat she wears and the way she wears it. I mean her tone of voice, her gestures, the faint perfume of soap (Continued on Page 208)

Our editors were unanimous: they called this article "a special Valentine no woman can afford to miss."

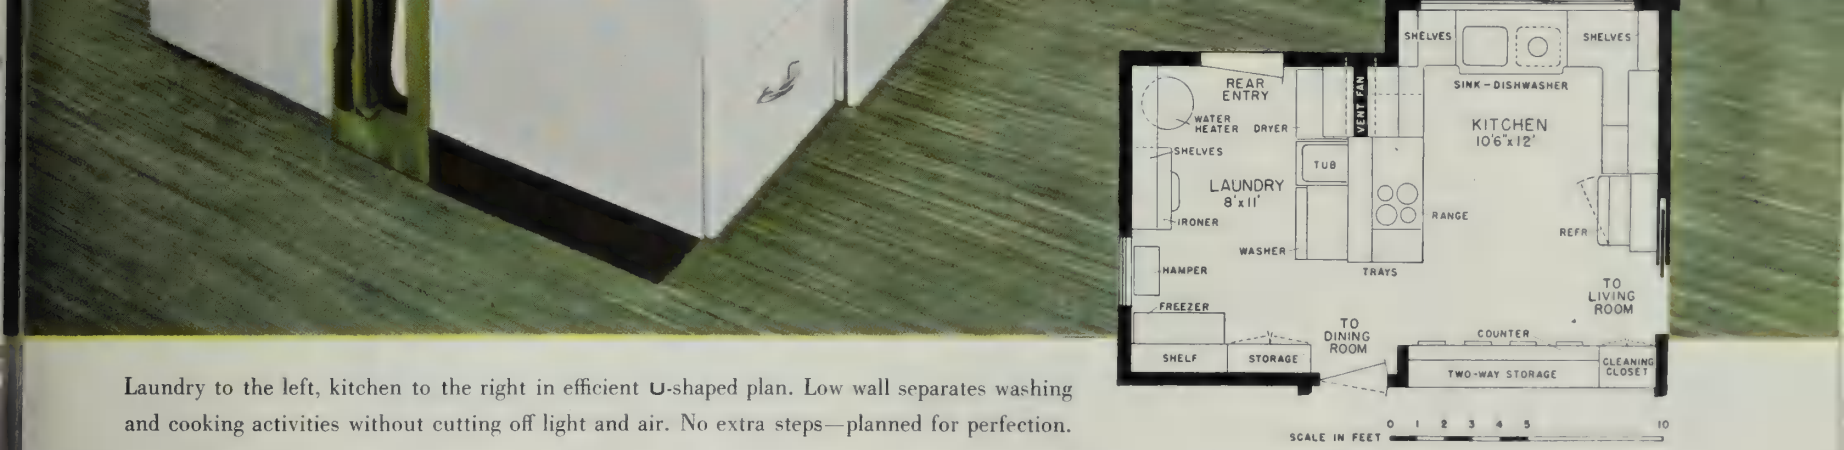
In this complete but compact laundry center, washday is any day a washerful of clothes collects. Tub between automatic washer and dryer is also a place for flower arranging.

The long and short of it: cabinet is cleverly designed wit shelves built to fit so laundry and freezer supplies are kept in easy order. Combination blackboard and bulletin board over freezer helps keep tabs on frozen food—and family activit

From washday to wearing in quick order. Shelves over ironer have ventilated removable tray bottoms for carrying clothes to closets. It's a sit-down ironing corner—with wheeled chair doing double duty at ironer or ironing board. Bracket for hangers folds when not in use.



Easy to freeze, easy to find in home freezer with racks in lid and baskets in big compartment. It's just a step from freezer to kitchen. Hamper for clothes is on wheels and has sectional lining for organizing the wash as it collects.



When family breakfasts, panels behind eating counter are lowered to give view of woods through dining room. Light built into cabinet above illuminates this counter.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

Dishwashing is no chore in this kitchen—it's done automatically. It takes but ten minutes for washing and rinsing, then the lid opens and hot dishes air-dry. Glasses and tumblers hang on individual spindles. Sink faucet has aerator so water doesn't splash.

Laundry to the left, kitchen to the right in efficient U-shaped plan. Low wall separates washing and cooking activities without cutting off light and air. No extra steps—planned for perfection.

Planned for Perfection

By GLADYS TABER

SOME women love to linger in front of jewelry windows looking at the diamonds and emeralds and sapphires, but me, I love to look at freezers and ranges and washing machines that are spanking new and perfect as jewels. And this kitchen was the happiest place to see them, for it was not only newer than a fresh penny from the mint, but every single thing in it represented the last word which the kitchen-minded had to say! The JOURNAL had a rare opportunity to help plan the kitchen from inside out—for a new house that could be built to order! Moreover, the equipment was to be new, since no hand-me-downs had to be fitted into the new home for the family.

The house itself is all on one floor, and since maids are scarce, it had to be comfortable and easy to care for. There are recreation centers for the children and the arrangement of the house is flexible and charming.

But neither architect nor the family were satisfied with the original layout for the kitchen. In the first blueprints, all the kitchen and laundry equipment was placed around the walls of the room and the only eating place was cramped between laundry devices and a door. Worst of all, the sink was across the room from the window so the worker would always work in her own shadow. (Continued on Page 146)

It was as though mother said,
"See, she is here,
My daughter has come with me."

It was not mother I resented — it was the way I fell short of her goals for me

MY mother goes to church alone. While Phil and I are still half asleep, I hear her moving softly in her room across the hall. She is always afraid of disturbing us—always careful. But in this house you can hear every sound, especially on Sunday morning. I listen to the rattle of her comb; the little click as her silver-backed mirror touches the dresser, the opening and closing of a drawer.

I ought to get up, I think, uneasily, I ought to go with her.

I have been thinking this for more years than I like to remember, and very occasionally I do go to church with my mother. At such times I am conscious of all the good that is promised and needed. It is her eagerness which defeats me—her hair swept up like a cloud from her face, and her blue eyes shining too brightly.

"Mrs. Truax, this is my daughter." She will cross the church to introduce me, after services.

And then, the lingering handclasp, the welcoming note. "So glad to have you with us—wasn't the sermon splendid?"

What happens to me then? What blind, stubborn thing sets itself hard against them, refusing to become a part of this weekly ritual, even to please my mother? The conflict is deep, and I have never understood it. There are so many things I believe, but not in the way my mother believes, and I cannot force myself. I have read countless books on religion, I have studied the Bible, I have listened. I am not an atheist, either, or a true agnostic. For there are these things I believe, and there is one thing I know: that my mother exemplifies most of them. Yet each Sunday morning I am awake before she leaves, and I almost never get up and go to church.

My husband, too, is awake and listening, though he keeps his eyelids closed. The only difference between us is that his mother lives in another town. When he is there, he takes her to church, but that is so seldom, I think. After all, I never miss an Easter service. She knows I would do anything else for her—anything in the world. It is the kind of rationalization at which I have become adept. David (my son) will take her to church. He'll call for her, later on—she doesn't really mind.

The door to her room creaks open. I listen for the sound of footsteps; there are none. She moves like a disembodied spirit on the carpeted stairs.

For a long time, now, we have dispensed with Sunday dinners. We have usually been out late the night before, and none of us are hungry before eleven. Only, my mother must eat something before she leaves. Otherwise you grow very faint, and that can be dangerous when you are alone.

"Just order a jar of pulverized coffee for me," she asked a few weeks ago. "I hate to make yours so far ahead."

I remembered that we argued about that, but I ordered the prepared coffee. The oranges are chilled, I think, and there is plenty of dry cereal. Sometimes I actually start out of bed to remind her of these things, but a hand seems to force me back. It is as if I must wait for the sounds (Continued on Page 203)

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

Favorite Meals of Ou

By Ann Batchelder

WHEN you set out to interview somebody, there's one sure-fire subject that you'll find one and all responsive to. An opinion on international politics may have as many holes in it as a Swiss cheese. And whether the trend is toward longer or shorter skirts may cause outbursts of varying views, colored, no doubt, by the age and sex of the interviewee. (See that new word? Isn't it neat?) There are dozens of examples I could quote, but the easiest questions to ask and the ones that bring the readiest and most enthusiastic response your way are these: "What do you like best to eat?" "What is your favorite meal?" Ask those two questions, so closely related and as knitted together as knit one, purl two is to a winter mitten, and you will get your answer.

There's a certain sign. When you open up this subject of favorite dishes and meals, you'll notice a certain gleam in the eye and an inclination to settle down to a real friendly visit, whereas up to this point you (Continued on Page 216)

STUART

HAL WILLIAMS

Fried Shrimp Tempura with Sauce
Beef Stroganoff
Spinach with Parmesan Cheese
Green Salad
Hot Dates Stuffed with Walnuts
Orange Sections
Coffee

BIFFY PAGE

Tomato Bouillon
Breast of Wild Duck
Bigarade Sauce
Broccoli Hollandaise
Crescent Rolls Green Salad
Spanish Cream
Coffee

STUART

ditors

STUART

HUGH KAHLER

Jellied Madrilene

Broiled Steak

Lima Beans

Green Salad
Roquefort Cheese Dressing

Frozen Pineapple and Black Cherries

Coffee

ENGSTEAD

BEATRICE GOULD

Smoked-Salmon-and-Cucumber Appetizer

Chicken Curry with Rice

Condiments

Green Salad—French Dressing

Three-Fruit Sherbet

Coffee

COLOR PHOTOS BY STUART-FOWLER

By ANN BATCHELDER

GOCKELER-PAUL GUILLUMETTE, INC.

SECURITY

Now winter seeks to bind
All in its dignity
Of ice and wind and snow.
But here winds may not blow,
Here four-square to the world he bui
Stands this security.

1 Did you know that I have two Persians? (Cats, of course.) One is pure white, named Amos. One jet-black, called Andy. And true to type. I'm reading Frances and Richard Lockridge's new book, CATS AND PEOPLE. (Criticism: Cats are people. How about it, Lockridges?)

2 Omelets are wonderful things. And for a real supper one, make your omelet, as usual, very soft inside. And before folding spread with a good filling of a sharp Welsh rarebit. Fold. Serve hot, fast, garnished with sautéed pineapple. What time is it? I feel very hungry.

3 This I ought to tell you again. When wild duck, pheasant and partridge are in season, they spell wild rice. Start the rice in cold water with a little salt. (It needs terrific washing.) When it boils, boil it exactly 25 minutes. Don't disturb it. When done, stir carefully with a silver fork. Drain, cover with a folded towel.

4 Now there is a word or two to add. Season with salt and pepper and stir in with care sautéed sliced mushrooms, chopped cooked pork sausages or crisp bits of bacon, but nothing juicy. Keep it dry. Some folks like a little onion and a whisper of grated garlic.

5 Something needed a little different for a first course? Well, there are tiny little puff-paste cases full of crabmeat mayonnaise or lobster and crab mixed.

6 And, if your first course ought to be hot, heat the little shells and fill with creamed oysters or flaked tuna fish in a hot tomato sauce. Serve with sautéed fresh pineapple sticks. No appetite spoilers, these.

7 For a supper dish, take a large eggplant, peel it and slice it thin. Salt and pile the slices to get out the bitter juice. Wash it and dry in towels. Sauté until transparent but not brown. Drain on paper.

8 Part II: Peel and slice 5 or 6 nice tomatoes. Put the eggplant and tomatoes in alternate layers in a glass baking dish and season the tomatoes with basil, sugar, salt and pepper. When everything is used up, pour over all a rich cheese sauce. Bake about 20 minutes at 375° F. Serve with ham or chicken, preferably ham.

9 Little tea muffins, the kind you serve hot to melt away like the mists of morning, are a surprise treat to end surprise treats when hollowed out a little, filled with lemon or lime marmalade and the top put back on. The tea table has a recruit.

10 Once more from those Breton fishing boats come the most superb sardines to be found in the waters along any coast. Packed in spiced olive oil, for hors d'oeuvres, grilled or in salads, these are sardines' last word. In toasted cheese sandwiches, they are perfect.

11 Something new is the smoked oyster. If oysters fancied they'd escape the smokehouse, they must have been surprised. Serve them hot or cold—most folks like them cold. In that case serve on a cracker.

12 A fine buffet-supper dish is set up this way: Slice thin an extremely well-chilled tongue (keep a big glass jar of tongue in the refrigerator at least two days before you open it). Beat up stiff ½ cup heavy sour cream. Add 6 tablespoons grated horse-radish, salt to taste and a flirt of cayenne. Have a cold platter, arrange the tongue in overlapping slices, garnish with water cress and cucumbers in jelly. Pass the cream separately.

13 As a believer in fruit with meat and poultry, I'd like to suggest this one: Melt a glass of currant jelly in a saucepan. Add a teaspoon of almond extract. Now drain a can of pears and add to the melted jelly. Simmer a few minutes. Serve with ham or chicken.

14 Here's a dressing that is very good with avocado, but with fruit salads, no: Add 1 part Worcestershire sauce to 2 parts chili sauce to 3 parts sour cream. Beat all together, season and include ½ teaspoon lemon juice. Chill well. Use as ordered!

15 Little Chinese kumquats that look like a backward orange that never went to school come in a heavy elegant sirup. For the simplest dessert, slice some of these slick fruits very thin, toss in freshly boiled rice with a liberal amount of almond-flavored and sweetened whipped cream. Chill. Serve with cookies or macaroons.

16 Everybody wants something new to serve as a hot appetizer at the table. Get a can of baby mackerel. The tenderest, sweetest little fellows ever. Take from the can with care—they break easily. Grill them lightly and serve on toast with lemon and cress.

17 For a fine soup for cold nights, take 1 can minced clams, juice and all. Add 1 can condensed tomato soup. Season, add a little lemon juice. Simmer a few minutes. At the last lap add ½ cup cream. Heat. Don't boil.

18 Passed on to me, but not yet tried: creamed oyster-and-chicken shortcakes on split buttered biscuits. So far so good. But for those who like corn, how about making thin, crisp corn bread instead of biscuits, and making your shortcakes from that? Be sure the bread is as liberally buttered as an alderman's visit at a clambake. And have everything hot as heat can make it.

19 Just a word about broccoli. First grown over here by an old oysterman up on the Cape. In Wellfleet, if you know the Cape. He got the seed from an Atlantic Ocean wreck. The ship went down. Broccoli lived on.

20 Canto 1: Here's an item for your choicest receipts. Take some large, firm white mushrooms; peel. Sauté in butter—you need the flavor here—and set aside. Have ready some chicken or turkey stuffing.

21 Canto 2: Stuff each mushroom heaping full with the stuffing. Put in an oven at 375° F. until hot. Arrange each mushroom on a round of sautéed bread. Serve as is or with—well, let's say fried chicken.

22 Thanksgiving is coming along, and who should be gladder than I? I love Thanksgiving. Maybe you'll be having a turkey, so for the next item make some extra stuffing. Or use any that's left. If it was my turkey, there wouldn't be much left over. Understand?

23 Grease a shallow glass casserole. Put in alternate layers of sliced cold stuffing and sliced cold turkey. Cover with a good thick layer of pared, cored and thinly sliced apples. Sprinkle with brown sugar and a whisper of cinnamon. Top with buttered cracker crumbs, cover and bake half an hour at 350° F. Take off the cover and bake until the top is crisp and brown.

24 Frying chicken for tomorrow night? Cut it up and soak it overnight in buttermilk. Wash it. Dry it. Set it aside and fry it when ready. This is New England.

25 Something sort of special in the way of a dessert—and easy too. Make (or buy) some meringue shells. Open a can of cherries, drain off the juice, sweeten to taste and thicken with a little cornstarch to make a nice sirup. Chill. Pour over the meringues, garnish with the cherries—and what could be sweeter than that?

26 From an old cookbook: "Children should never be at the table with grownups until they reach the age of eight or ten. By then they may have learned manners and also to keep silent." By that time, they may prefer the hot-dog wagon.

27 Have you tried that new way of wrapping your turkey in aluminum foil before roasting it? Better do.

28 First Part: Ever know that a baked potato could blush? It can, as quick as a girl at her first proposal. Bake the potatoes. Scoop them out. Mash the pulp and add condensed tomato soup to turn it pink.

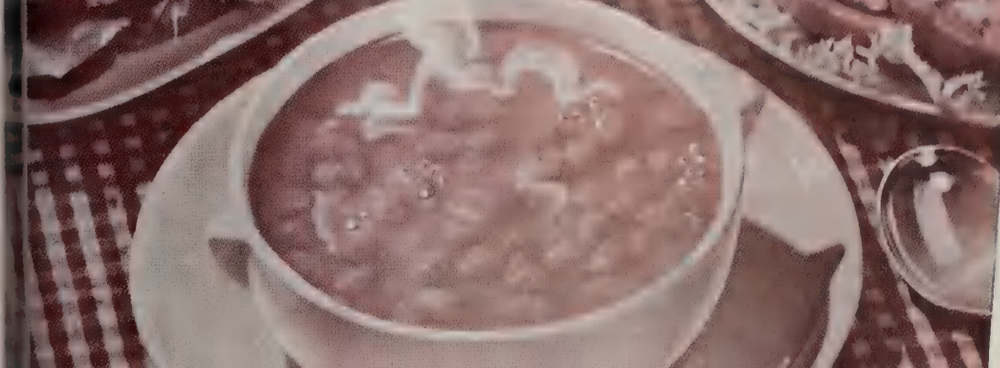
29 Second Part: Now beat like crazy. Add salt, pepper and paprika to taste. Beat in a good piece of butter or margarine, and a tablespoon of Parmesan cheese for each potato. Beat some more to a lightness. Fill the shells. Cover with cheese and brown in a hot oven.

30 I'll be seeing you when the snow flies—if it does. Though I'd very much prefer to have the dratted stuff stay off the streets. Have a wonderful Thanksgiving!

A MONTH of lunch MENUS

Complete meals averaging 19½ cents a person . . . built around Soup as the main dish!

by Anne Marshall



ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

To meet the budget these days is a problem, isn't it? But here's one good way: Serve soup for lunch. You know, every day 27 million Americans eat soup for lunch, according to a U. S. survey. Simple meals built around soup, folks find, are so appealing, so delightfully varied and so quick to fix. Economical, too, and that's important, as we all know.

Here are suggestions I've prepared for 28 budget lunches—four weeks of tasty, nourishing noon meals built around soup. Each lunch offers substantial portions — including a 7-ounce bowl of soup. Do try them!

(Cost of meals based on August 1950 prices)

NDAY	MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY	FRIDAY	SATU
e Velvet Soup* Vegetable Slaw (pineapple, carrot) te Cake Coffee 1 can chicken oup with 1 can mushroom. Add ter—heat. Here's at goes well with zy papers! c a person)	Cream of Vegetable Soup Strawberry Jam and Bacon Sandwich Hot Chocolate Did you ever taste cream of vegetable soup? Just add milk, instead of water, to your soup. No better way to assure that quota of milk! (19c a person)	Chicken Gumbo Soup Banana Fritters with Orange Sauce Milk You'll love this deliciously different chicken-and-vegetable soup—adapted from an Old New Orleans recipe. (That orange sauce makes your fritters extra tasty!) (18c a person)	Consommé Pear and Cottage Cheese Salad Rye Crisp Tea Lunch alone and like it, lady, and not a pound you'll add with this satisfying, yet calory-conscious lunch. Consommé, you know, is so invigorating. (21c a person)	Ox Tail Soup Bologna and Relish Sandwich Fig Cookies Tea Let's hope there's a husband or a growing boy—or both—sitting down to this lunch. For that ox tail soup has a way with everybody! (19c a person)	Cream of Tomato Soup Tuna Fish Sandwich Lemon Gelatin Tea "The soup most folks like best"—served in the favorite way: prepared with milk. Any green pepper left over? Chop and add to your sandwich to lend it piquancy. (22c a person)	Vegetabl Hamburger Relish So the family at odd hours matter. Just ke a-simmering. to set you up game"! Run and have a (20c a Noodle Soup ragus Salad Coffee or two of raking after church, does tall appetites. dy, here's where- ease 'em. Pimiento your salad for a ouch! c a person)	Pepper Pot Soup Cold Meat Sandwich Stewed Fruit Milk Fall days are no days for an all-cold lunch, no ma'am! That pepper pot soup is a heart-warmer, adapted from a Colonial Philadelphia recipe. You're going to love it! (20c a person)	Cream of Asparagus Soup Scrambled Egg on Toast Cup Cake Tea No meat in this lunch, but don't be fooled. It's a nourisher, and that soup is delicious with asparagus tips. Chili sauce with the eggs will add zip, if you have some on hand. (17c a person)	Chicken Noodle Soup Peanut Butter and Jelly Sandwich Canned Peach Milk This is frankly a lunch for the youngsters. That chicken noodle soup's a big favorite with them. But it'll please the young-in-appetite of every age. (21c a person)	Bouillon (Beef Broth) Veal Loaf Sandwich Hard Cooked Egg Apple When your menfolk carry lunches, here's a tempting noon meal for them. Hot bouillon is so stimulating and so welcome at this time of year. (22c a person)	Vegetarian Vegetable Soup Pineapple Cheese Spread on Nut Bread Milk You'll never miss meat today if you build your lunch around this soup. A rich, pure vegetable stock. A great children's lunch. (21c a person)	Chicken-Cla Platter C Ro Pitcher To All right! So is 2 o'clock. still a cinch! can cream of —1 can cla Add 2 cans (24c a n and Tomato* l Beef on Toast Coffee s for Sunday can bouillon—1 to soup. Add 2 er—heat. This is tion to wear that unch-coat and be lady! c a person)	Cream of Celery Soup Frankfurter Sandwich Cole Slaw Coffee Even though you're lunching alone, there's nothing blue about a Monday when you have this new cream of celery soup. Rich cream and tender pieces of celery. Mmm—Good! (20c a person)	Chicken (with Rice) Soup Toasted English Muffins Quince Jelly Cup Custard Tea Feeling fit? Here's a soup to see you through. Under the weather with a cold? What better dish than tempting chicken soup! (18c a person)	Tomato Soup Sardine Sandwich Potato Chips Cinnamon Buns Milk Ho! You teen-agers. So Mom's out shopping. So you've got to get lunch. So here it is. Good—and good and easy! (Mom had ordered the buns!) (18c a person)	Cream of Mushroom Soup Tea Sandwiches (meat & cheese spreads) Sherbet Tea Have the girls in for lunch, why don't you? A wonderful soup—dainty sandwiches—and then canasta or sewing. You don't have to break the bank to entertain. (20c a person)	Green Pea Soup Crackers Grapefruit Salad Buttermilk Friday again and you on a diet! Here's a green pea soup to talk about! Not an unessential calory in the whole meal, either. So enjoy yourself, lady! (18c a person)	Vegetable- Crac Apple Pie The men com urday. Beef have been a since the Gar Okay—so no chores, eh, lad on the soup! (22c a tch Broth Salad Mold Crackers tch Pudding Coffee e your salad and on Saturday, so isks on in a jiffy. oth is no broth— rty soup. c a person)	Cream of Chicken Soup Apple Butter Sandwich Celery Sticks Oatmeal Cookies Tea This is the newest type of chicken soup—rich cream and chicken pieces. If you haven't tried it, do so. Build a meal around it and rejoice! (16c a person)	Purée Mongole* Cottage Cheese Salad Toasted Garlic Roll Fruit Juice The most popular of all soup combinations. 1 can tomato soup—1 can green pea soup—1 can milk—1 can water. Combine soups; stir in milk, water—heat.* (21c a person)	Black Bean Soup Grilled Cheese Sandwich Sweet pickles Vegetable Juice Again you're going it alone. The soup is one you used to have to go to an expensive restaurant for. Perhaps you'll float a lemon slice on your soup. (16c a person)	Beef Soup Crackers Rice Pudding Coffee Husbands do bring along he-manly appetites. This is "his" soup—lots of beef! Double portion for him is included in costs. (18c a person)	Clam Chowder Welsh Rabbit Lettuce Coffee Unexpected company needn't wreck your budget. You can say, "Do stay!" and really mean it. Appetizing sea-tang in that clam chowder. (17c a person)	Bean with Cranberry (cranberries, Co Whole bean flavor in the your cranber orange gelati ful flavor! (17c a

And especially for the Child

Soup is ideal for all children, especially when prepared with milk, so that the child gets the nourishment of the soup plus the milk benefits.

Doctors recommend soups when the baby is ready for his first chewing foods. These eight Campbell's Soups, prepared with milk, are especially suitable: cream of asparagus, beef, chicken with rice, green pea, tomato, vegetable, vegetarian vegetable, and vegetable-beef.

Tonight!...Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Exclusive! This magical secret-blend lather with LANOLIN!

Exciting! This new three-way hair loveliness . . .

Better than a soap! Better than a liquid! Kay Daumit's cream shampoo with lanolin. Jars: $2, $1. Jars and tubes: 49¢, 25¢.

1 Leaves hair silken soft, instantly manageable . . . first wondrous result of a Lustre-Creme shampoo. Makes lavish, lanolin-blessed lather even in hardest water. No more unruly, soap-dulled locks. Leaves hair soft, obedient, for any style hair-do.

2 Leaves hair sparkling with star-bright sheen. No other shampoo has the same magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin to bring out every highlight. No special rinse needed with Lustre-Creme Shampoo.

3 Leaves hair fragrantly clean, free of loose dandruff. Famous hairdressers insist on Lustre-Creme, the world's leading cream shampoo. Yes, tonight, show him a lovelier you —after a Lustre-Creme shampoo!

A BREATH OF AIR

(Continued from Page 34)

sank away leaving them rocking on a dark swell where the rollers might have been whale backs rising and falling.

"Where are we?" asked McGinty. He was not ungrateful for the island, but his fright had made his voice shrill and angry. He released the pin of his harness and shook it off and climbed out on the float.

Here, on the surface of the sea, it was hardly light. The Water Star heaved and rose drunkenly on the swell, wing up, wing down, but her life and impetus were gone. McGinty chafed at her helplessness, but to Valentine there came an extraordinary sense of rest.

"We might be anyplace!" said McGinty, looking at the bare rocks, the surf and the twilight sea; even to him his voice sounded small in the emptiness. "We're lost."

Valentine shook his head.

"What else are we?" asked McGinty aggressively.

"Safe," said Valentine, and shut his eyes.

He did not want to be disturbed; the sounds of that first sea morning beat softly on the air, sounds empty of life except for the sounds of birds and of waves. To Valentine it felt like the first morning of a new world. Was that because I had thought we should not see morning again? he thought. He was reluctant to speak or move; he felt he must begin to live and stir slowly, gently, as embryo life stirred, letting time uncoil itself. He rested, lulled by the sound of the surf, but beside him McGinty fidgeted.

Valentine knew that if he did not speak first McGinty would; reluctantly he half opened his eyes. The first sunlight had come down on the sea, and it struck his eyes with brightness, dazzling him; he felt it on his lids. "And there was light," said Valentine, and shut his eyes again.

McGinty took no notice. He was used to Valentine. He had been with him since Valentine bought his Proctor, the Water Star, and they had done a good few hundreds of hours together. "Clever chap, but talks punk!" McGinty would have said of Valentine.

Valentine would talk in poetry for an hour or more, and McGinty had long ago learned not to listen, though bits, words and phrases had seeped into his mind and sometimes came up unexpectedly among his own limited stock of words.

"I wonder where we are," said McGinty restlessly again. "There's nothing here but rocks. We must get to that other island. I wonder what it is."

Valentine sighed and opened his eyes. There was nothing to give them a clue; there were only this small conical island and the bigger island that lay behind it.

"What island?" asked McGinty.

His young pink face was strained with tiredness, his eyes looked sore. Valentine knew he must be bruised and chilled and stiff and hungry, as he was himself, but McGinty was McGinty still. "I am I," McGinty said to all the world, "you are you," and unless people were the same as he and things were accustomed, he had no way of participating in them. Nothing that impinged on McGinty was allowed to alter him. To Valentine that had seemed a virtue; now, suddenly, he found it irritating.

Valentine yawned and stretched as much as he was able in his seat; he was reluctant to move, but he knew he must do something; he looked at the journey log, looked at his watch, added in the landing time. "That last leg was eleven hours, nineteen minutes," he told McGinty. "With the winds in that weather, God knows how many miles we are out of course."

"And I wonder where that storm hatched itself out from?" said McGinty resentfully. "There shouldn't have been a storm. The met had nothing to say when we left."

All trace of storm had vanished from the light, though there was an extra coolness in the wind and darker colors in the s morning was cool, clear, and as indiff
a child. But don't be deceived, said Va Indifferent, yes, but not a child, and he bered the first moment in the da light when the Water Star seemed been lifted and dropped, with the fo lift down a shaft, into a void of dark which she was not flown but blown wind, lifted and dropped and hurl twanged. He remembered how Mc eyes had rolled round to look at h at the St. Elmo's fire that ran in tw balls on the wing tips and made a the arc of the propeller. McGinty seen a storm like this.

"If we had hit a big cu-nimb," said tine to McGinty now, "it would have us up like a matchbox!"

McGinty nodded. "And the radi dead!" said McGinty. Everythin
McGinty relied upon had failed him

> Few things are harder to put up with than the annoyance of a good example.
> —MARK TWAIN.

Valentine had been afraid to use u
in an attempt to climb above the w and he could not use the sextant. The the windshield was so heavy that the have been under the sea, except for lent bucketing and dropping of the
They were shaken and chilled to th

Valentine still felt, now, as if he w in flight, his hands still grippi wheel, his body pulling back as he lift it, feeling each gulf and abyss of head was still spinning and seemed large, and then to shrink away to a p
At last there had come a curious suff light round the p paleness in the ness, paleness w light, creeping. M touched Valentine far off, high up on t wing tip, was a c light. It swung bel feet as the Wat tilted; as they dropped it rose, and as they came up, and, gradually, the ness dimmed and grew pale, and V saw McGinty's lips shape "Dawn," nodded. Five minutes later they had out of the storm and were in a cle

They had looked down and four were flying over a faintly glimmer scattered with islands. Beyond them sea stretched like a gulf.

"Flying west a half north," Valent said. "We must be hundreds of mile our way."

"Bet we'll be running pretty low o Skipper," said McGinty. "Why no down here?"

And it was then that Valentine had his head.

"You're not going to take her o that sea!" said McGinty. "If we com
there we've had it!"

But Valentine flew straight on.

It is said, when a ship moves she l hull. The rubber dinghy had no hull, came on airily toward the larger island
ant on the swell, two streams of bub her wake and small inundations shinin
the paddles had pitted the sea.

From far off, the larger island had itself to be floating in the air, a pa cumulus miraged above scintillating but, as they paddled nearer, in the inc light it began to detach itself from it ground and stand out clearly.

"The island always seemed larger was," said Valentine afterward. He have said it seemed like the whole w

The island opened on a crescent b had a settlement of native huts and the far end.

"There are people here," said M with satisfaction.

Valentine felt it was almost a pity
There's your town."

McGinty sighed too; if that were town, it was serious for them.

(Continued on Page 72)

Miss Marion Cleveland

LOVELY GRANDDAUGHTER OF OUR 24TH PRESIDENT

CHARMING MARION CLEVELAND has an exquisite complexion—porcelain-fine and smooth. She uses Pond's! "I love Pond's Cold Cream dearly because it does my skin so much good," she says.

Her Face sends out the gracious quality of her Inner Self...

Miss Cleveland's sunny, blonde loveliness makes people happier just for seeing her. Her face has an enchanting individuality that interests and charms you. It's a giving face—that lets you see what a delightful-to-be-with person she is.

Your face, too, gives out a picture of your Inner Self. It can be such a heart-warming picture—if you will care enough to make it so.

Within you is a fascinating unseen self that can work a happy change in you

ANY WOMEN instead of realizing their own , plod along—nondescript.

—no woman needs to stay that way! There is derful inner power that can work a happy in You! It is a power that grows out of the constant interrelation of your Outer Self and your Inner Self—the way you look, the way you feel.

This power lights you magically with happy confidence when someone says "How lovely you look!" But—when you don't look your best, it quickly fills you with self-doubts. That is why it means so much to be meticulous about every smart detail that can make you look lovelier—and feel happier.

ear it everywhere—
"She's engaged! She's lovely! She uses Pond's!"

"Outside-Inside" Face Treatment

Don't let yourself underrate the eye appeal of sparkling, soft, clear skin! This "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with Pond's Cold Cream cleanses and softens wonderfully, you'll discover. And—because it's a cream cleansing, it's never drying! So always at bedtime (for day cleansings, too) cream your face with Pond's. This is the way:

Hot Stimulation—give face a quick hot water splash.

Cream Cleanse—swirl light, fluffy Pond's Cold Cream over your face to soften dirt and make-up, sweep them from pore openings. Tissue off well.

Cream Rinse—do another soft Pond's creaming to rinse off last traces of dirt, leave skin immaculate. Tissue lightly.

Cold Stimulation—give face a tonic cold water splash.

This Pond's Treatment actually works on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—light, fluffy Pond's Cold Cream cleanses and softens skin as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this treatment stimulates beauty-giving circulation.

Marion Cleveland says: "My face feels exceptionally soft after this Pond's treatment."

Always remember—It is not vanity to develop the beauty of your face. It enriches you to look lovely! You gain a happy new belief in yourself that lights your face most charmingly—and this helps bring other people closer to the real Inner You.

I dreamed I had a screen test in my

*maidenform bra

"Lights! Camera! Action! I never felt so like a star...and all because my Maidenform* bra plays my best supporting role! See why Maidenform and I make such a rave-notice picture? See why Maidenform is your dream bra come true!"

Shown: New 3-way Maidenette-Declatay.* Wear it with straps, without straps, with straps tied halter-fashion—and always decollete. White nylon sheer and marquisette, 3.00

Send for free style booklet. Maidenform, N.Y. 16

There is a Maiden Form for every type of figure

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. ©1950, Maiden Form Brassiere Co., Inc.

(Continued from Page 70)

Flying fish went past them, sprinkling them with light drops and pocking the waves. The sun had grown stronger, and where they dipped their paddles the water broke into infinitesimal rainbows, small arcs and prisms of color. Valentine lifted his head to look at the sweep of white sand along the margin of the bay, at the green above it and the hill with its white cloud, and in that moment he had from the island a sense of music, invisible music that crept by him on the water. All music is invisible, argued Valentine, or is it called invisible when its source can't be seen? This, if it were music, which his sense denied though his ears heard it, was intrinsic in the island itself; if it were anything, it was wind-and-water music, and he could see the waves, even the wind that suddenly wrinkled the sea. Nonsense! said Valentine severely to himself. It isn't music at all. But still the music persisted.

Valentine was, by habit, cool and sure; he refused to be anything else. He was sometimes asked, "Mr. Doubleday, what is the secret of your great success?" "Only that I haven't a secret," Valentine answered, and he always said, "I work."

That was true. He had worked passionately. To the outside world his rise had been surprising; to Valentine it had been logically slow.

"I started at ten," he might have said. "I was ten when I went into Pelican Pie. It has been twenty years. Twenty years is a long time, and mine have been twice as long because I worked twice as hard." He felt at least fifty; he was tired. Bone-tired, thought Valentine. Perhaps I am tired out.

Every year I live I am more convinced that the waste of life lies in the love we have not given, the powers we have not used, the selfish prudence that will risk nothing, and which, shirking pain, misses happiness as well. No one ever yet was the poorer in the long run for having once in a lifetime "let out all the length of the reins."

—ELIZABETH CHOLMONDELEY.

He did not know. He felt worse than tired. He felt unutterably stale. For the past few weeks—months? years? thought Valentine—he had had a distaste for life; lately he had not been able to sleep and it was difficult to talk or eat or work. "I can't work!" The words burst from him in a frenzy of worry. The more he worried, the worse he worked. I used to work easily; now I can't work at all. What has happened to me? thought Valentine. Why can't I get back to what I was before? Now he rested his paddle on his knees and the music sounded in his ear, the music that he said was nonsense.

"It's not a town," McGinty was saying in disgust. "It's hardly a village, just some huts." He was looking through Valentine's glasses. "I don't see a road, or anything that you could call a building. There doesn't seem to be any life about."

"If there are huts there must be islanders," said Valentine.

"It looks a one-horse place to me."

"I don't see even one horse," said Valentine. He was wrong. There was one horse.

THEIR arms and backs and shoulders and legs were aching; they seemed to have been paddling this clumsy dinghy for an aeon; when the current caught it, it sometimes spun round or moved like a crab sideways. Valentine's neck hurt and his head at the temples felt stretched. His feet were cold and his whole body felt chilled, though he was sweating; he was clammy with sweat.

"What an awful place to get landed in," said McGinty.

"Can't you wait till we have landed before you start to crab it?"

"I only said ——" McGinty's voice was surly.

"Yes, I know," said Valentine.

"It's you who want to get back," said McGinty. "It's your play we're tearing back for, not mine."

"Yes, I know," said Valentine wearily again.

He looked at the dispatch case between his feet. He had automatically picked it up when they left the Water Star. Now he came to think of it, he wondered why they had not taken anything else, not so much as a razor. Well, I suppose we shall come back, he thou but the thought seemed to have no cert in his mind. Everything seemed drifting loose. The dinghy wallowed and turned r clumsily; they seemed to be making no p way at all. The sun was getting higher

"We have to get petrol, don't we?" Ginty was asking, aggrieved. He looked toward the shore, at the trees and do huts. "How will there be any petrol the

"There won't," said Valentine.

"Well then?" asked McGinty aggressi

"Well then?" said Valentine. He wa most too tired to care.

IMPERCEPTIBLY they were coming n the island. The current brought them ne and they rounded a promontory that u then they had not seen; it ran out, mak headland above the sea. A house came view, standing in trees, a house like th tive houses, thatched and brown-walled a large house. Valentine took the glasses McGinty and, looking through them, flowering trees above lawns and steps le down to the beach, where boats lay a chor and a jetty was built out into the on wooden poles; it looked empty, rapt. he saw that smoke was going up from back and a flag was flying from a flagpol fluttering on the breeze, a flag of blu white.

"Someone discovered this island befo did," he said.

"It must be someone white," said Ginty. "No wog would keep a garde that."

"What about Garden of Eden?" Valentine. "Adam a wog."

"He wasn't!" Ginty was begi indignantly when dinghy came up w bump against s thing that was flo in the sea.

At first it looke two pig bodies flo swollen in death; they saw that they were two canvas fastened to a floating cork that was dra an end of chain and must have broken from a buoy. The bags were padlocke sealed and labeled.

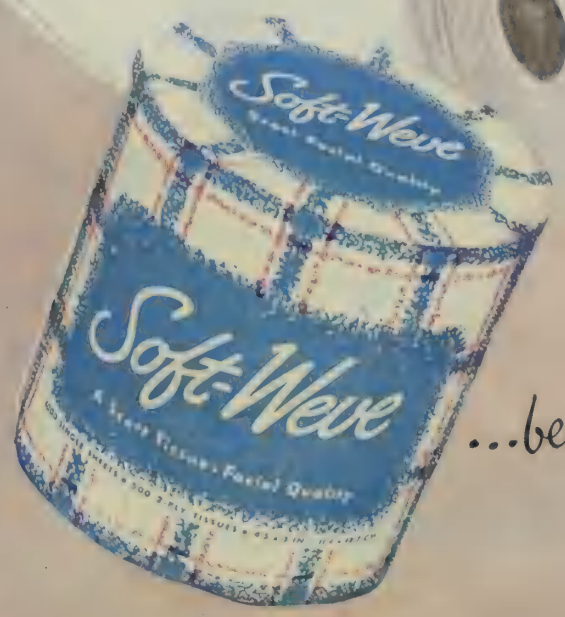
"Mail," said Valentine. Gingerly le over, he dragged them to the side o dinghy. He read the labels: "J. van Loo and a date. The date was eighteen m old. "You were right," he told McG "It's a white man," and he looked to the house. "Castle van Loomis, I think said. "We had better put in there."

"Better go down to the village," McGinty. "Can't call it a town. The cu is taking us there, and it would be a j paddle against it, back to the house. The have seen us, won't they? If there i petrol, it will more likely be in the town in a house. He looked at the mail ba Valentine held them floating at the s the dinghy. "Better take those in."

McGinty pulled them round and tied behind the dinghy. Pulled down by weight of the bags, they kept a strai course, and the current took them quickly now toward the little town.

The sun had begun to warm Valentin felt it soaking into him, and his body comforted. Drowsiness began to fill his and more and more he felt as if he dreaming. He half shut his eyes, leaving direction to McGinty, letting his p steer lightly against the side of the di letting the current take them.

"Wake up, Skip!" said McGinty sha Valentine jerked into half wakefulnes said that six times!" said McGinty young face was severe.



"Why say it at all?" said Vale "Why . . . bother to wake up?"

It was before breakfast that same mo that Charis van Loomis had caugh houseboy, Filipino, kissing one of the h maids, Flora Annie.

(Continued on Page 75)

It's out of this world for softness...
—yet it's so firm, too!

To make a toilet tissue as soft as cleansing tissue is one thing. To make it strong and practical as well, is more difficult. But cleansing tissue softness with strength is what you'll find in "Soft-Weve." We call it "water-woven." This two-ply tissue is utterly soft yet firm—almost like cloth. Once you have used "Soft-Weve" you will want it always.

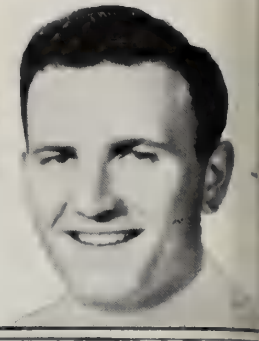
Cleansing tissue soft... yet toilet tissue firm ...because it's double

"SOFT-WEVE" REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.



THOUSANDS OF HOUSEWIVES, their husbands and families have BACTINE in their homes and like it.

CHILDREN LIKE BACTINE because it does not sting nor burn on cuts, scratches or scuffed arms and legs.

52,000 DRUGGISTS now have BACTINE. Ask your own druggist for BACTINE—try it!

Out Of The Famous MILES LABORATORIES Comes This Amazing New

ANTISEPTIC, GERMICIDE, FUNGICIDE, DISINFECTANT AND DEODORANT

BACTINE

The Finest General Purpose Germ Killer You Have Ever Used

or DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK!

WE WANT EVERY WOMAN who reads this magazine to try BACTINE. We want you to prove to yourself (at our risk) that BACTINE is the most wonderful family antiseptic, and the finest general-purpose germicide you have ever used. All we ask is that you give BACTINE a thorough trial in your own home. Try it for any of the dozens of uses where a powerful, yet gentle antiseptic is needed. Then if you do not agree that it is one of the best preparations you have ever seen or used, we will give you DOUBLE your money back.

AFTER FOUR YEARS of scientific research, Miles Laboratories, Inc., now offer to every housewife this remarkable new improved germ-killing formula. BACTINE is much more than just another family antiseptic. BACTINE gives you an Antiseptic, Germicide, Fungicide and Deodorant—ALL IN ONE BOTTLE.

CLEAR, COLORLESS LIQUID. BACTINE contains no iodine, mercury or phenol. It has amazing germ-fighting power, yet it is so gentle you can use it on a baby's skin. We know if you try it once and see how many uses it has and how good it is, you will never be without BACTINE in your home. We want you to see how children welcome its use because it does not sting nor burn, and how it does not leave ugly stains on skin nor clothing. That is why we make you this "DOUBLE your money back" offer.

TRY BACTINE FOR FIRST AID. It is marvelous for cuts, scratches, burns and abrasions because it helps reduce pain and at the same time fights off infection. BACTINE'S germ-killing action lasts for several hours. Rub it on your hands or body and it does more than destroy most germs and fungi that are already there. Laboratory tests show that even when people, after using BACTINE, deliberately soil their hands and contaminate them with actual bacteria cultures, the prolonged germ-fighting action of BACTINE is still effective.

BACTINE IS AN AMAZING DISCO because it has so many, many uses i home. It is a boon to housewives, esp those who have growing children. a bottle of BACTINE in your home i become "the first thing you think of" family injuries occur. It sounds almo good to be true, but it is true. Yo prove it to yourself by trying BACTINE i own home on our "DOUBLE YOUR MONEY GUARANTEE."

TRY BACTINE AS A DISINFECTANT a effective sanitizer for sickroom utensils mometers, syringes, dishes and hands. It bats the spread of disease germs. It is a derful disinfectant and deodorant for diapers and diaper containers.

TRY BACTINE FOR ATHLETE'S FOOT. only cleanses the affected areas and relie itching and burning of athlete's foot, bu also an effective fungicide that fights o fungi which cause infection. BACTINE also effective relief for itching, burning, pers feet.

TRY BACTINE FOR ITCHING SKIN. lieves the irritation of heat rash, sun insect bites, stings and weed poisoning.

TRY BACTINE AS A DEODORANT bo body and household odors. It doesn't just unpleasant odors but destroys them an them the bacteria that often cause odo leaves a fresh, clean odor of its own.

BACTINE IS A BARGAIN. At your drug it costs only 30c for the small size, only 7 the big 6-ounce family size and only $1. the full pint. You will never realize how BACTINE is until you try it. So go to drug store today and get a bottle of BAC Remember you take no risk. If BA doesn't prove to be the finest household septic and all-around germicide you have used, Miles Laboratories, Inc., will r DOUBLE your full purchase price.

BACTINE was developed by the same great laboratories that gave you Alka-Seltzer, ONE-A-DAY (brand) Vitamins, Tabcin (for Colds and Hay Fever) and Miles Nervine.

DOUBLE Your Money Back If You Don't Like It!

We Repeat, you take no risk when you buy your first bottle of BACTINE. Get a 30c, 70c or $1.25 bottle from your drug store and try it. Let every member of your family use it. If you don't find BACTINE the finest family antiseptic, the most helpful germicide, fungicide and deodorant you have ever used in your home, send the empty bottle back to us. Tell us why you don't like it and we will refund DOUBLE the purchase price.

MILES LABORATORIES, INC.
ELKHART, INDIANA

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS MAGAZINE — AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

In addition to earning the seals of Good Ho keeping and Parents' Magazines, BACTINE has been scientifically tested and approved independent research laboratories.

At All Drug Stores

(Continued from Page 72)

ere was nothing in that: on the island and girls were always kissing, and a kiss particularly nothing to Filipino; he d as lightly as a swallow flies. It was not the kiss; it was that the storm had given is a wakeful night and had seemed to to a head all her other wakeful nights, estlessness and tossing; she was restless ıse she was continually stabbed by tire-, painful thoughts. Now she had a fur-ɔitter little stab: it was that she was four older than Flora Annie and never had kissed; she never would be kissed, never be, because there was no one to kiss On the island Charis was alone of her for her there were no Filipinos, no mo-for her, as this was for Flora Annie, who flicked away round the corner with a of giggling laughter and a flutter of her nd-white cloth. It was this that made is rude to her father, Mr. van Loomis, eakfast.

e breakfast table was laid on the veranda ɔalustrade where orange Bignonia creepers and swung and hid it from the sea; but, ıgh the tendrils and keys of flowers, is could look at the sky and across lawns lowers and pink-and-white cassia trees cascade of morning-glory, the great -blue convolvulus that grew looped on ɔoo arches above the flight of steps. s and trees and bushes were still drip-from the storm; the lawn was strewn leaves and scattered blossoms, and the ɛn boys with wet naked legs were pick-p branches and twigs and sweeping the s, while the grave young gardener, Res-tion, was walking by the beds, looking /hat the night had to his flowers. Squir-an up and down the . It was not warm gh yet for the butter-but the lizards were ɔn the walls or on any ɛs that had caught bright morning sun.

The more we do, the more we can do; the more busy we are, the more leisure we have. —HAZLITT.

ıe table was laid with silky grass mats, china, silver and a bowl of flowers. There coffee, the pot of island pottery, the e from bushes that Mr. van Loomis had vated. There were brown bread and e bread and oatcake and the island thin ıvened-bread cakes. There were honey ɔutter and wild-orange marmalade. There grilled fish and home-cured ham and and melons and oranges, pomegranates grapes. None of this pleased Charis.

looked across the table with stormy and said, "I'm sorry I was rude, father, I want to know."

Why now?" said Mr. van Loomis with a "You have never asked before. Why ? Why?"

ıaris only looked more stormy and said ı, "I want to know."

What could you possibly want to know I haven't taught you?" asked Mr. van nis. "I have taught you everything."

Not those sort of things," said Charis. "I to know real things," and she cried rably, "I don't know anything!"

You are very ungrateful," said Mr. van nis, helping himself to fish and toast and er. The cook's eleven-year-old son, Web-made the toast, squatting down with ɔack to them in front of a small brazier so Mr. van Loomis should have it piping "You have been taught as scarcely any are taught," said Mr. van Loomis se-ly, buttering his toast. "You have had my vided attention since you were a year or almost undivided. I have had—er—r things to see to. Things you wouldn't erstand. You were only a little girl."

I'm not a little girl now," said Charis. "I nearly twenty-one."

ıe knew what Mr. van Loomis meant ɔther things. There were relations that called part brothers and sisters on the ıd. Charis found herself wondering, sud-y, if she had part brothers and sisters; remembered a house on another part of island where she had once ridden, and father and Pheasant, who were never ry, had been angry: there was a child there, Charis remembered, that had blue eyes; perhaps more than one child.

Charis fixed her own eyes on her father and said, "Have you ever seen an island man with blue eyes?" and then blushed herself as she realized that he was blushing.

Charis, thought Mr. van Loomis, is not as lovable as she was as a child. Instead of listening when he talked to her, now she seemed to have thoughts of her own. It seemed to Mr. van Loomis that she was trying to trap him, but Charis was not thinking of Mr. van Loomis, she was thinking of herself.

Yes, I am nearly twenty-one, thought Charis.

MR. VAN LOOMIS was eating fish caught offshore by his second boat boy that morning; it had been grilled on pointed sticks over a wood fire, as he had taught his cook Serendipity to cook it; it was delicious, but he scarcely noticed it; he was disturbed. Charis was eating nothing; she played with a piece of toast and looked at the table with eyes that were resentful and, Mr. van Loomis feared, inclined to be tearful; he could not bear tears, particularly Charis's tears. Charis cried so seldom that there must be something really wrong.

"Shall I call Pheasant?" he said.

"Pheasant!" said Charis scornfully. Pheasant had been Charis's nurse, but lately, mysteriously, they had changed places and Pheasant was now the child, Charis the grown-up one. Pheasant was too fat, too comfortable, to recognize these tremblings and stirrings that had grown almost to an agony in Charis. Pheasant was simple; she would call them growing pains. "Pheasant!" said Charis as if she spoke down her nostrils, not through her lips.

"Very well, I won't call her," said Mr. van Loomis meekly.

While he and Charis were safely at breakfast, the servants and their relations and friends gathered in the courtyard outside the kitchen for gossip and tea. They squatted down on their hams, contentedly playing the island game of knacker, a kind of draughts, or smoking their abominable-smelling green cigars, or eating slices of Mr. van Loomis's melons. They were all there under the litchi tree that grew in the center of the court.

Round Niu, the headman, there was a little space of respect. Niu was old, dried to an extraordinary lightness and thinness; his gray switch of hair was combed back from his large forehead, his eyes were big and mournful and reserved. He was dressed in the island "cloth," a length of cloth, white or dyed with vegetable dyes, and worn round the waist, hanging to above the ankles and pleated in folds from the waist knot in front; all the islanders wore cloths, but Niu wore what they did not, flat grass slippers with flapping heels that let them hear him everywhere he went. Once upon a time Niu had been chief on the island; Mr. van Loomis kept Niu at his right hand so that he always knew where he was, and the slippers told the islanders. For all that, Niu remained unfathomable and secret.

Next to him in honorable place came Pheasant. Mr. van Loomis had brought her as a young Negress from Puerto when he himself came, and she had stayed on the island ever since. It was he who had named her Pheasant because her plumpness, especially her plump neck and her glossy colors, reminded him of pheasants. As if starting from that, Pheasant had become the island namer. She had named all the island babies born round the house and in the villages near since she came. Pheasant's names were distinguished and various. She could read, but not with understanding, and she took them for their sound from the outsides of Mr. van Loomis's books, sometimes the title, sometimes the author's name, sometimes the publisher's, but it had a way of being the right name. She had successfully named such different people as the big cowman Hutchinson; Niu's young twin grandson, the grave

(Continued on Page 77)

Some simple facts about

DIABETES

Diabetes is a condition in which the body is unable to utilize properly the sugars and starches in food. This condition is due to a deficiency in the body's supply of insulin. However, the use of insulin, made from the pancreas of animals, has made the treatment of diabetes increasingly effective. As a result, diabetics usually live long and nearly normal lives. In fact, life expectancy for the average diabetic today is double what it was before insulin was discovered, and has increased even more for young diabetics.

1 RESEARCH promises more effective treatments for diabetics

Medical science is constantly improving the treatment of diabetes. Different types of insulin, which vary in speed and duration of action, have been developed to meet the varying requirements of patients. A new type of insulin, now under trial, combines fast action with long-lasting effect.

There is continuing research on other phases of the disease. Work with radioactive isotopes and other studies offer the hope for further progress in treatment, and perhaps for the prevention of some cases of the disease.

2 DETECTION is quick, and easily accomplished

Sugars and starches cannot be utilized satisfactorily by the untreated diabetic. As a result, sugar appears in the urine. Having periodic medical examinations that include a check for diabetes helps to insure early diagnosis. If proper treatment is started at once, serious complications can usually be avoided.

One recent survey showed that for every 4 persons known to have diabetes there were 3 others who had it without knowing it. It is now possible for anyone who suspects diabetes to make a simple, inexpensive test at home for sugar in the urine. Kits for this test may be obtained at most drug stores. If the results of the test are positive, a doctor should be consulted immediately for a complete examination.

3 TREATMENT is largely the patient's responsibility

Most doctors agree that the diabetic himself largely determines his own future. Cooperation between patient and doctor, of course, is essential. Only the physician can determine whether or not insulin is required, and in what dosage. He will also prescribe proper diet and advise about necessary exercise.

Once the correct treatment is established, however, continued successful control of the disease depends mainly on the patient. He should be careful and faithful in following the prescribed instructions, and he should be alert for signs of possible complications. If the average diabetic observes these and other precautions, he can usually look forward to living a long life with almost undiminished activity.

COPYRIGHT 1950—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 110 J "Diabetes."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Super-gorgeous Holiday Cakes—so easy

WITH THESE 2 SWANS DOWN-WONDERFUL MIXES!

Marvelous Swans Down Instant Mix! Makes light-as-a-feather white cake . . . spice cake, upside-down cake, brownies, cookies, and many others! The only mix made with Swans Down Cake Flour! Just add milk . . . no expensive eggs!

Get some today! Then make this upside-down cake topped with Ocean Spray Cranberry Sauce. Good? It's a real holiday dazzler!

Richer-in-chocolate Devil's Food Mix! A new Walter Baker Chocolate blend . . . and a new formula that holds chocolate fragrance and flavor right through the oven heat. The same wonderful egg whites with delicate, spring-fresh flavor, as in Swans Down Instant Cake Mix.

Swans Down Cake Flour and Cake Mixes are products of General Foods

Cranberry Festival Cake

Prepare Swans Down Instant Cake Mix as directed on package. Before mixing, make

Ocean Spray Cranberry Mixture

1 can (1-pound) Ocean Spray Canned Whole Cranberry Sauce
⅓ cup orange juice

Place cranberry sauce in 9 x 9 x 2-inch pan, add orange juice, and spread evenly in pan.

Carefully pour cake batter over cranberry mixture. Bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 50 minutes, or until done. Remove from oven; let stand 30 minutes. Then loosen cake around edges, invert on plate, and remove pan. Serve warm.

NOTE: To make cake with fresh cranberries, combine 3 cups cranberries, 1½ cups sugar, ⅓ cup orange juice in saucepan. Cook over low heat until skins burst (about 7 minutes). Pour into 9 x 9 x 2-inch pan.

Rocky Road Cake

Prepare Devil's Food Cake as directed o Swans Down Devil's Food Mix package. Cool Then frost with

Rocky Road Frosting

3 squares Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate
3 tablespoons butter
3 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
7 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
12 marshmallows, cut in small pieces
2 tablespoons unsalted roasted peanuts

Melt chocolate and butter over hot water Combine sugar, salt, milk, and vanilla and blend. Add the hot chocolate mixture and mix well. Then fold in marshmallows and peanuts, and let stand, stirring occasionally, until of spreading consistency.

Swans Down { Instant Cake Mix Devil's Food Mix

(Continued from Page 75)

g gardener, Resurrection; and Orange er's curlyheaded baby Golden Treasury.
easant was not plump now, she was vith good eating and soft living she had n immense, but she was still spotless, capable, still busy. She was too fat on the ground; and she sat now on a tool with her sewing. Pheasant was the woman on the island who sewed; she taught Charis, but Charis was enough islander to do without it.

ar Pheasant in the shade of the litchi was Serendipity the cook, the head ner, and the first boatman, Luck. This he place of honor. Near them again were wo young housemaids, Orange Flower
'lora Annie, the gardeners, the boatmen he young groom. Farther off were the girls, the spinning and weaving girls, the boys, the garden boys and the sweeping
. It took a great many island servants to ittle work, but that made it more enjoy-they enjoyed being with one another, he house and garden sounded with a y hum of voices and laughter.

ı kept separate, his slippers flapping signal as he went, and there was another who kept separate, and that was Niu's grandson, the houseboy who had kissed Annie, the young man Filipino.

ipino was an uneasy being; he upset all ther young men. Niu had kept him in but, more and more, it was becoming ssible to keep a hand on Filipino.

easant had named him Filipino, an ex-n to her usual names, because he was a
He was born the year they came to the l, the elder twin of Resurrection, who o quiet and grave and different from rother. Filipino was not noisy; he was He would not sit in the servants' ling quarters round the kitchen; he l not sleep in his grandfather's house, gh, nominally, he was supposed to live
. He had built himself a small open hut e shore under a palm tree, by some a bushes that grew there in the sand;
he lay, when he could, on his strung ot sleeping but propped on his elbows, in on his hands, gazing far out to sea.
did he see? the islanders asked him.
was nothing to see, but Filipino saw elous things. It made the islanders un-nothing Filipino did would have aston-them.

N Charis could not always follow where ind went. She had thought much of Fili-admired him, confided in him; they een companions. Now Charis saw him
g Flora Annie and shut her eyes in pain.
y things had changed with Filipino; she hought it was she who had changed, but pino were going after girls, that left her y behind. To Filipino, Charis was a
, a standard, something white and high him, who led him and was told his dreams. It had not occurred to anyone that Charis, too, was an island girl.

To island eyes, Charis was very plain, and she, naturally, had island eyes. As she had never seen a white woman, she could judge herself only from the faces she saw round her; she could compare herself, for instance, only with Flora Annie. Flora Annie was acknowledged to be a beauty; she had a golden skin flushed with health, ripe red lips, and pearly little teeth like a child's that showed when she smiled; her eyes were iridescent, and she had long rippling blue-black hair that she wore twisted up in a knot with a flower; she wore shells or flowers in her ears that showed every time she moved her pretty neck; her neck ran down in softness to her breasts that came up pointed and swelling from the scarf she wore or did not wear tied loosely round them. Charis wore short-sleeved blouses sewn by Pheasant and held in by a wide sash tied round her waist over her cloth; she was the only young woman on the island whose breasts were never seen. The difference was like her white skin, and though her breasts were hidden, they were strangely conspicuous; it gave her a sense of being pilloried. She felt colorless beside the other girls.

Charis looked at herself in an old mirror that had been her mother's and that Mr. van Loomis had brought to the island from the home he would not talk of, the home where Charis was born. It was strange to think her mother's face had looked in the same mirror; Charis wondered if hers had been as pale—as ugly, thought Charis, as mine? Her face was not ugly; she had her father's forehead that was distinctly noble, and hers was an improvement on his in that she had none of the obstinacy that he showed in heaviness round his eyes. Her eyes were unmistakably fine, and she had a pleasing fall of silky hair. Beside the island girls her body was small and light and immature, and that made her feel inferior again; it was strange that Charis, the island queen, should often feel inferior, but —— Orange Flower is no older than I am, thought Charis, and she has had a baby and is expecting another. I suppose I could have a baby, too, thought Charis. I could have had three or four by now . . . but she did not really believe it. She seemed too small, and she sighed again. She was convinced she was hideous.

Charis's lot on the island was queenly, but it was not enviable; if she were near-royalty, she was very lonely. She heard the laughter and banter from the servants' quarters, she saw the groups of boys and girls on the beach, playing in the surf and wandering off into the woods and along the shore for picnics. Picnics reached their peak each spring in the courtship month that waxed in excitement as the moon grew full. It was the courtship month now. Charis sighed.

(Continued on Page 80)

"The bird-in-hand's here!"

Ocean Spray
CRANBERRY TIME

READY TO SERVE WITH CHICKEN OR TURKEY

READY TO USE
IN LUSCIOUS DESSERTS LIKE THIS

CRANBERRY FESTIVAL CAKE

Here's the recipe for the prize-winning cake served to 3000 people at the 1950 Cranberry Festival. Everyone raved about it. You will, too! It's as easy as this to make . . .

CRANBERRY FESTIVAL CAKE

Combine 1 can (1 lb.) Ocean Spray Whole Cranberry Sauce
1/3 cup orange juice

Spread evenly in 9 x 9 x 2 inch oiled cake pan.

Prepare Swans Down Instant Cake Mix as directed on package. Pour over cranberry mixture. Bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 50 mins. or until done. Remove from oven; let stand 30 min. Loosen cake around edges, invert on plate, and remove from pan. Serve warm. Top with whipped cream if desired.

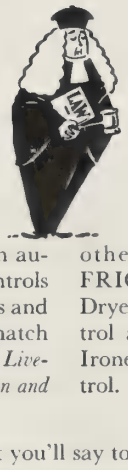
Let us send you this book of 20 more famous cranberry recipes from famous American eating places. The choicest collection of cranberry dishes ever published. Fragrant puddings, quivering salads, luscious pies and desserts.

Send 10c (no stamps, please) to:
OCEAN SPRAY, Dept. 11L, Hanson, Mass.

Name .....
(Please print)
Street .....
City ..... Zone State .....

BUY-LINES

THE holiday fashion theme is played . Bagpipes . . . so give in to this Scottish influe and have yourself a real Highland Fling . . . plaid. It's worn everywhere and every-how, is most important where most unexpected . plaid shoes, plaid gloves, plaid hats and pl



PAINT A PRETTIER PICTURE to "dream on" with LADY PEPPERELL Superfine Muslin Sheets in your "personality" colors . . . Aqua. Pink. Misty Yellow. Hyacinth Blue. Ashes of Roses. Spring Green and Peach Bloom. And don't think pastel sheets are a luxury beyond your budget . . . for PEPPERELL is a promise of exquisite colored sheets at a real bargain price. And I do mean exquisite . . . they're so beautifully textured they're as soft 'n' smooth as delicate flower petals. But will they wear? Indeed they will . . . in fact long "life" is so thoroughly woven into LADY PEPPERELL Superfine Muslins that recent tests proved they were 33% stronger than regular muslins in the crosswise threads which, as you know, get the most wear. That's why these sheets are the very finest grade muslin money can buy . . . and why they actually grow lovelier with tubbing and tugging. And now for news of LADY PEPPERELL Fine Combed Percales, see page 154.

I'VE BEEN SLEUTHING . . . trying to find out which mixer is really the best. And I know I have the right answer . . . beyond a shadow of a doubt. It's the new 1950 GENERAL ELECTRIC Triple-whip Mixer . . . but let the facts speak for themselves: 1. There are three beaters for faster, more thorough mixing . . . and are a "cinch" to clean since there's no center shaft to get in your way. 2. The new juicer . . . lets you squeeze a dozen or more oranges with no clogging. 3. A built-in light shines directly down into the bowl . . . so you can see what you're mixing. 4. An improved speed selector is out in front where it's easy to read and set . . . with 12 speeds to choose from and lots of power in each. 5. A 4-quart and 2-quart bowl "accompany" each mixer. But why go on . . . the new G-E Triple-whip Mixer has too many wondrous features to tell you about. So why don't you visit your G-E Dealer and see it with your own eyes? I know you'll want one for yourself . . . and for Christmas gifts, too.

YOU BE THE JUDGE . . . visit your FRIGIDAIRE Dealer and learn why you can't match the new FRIGIDAIRE Automatic Washer with its time-saving, easy-to-use Select-O-Dial. It gives you completely automatic washing . . . you just set the dial once and it lets you pre-select the right washing time for any fabric. Then automatically fills the washer, controls rinsing and drying . . . even cleans and shuts the washer off. You can't match these features, either: The way Live-Water washing really gets clothes clean and bright . . . with surging, penetrating currents of hot sudsy water that produce all the washing motion with no pulling or yanking. The way Rapidry-Spinning really gets water out of clothes . . . and the fact that the FRIGIDAIRE Automatic Washer is so vibration-free no bolting down is needed. Judge the performance of these other "marvels", too . . . the FRIGIDAIRE Automatic Electric Dryer with variable temperature control and the FRIGIDAIRE Electric Ironer with Prestoe-Matic Foot Control.

"THANKS A MILLION"! That's what you'll say to the Sandura Company of Philadelphia . . . for they make the revolutionary new floor covering called Sandran. It's lovely to look at and a "snap" to keep clean . . . yet amazingly sturdy and long-wearing. Why? Because VINYLITE BRAND RESINS, produced by Bakelite Division, Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation, are used in producing this wear-defying material! It gives you everything you could wish for in a floor covering . . . to wit: Dirt and grease can't sink into the smooth, non-porous surface . . . just a swish of the mop cleans it. No hard scrubbing needed . . . ever. The colors are clear, beautiful and lasting . . . won't scuff off or fade since they're part of the VINYLITE PLASTIC itself. There are handsome, third-dimensional patterns that look like fine carpeting . . . as well as smart tile designs in a variety of lovely colors. So ask for this revolutionary new floor covering at your favorite store . . . it will save you work and worry in every room of the house.

IT'S HARVEST TIME . . . your cue to reap a big "crop" of DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice and add it to your store of pantry-shelf delicacies. It's the most delicious, sunny refreshment you could possibly choose . . . the just-right drink for every occasion. I don't think that any other juice (any other drink, for that matter!) has such a mellow, tart-sweet flavor . . . or is as perfect a "companion piece" for all kinds of good things to eat. And here's why . . . DEL MONTE makes a point of selecting only the juiciest pineapples and picks them at the exact moment of sun-sweetened ripeness when natural tartness and sweetness are in perfect flavor balance. This gives DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice a rich, tropical flavor all its own . . . not too tart, not too sweet, the perfect juice for all 'round use. So visit your Grocer's and gather in your harvest today . . . your family will enjoy the sunny sparkle of this golden juice with meals and 'tween meals, too.

THE WORLD'S BEST BAKERS make the world's best Party Fare . . . TRISCUIT Wafers, baked purely for your eating pleasure by National Biscuit Company. And how they bake 'em . . . with a right-for-crunching texture, hearty, tangy, whole-wheat taste . . . then salted to a turn and toasted to a golden fare-thee-well. I've noticed that even the nicest parties become nicer when TRISCUIT Wafers are "invited" . . . so be sure to put them on your next guest list. They're luscious with sliced meats, salads, drinks, soups, appetizers, cheese and canapes . . . and become the "life" of the party when served like this: Mash pulp of 1 ripe avocado in a bowl; season with ¼ tsp. salt, ⅛ tsp. paprika, 1 tsp. lemon juice. Spread lavishly on TRISCUIT Wafers. One more reminder . . . TRISCUIT Wafers are so good your family will welcome them at mealtime and snacktime, too. Just be sure you get TRISCUIT, the distinctive biscuit made by NABISCO.

YOU CAN BANK ON THIS . . . six or sev prunes a day are good for you in eve way. And the reason is obvious . . . smooth cellulose pulp of prunes is valuable as a natural aid to regu habits. But don't make the mistake thinking all prunes are the same . SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Prunes by far your very best "buy-line" because: These plump, fruity "health nuggets" are fully tree-ripened . . . and the extra days of ripening insure extra sweetness, extra flavor and the extra "plus" that makes the extra effective. In addition, SUNSWEE are "Tenderized" . . . which means the so sweet and tender, they're as good raw they are cooked. And last but not least, the sealed in foil . . . then packed by the Grou themselves. It's good to feel good . . . so se your family SUNSWEET "Tend ized" Prunes every morning for bre fast. If you do, I'll wager you this they'll sing their way through every d and greet the night feeling better.

WANT TO "CATCH" taste-teasing protein main dishes at budget-pleasing prices? Then the best "bait" to use is DEMING'S Salmon . . . for it's salmon at its tempting, delicious best . . . always plump, firm meat that "boasts" a flavor, texture and color you don't get in ordinary salmon. That's why DEMING'S is famous for "Quality Always" . . . and why I urge you to try it. But here's another reason . . . it's amazingly economical, too, and has endless "talents" for all kinds of luscious and nourishing treats. So do take less than the best . . . ways insist on DEMING Salmon when you sh You'll find both DEMING Red and Recipe Pink S mon packed the conventio way . . . as well as a new ki of salmon with skin and backbone moved that DEMING'S has just veloped: Comes under two labels. 1 . DEMING'S Sirloin Salmon (that old favo Alaska Red Sockeye). And 2 . . . DEMING Sam-O-Lets, a different kind of delicately vored, light meat salmon that's tops in ta

Food Shopping is a Wonderful Adventure

when so many of nature's good things can be bought the self-service way. I've just discovered I can buy fresh fruits and vegetables from open refrigerated cases at my local store. And I find that this saves me lots of time and work. The fresh produce is weighed, priced and wrapped in sparkling CELLOPHANE. I choose what I want and move on . . . no waiting. Everything's clean, too . . . because DU PONT CELLOPHANE protects produce from handling and dirt. It keeps food from drying out in the store and at home . . . and there's no waste or work, since many vegetables, like spinach, come washed, cleaned and trimmed . . . ready to drop in the pot. I like this new and better way to shop, and you will, too, when self-service produce prepackaged in CELLOPHANE comes to your community.

GOOD HEALTH is the first blessing of a body's "Thanksgiving"! Yet it belongs only to those with good digestion, calm nerves and restful nights . . . which is why I'd like to recommend POSTUM to help you enjoy a more bountiful share of these g things. As you know, both coffee tea contain caffein, a drug and ne stimulant. And while many people drink these beverages with no ill-effe others who are caffein-susceptibles su nervousness, indigestion and sleepl ness as a result. This never happ when you drink POSTUM, though it's entirely caffein-free! But your acti will speak louder than my words drink POSTUM exclusively for 30 d and see if you don't sleep better, better and look better. INSTA POSTUM has an invigorating gra rich flavor—and it's easy to fix, insta right in the cup. Your family thank you for it . . . as a refresh mealtime beverage and a sooth "night cap"!

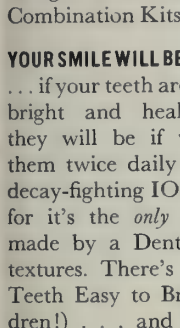
• • • by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING PAGE



evening dresses. The motif is in contradictory combinations and kith-'n'-kin colors . . . plaid with velvet, plaid with tweed and plaid with plaid in such daring shades, for instance, as red, orange and yellow mixed in one costume.

Write to Nancy Sasser,
271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.
#1 ☐ FREE Du Pont NYLON Booklet, Dept. J
#2 ☐ Cavalier Pin, Dept. L, 25¢ plus 2 CAVALIER Cigarette front covers.

ARE YOU PUZZLED about permanents and can't decide which kind to get? If so you'll be interested in what I have found out. A TONI Home Permanent will give you the loveliest wave you ever had . . . it feels as soft as naturally curly hair, looks as lovely and lasts as long as a $20 permanent . . . but TONI costs only $1! Reason it's so much better than other permanents is easily explained . . . TONI's exclusive gentle-action creme formula was especially created to give you a frizz free wave (even the very first day!) that looks, feels and "acts" like naturally curly hair. Most women agree with me on this, too . . . because TONI is the only permanent that has given over 93 million lovely, longer-lasting waves. And TONI is the only permanent that has those wonderful SPIN Curlers . . . they make curls so easy to wind even a child can do it! Both regular size and Midget SPIN Curlers come in TONI Combination Kits.

HERE'S AN IMPORTANT MESSAGE . . . about things that affect the wear of your NYLON Stockings. The most important are . . . fabric construction, proper fit and length, careful handling, proper gartering and denier. But right now, let's talk about denier . . . it's the weight and thickness of each thread of NYLON yarn in stockings. This means that the higher the denier number the stronger the thread . . . so naturally 30 denier yarn is twice as heavy and twice as strong as 15 denier. Before 1948 most NYLON Stockings were the heavier 30 and 40 denier . . . and they're still available. However, many women (I know I do!) now prefer the lovely 15 denier because they're so sheer and flattering they help us look our best. As I've told you before, DU PONT makes the NYLON yarn but not stockings . . . over 600 manufacturers make the stockings. • To learn more about the care of stockings, see Offer #1 in box for FREE NYLON Booklet. •

YOU'LL THANK ME FOR THIS OFFER . . . for, if you ACT NOW, I'll send you an exquisite Cavalier Pin almost as a GIFT! It's truly a "must" for fashion-wise women . . . because it adds the perfect style note to your scarf, lapel or beret. Let me describe it for you . . . it's a beautifully designed figurine of a romantic Cavalier in shining gold, black and deep red. It's Hamilton gold finished . . . then highly polished and lacquered to prevent tarnishing. The Cavalier's plumed hat, dashing sword, gloves and boots are shown in jewel-toned detail . . . and there's a full safety catch on the back to keep it securely fastened. A pin as lovely as this would ordinarily cost a lot . . . but not in this • SPECIAL OFFER! Just send 25¢ and the fronts of two packs of CAVALIER Cigarettes . . . See OFFER #2 in box. • I know you'll like the cool mildness and mellow flavor of CAVALIERS . . . so stock up and get several Pins at a time!

PAGE SANTA CLAUS early this year . . . for otherwise you may find he's given his most wonderful toys to somebody else's little girls and boys. And of all the gifts in his bag, these two inflatables stand out most . . . Bo-Bo, the Roly-Poly Clown, and Trigger "Hobby Horse". Bo-Bo is 4½ feet high and 4½ feet around . . . guaranteed to take everything a youngster can give and bounce back for more. Trigger "Hobby Horse" has no hard wheels or sticks . . . just attach him to a young Cowpoke's belt and let him gallop away. Both are made of dependable VINYLITE BRAND PLASTIC by Doughboy Industries, Inc., New Richmond, Wis. . . . especially designed for easy inflation and strongly built for lasting fun. And they will last . . . because sturdy VINYLITE BRAND PLASTIC, a product of Bakelite Division, Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation, is resistant to cracking and tearing, is washable and moisture proof. Both toys attractively priced . . . at Better Stores everywhere.

YOUR SMILE WILL BE BEAUTIFUL . . . if your teeth are sparkling bright and healthy. And they will be if you brush them twice daily with safe, decay-fighting IODENT . . . for it's the only toothpaste made by a Dentist in two textures. There's IODENT No. 1 for Teeth Easy to Bryten (especially children!) . . . and IODENT No. 2 for Teeth Hard to Bryten (particularly smokers!). That's why you can now smoke and smile, too . . . Because no other toothpaste so safely removes ugly smoke smudge and polishes your teeth so brightly as IODENT No. 2 with its delightful, refreshing flavor. No other toothpaste but IODENT No. 1 with its gentle texture and special flavor children love is so perfectly suited to growing teeth. So, Mothers, help your family smile more brightly . . . by getting IODENT No. 1 and No. 2. Or if you prefer an IODENT with Ammonium Compounds to help fight decay, get No. 1-Plus-A and No. 2-Plus-A. The BIG family-size tubes cost only 43¢!

BEAUTY IS THE BUSINESS of every Cover Girl . . . and SWEETHEART is their beauty soap. That's no exaggeration . . . for recently I asked all the glamorous girls whose pictures you see on the covers of America's leading magazines what soap they used, and 9 out of 10 said, "SWEETHEART Soap." Why this overwhelming preference? Because these American beauties can't afford to face the camera with rough, chapped skin . . . and this pure, mild beauty soap helps prevent chapping. Leaves your complexion soft and smooth as velvet, too . . . with a fresh, youthful glow that's picture-pretty. But don't envy the Cover Girls . . . you, too, can have the same exquisite skin with SWEETHEART Care. It's the soap that agrees with your skin . . . so get the new, big, satiny bath-size cake today and enjoy SWEETHEART beauty baths and complexion care. I'll wager that one week later your skin will look softer, clearer, more radiantly beautiful . . . see if it doesn't.

YO-HO-HO and a package of song . . . here's a "treasure chest" for any lover of canaries. It's FRENCH'S Bird Seed and Biscuit . . . a chest so packed with golden song that it's preferred by 7 out of 10 canary owners. That's because it's a complete diet . . . which, as you know, is the first essential of beautiful singing. What is a complete diet? Not just an ordinary mixture of a few common seeds . . . but the 12 tested ingredients that keep your pet healthy and happy. And, of course, a canary that's happy and healthy is one that sings . . . brightly, beautifully and thrillingly. The Biscuit is one of the most important "treasures" in the "chest" . . . for it not only contains the diet essentials your canary relishes and would seek in nature, but is also the "plus" from which his sweetest songs are made. But prove it to yourself . . . get FRENCH'S Bird Seed and Biscuit. Feed it to your golden-throated songster for just 10 days . . . then listen!

YOU CAN CHANGE YOURSELF . . . be even lovelier than you are! Skillful make-up is the "secret" . . . so experiment with different shades of rouge, powder, lipstick and mascara . . . then test new ways of application. And for best results, be sure to use CO-ETS . . . little fluted cotton squares that are super soft, smooth and absorbent. Truly, a CO-ET is your best bet for every beauty "treatment" . . . applying make-up, astringents, foundations, etc. . . . as well as removing creams, excess make-up, nail polish, and the like. And to aid and abet your new beauty, try these subtle tricks of feminine "sorcery": Saturate several CO-ETS with your own special perfume and use them as sachets for lingerie cases, dress pockets, luggage, hat boxes and purses. And for parties tack a scented CO-ET inside the neckline of your dress . . . makes the perfume last longer to keep you lovelier. Cost of CO-ETS is 29¢ for the large economy package with 80 fluted cotton squares. At Drug, Cosmetic Counters.

WHY PRETEND? You can't afford corns . . . for they're not only painful, but are ugly and quite "foreign" to feminine charm. Fortunately, there's a quick, easy way to rid yourself of these "tormentors" . . . just wrap a BLUE-JAY Corn Plaster 'round your toe the minute a corn appears. Almost instantly the soft felt pad calls-a-halt to agonizing shoe pressure . . . then Nupercaine (exclusive with BLUE-JAY!) soothes away surface pain while gentle medication loosens the corn. The result? In just a few days you can simply lift it out. But remember . . . if the corn is on your little toe, I urge you to use BLUE-JAY Little Toe Corn Plasters. They contain all the regular BLUE-JAY features . . . but are especially designed to fit your little toe and speedily ease the pain. So keep your feet "happy" and free of painful, unattractive corns . . . by getting both kinds of BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters at your Drug Counter today.

HARVEST MOON BALLS highlight the pre-holiday social season . . . but you'll never be a queen if your hair is dry, brittle and unruly from using drying shampoos. So take a tip from some of the nation's most beautiful belles . . . switch to new KREML Shampoo right away. It's utterly different from any shampoo I've ever used . . . for it has a natural oil base and caresses your hair with the gentlest touch . . . leaving it silken soft and a perfect darling to manage. But there's still another reason why I think you'll want to make KREML Shampoo your choice from now on . . . it contains a magic new ingredient called "Folisan" with special cleansing qualities. It really works beauty miracles . . . gets hair so marvelously clean it fairly sparkles with natural highlights and radiant, glossy sheen. Of course, with hair getting longer, you'll want to keep yours softer and lovelier . . . so depend on KREML Shampoo to help you coax it along the new style lines.

Durkee's COCONUT

There's just nothing like Durkee's snowy, white coconut! It makes ordinary cakes into picture-pretty masterpieces like this. And they taste as good as they look.

Durkee's Coconut is sweet and tasty. And stays that way! Durkee's Coconut does not absorb moisture from icings. Cakes stay fresh till the last bite.

Available two styles: The familiar carton — or extra moist in the can.

Sprinkle Durkee's Coconut over puddings for a rich, tropical flavor.

Glamourize your favorite pies with luscious Durkee's Coconut.

Snow under fresh or canned fruits with Durkee's Coconut.

COCONUT FROSTING

2 egg whites
2 cups sugar
⅓ cup water
2 tsp. corn syrup
1 tsp. Durkee's Vanilla
1 pkg. Durkee's Coconut

In top part of double boiler, beat egg whites, sugar, water and corn syrup. When well blended, place over boiling water and continue to beat with rotary beater 7 or 8 minutes until frosting is thick and holds its shape when dropped from beater. Remove from boiling water. Add vanilla and continue to beat another 5 minutes or until frosting is thick enough to spread. Allow to cool. Sandwich between 2 layers of cake and cover top and sides with rest of frosting. Sprinkle top and sides of cake with Durkee's Coconut.

© 1950, The Glidden Company

Durkee FAMOUS FOODS

(Continued from Page 77)

"Why can't I go for a picnic?" she had asked last year.

"You can't," Mr. van Loomis had answered shortly. He would say no more than that.

"But I want to go for a picnic," she said to Pheasant.

Pheasant, too, had said, "You cain't do dat." Pheasant sounded scandalized.

"I shall," said Charis.

"Not while Ah got breaf! Ah sho' gwine speak ter yo' pa 'bout you."

For Charis the island was almost as unpeopled as if the islanders had been spirits and only her father and she had been alive on it. Tears pricked her eyelids as she sat behind the coffeepot, but, at Mr. van Loomis's look, she blinked them away.

Yet, up to a little while ago, she had been perfectly happy; hers had been a halcyon childhood: she had her beautiful, orderly, well-regulated home, her father's and Pheasant's love and care; she had the adulation, or at least the respect, of the servants and islanders; and she had the whole island of sun and beauty and balmy content. Nothing ugly or rough or frightening had ever come near the small Charis. She had her pets, her birds and dogs and her white pony, Dominion, the only pony on the island. She had her garden and books and toys; she had her lessons with her father, and, if they were stern and hard and trying, she was enough of a scholar to like to be tried; she had the physical pleasures of intense well-being, of swimming in the warm-surfed sea, of sun-bathing, of walking and riding, of fishing with her father and the boatmen. She had all these things still, but all of them were spoiled. Why spoil them? Charis asked Charis. The answer was that she could not help it. It had begun with Mario.

She remembered, when she was reading The Cherry Orchard, she had found Anya's cry, "What have you done to me, Petya, that I no longer love the cherry orchard?" It was not only Petya's talk, it was also Petya himself who had done that to Anya. Charis had thought so much of Anya and other girls she read of that they had become real to her: Rosalind and Emma, Becky, Dora, and Anna Karenina; she used to pretend they were her sisters; now they were only ink and paper; all that happened to them was there in black and white. Charis did not know what had happened to her except that, for her, it was not Petya, it was Mario. She saw that clearly now. Sitting at the breakfast table, she could have cried, "What have you done to me, Mario, that I no longer love the island?"

Mr. van Loomis and Charis and Pheasant were not the only aliens on the island. When they had come there they had found Mario's mother installed. She was a Spanish woman, married to a minor island chief, but she had kept her own name, and Mario was called Mario Fernandes. She had been a strange, coarse, cruel, wrathful woman, who had made her imprint on the whole island and ousted its chief, Niu's father, from his right.

In morals as in art, saying is nothing, doing is all.
—RENAN.

On the island, if anyone chose to oust you, you did not oppose him, but, if unspeakably oppressed, without argument you put an end to the oppressor. You did not quarrel or argue; you killed. Mario's mother lived, and it was this simple fact that told the islanders she was a witch; nothing could be done against her. When Mr. van Loomis came, he seemed to have no fear of witches. He kept Mario's mother in her house, stopped all her traffic with the people, and, though she was violently angry, presently it was she who died. Then the people knew that Mr. van Loomis was a magician.

He did everything he could to enhance this belief. He had a barometer, and he read the winds and weather better than the islanders could; he had a burning lens with which he kindled fires to astonish them; and there was his far-seeing eye, the telescope, and the twin eyes of his field glasses, which, it was reported, could make things large or small, near or far, according to which way you looked through them. The reports c from Filipino, who, alone on the isl dared to touch them, but even Filipino not know how so much power came to be in such small space. Filipino looked th up in Mr. van Loomis's dictionary or et clopedia, but he had not yet come to leg

Mario's mother had had no rights or ti in the island, but, after her death, Mr. Loomis remembered that her unpreposs ing son was half European and had ta him into his home and tried to bring him and teach him. Mario was not teachable was sullen and stupid and simple. Mr. Loomis took him fishing, tried to teach h good manners, a little English, to read a write, and some astronomy, which he lieved all people should study to give the sense of proportion. Mario caught few fish remained as uncouth as he had been bef and beyond knowing the moon from the s he learned nothing about astronomy.

From the beginning Charis had dislik him; she said that he was hideous. Mario thick-bodied, thick-necked, thick-jowl even his tumbling black hair was too thi he looked like a young bull animal. He kn that Charis did not like him, and that ma him follow her and tease her.

"This-a island belong-a me," said Ma in his peculiar jargon.

"It belongs to my father," said Cha

"No-a, mine. Mine but you-a not-a ca When you-a get big, I-a marry you."

"No!" cried Charis in horror.

"No else for you-a marry," said Mar and that was true.

Whether those conversations shadow anything in his mind she did not know, b one evening a few we ago, she had met Ma in the corridor outside h room as she was going bed. It was late. Mr. v Loomis was walking in t garden; Pheasant and t servants were gone to th huts; no one was near. Mario stood again the wall to watch her pass, and Cha stopped. She had sniffed a new smell Mario. It was the islanders' drink, arra She was quite used to the islanders' drin ing; when they were drunk they becam merry and, afterward, sleepy. But she d not like it on Mario. She stiffened a waited to let him pass her, but Mario d not move.

"You don't like me, do you, Prince Charis?" he said in Spanish. "Es que no gusto, Princesa Charis?" When he was tir or cross or distressed or drunk he laps fluently into his mother tongue. "Come he Ven á mí."

But Charis did not come. Her back again the wall, she looked at him with scornful ey but she felt her hands suddenly cold.

"Shall I came and get you, Santa Charis

Charis's usually good sense left her. S knew it was foolish to move from the wa but when Mario came at her, she scream and ran down the corridor. Mario was sl on his great feet, but at her door he caug her and dragged her into her room. Cha could still see the shadowed quiet look of t airy white cave that was her bedroom, a she had still the horrible sense that Ma had defiled it. She could still feel his han on her as he dragged her, undignified, to t bed, her feet slipping and sliding on the ma ting. At that moment Mr. van Loom stepped out of his dressing room next do

She had not seen Mario again, but Phea ant had told her that he had been sent to t lighthouse on the rocks.

"Mario wanted to co—cohabitate with m didn't he?" she asked now, wrinkling h forehead.

Mr. van Loomis winced; he had taught h to say what she meant in plain words, b these were too plain.

"But 'co' means 'with,' from the Lat 'cum,'" said Charis thoughtfully, "and wasn't with Mario, was I? I was again him. What is the word Blake uses?" ask the literary Charis. "You know, in t Daughters of Albion? —'catch for thee girls

(Continued on Page 82)

Tantalizing Twosome—

erica's most delicious Tomato Juice *
ved with Sunflower Appetizer!

t delicious" is right! All the proof you really need is this lore people prefer Libby's Tomato Juice than any other brand!
etter proof is for you to taste Libby's sunny-rich flavor yourself.
a special gala opening to lunch or dinner serve Libby's with this Sunflower Appetizer: Cut slices of cheese and buttered white with a scalloped cookie cutter. Form the center of the blossom with d cut from Libby's Ripe Olives. Serve on green leaves.

McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

GET ACQUAINTED WITH THE WHOLE LIBBY'S FAMILY OF JUICES

PINEAPPLE JUICE
PEACH NECTAR
PEAR NECTAR
APRICOT NECTAR

Look to LIBBY'S for perfection!

What's the latest news on baby care?

1. Is "rooming-in" at the hospital better for mother and baby?

Many hospitals and doctors are enthusiastic about having mother and baby share a room; others are doubtful or do not have the facilities. But all agree that it is valuable to have the mother help give the baby a bath. Then the young mother learns early that there's nothing like pure, soothing Johnson's Baby Oil for preventing skin irritations.

2. How often should Baby have a shampoo?

Three times a week is sufficient, unless there is crust or scale on the scalp. Then shampooing should be done every day, oiling the scalp first with Johnson's Baby Oil. A bit of Johnson's Baby Powder carefully patted into neck creases when he is dry will ward off little chafes and prickles.

3. Should a baby be left to hold his own bottle?

Modern authorities say Baby needs the warmth and security of being held closely in someone's arms during his feeding. At mealtime he should feel as comfortable as possible. So at the pre-feeding diaper change, be sure to smooth him with soft, silky Johnson's Baby Powder.

(Continued from Page 80)

mild silver and furious gold.'" I wonder if I am mild silver or furious gold, she thought. She was afraid she was mild silver. "Yes, copulation is a better word, though it begins with 'co' as well." She leaned her chin on her hands. "If we had copulated, would I have been his wife?"

"Good heavens! No!" said Mr. van Loomis, and his nerve broke. "You are not to talk like that."

"What would I have been, then?" asked Charis, and this little question entered into Mr. van Loomis and rankled.

He knew, now, what he had really known before and known for weeks: that the time had come when he must think seriously of the future of his daughter. He had brought her to the island quite forgetting that she would grow up, and here she was, grown. She was a young woman now, and he remembered with sinking spirits that young women were utterly puzzling; that, full of heart, they were curiously heartless; that they were absurdly vulnerable and absurdly foolhardy. "Damnation!" said Mr. van Loomis.

Out on the sea, in the dinghy, Valentine and McGinty saw a canoe detach itself from the fishing boats and come paddling up to the dinghy. As it came level, four tall, brown-skinned, naked fishermen stood up, balancing on their feet, shading their eyes from the sun with one hand as they looked at Valentine and McGinty. They called to one another with excited cries.

What does one say to them? thought Valentine. One can hardly say, "Good morning," but McGinty had already called out "Hullo." The men did not answer but stared naïvely and thoroughly.

"White man? Sahib?" called McGinty, tapping his chest and pointing at the house.

The men shook their heads. Valentine and McGinty could not know that to shake the head in island custom meant "Yes." One man also said what sounded to Valentine like "Ohé." They stared again and then turned their boat and paddled away toward the island.

"They have gone to tell," said Valentine.

"I HAVE taught you as no other girl was ever taught," said Mr. van Loomis to Charis. "I have never let you waste an hour. No governess or school could have been as careful."

"No," agreed Charis listlessly.

I should have let her be an islander, thought Mr. van Loomis despondently. Why did I teach and train her? Why didn't I leave her to grow as she could? As she would? He knew that it had not altogether been consideration for Charis. It was his need for someone to talk to, to talk with. Now that he had her, now that she approached to what he would have her be, this other unforeseen thing had come on their horizon. Will I have to take her away? Damnation! said Mr. van Loomis to himself. Wait and see. Something may happen. He had a feeling that something would happen. He felt as if he had waved a little stick.

Charis knew she had changed. Pheasant told her she was always bad-tempered these days; her father said she was selfish and self-absorbed. If it was true, she could not help it; for her everything had changed. Nothing was itself any more; everything and everyone was tied to herself, and each had something as repellent as Mario, as attractively yearning as Filipino. Beautiful and hideous: those were her two epithets. Mario had touched her, and now his touch was the more powerful. Hideous! Hideous! thought poor Charis, and, suddenly, she wanted her mother. Mr. van Loomis and Pheasant were not enough.

BACHELOR

Originally a bachelor was a soldier not wealthy or powerful enough to lead retainers into battle under his own banner. When knighthood was in flower the term came to mean a person of inferior rank. The word was then applied to a college degree to designate a scholar who had obtained an inferior degree, or one not quite so good as that of master or doctor. With the stigma of inferiority still appertaining, it came in more modern times to be applied to a man who was not good enough to find a wife. Some modern bachelors have tried to justify themselves by insisting that they are not hard-hearted; they are just amour-plated.

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

"Was . . . mother . . . like me?" Charis. It was the first time she had sa ordinary name. "Am I like mother?

Mr. van Loomis was jerked back veranda and Charis. He stared. mother!"

"Yes. Mother."

HE drummed his fingers on the tabl always did when he was disturbed. mother was a very beautiful woman.

Then . . . not like me, thought Char tears ran down her cheeks.

"Why are you crying?" asked M Loomis. "She has been dead more twenty years. You needn't cry for her

"I have never cried for her before, Charis defiantly. "I want to know abo I want to know who she was. I want t who we are. I know nothing at all. W we? Why did we come here? Who am

Mr. van Loomis stared at her and t stared far over the sea. It was so long s had thought of his wife and the outer that his mind had to grope after ther they roused a strong emotion, stronge he would have believed possible. He w silent, drumming his fingers; then abruptly, "Your mother was a Miss B

That sounded so unlike the names ple as Charis knew them that her dried her tears. never thought self as Miss van and she wond anyone would her that. "M Loomis," she mured dizzily.

"No, Burns rected Mr. van "Yes, in a way like her. She a wealthy Edi family. Yes, s wealthy as well a tiful." A smile t his lips. "She the Earl of Spe

"Then ——" opened her lip zled. "But . . . my father?"

"I am the Spey." Mr. van seemed curiously oppressed and troub it. "It brings it all back," he said. "Yes I am the Earl of Spey. Our family n Fyffe." And he said wearily, "The Spey, K.T.—that is a Knight of the in case you don't know—K.T., G.C Viscount Ardlamont, Baron Staplef the county of Shropshire."

"All that?" asked Charis, marvelin

"Your real name is Grace Elizabet stance Fyffe. Lady Grace Fyffe," and pleadingly, "Charis is a prettier nam

Charis did not hear that. "Then went to England now ——"

"Scotland," said Mr. van Loomis.

"If I went to Scotland now, I sh Lady Grace Fyffe?"

"If you went to Scotland now you probably have to work in a factory."

"Would I really?" asked Charis cally.

Her father did not ask her how she h rosy vision of factories; he was busy w own thoughts.

Charis felt uplifted and widened to horizon. She wanted to say to her "That is enough. Enough for today. tell me any more today," but her th came back to her mother. Her mother s real now, wealthy, beautiful Miss Burn dreamily she asked her father, "W mild silver or was she furious gold?"

The question took Mr. van Loo guard. "Mild silver," he said gruffly he stopped, smiled, as if he had a r brance. "No, furious gold. She ——" was a silence.

Charis looked up and saw with s that her father was unable to spea stood up and pushed his chair awa went to the steps, standing with hi toward her, and Charis, at the table,

(Continued on Page 86)

Four boxed corners hold sheet to mattress like a second skin. Fitted "tuck-under" prevents sheet from wrinkling.

RE YOU A SHEET FIGHTER?

'ou can't wrinkle, can't pull out this amazing CONTOUR sheet

E most restless sleeper can't budge a Contour* eet! You wake refreshed, bottom sheet as ooth and unrumpled as when you went to bed. Sturdy, taped corners hold the sheet firmly in ce until you take it off. A deep "tuck-under" les into place and anchors all four corners, lding the sheet wrinkle-free all night long.

Save work by using Contour Sheets on every l in the house! When you wake up, your bed half-made! Day-to-day bedmaking goes faster ause the bottom sheet never needs smoothing or retucking. Contour Sheets are easier to launder, too—cost less because they weigh less—and they fit so snugly, ironing is optional. They keep their fit perfectly washing after washing because they're Sanforized.

Available in double, twin, and crib sizes, combed percale and extra-strength muslin. Sizes adjust to slight variations in mattress thickness. Try your favorite store or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. K-11, 214 Church Street, New York 13, N. Y.

*TM Pacific Mills Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Pacific's Cribfast Sheet is the only fitted sheet that tucks under all around. In white and pastels.*

t's a PACIFIC sheet BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS

FOR Extra Quality and Extra Valu

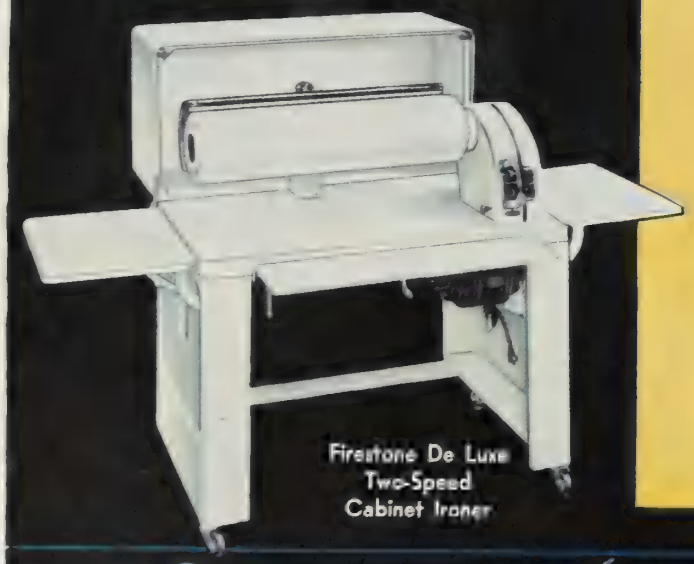
Firestone



Firestone
De Luxe Washer

Firestone
De Luxe Gas Range

Firestone De L
Electric Rang

Firestone De Luxe
Two-Speed
Cabinet Ironer

HERE'S GOOD NEWS for all who want extra quality and extra value at no extra cost!

At surprisingly low prices, you can get the very latest features in the newest Firestone refrigerators, food freezers, gas and electric ranges, washers, ironers, vacuum cleaners and many other home appliances now on sale at your nearby Firestone Dealer or Store. And every product is tested thoroughly for reliability and long life by the Firestone Quality-Control Laboratories before it is approved for sale.

Shown on these pages are but a of the many top quality products home and farm, for cars and trucks work and recreation on which you save money at Firestone. And remem
... it is a fundamental policy of Fires to give extra quality and extra valu service as well as in products; and nationwide network of Firestone De and Stores assures you of service facil
in all parts of the country.

So before you buy any home a ance, see the Firestone line. Buy convenient budget terms if you de

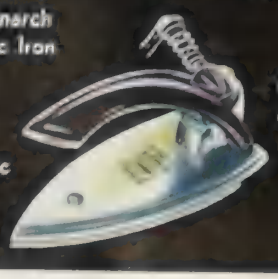
Listen to the Voice of Firestone on both radio and television every Monday evening over N

Knapp-Monarch
Tel-A-Matic Iron



General Mills
Tru-Heat Iron

Westinghouse
Adjust-O-Matic Iron

Firestone Supreme
Tank-Type Cleaner. Disp dust bag. Complete cleaning accessorie

General Electric
Travel Iron

G. E. Steam and Dry Iron

G. E.
Kitchen Clock

-NO EXTRA COST Always Buy...

lome Appliances

Firestone 19-Cubic Foot Food Freezer. Insulated with Santocel. New upright design saves floor space. Easier to use. More economical.

Firestone 11-Cubic Foot Supreme Refrigerator. Up-to-the-minute refrigeration from top to bottom. Full-width freezer. Fruit basket. Door pantry shelves.

Firestone Supreme
rush-Type Cleaner.
heavy-duty cleaning
rugs and carpeting.

Toasters of many makes and models

Electric mixers of many types

Westinghouse
Electric Roaster

Complete line of waffle bakers,
griddles and grills

Many makes and models of coffeemakers

Copyright, 1950, The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

the NEW SHAPE is the NEWS

The new-shape "tulip" neckline. News because it does such lovely things for you . . . giving your face the look of a flower between two great spreading leaves.

The new-shape Modess box. News because it does such considerate things for you . . . hides your secret so completely, discreetly. For this new shape gives the wrapped box the look of many other boxes. It could be candy . . . stationery . . . many things. Another tactful feature . . . boxes are now pre-wrapped before they even reach your store.

Only Modess comes in the new-shape, secret-shape box, pre-wrapped!

(Continued from Page 82)

glimpse of a difference that accounted for the difference in her, her difference from the islanders. On the island if you were sad, you wept; angry, you shouted and stormed; upset, you gave way. Now Charis saw grief, pent up and restrained, and this was something stronger than behavior, it was deep. She saw that the feeling between her father and her mother had been more than the words that began with "co" from the Latin "cum"; it was concerned with faith and honor, and respect and love, but a love that she had not met, except that its reflection was between her father and herself. She saw this only dimly and felt more than she saw. This is what books are about, thought Charis. This is what poems mean. This lies behind it all. I didn't understand before. Is that what I am waiting for?

She sat looking at her father with a new kinship until he came back and put his hand on her shoulder. "Charis," he said, "she was silver and gold."

The answer pleased Charis. He had said she was like her mother; she did not mind being mild silver, but she wanted to be furious gold.

"It's a long story," said Mr. van Loomis, and he seemed to go back a long way from Charis in his mind. "I didn't take much interest in life after she died."

"No?" said Charis gently.

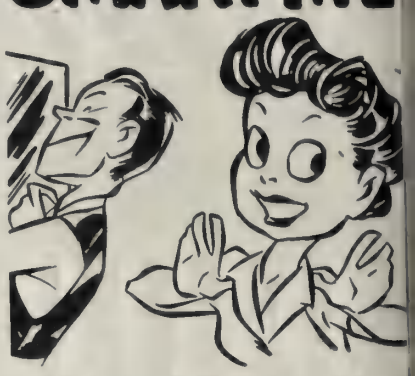
"No, that is not quite true. I had removed myself from life, perhaps, before. While I was up at Oxford," said Mr. van Loomis, his voice changed from nostalgia and alive with interest, "I became interested in conjuring."

The new romantic Charis stared at her father disapprovingly.

"I FOUND I had a gift for it," said Mr. van Loomis. "I became more and more interested. Conjuring to you means Maskelyne's and children's parties." (It did not. Charis knew the word only through the dictionary, as she knew most words, but Mr. van Loomis had forgotten where he was.) "It is an incredible art!" said Mr. van Loomis. "I use both words in their highest form: incredible and an art! No other art touches it. It is the power to transform; the power of the miracle, absolute." A look came into Mr. van Loomis's eye, a look that she had seen before but had not understood; it was visionary, determined and fixed. Then he pulled himself back to the breakfast table. "When you come to think of it," he said apologetically, "the whole world conjures, every man jack of us." He paused, and an older look of sadness came into his face. "Then you learn to go without it. That it is better to go without it. I have tried to learn that, Charis. I try to have nothing to do with it, but sometimes ——" He paused, and that look came back into his eyes, but Charis prompted him.

"Father, you were telling me ——"

Mr. van Loomis sighed and began again. "You must know," he said, "that we are shipping earls. Our family fortune was originally made in shipping and in whisky. The earldom was given to my grandfather for his services in the Sudan. He was a great soldier, Charis. He was, of course, already a baronet. His father started as a fitter in the yard of Munro Macdonalds of Clydeside. That is now one of our concerns. He rose by his own efforts entirely. We are a wonderful family. We can do anything."



Could I, if I were given the chance? thought Charis. It was the first time she had thought of doing anything, but how would she get a chance?

"We were often very foolish," said Mr. van Loomis. "In each generation, it seems, one of us had to have a folly. It was my grandfather who built a Greek temple at Spey, a Greek temple in Scotland. They use it for picnics now; they call it Spey's Folly. My father bought orchards in Tasmania; he bought them without advice or seeing them; they proved barren."

"And you?" said Charis.

"I don't know," said Mr. van Loomis and sighed. "It was a complicated world, complications and chicanery. There were the firms, and we had large estates. The Scottish are not like our islanders, Charis,

SMART ME

"I found the one dry cleaner who gets out ALL the dirt!"

It's magic Sanitone—colors and patterns come back to life because even ingrained grime vanishes. Spots gone. No stale cleaning odors! Perfect press lasts longer! Garments look and feel like new again. You can be smart, too—switch to the Sanitone Dry Cleaner for all your family's clothes!

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

LOOK FOR THE NAME OF YOUR SANITONE DRY CLEANER IN YOUR CLASSIFIED PHONE DIRECTORY

Emery Industries, Inc., Cincinnati 2, Ohi your best as you LOOK your best. See your local MAICO consultant, trained by the world renowned MAICO laboratories to help you hear.

HEAR

MAICO

443 Maico Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

CHAPPED SKIN?

Try this famous Canadian lotion. (1) Nothing soothes and softens a chapped, dry skin more quickly—(2) aids its healing more rapidly—(3) protects skin more surely against chapping, roughness and dryness!

At cosmetic counters—25¢, 50¢ and $1 bottles

Campana's Italian Balm

TUMS

Let you eat what you like

Millions now eat foods they never dared touch—without fear of acid indigestion distress—by taking a couple of Tums after eating. Almost instantly, heartburn, sour stomach, gassy bloat of acid indigestion are relieved. And Tums are so pleasant to take... just like candy mints. Don't deny yourself food you like. Get Tums from your druggist today. Only 10¢ a roll; 3 roll package a quarter.

for the tummy

AFTER BREAKFAST
Take one or two Tums. See if you don't feel better fast.

It's Safer to MARK EVERYTHING You Own

Protect against loss, identify quickly, personalize distinctively—at home, school, traveling, etc. Insist on Cash's to be sure of Cash's quality.

with Cash's WOVEN NAMES

CASH'S HUGH NEEDHAM

12 Doz. .$3.50
9 Doz. .$3.00
6 Doz. .$2.40
3 Doz. .$1.80

NO-SO Cement 25¢ (to attach without sewing).

...k your dealer, write for samples Cash's So. Norwalk 4, Conn.

Dr. Scholl's SHOES

...orld Famous for their ...natomical Fit

If your feet hurt—or are "hard" to fit—Dr. Scholl's Shoes will give you glorious walking ease—free of painful friction and pressure points on your feet and toes. Their style distinction give no outward hint of their inward scientific design.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet—women's, 2½ to 13, AAAA to EEE; men's, 5½ to 16, AAA to EEE. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe and Dept. Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable in your city, write for catalog.

Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Ill.

One can't be despotic there. The simplest agricultural laborer is not simple at all. There everything is complicated. They have forgotten how to live. I didn't have time for it all. I didn't make time. I didn't do my duty by the estates or by the firms. I didn't take my place in politics or the affairs of the country. Then there were strikes ——"

"Strikes? Against you?" This was quite a new idea to Charis. She did not like some of the things he did on the island, but this was the first time she had seen him as a tyrant. "Did they starve?" she asked dramatically.

"People don't starve if they strike," said Mr. van Loomis. "They get strike pay." But that was too intricate for Charis to follow and she let him go on. "There was trouble after trouble. I admit I didn't give my mind to it. I found it very tiresome and uninteresting. I was gaining a secret knowledge that would have astounded ——" He broke off. "I forgot," said Mr. van Loomis, "that to live your life successfully you must have life, and to have life you must live." That was so exactly Charis's own thought that she looked at her father with surprise. "You can't live by shutting yourself away," said Mr. van Loomis. (But isn't that what you have done again? thought Charis. We are shut away on the island.) He sat down at the table and ran his fingers over his beard, smoothing it down. "I am afraid I was a very selfish man. I had a brother Archibald; he was clever, energetic, charming and astute. I was fond of him. Too fond." He sighed. Even now it hurt to think how a brother could hurt. "After the last war came the slump of the twenties—you wouldn't remember that. You weren't even born. It was acute economic depression.

"We had troubles among the men," said Mr. van Loomis. "In the yards, at the works, Women like to sit down with trouble as if it were knitting.

—ELLEN GLASGOW.

everywhere. Archie managed them. He was very helpful. Soon he had everything controlled. He used to bring me things to sign, you wouldn't understand, but documents, contracts, agreements, deeds. I was very busy and I often signed them without looking. When you sign your name over and over again, and all the letters as well, it is hard to find time to look. Your mother warned me, but I wouldn't listen. I was immersed in my own work and didn't want to be disturbed. Then she died and I woke up. It was too late. In the end, after the affairs had been settled, I was left with nothing but Spey. They couldn't take that from me."

"Spey?"

"Yes, Spey." Mr. van Loomis sat still at the breakfast table, but he seemed, in thought, to be a long way away. "Spey was the village our forefathers came from; it went with the castle. Our forefathers did not come from that, but my great-grandfather bought it when he bought—was given," Mr. van Loomis corrected himself and corrected himself again, "no, bought, his peerage. It's no shame to have bought what you have. You buy it with your heart and mind if you earn it. He made himself a peer, and my grandfather, his son, was the first earl." There was silence for a moment and then he went on, "Spey was a gray place, in the mountains with the glen below; the castle was gray; the battlements were still there and the keep and the four towers. You can have no idea, Charis, how tall those towers were; you had the same feeling there as you have here on the mountain, but, remember, those were built by men." Mr. van Loomis paused. He looked at Charis, who was sitting with head up, looking past him at the sea with shining eyes. "You are not listening."

"I am, I am," said Charis, and now she looked at him. "Why did you leave it if you loved it?" she asked.

"Your mother died and it felt empty. Besides, I wanted ——" He did not say what it was he had wanted. He said instead, "How could I stay? It needed a fortune to keep up a place like that, and I had given my for-

New Deodorant Powder Gives "HEAD-TO-TOE" PROTECTION!

Ends Need For Messy Creams, Liquids

At last—the complete deodorant! SHAKTI—a delightfully fragrant powder that actually stops perspiration odors before they start—assures exquisite daintiness from head to toe!

under all Girdles

DEODORIZES, SOOTHES, PROTECTS SKIN!

This easy-to-apply powder gives you deodorant protection plus the comfort of truly fine velvety talcum—even under rubber, nylon, rayon or satin girdles.

under all Nylon

NO FEAR OF FABRIC "HOLDING" ODORS!

SHAKTI is ideal protection under nylon blouses, uniforms, slips... banishing odors that ordinarily cling to fabric. And, with SHAKTI, there's no irritation—even when used right after a depilatory.

under all Hosiery

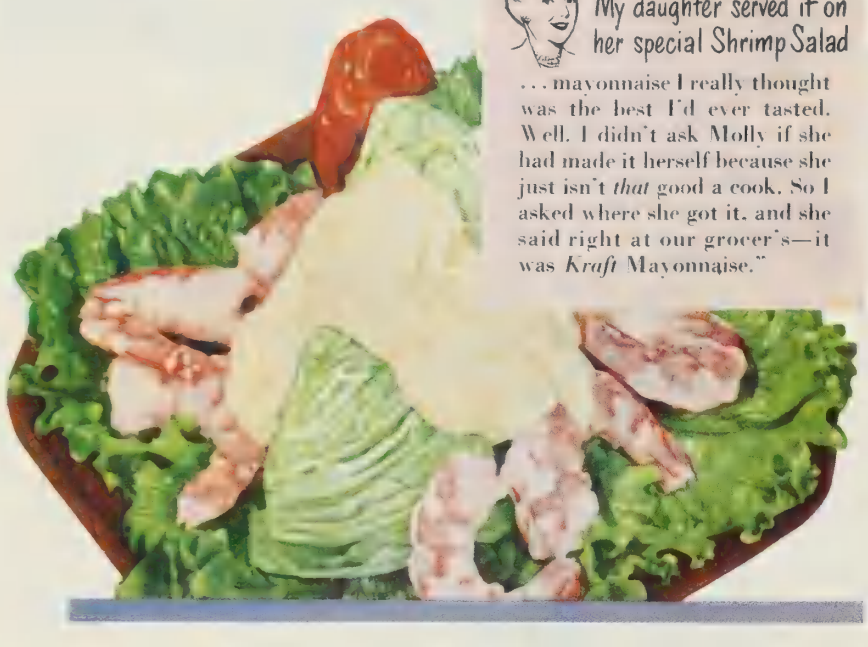
KEEPS YOU DAINTY TO YOUR VERY TOES!

SHAKTI keeps you confidently clean, right down to your very toes. Use SHAKTI before donning hosiery and shoes. See how daintiness lasts from morn till night!

Shakti BY COTY

UNBREAKABLE PLASTIC BOTTLE 1.00 PLUS TAX

To think



I've been keeping house for years and just now tried

KRAFT Mayonnaise!

"My daughter served it on her special Shrimp Salad

. . . mayonnaise I really thought was the best I'd ever tasted. Well, I didn't ask Molly if she had made it herself because she just isn't that good a cook. So I asked where she got it, and she said right at our grocer's—it was Kraft Mayonnaise."

"So then I tried Kraft Mayonnaise myself

. . . on salads, and in sandwiches, too. I was absolutely delighted. It's so luxuriously rich, satiny smooth, deliciously flavored . . . true mayonnaise, you know. A master blend of really choice ingredients. Kraft Mayonnaise has a wonderfully flattering flavor—a flavor that accents the goodness of everything it is served with. Do take my advice and try Kraft Mayonnaise soon."

A master blend of really choice ingredients true mayonnaise at its finest!

tune away. I was a ruined man; so I made it complete. I renounced my title in Archie's favor."

"In his favor! After he had treated you like that?"

"There was no one to blame," said Mr. van Loomis. "No word was ever said against Archie; only, mysteriously, after those years, I was ruined and he was rich, blamelessly rich. All the same, there were one or two people who didn't like the smell of him." He paused and then went on, "He was my heir; you were a girl. I knew I should never marry again, and I thought it would rankle." He smiled. "Archie was never robust enough to be wholly bad. He was sneaking. He used to steal jam and then be sick. If I stole jam," said Mr. van Loomis, "I kept it down. So he became the fourth earl, and, yes, it rankled. Poor Archie has never been easy. He writes to me still." He did not say it was a year and a half since he had picked up his mail. Then he remembered what lay behind this conversation. "I should have left you with him."

"Not if he was sneaking," said Charis decidedly, and Mr. van Loomis felt cheered.

"I determined to get away from them all," he said. "Not to bring a soul with me, excepting you. You were a pledge from your mother. I had heard of this island. We had dealings with the Puerto company and I bought it. I brought books and household goods and trees and seeds and stock and tools, left the rest and came. I have not regretted it."

"Wasn't I a great nuisance to you when you brought me here so young?"

"You were my greatest interest," said Mr. van Loomis. Tears started in Charis's eyes again, and he found them not far from his own. "I didn't bring a nurse for you. I thought it would be simple to look after you myself." The remembrance of the voyage came back to him. "Well, on the ship, yes, you were a nuisance. I was glad when we found Pheasant at Puerto. Still . . . here we have made a simple good life, Charis. It is fundamental. There is no conjuring here."

"Conjuring?" That word seemed to Charis to haunt her father. She asked, "What is the difference between conjuring and magic?"

"All the difference," said Mr. van Loomis shortly. "Conjuring is clever tricks. That is why the world is sick."

"Is the world sick?" asked Charis, interested.

"Yes. Sick with its own cleverness. I tell you, Charis, cleverness is a disease."

It was the first time Charis had heard that. "But . . . if people are clever?"

"Clever tricks are all the same," said Mr. van Loomis. "An atom bomb or a coffee machine. We crush our berries with stones and make coffee in a pan. Invent a coffee machine and you are on the way to the bomb. There is none of that here on our island."

CHARIS opened her lips to speak, and shut them. Filipino had invented a coffee machine. Seeing how often the coffee boiled and was spoiled, he had thought out a different way: he had made a pan of the island clay fired hard, over which fitted another with holes in its base; the coffee was put in this, and the water from below bubbled up, and the coffee was made without the grounds' being boiled.

"You invented the coffee," said Charis to Mr. van Loomis.

"I didn't. The coffee was here. I only used what was here."

So did Filipino; he used clay and fire and his wits. Everything was here, in the world, or it could not be . . . reached, thought Charis. She felt dizzy, overwrought and overtired; she had traveled a long way since the night and yet, for all this, she was still t same, still lonely Charis on the island.

Mr. van Loomis stood up. "I am going o to the lighthouse to see Mario. Would y like to come?"

"To see Mario!" After such a conversati as this! Charis was astounded at her fathe insensitivity. Then she remembered that did not know how she must feel. How cou he? He was not a girl, young, bewildered a alone. Charis began to cry.

Mr. van Loomis saw he had made a m take, and he saw, dimly, what was the ma ter. He looked at Charis sharply. When was uncomfortable or his own words fail him he often took refuge in proverbs.

"There is an old Hindu proverb, 'Wh the pupil is ready the teacher will come.'

It was at that moment that the ding came slowly round the headland.

AFTER he had taken Charis to her room a persuaded her to lie down in the quiet, M van Loomis came and stood thoughtfully the veranda.

It was a long while since he had helped woman to bed after an emotional scene. T women on the island did not need beds cept for sleep or love, and not always th a mat, the sand or t grass did as well. Th nerves were not torn scenes: they had nerves. Mr. van Loo drummed his fingers the veranda rail and r fled his beard.

It began to dawn him that there were u usual sounds and mo ment all round hi Shouts and calls w coming from the bea a small cook boy, a sl of melon still in his ha darted through the g den to the beach; th garden boys ran af him. No one was allow to come that way, a Mr. van Loomis stepp indignantly down o the terrace.

Niu appeared at elbow. "Look, Tsu Look!"

Mr. van Loomis look down on the beach where a crowd was gathering. He look along the jetty clustered with people a at the sea where fishing boats had ga ered. The far fringes of the beaches w alive with people, and more boats were co ing in, paddled so fast that white spray r round them. Then, following the line of Ni finger, he saw a small yellow object out to s He supposed it was a boat; it might ha been a raft, but it was not a native one. H heart began a peculiar pounding in his che He sent Niu for his field glasses. When had looked through them he stood very s on the terrace.

Along the terrace there were plumba bushes, small and feathery, with milk-B flowers, that grew with white oleanders tubs. The air was balmy with the smell grass and flowers warming in the sun; t wind blew in the acacia trees. But Mr. v Loomis noticed none of these things. brought the glasses down and said. "Se Filipino to me."

His first impulse had been to order out great canoe and go after the two men he h identified through the glasses as white m but on second thought he decided to se Filipino. Why should I go after anyon thought Mr. van Loomis grandly. This is island. Let them come to me.

Filipino was probably the last person the island to see the dinghy. He had be down in his hut, lying on his bed, readi while the other servants smoked and ch tered. Filipino had learned that familiari and chatter take away its strength from t mind. That was odd in such a talkative b as Filipino, but that was the strange th

(Continued on Page 91)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Now Let the Wild Geese Fly

By Elizabeth Coatsworth

At night came the rains
Which, like tears,
Leave the world older;
The foliage has fallen,
What remains
Is dim and dark.

Now let the wild
Geese fly
Through skies grown colder
And let blueberry bushes
Kindle
One expiring spark.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Does your child fit this PICTURE OF HEALTH?

Or is your child frail and underweight? Read this way to better nutrition hen a child is thin and nervous, the cause may faulty nutrition.

Many children, in fact, are "well-fed," but nourished. They may get lots of food, but always enough of the right kind. Such chil- n obviously need special care in the selection the foods they eat.

A mother should always remember that every ld needs, proportionately, 2 to 3 times as much certain food elements as an adult. These food ments include protein, calcium, iron, vitamins B_1, niacin and riboflavin. These may be called "spark plugs" of robust health and vitality l a child needs plenty of them. A lack of one more can cause a slump. And—please note s—they are the very ones most apt to be icient in average meals.

n theory—an adequate family diet can be pro- ed by serving a wide variety of carefully selected ds, thereby obtaining all the essential ele- nts. And this every mother should strive to do.

In practice, however, this is hard to do, because of the many problems of food buying, seasonal shortages, storing and cooking, and the wide differences in individual tastes and requirements within the family.

And so, today—busy, intelligent mothers employ a sound and simple method in approaching this problem. They use a supplementary food like Ovaltine.

Ovaltine is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes that may occur even in "good" meals. Ovaltine, mixed with milk, contains practically all the vitamins, minerals, and high quality protein necessary to bring ordinary meals up to the full requirements of a growing child.

So why don't you join the host of other mothers in this program for better health through better nutrition. Give 2 to 3 servings of Ovaltine daily in addition to regular meals. Then you can be sure you have done just about everything you can do to insure proper nutrition for your child.

READ WHAT FOOD-VALUES
YOU GET IN OVALTINE
MIXED WITH MILK

HIGH-QUALITY PROTEIN—essential in building body and nerve cells.

HIGH-ENERGY FOOD—needed for keen vitality.

IRON—necessary to maintain good red blood.

VITAMIN B_1—required for good appetite, digestion and healthy nerves.

VITAMIN C—necessary for healthy gums and all connective tissue throughout the body.

VITAMIN D, CALCIUM & PHOSPHORUS—all needed for straight, strong bones, good teeth.

VITAMIN A—a deficiency prevents normal growth —affects vision—may cause night blindness.

NIACIN—for normal functioning of nervous system and digestive tract.

VITAMIN G (Riboflavin)—essential to normal growth —and health of eyes and skin.

NOTE: Ovaltine has a remarkable appeal for children who refuse to drink plain milk, and it is especially processed for easy digestion.

OVALTINE

THE PROTECTING SUPPLEMENTARY FOOD-DRINK

Fun without fuss!

THE GREAT NEW

9-minute "crispy candy" with 5 variations

made with

Kellogg's

RICE KRISPIES and MARSHMALLOWS

Kellogg's
RICE KRISPIES and MARSHMALLOWS

are sweet on each other... They're being seen together at your grocer's now

You do so little and you get so much fun! And you'll be knocked right off your feet when you taste how good this homemade confection is. In just about 9 minutes you can turn out a batch of these golden brown, crisp, crunchy wonders—made with fluffy white marshmallows and Rice Krispies. So easy anyone can do it. Let the youngsters make up a batch tonight.

Recipes on the package for that Crispy Candy—Rice Krispies Marshmallow Squares—and five exciting variations:

- Chocolate Marshmallow Squares
- Peanut Marshmallow Squares
- Coconut Marshmallow Squares
- Peppermint Stick Marshmallow Squares
- Raisin Marshmallow Squares

Look how easy!

¼ cup butter
½ pound marshmallows (about 2½ dozen)
½ teaspoon vanilla flavoring
5 cups Kellogg's Rice Krispies

1. Cook butter and marshmallows over boiling water until syrupy, stirring frequently.
2. Add vanilla; beat thoroughly.
3. Put Rice Krispies in greased large bowl and pour on marshmallow mixture, stirring briskly.
4. Press into greased shallow pan; cut into squares when cool. Yield: 24 squares, about 2 inches each (13 x 9-in. pan).

(Continued from Page 88)

Filipino; he was everything: he was ve and not talkative; quick and slow;
nd gentle; bad-tempered and sweet;
for instance, Flora Annie was simply erbox and Resurrection was a silent ino had discovered a book he had not small brown book tucked away on n Loomis' shelves. It was called The of Man. He had borrowed it and the night before, and in it he had so many of his own thoughts that he hilarated. He felt confirmed in all his they were true; they were there in and print was gospel to Filipino.

ne had finally blown out his lamp and wn to sleep, the thoughts wove them-with his sleep in his brain and he woke with overtiredness but so exhilarated at he had kissed Flora Annie for sheer ow, to make sure he had not been mis-he was reading the book again. Oh, hould like to meet someone, now, who the world, the whole wide world! said
o. Niu hailed him, and he had looked seen the dinghy.
ke these and look," said Mr. van s when Filipino arrived out of breath, handed the glasses to Filipino. The ilipino took them and adjusted them
Mr. van Loomis; could Filipino have ose glasses before? The boy would not hought Mr. van Loomis, but he was ly unsure of what Filipino would not
"What do you see?" he asked.
o Tsulas, Tsula," said Filipino. With-glasses they all knew there were two men. At least a dozen people had told o that between the beach and the ter-
Two white men in a
at the color of the

or two ingenuous
ad suggested that it
even be the sun.
gods come down on a in the sun," they verently. Filipino pointed out that the as in the sky, and came on up to the u can speak some English?" said Mr.

omis now to Filipino.
é," said Filipino politely, his eyes cast tly down. He had the little book tucked is waist knot; he wondered what Mr.
omis would have said if he had seen glish in that.
ou are quick and you can use your
" said Mr. van Loomis. "Take a boat after the Tsulas and find out who they d what they want and bring them
Don't bring them to the house beach.
them to the second bay below and hem there till I come."
ino was silent. He was filled with ity and a great purpose. Soon he was t other white men, men of the world, ht be young white men. He felt he ssert himself now or never; the little ressed his waist. The Rights of Man!
o breathed quickly through his nose, eks flushed hot. He pressed his lips to-
and said nothing.
hen I give you an order you will say,
Tsula,'" said Mr. van Loomis.

murmured concurrence and gave Filismall kick on the calf with his slipper.
o, was very strict about island man-
Tsula" was the island name for "white
Mr. van Loomis was pleased to know had also come to mean "honorable."
i," the feminine, was Charis's title on
and.
hen I give you an order you will say,
Tsula,'" said Mr. van Loomis again.
vill say 'No,'" said Filipino.
emed to him that the silence stretched from the terrace, over the lawns and the trees, past flowers and bushes and
's bamboo swing, past the summer-and the clump of morning-glory, down eps to the sea. As if the silence had
, it seemed to Filipino that everyone his head to listen: the crowds on the the villages, the people on the mouneven the squirrels seemed to wait, bright-eyed; for a moment, no bird flew. The palms of Filipino's hands broke out into sweat, but to make sure he had said it, he said it again.

"I shall say 'No,'" said Filipino.

"Did you say 'No'?"

The four small words started a tumult of fear in Filipino. "No," he said. "I mean 'Yes.' Yes, I said 'No,' Mister," began Filipino pleadingly in English. He had meant to conciliate and say "Master," but in his agitation he used the objectionable "Mister," and he saw Mr. van Loomis's look darken still more. Suddenly he was glad that he had said "Mister." "I joined as houseboy," said Filipino loudly, "I am not your messenger. It is not my work to go."

MR. VAN LOOMIS seemed to tower over Filipino, and his breadth was immense. Filipino had not known that his face was such a network of purple lines or that his eyes could stab . . . like a swordfish, thought Filipino, with blue strength and power. Mr. van Loomis looked very large to Filipino, and he quailed and his bare toes moved uneasily on the terrace earth.

"Very well. I go," said Filipino hastily. "I go." Then he remembered and wavered and retrieved himself. "If you ask me nicely," quavered Filipino, and words from newspapers seemed to come to him though he did not realize what they meant. "If you pay me overtime."

"Slap him," said Mr. van Loomis.

Niu, his dark face darker with emotion, stepped forward and slapped his grandson on both cheeks. What kind of emotion Niu felt Mr. van Loomis did not divine; he never knew with Niu, but the slaps were hard. Filipino did not resist; the slaps stung, tears smarted in his eyes, but they made him angry and that was easier.

He that plants trees loves others beside himself.
—SCOTTISH PROVERB.

"I don't care," said Filipino proudly, his voice brimming with tears. "I, sir, am not your slave."

Mr. van Loomis was outwardly unmoved; his feet were set wide and firmly on the terrace, his bulk was large and calm, but inwardly he was in turmoil. The yellow boat was passing steadily down the bay. He wished to send this tiresome boy after it. What is in them all this morning? thought Mr. van Loomis. It's a ferment. Aloud he said:

"What did I take you from? What were you, knuckling under to Mario's mother, a woman? Were you free? In that witchcraft and abuse? You were slaves. Slaves!"

"No," said Filipino. He could not explain, but the submission to Mario's mother, the submitting to her abuse, still left them, in a way, free. Mr. van Loomis's demand for cooperation for their own good took far more from them and was far more forceful.

"Everything I have done here has been for your own good," said Mr. van Loomis.

"No," said Filipino. He still could not explain. It was too subtle for him, he could only feel it.

"You say 'No,'" said Mr. van Loomis. "I can say 'No' too. Is there a man or woman now under the evil eye? No. Is there misery and poverty and disease? No. Is there any tribute to pay? No. No taxes."

"There should be taxes," said Filipino. He struggled to explain. "We should do our own good or bad. Our good should belong to us."

"Is there anyone hungry or whipped?" Mr. van Loomis continued as if Filipino had not spoken.

"No, but ——"

"Is there leprosy or beriberi or plague?"

"No, but ——"

"Well then?" asked Mr. van Loomis.

Filipino began to feel desperate. He felt as if he were speaking with a loud voice and nobody heard. "But to be whipped or hungry isn't. I ——"

"You have never been whipped or hungry," said Mr. van Loomis. "Try it and see."

"I should willingly," cried Filipino.

Mr. van Loomis's temper broke. He felt he had had enough to try him that morning. "If I have any more of this you shall be whipped,"

(Continued on Page 94)

The Deepfreeze Electric Range is completely new! It has many wonderful automatic features to cut the number of hours you spend in the kitchen!

Deepfreeze electric cooking means less work and more leisure time, because you merely set the time controls. Then, cooking starts and stops as you desire!

MANY FEATURES . . . MANY MODELS!

See the beautiful Deepfreeze Electric Ranges with time and work-saving features! Multi-Heat Switches choose the heat intensity you want, from very low to high. More delicious meals—lower operating costs! And there are many other features such as the efficient broiler, the generous storage space, the 6-quart deepwell cooker. Heating units heat pots and pans completely to make cooking quicker. Six models at your Deepfreeze dealer. Choose yours today!

SEE FOR YOURSELF! Let your Deepfreeze appliance dealer show you all the time and work-saving features of America's newest electric range, a product bearing the name famous on the world's first and finest home freezer . . . the Deepfreeze Home Freezer!

Go Buy the Name—Deepfreeze
ELECTRIC RANGES

HOME FREEZERS • REFRIGERATORS
ELECTRIC RANGES • ELECTRIC WATER HEATERS

Only the products of the Deepfreeze Appliance Division, Motor Products Corporation, North Chicago, Illinois can carry the trade-mark Deepfreeze registered in the United States Patent Office.

Lady, please get up off your

Now easier than ever bef with wonde

There's no more work to waxing floors!

Today . . . march home from your dealer's wit remarkable new Glo-Coater and a can of Joh Glo-Coat under your arm . . . and you're all se

Just pour a little Glo-Coat on your clean floo spread it, standing up, with your new featherw Glo-Coater applier.

The Glo-Coater wax-applier assures an even, s less job. And in minutes your floor is bright w long-lasting Glo-Coat shine!

The Glo-Coater

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER!

(new applier for Johnson's Glo-Coat)

98¢ value...only

49¢

(in Canada 59¢)

when purchased with Johnson's Glo-Coat at regular price.

The Glo-Coater is beautifully designed! The head is lightweight plastic. An aluminum insert, holding chenille pad, clicks out in a jiffy. Just slip off the pad for handy washing. Same pad can be used over and over again. Gay yellow handle is almost 4 feet long, to end stooping. Many women use the Glo-Coater to wipe up splashed water and spilled food. Also for dusting down cobwebs in hard-to-reach corners.

Complete with two re-usable pads.

Head comes apart and pad slips off for easy washing!

Knees"

shine floors
ater-repellent GLO-COAT!

ne application lasts for weeks because LO-COAT is positively water-repellent!

ne shine Johnson's Self Polishing Glo-Coat puts your floor is hard and bright and water-repellent. rt doesn't penetrate the protective wax finish. It ys on the surface where it can be quickly wiped or swept away.

en after days, damp mopping with cold water is ough to whisk away the dirt... and the Glo-Coat ine remains. Johnson's Glo-Coat is positively ter-repellent... guaranteed to stay on your floors nger than other self polishing waxes... up to times longer than some!

The Glo-Coater is now featured at your dealer's.

Get yours today!

hnson's", "Glo-Coat" and "Glo-Coater" are trademarks of S. C. Johnson & Son, Inc. © S. C. JOHNSON & SON, INC., Racine, Wis., 1950

Butterfly Table
$59.50

WILLETT
SOLID
Golden Beryl
MAPLE

Chair
$24.50

*Prices F. O. B. Louisville

MAPLE IN A Mellow Mood

YOU'LL love this maple dining room in your home because it has that cozy, quiet feeling combined with just enough sophistication. It's SOLID maple, too—SOLID to the core of its hard heart; yet this hardest of cabinet woods has such a soft, warm, inviting feel that time cannot dull nor custom stale the infiniteness of its charm. Its interest is to today's homemakers. Notice that America's most popular table, the drop-leaf, is included as a major piece. For you, All the years of your life.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Corner Cabinet
$97.50

Table
$136.00

America's largest maker of solid maple and cherry furniture for living room, dining room and bedroom.

Prices are moderate, of course. The dining room pieces in the photograph above can all be yours for only $425* or buy from open stock.

CONSIDER H. WILLETT, INC., LOUISVILLE 11, KENTUCKY

(Continued from Page 91)

he said. "But I shan't whip you. I shall send you to Zambun."

Niu gave a little cry. Zambun was the penal settlement on the nearest island, a hundred and forty miles away.

"When I bought the island," Mr. van Loomis told Valentine later, "I took the precaution of becoming its magistrate. It gives me great power."

It gave him such power he sometimes forgot that, when he bought the island, he had not bought the people as well. But something was in the air today, and now he suddenly knew that, magistrate or no magistrate, he did not send people to Zambun, they sent themselves, and he had an equally sudden sense of the limitation of his own power. He was nonplused and he found himself turning to Niu. Niu was looking at Mr. van Loomis with his eyes set and with such hardness on his face that Mr. van Loomis felt cold.

There was a pause; then, "I shall not send you to Zambun," said Mr. van Loomis. "I shall turn you over to your grandfather."

Niu gave a sigh of satisfaction and lowered his eyes and looked at Mr. van Loomis's feet. Mr. van Loomis still had that sensation of coldness. Surely I'm not afraid of Niu? thought Mr. van Loomis.

Filipino was not satisfied. He had now wound himself to such a pitch that he could not accept this tame ending. "Send me to Zambun," he cried. "I like to go! Starve me! Beat me! I am not afraid!"

They turned to look at him. "But I have never beaten anyone," said Mr. van Loomis, bewildered. "I have had them slapped, but nothing else."

"I shall hunger-strike you," shouted Filipino. "I shall call the young men out. There will be a riot, I warn you, sir. You are a tyrant. You must come down. We want government. Not your government. We want that it should be of the people, by the people, for the people." He had to stop for want of breath.

Mr. van Loomis looked at him with eyes that seemed to drill their blue sight into Filipino. "You have been reading." Someone else had spoken to him of strikes that morning. Charis! "Tsuli Charis has been teaching you to read. What have you been reading?"

Mr. van Loomis had guessed right. In thoroughly educating his daughter he had educated Filipino as well.

Professor Toynbee, in Civilization on Trial, has set up a scale for judging who is most likely to last through the ages. "The works of artists and men of letters outlive the deeds of businessmen, soldiers and statesmen. The poets and the philosophers outrange the historians; while the prophets and saints overtop and outlast them all."

ONE afternoon long ago Charis, coming out to play, had found a small boy sitting among her toys where she had left them on the grass (no one had ever taught Charis to tidy her things away). The boy was holding his big toe and scratching it in the island way with one hand, but with the other he was turning over the pages of one of her books, page by page. When he looked up he was too enthralled to drop the book and leap to his feet as he should have done; he continued to scratch his big toe and said, "Tsuli, what does this mean?" Charis, looking over his shoulder, saw a picture of King Arthur pulling the sword out of the stone. Sitting down by Filipino, she told him the story of King Arthur. Presently Filipino noticed that the text went with the pictures, and presently Charis began to point out to him the a's and b's and c's. They were sitting beside a hibiscus bush, its root spread in a circle of sun-baked earth, and, breaking a twig, Charis had scratched an a and a b and a c in the earth. Soon he was scratching them for himself. The next afternoon he was there again, waiting for her with glowing eyes, and they had progressed from scratching on the earth to writing on Charis's slate and then to Mr. van Loomis's precious paper and pencil and ink. The ink was made from an indelible island stain. "Ink is better," said Filipino. "I want that what I write shall never die. You have the pencil," said Filipino.

Charis thought he was a very conceited boy, but she was amazed at how quickly he learned. At first she had taught him as one teaches a pet, for amusement, then less and less amusingly, until it was deep hard work. They became like a proud sister and young brother, but as Filipino grew up he began to show his range and he grew to be separated, even from Charis. It was not that he knew more than she—a good deal of what he knew was glib and parrotlike—it was his imagination and invention. The coffeepot was the least of the things he had imagined; at a spark he took flame. Charis had sometimes thought that he was so fierce he must burn himself out, but there was something inexhaustible in Filipino.

NOW, "What have you been reading?" asked Mr. van Loomis.

Niu gave Filipino a push to make him answer. It put him off his balance; he staggered and The Rights of Man was jerked from his waist knot and fell on the terrace path.

Mr. van Loomis looked down at it. "Pick it up."

Filipino picked it up, a cold sensation in his ears. A plumbago petal had stuck to the page, which was brown and wet from earth and dew. Humbly Filipino brushed the petal off, but the wet brown patch remained.

"Give it to me."

Filipino gave it and shrank back. He was afraid Mr. van Loomis would lose his temper again at the dirty marks on his property, but Mr. van Loomis only said with irritation, "Why don't you read what you can understand?" He had not for one moment guessed that the boy could read books such as this. "When I learned to read, we read 'The cat sat on the mat,' which at least was sense. This is half-baked, theoretical jargon."

"I like it."

"No one could like it," said Mr. van Loomis. He was forgetting that, for the book to be on the island at all, he must once have liked it himself. He often told Charis how carefully he had chosen each book he had brought. "You don't understand it," he said.

"Tsula, I do understand it," said Filipino earnestly. "I understand, sir, every word. I—I drink it. I believe it!"

"Faugh!" said Mr. van Loomis. "You are trying to fly before you can walk."

"Then I can fly," said Filipino.

Indeed, Filipino made strange flights for an island boy. If he had actually gone up in Valentine's Water Star and flown over the islands and seen them scattered wide in the sea, they would have given him no surprise. To the islanders, their island was the whole world, except for Zambun, from which none of them ever returned and which corresponded to hell; the Hat might have been the moon, attendant on the earth; the earth was the island, and the sun, the real moon and stars were, the islanders knew, attached to the island to shine on it and give it warmth. Filipino alone had a sense of other islands, of the world, even of a magnitude of worlds. It was through books, but it was not only through books that he had it; he seemed to drink the air and know. At night, lying on his bed in his open-sided hut, he would look up at the stars and his significance would dwindle, and the island dwindled, too, and seemed to dissolve, in the sound of its own surf, into the air. This did not frighten him, but gave him a strange melting joy as if he, too, had become the air, and then often he sang or wrote his songs. His ideas were not phenomenal to Filipino; he was a phenomenon himself, one of those who went from idea to idea as if they walked on the tips of mountains, if they walked at all. They did not have to learn to fly; they had to learn to walk.

"You don't want to go into that world," said Mr. van Loomis as if he were arguing about a possibility. "Into all that trickery and mess."

(Continued on Page 96)

ISS LEIGHTON, photographed at right in her Stein-Blaine original, is one of New York's best dressed women. A brilliant hostess of originality and good taste, she is also a well known author; her latest book "The Aspirin Age" received wide critical and popular acclaim.

For her beautifully decorated apartment at 20 Park Ave., New York, Miss Leighton has selected this distinguished Philco television receiver—model 1875.

Of Contemporary Georgian design, it has 300 sq. in. rectangular picture on a 17 in. long filter-face tube, with AM-FM radio and 3-speed automatic phonograph, with what experts agree is the finest tone ever achieved in recorded music.

FOR BEAUTY, STYLE AND BRILLIANT PERFORMANCE

Isabel Leighton

SELECTS PHILCO BALANCED BEAM TELEVISION

WITH THE ONLY TRUE-FOCUS TELEVISION PICTURE

PHILCO MODEL 1208, 97 sq. in. true-focus picture on a 12½ in. gray filter-face tube, mahogany veneer cabinet . . . Philco 1951 table models with 97 to 145 sq. in. picture, 12½ in. to 16 in. tubes, range from $199.95 to $289.95*.

• 17 INCH BALANCED BEAM TELEVISION in striking blond console Model 1836-L. 150 sq. in. picture, 17 in gray rectangular tube. Philco 1951 consoles, 97 to 215 sq. in. picture, 12½ in. to 20 in. tubes, range from $229.95 to $375.00*.

THERE is something new and different and better in television today. It's Philco Balanced Beam Television.

With this truly remarkable invention, Philco has ended picture blur and smear forever . . . has brought to television the first true-focus picture ever achieved.

For, Philco research has discovered how to balance the electron beam that "paints" the picture on the tube face . . . to lock it in positive and permanent focus over the entire screen area. You get a truer, more accurate and detailed picture than has ever before been possible.

Yet Philco did not stop with the invention of Balanced Beam Television, but created the sensational Custom-Duplex Chassis. It gives you a vast increase in sensitivity, amazing freedom from "snow," "ghosts" and other interference . . . with performance in "fringe" and local areas that has seldom, if ever, been equalled.

And the 1951 Philcos have the now famous Philco Electronic Built-in Aerial System that outperforms all others by as much as 3 to 1. No installation is necessary in up to 8 out of 10 locations.

These brilliant new 1951 Philco receivers are at your dealer's now, newly styled and brilliantly designed . . . in mahogany, walnut and blond—at prices that make Philco the outstanding value in television today.

TUNE IN! Philco Television Playhouse, Sunday evenings, NBC-TV Network . . . Don McNeill TV Club, Wednesday evenings, ABC-TV Network

*Tax and warranty extra on all models. Prices slightly higher in South and West. Prices subject to change.

PHILCO

Balanced Beam Television

NO STRUGGLE...NO STRAIN

so Easy to put on!

No more struggling, straining, stretching . . . when you hook your bra! For Flexees has created "Avant," the Bra that hooks in front. Such lovely bosom curves . . . such smooth unbroken lines across your back . . . such extra-jiffy dressing! Just ask your favorite Bra Counter for "Avant" by Flexees!

WHITE . . . PINK . . . BLACK
Fine cotton broadcloth — $1.75
Nyralon satin — $2.50
Lacy Nylon marquisette — $3.50
Long Line to 44 — $3.50

Avant BRA

by flexees®

"Avant," you know, is French for "Forward"

(Continued from Page 94)

"I do! I do!" said Filipino.

"You don't know what you are talking of."

"I do."

"How do you?"

Filipino took a deep breath. "I read your newspapers." And he said humbly, "Please to excuse me for it."

Four years ago Charis had discovered a drawer full of newspapers in her father's study. Mr. van Loomis had meant to lock the drawer; he had meant to burn the papers as he read them; he had always done this before, but he had grown careless. It was a long time since he had been out to the barrel to pick up the mail, and he had forgotten about the newspapers in the drawer. They were old, but that made no difference to Charis and Filipino. They read them avidly. If Mr. van Loomis had not been so busy he would have noticed that Charis's words and thoughts had changed. Though they did not understand more than a quarter of what they read, a shutter opened in the minds of Charis and Filipino, and they looked on a new world. "And it is the world," said Charis. "It isn't made up, like a book. All that it says happened has happened."

"Oh, you children!" said Mr. van Loomis now, and he asked Filipino, "What do you want?"

"I want to meet with a man," said Filipino slowly and shyly.

"What man?"

"A real young man."

"What do you think you are yourself?" asked Mr. van Loomis, but that had not dawned on Filipino; he did not feel at all like a real young man.

"I want to go among other young men and rub their shoulders," said Filipino. He thought there was something not quite right in the way he had said that, but he swept on. "I want to meet men from all over the world. From everywhere." A thought came to him that made him breathless, and, for a moment, he stopped. A dazzling thought had come to him; suddenly he saw the way clear before him. It was something he had not thought of before. "Colleges are where you learn. Send me to a college," said Filipino.

Mr. van Loomis looked at the distant lighthouse rocks where Mario was interned and at the sea where the dinghy was still gaining slowly on the town; perhaps there, in the dinghy, was Filipino's real young man. He sighed. In making himself responsible for this island he had made himself responsible for something unfathomable. Or should I have fathomed it? asked Mr. van Loomis. Should I have known about all this if I had been more aware? Whether he should or should not, he felt helpless. He was held in something he did not understand. What, for instance, had brought those two strangers as if from a spell?

"I didn't make a spell, did I?" asked Mr. van Loomis.

"Tsula?" Filipino did not understand.

"I abjured magic," said Mr. van Loomis. "But"— he looked at the house, the garden, the rock, the sea—"but did it abjure me?"

No one, nothing answered him.

When Mr. van Loomis had dispatched the now glowingly obedient Filipino after the dinghy, though he was burning with curiosity and impatience himself, he went slowly across the lawn, past the morning-glory and down the steps, along the jetty, and stepped into the canoe that waited for him at the jetty head. He felt it was only dignified to go on with his morning's program rather than wait at home for the strangers.

The boatmen greeted him with respect. He looked big and imposing, shining with whiteness, the whiteness of his beard enhanced by his tanned face and his blue eyes and matched by his white eyebrows and thick hair. He wore white trousers and a singlet with a wide cummerbund round his waist.

His boat was imposing too. It was like a great war canoe with outrigging to steady it over the surf. Mr. van Loomis had bought it from the chief of another island on his way to Terraqueous. It was native-built of wood inlaid with mother-of-pearl, and its eyes, in

NOW cover your o

PRIMS® BUCKLE

and COMBINATION BUTT

In seconds... No tools, no paste, no fillers needed! Only 25¢ a c Patented. Other U Foreign Pats.

BECAUSE OF THE GREAT DEMAN buckles of the same simple design a PRIMS Cover Buttons, we now presen washable and rust-proof buckles as w the two-toned Combination buttons. A leisure you can quickly and easily give clothing that rich effect that only covered Combination Buttons and B can create.

PRIMS Cover Buckle and Buttons are available in a wide range of sizes at your notion or button counter.

PRIMS®

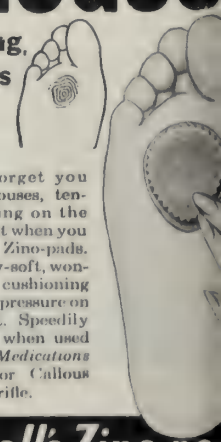
COVER BUTTONS-BUCK

William Prym, Inc., Dayville, Connec

FALSE TEET

KLUTCH holds them tigh

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental so much firmer and snugger that one can eat ar with greater comfort and security; in many cases as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lesse constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing pla and 50c at druggists. . . . If your druggist ha don't waste money on substitutes, but send and we will mail you a generous trial box.



KLUTCH CO., Box 5021-K, ELMIRA,

PROTECT YOUR WATC
AVOID COSTLY REPAI
GO TO ANY JEWELE
ASK FOR G-S FLEX
100% Breakp
CRYSTA
FITTED WHILE YOU WA

Callouse

Pain, Burning, Tenderness Quickly Relieved

You'll quickly forget you have painful callouses, tenderness or burning on the bottom of your feet when you use Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. These thin, downy-soft, wonderfully soothing, cushioning pads instantly lift pressure on the sensitive spot. Speedily remove callouses when used with the separate Medications included. Ask for Callous size. Cost but a trifle.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pa

Slenderizing
Sizes 34 to 46

Hand Embroidered Sweater

The Ideal Gift for Women

For home... for office... for leisure hours. Pure soft wool, beautifully trimmed with gay hand-embroidered flowers in harmonizing shades. Choose White, Aqua Blue, Winter Rose, Dove Grey, Navy Blue, American Beauty, Rose Beige or Jade Green.

$8.95 ORDER BY MAIL

Please give 1st, 2nd, and 3rd color choice. Send $9.30 (includes mailing charge). California residents send $9.60 (includes sales tax).

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

THE Slenderline Shop
497 E. COLORADO BLVD.
Pasadena 1, California

CASH OFFER!

WOMEN wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, Holiday and other popular publications. You can earn big commissions—devote spare or full time. For details write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
363 Independence Square
Philadelphia 5 Pennsylvania

RELIEVES HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS PAIN

FAST

Here's Why...
Anacin® is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. Anacin is specially compounded to give FAST, LONG LASTING relief. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

the prow, were ornamented with silver and coral. It was rowed by a crew of eight picked men, who sat two by two in the stern; they wore loin cloths of island-dyed crimson and a long rag of the same color wound round their heads to catch their sweat. It was Mr. van Loomis's first island attempt at uniform; he liked to see them smart and all the same, but the islanders did not take easily to smartness or to uniform; the boatmen often came in other colors or with flowers in their hair. They rowed fast, their paddles flashed exactly together in the sun and, on a little platform on the prow, the head boatman, Luck, kept the rhythm, standing, balanced on his feet, as the boat flashed through the waves, chanting rhythmically, "Hé, hé, hé, hé." Charis always knew when her father was coming and going by the approaching and receding "hé's."

At first the men had thought they were going after the dinghy, and when Filipino went racing out alone there were disappointed murmurs. "Our Tsula can't go after them," said Luck. "He is a great chief. They must come to him." And the men said, "Ohé," satisfied.

The canoe turned out to sea and met the glassy green swell, deeper since the storm. From the sea, the island and its mountain made one shape to the sky line with colors of white and green and brown and lavender streaked with pumice and white, rising from the white beaches to the white cloud. The colors were pellucid in the sun; it was too early still for the heat haze which would presently rise from the pockets of inland valleys that were stiller and warmer, more lush, than the rest of the island. Mr. van Loomis could identify every color and shape, predict each change.

To discuss an opinion with a fool is like carrying a lantern before a blind man. —DE GASTON.

Sounds came to them clearly as they ran along parallel with the shore. Mr. van Loomis knew every sound: the sound of the waves breaking, of parakeets, of the island women threshing out their corn in hollow wooden blocks with a corn pole. He heard the scream of a well rope and the slapping of wet cloths in the wash places in the river; the sound of oxcart wheels and the crack of whips; of children splashing one another in the sea; of the drums of a funeral.

He could identify all the smells, from the exact brand of the stinking fish to the peculiar sweetness that was to puzzle Valentine and which came from the flowers on the chema tree, a tree that was peculiar to the island and had white chiseled flowers and long sharp thorns.

Fishermen stood up in their boats for him as he passed, though the wash of the heavy canoe was dangerous to their light craft. Mr. van Loomis lifted his hand in acknowledgment, and his signet ring caught the sun and sent a shaft of light into their eyes; such shafts can be seen from the aureoles of saints or supreme beings in holy pictures, a shaft like the eye of God. On land, if the islanders met Mr. van Loomis, they stepped off the road: a few ignorant ones lay down in the dust, but they came from the back of the hill, the island's hinterland, and had been tormented by Mario's mother. After reading the newspapers and talking with Filipino, Charis had grown to be hotly ashamed of this, but Mr. van Loomis thought it not unfitting.

On the island, Mr. van Loomis still ordered the world, and he felt he would continue to order it. At least a place can't be treacherous, said Mr. van Loomis now. Places have no secret springs. They don't grow. As he said that, he had a strong feeling that he had waved the little stick, a magician's wand, and that the opposite would happen as it did in the magician's trick, the unexpected, the rabbit that could not have been in the conjurer's hat, and that the island, by some unexpected twist, would, in the end, order him. Nonsense!

(Continued on Page 99)

First luxurious complexion treatment for hands and body...

Revlon's new Aquamarine Lotion

A miraculous blend of balms scented with costly imported perfumes... smoothes you head to toe... wraps you in fragrance... keeps hands velvet smooth. Never before a rich, creamy-blue lotion with such a genius for fondling every blessed inch of you! 1.00 PLUS TAX

NOW! Aquamarine Lotion-Soap

A soap with a lotion's softening touch... the only soap made with Aquamarine Lotion! Same skin-smoothing ingredients, same jewel-color, and same fragrance. Box of 3, complexion-size, 1.00. Box of 3, bath-size, 1.50.

Beauvais 1040-1843. One of the newest, freshest-looking carpets you'll find anywhere today ... sophisticated, yet casual. And it's a money's-worth marvel. About $11.95* a sq. yd.

On every floor...

a beautiful, affordable Bigelow!

Today—let your Bigelow dealer match a Bigelow beauty to your pocketbook!

WHAT IF YOU'RE NOT a millionaire—and still want a carpet that looks like a million! That wears like a jewel! Whether you plan to spend several hundred dollars, or only $90 or so, your Bigelow dealer can show you your ideal...

Because genuine Bigelow Carpets, famed for wear and beauty, come in prices to fit every purse. Whatever you pay, you'll be getting a carpet that looks and behaves like the real aristocrat it is.

Bigelow uses only the choicest imported wools—rich, tough, springy wool, treated to keep "lively." And another important ingredient—125 years of superb carpet craftsmanship.

Glentwist 204-94300; around $13.50* sq. yd.

Beauvais 1040-1827; about $11.95* sq. yd.

Sonata 1970-7850; about $23.50* sq. yd.

Fervak 1020-9438; around $9.25* sq. yd.

Beauvais 1040-1844; about $11.95* sq. yd.

Sun Valley 412-20[illegible] A new Bigelow Wilton broadloom creation, with a rather modern air. Note the "sculptured" look of the leaf design. An outstanding buy at about $12.75* a sq. yd.

And talk about style! Bigelow gives you a wide, exciting choice! Modern or traditional designs. Patterned or textured or plain. In whatever colors thrill you most. How will you have your Bigelow? In the popular 9′ x 12′ size? Or room-shaped—cut to fit the contours of your room? Or laid lavishly from wall to wall? Whatever you want, you just can't get a better buy than a Bigelow.

Consult the booklet, "Bigelow Home Decorator." Tells, shows how to achieve beautiful rooms. Get it from your Bigelow dealer, or send 25¢ to Bigelow Home Service Bureau, P.O. Box 557, New York 46, N. Y.

*Prices subject to change. Slightly higher in the West.

Bigelow
Rugs and Carpets

Beauty you can see... quality you can trust... since 1825

(Continued from Page 97)

r. van Loomis. I know the island, every it. It can't play tricks on me. In all his ntance with it he had not learned that nd was always inexorably itself.

van Loomis had no doubt but that he nefited the island. He had given it s tranquillity; he had made the is- prosperous and kept the beauty of land for them; he had kept it outside rld, away from trade, so that it was iled: there was no corrugated iron, no , no asphalt, none of the things that ar-savage dearly loves. "They don't vhat I have saved them from," Mr. omis often said. There was no cinema, o, no electricity. There was no money: nders traded in kind with one another r. van Loomis. He had guarded their ous industries, ideas and customs; he ded only a few of his own. The island were built of woven bamboo like work or else of beaten earth, leeped ne wash in white or native colors, and ed; Mr. van Loomis had built his house same earth, the same thatch, only he ade it larger and embellished it with floors and window boxes, bathrooms, as, kitchens and gates. The island ad been simply paths where jungle or earth or sand had been trodden down age; Mr. van Loomis's roads were the nly widened by the same simple proc- eading. He had brought seed and fruit om Scotland and Puerto and taught nders to irrigate and augment their He had weeded out the sick and poor om the cattle and sheep and pigs and ed the breeds with a prize bull, two nd a boar, which the islanders felt ould worship for their size. Even the nd hens had grown bigger since Mr. omis came; the very gourds on the vines had swelled.

s of cotton and copra and wool and and gold had accumulated on the is- r Mr. van Loomis; he had no means ing them away, and he did not intend roy his peace by getting a means, and his stocks in bamboo warehouses be- e little town. It gave the islanders, he t, a healthful business to collect these and they were impressed by the signs of increasing wealth.

ng other industries on the island, Mr. omis had started pearl fishing, which gun to thrive. In the creeks and bays island and its satellite rocks, and in nks out to sea, in certain places were beds.

native divers went down for the naked and unprotected except for a sharpened dagger of ironwood that they wore round their necks and used against the attack of a shark. Long accustomed, they could walk and swim under the sea for minutes together without anything to help them but their muscles. Now, as the canoe drew near, Mr. van Loomis could see the little fleet of boats and, in the middle, the large barge to which the divers clung when they came up.

Prem, the headman, came paddling up to them in his boat. As he neared them he sent it shooting forward with a strong stroke of his paddle and stood up in one graceful movement from heel to head, balancing, holding with his toes on the narrow, fast-moving little boat. "Tsula!" he said in greeting.

"PREM" returned Mr. van Loomis, and Prem smiled broadly. Mr. van Loomis liked his broad, smiling face. Prem had been down with his divers; his black hair was wet; the water streamed down his back and thighs and dried on his brown skin in lines of salt; he wore nothing but an old thin cloth tied between his legs and knotted round his waist with plaited grass. Now he undid a knot in the corner of his cloth and held out, on the cloth, five or six small pearls and one larger for Mr. van Loomis to see. Mr. van Loomis thoughtfully took the large one and weighed it between his finger and thumb.

"It is the one, Tsula?"

"I believe it is," said Mr. van Loomis.

"It is like the Tsula's other ones. Only larger. It is one of the largest I have seen."

Mr. van Loomis had been collecting pearls for a string for Charis. One day he would sell all his pearls, but certain fine evenly matched ones he had kept for her. Charis's twenty-first birthday was near, and the string was almost ready; it wanted only the center pearl, and this, by its size and weight (as far as he could estimate it), its shape and luster, seemed to be the pearl for which he had waited. Prem was right.

"Who found it?"

"Tinpal."

"He shall have a goat," said Mr. van Loomis, and he took the pearls from Prem, gave him one or two orders, and called to Luck to go on.

Mr. van Loomis had his completed string of pearls, but, after the morning's scene with Charis, he was not so elated as he might have been. He now thought of something he had not thought of before: he remembered how, once, he had shown Charis some pearls as a child, and she had run and brought him some little egg-shaped seeds, half red, half black, and brilliant, that fell from a bush near the stables after it had flowered; the islanders used to pierce them and string them. Charis

(Continued on Page 101)

"Isn't it about time to take him back to the doctor for the thousand-mile checkup?"

Whale of a catch!

Sure to catch loads of compliments—curtains of Hathaway Curtain Fabrics! Fluffy white HATHAWAY DOTS (above) bring gay, fresh charm to every room—and at a penny-pinching price, too! For sheer magic try lovely, luxurious curtains of HATHAWAY NYLON MARQUISETTE (below) They drape beautifully, are easy to care for, yet they wear like iron!

HATHAWAY PERMANENT FINISH ORGANDY and CRYSTALUME COTTON MARQUISETTE—two new, catch-of-the-season fabrics!

America's favorite curtains are made of

HATHAWAY

Curtain Fabrics

FREE!
Send coupon for
New Decorators' Booklet Showing Smart Ways to Decorate Your Windows

Hathaway Mfg. Co., Dept. L 11
New Bedford, Mass.
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

WASH IT AGAIN AND AGAIN

You can't mar its Matchless Beauty!

It's easy to bring new beauty to your home with SUPER KEM-TONE.
This room has Wedgwood Blue walls, Shasta White on woodwork.

Super Kem-Tone®

SENSATIONAL NEW PAINT

Gives Your Rooms Enduring Beauty . . . It's Guaranteed* Washable!

Here's a completely new and different paint for walls and woodwork that's ready to use, easy to apply, *guaranteed washable. SUPER KEM-TONE combines breath-taking beauty with an amazing ability to resist dirt and soiling.

Wash it again and again! You can't mar its matchless beauty*... SUPER KEM-TONE forms such a tight, impervious coating that, unlike ordinary flat paints, dirt does not penetrate its lovely finish.

SUPER KEM-TONE gives you practically an unlimited range of gorgeous colors . . . from lovely light shades to beautiful, new, easy-to-use deep tones. And they all go on easily and uniformly with brush or ROLLER-KOATER, over almost any interior surface, including wallpaper.

Convince yourself, be sure to see SUPER KEM-TONE demonstrated at leading paint, hardware, lumber and department stores.

SUPER KEM-TONE is Guaranteed* Washable (or your money back) by seven leading paint companies . . .

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit
W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh
The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton
John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia
The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago
Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit
The Sherwin-Williams Co., Cleveland

AT LEADING PAINT, HARDWARE, LUMBER AND DEPARTMENT STORES EVERYWHERE

$1.59 PER QUART $4.98 PER GALLON

DEEP COLORS SLIGHTLY HIGHER

IT'S READY TO USE... NO THINNIN

Dirt just can't get a "foot

SUPER KEM-TONE'S non-porous surface, a achievement of paint ch try, prevents dirt from trating. It's easy to keep Washing doesn't harm it—it is thoroughly dried, show SUPER KEM-TONE stands repeated washing usual household paint cl without impairing its be

KEM-TONE—Top Value in Thrifty Home Beauty

KEM-TONE, the oil paint that mixes with water, is your outstanding value in good home decoration where extreme washability of SUPER KEM-TONE is not required. Thinned with water, a gallon of KEM-TONE makes a gallon and a half of paint, ready to use, at only $2.65 a gallon.

$1.35 Quart . . $3.98 Gallon . . (in concentrated paste form)

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

KEM-GLO—Looks and Washes Like Baked Enamel

KEM-GLO, the miracle lustre enamel for kitchen and bathroom walls and woodwork in every room. Washes as easily as your refrigerator. Needs no undercoater, goes on like magic, dries in 3 to 4 hours. Looks new after hundreds of washings. 10 colors plus KEM-GLO Stay-white.

$2.39 Quart . . . Economy Size, $7.98 Gallon

(Continued from Page 99)

nly thought they were prettier than his rls. The older Charis would probably see beauty of the pearls and like them for r own sake—but that would still not be e as pearls, thought Mr. van Loomis. uld they be of any use to her? Do pearls l people, other women, to give them value? asked. He could not decide. "I don't w," said Mr. van Loomis aloud and unpily.

n the sun-filled morning he felt wrapped loom. He was seriously perturbed. It was range feeling. For twenty years Mr. van mis, until that night with Mario, had had ning to perturb him, and Mario was easily shed aside like a troublesome fly, or so he thought. Even the war had passed him "It's nothing to do with me and my isl," he had said. "If it comes here, it es; then I shall consider it." It had not e. He had sat on his island away from tides that had washed the world; now he caught up in a larger tide that was even e ruthless: the tide of time. "Something eginning," it said. "Time goes by. You t, inexorably, be swept away." He looked ugh his glasses to where the small speck was Filipino was gaining on the larger ow mark of the dinghy.

hey themselves were getting near the thouse that, as they drew near, separated f into a small pillbox standing on rocks lay by themselves, out to sea. Mr. van mis could see Jéo, the young keeper, a on the rocks, watching them. There no sign of Mario.

was only now, weeks after the scene n Charis, that Mr. van Loomis could t himself to speak to io. Mr. van Loomis been judging the islers for twenty years, ng to show them by mple what they should should not do to keep nselves energetic and perate. Now he found self intemperate; he d have strangled Mario with his bare ds; he would have liked to cut Mario's at. Mario! he said and gritted his teeth.

felt, also, that Mario had started this st. It was Mario who had upset Charis, though he had nothing to do with Filio, Mr. van Loomis was now linking toer several little things that he had and not really taken notice of before. haps Mario had upset Charis and Charis set off Filipino. Mario had made ris, who up to then had been a little suddenly desirable . . . and desirous, ght Mr. van Loomis. At the thought of ris being desirable, or desirous, Mr. van mis trembled with strange feelings of and fear. I should have left her behind, ght Mr. van Loomis, but it was too late ay that. He sighed. If Mario had left her e there might have been another two hree years of peace, and Mr. van Loomis round in his mind for an epithet for io, but it was so long since he had had really to swear that he could not find He was cold with anger and cold with sea to think how nearly Mario ——How I protect and keep her? thought Mr. van mis, and a sickening thought came to what would happen to her were he to and leave her alone? He made a wish, the n and prayer of every good mother: I t that she could marry well and live happily. sh that, in that boat, one of those two strancould be a good and personable unattached ng man. I wish that he and Charis could in love and marry and live happily, not after of course, no one does that, but for t of their lives. That is what I wish, so help God! said Mr. van Loomis.

e had wished so intensely that he had t his eyes. Luck, facing him, wondered if ere cross or unwell; then Mr. van Loomis ed and opened his eyes. "The young are upsetting," he said.

Tsula?" said Luck politely.

hey had come to the lighthouse. It was really a lighthouse, but a lamp of the d that are usually on buoys; but here, on this rocky point, the surf was too full for a buoy, and the lamp had been built into a pillbox on the rocks and was lighted at dusk every evening and shone with a steady beam out to sea. It was more friendly, less lonely than most lighthouses; the keepers were allowed to come ashore in the daytime to eat in their houses and sleep with their wives, but to Mr. van Loomis it was a thorn prick: it was the only part of the island that was not his. Here the inspector's ketch had to call, and Jéo, the young keeper, and his father were responsible not to Mr. van Loomis but to the inspector. Jéo had not dared to use his advantage, but Mr. van Loomis was careful not to provoke him by inquiring too closely into his doings, and he resented having to be careful. This made the business of Mario doubly difficult. He was safe enough on the lighthouse; he was not a skillful boatman, and he would not have dared to try the passage between the rocks and the mainland alone; but Mr. van Loomis felt he had put himself into Jéo's hand, and that made him uneasy and irritable.

Never throughout history has a man who lived a life of ease left a name worth remembering.
—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Jéo came now, down to the landing rock, and stood ready to catch the rope that Luck had in his hand to throw.

The current raced round the rocks, but Luck brought the big canoe round to run with it, and, back-paddling, the men brought her in without a graze to lie beside the large flat rock used for landing. Jéo caught the rope and fastened it to a ring driven into the rock.

He saluted Mr. van Loomis. "Tsula!"

"Jéo!"

Stores, maize and vegetables and bananas and rice, were put ashore, and Mr. van Loomis stood up and came out from under the awning which was stretched where he sat, and passed Luck, who stood, steadying the prow of the canoe against the racing water with a long pole. One of the boatmen had sprung out and was now in the sea between the canoe and the rock; he put his hands on his knees to steady himself and bowed his back so that Mr. van Loomis could use him as a rail. Helping himself with one hand on the boatman's back, Mr. van Loomis stepped ashore.

He had seen Jéo two days ago on the mainland. This spring month, while the moon was rising, was the courtship month. Jéo, young and stalwart and well to do, was seeking a second concubine. Mr. van Loomis knew that was why Jéo was glad to have Mario on the lighthouse. Mario, for all his stupidity, could be left to watch the light. Jéo's father, the old keeper, was ill on the mainland, and Jéo was very glad of Mario. He had told Mr. van Loomis that the inspector was coming, and the day before they had seen the ketch come in. Mr. van Loomis had forbidden the inspector a landing on the island itself, and there was no love between them. Now Jéo reported that the inspector had said that Mario Fernandes was not to stay on the lighthouse, that he was not a fit person to be near the light.

"Mario Fernandes will stay on the lighthouse," said Mr. van Loomis.

"Ohé," said Jéo in perfect agreement.

"Send Mario Fernandes to me," Mr. van Loomis was about to say when he remembered that Mario would probably not come. He said instead, "Where is he?"

Mario was fishing at the back of the lighthouse, hunched on a rock, his big dark head turned toward the sea. He only hunched himself more closely as he heard Jéo's call.

"Stay here," said Mr. van Loomis to Jéo, and picked his way over the rocks to Mario. "Good morning," he said. "Buenos días."

Mario looked round and scowled.

"Fishing?" asked Mr. van Loomis.

"Sea not belong-a you," said Mario rudely in his thick blurred voice.

"You have baited your line too high," said Mr. van Loomis. "That makes it too heavy, and your hooks are too big. You will lose it."

Mario scowled again. He was not a good fisherman and he knew it.

He is like a great bullock, the way he moves his head from side to side when he is worried.

See the NEWEST in TV to make your home more beautiful to bring your family more fun!

Motorola TV

NEW 16 inch TV • FM-AM RADIO • PHONOGRAPH

MODEL 17F4 in hand-rubbed Mahogany

Complete home entertainment . . . just 2 simple TV controls. Dependable 3 speed record changer

So wonderful, you must see it to believe it! See the furniture-styled beauty of its 18th Century cabinet. See your favorite TV stars big as life on the 16 INCH rectangular screen. See how easy it operates with just 2 simple controls . . . Bilt-in-Antenna, too. Listen to the "Golden Voice" FM AM radio and 3-speed phonograph. You'll be surprised that such high quality and standout styling can be yours at such a modest price.

specifications subject to change without notice

OWN A MOTOROLA AND YOU KNOW YOU OWN THE BEST

TO SPARK YOUR FESTIVE TABLE

Beautifully simple . . . simply beautiful . . . Fostoria's hand-cut crystal, Holly. Choose it to give sparkle to your own holiday entertaining . . . to top your list of thoughtful gifts. The modern simplicity of the cutting of this hand-blown pattern has a lustrous richness to treasure through the years. Holly is available in open stock in over thirty lovely and useful pieces. You'll find handmade Fostoria crystal to delight every taste . . . at better stores everywhere . . . because Fostoria has a quality everyone likes.

FOSTORIA

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY . . . MOUNDSVILLE . WEST VIRGINIA

thought Mr. van Loomis. Mario was worried now. He wished that Mr. van Loomis and the boatmen would not come and look on his shame. The heavy mat of curls on his forehead made him look more like a bullock than ever, but it did not hide the dumb unhappiness of his eyes. "I am unhappy, unhappy," Mario would have said, but he could not say it; he did not know how to, he could only feel it. He was sent away from the island where he had grown up, where people were tolerant of him; away from the drink that lifted him up into another Mario who was braver and more explicit, even if he were sick next day. Now he was penned here with himself, usually only with himself, for Jéo went ashore; at times he was frantic and beat his head against the pillbox wall to make something else, if only a hurt, to help Mario to get away from Mario.

"What did I do?" asked Mario, and his eyes filled with tears. He could not remember what it was he had done except that it was something to do with Charis. "I didn't want your nasty daughter," he flung in Spanish at Mr. van Loomis.

The sea roaring in the caves below the rocks sounded loudly in Mr. van Loomis's ears and he had to drive his nails into his palms. He shut his eyes so that he would not see Mario. "Why did you touch her, then?" he asked, controlling himself.

Mario did not know why, as he did not know what else he could have done. He had been drunk and she was near and a girl. Mario had always wanted a girl; the island girls threw water in his face and laughed at him. He had a fleeting remembrance of Charis that night; her skin was white and soft, he remembered that clearly, and from that white skin something dim came into his brain, something like a reason, and all at once he knew he had a reason

He said, "I-a thought you-a meant her for me."

"For you?" Mr. van Loomis shouted, and he shuddered.

Mario saw the shudder and his hurt eyes glowered. "I-a man!" he said with dignity, then he lapsed into Spanish. "You can't be a favorite and then not a favorite," he said.

"You never were a favorite." said Mr. van Loomis curtly in Spanish too. He looked at Mario with loathing. "I never could bear the sight of you."

There was silence while the line shook and quivered with the pounding of the waves and slid a little farther into the sea.

"I thought you were kind," said Mario. "I thought you were wonderful. Yo te creia un milagro del cielo! Que idiota! You took the island from me ——"

"It wasn't yours."

"It was my mother's. You took it. You didn't ask her to give it to you. No! No! You were too clever!"

"I BOUGHT it from the Puerto company who owned it and never fished it," said Mr. van Loomis. "Nobody wanted it. It was too far away."

"I wanted it," said Mario.

"You and your mother were allowed to live here, that was all. I was a fool to let you stay."

"Now you won't let me," said Mario. "You won't let me live. Pheasant taught me about Our Lady. Our Lady will punish you. You wait and see. Everyone has more than I have. Every little garden boy. They all laugh at me. Why? Why? I always obeyed you. You didn't tell me not to touch Charis. How am I to know? I shall do something to you," shouted Mario. "I shall do bad. If ever I can do anything to you, I shall. To her and to you. I hate you. You wait and see what I shall do. Espera! Es era . . . mala hembra!"

Mr. van Loomis turned to go, and Mario scrambled to his feet. He had not realized that Mr. van Loomis was only paying a visit.

"You-a take Mario?"

"Certainly not," said Mr. van Loomis.

"Not?" Mario shook his head as if he had not quite heard. "Not?" bellowed Mario.

"I told you, not."

"Please-a. Please. Por amor de Dio Please-a, van Loomis. Please! Please!"

But Mr. van Loomis walked away.

Mario stood a moment, doubling and u doubling his great fists, then he bent a picked up a stone, a small rock, and hurled straight at Mr. van Loomis—at least Mar thought it was straight, but it fell harmless on one side. Mr. van Loomis did not ev turn his head. In a few moments Mar heard the sound of the canoe going awa

He sank down on his rock, sniffing a rubbing his hands into his eyes. In the su light he saw them going away toward t mainland, the paddles flashing togeth

Mario shook his head from side to si and then gave up; sobbing a little, he be down to pick up his clumsy fishing line, b it was not there. Mr. van Loomis had be right; baited too heavily, it had slid dow into the sea. Then Mario really burst in tears.

WHEN Filipino, followed by all the isla eyes, went speeding after the dinghy he w not thinking only of the two strangers: wi the wonder of them was a new wonder himself, Filipino.

He felt he was a new Filipino. He thoug even the strangers must recognize him different. Before, they would have treated as an island boy, thought Filipino, as a serva now they will see I am a young man. Mr. v Loomis had said he was a real young ma and he had argued with Mr. van Loomis an what was more wonderful, Mr. van Loom had argued with him. "Yes, we had argument, we argued together!" said Filipi aloud and dizzily. He f he was now capable of guing with the two stra gers, no matter who th might turn out to be. B fore, he would have be simply at their beck a call, as he had been at M van Loomis's. "Do th Do that. Fetch this. Take that. there. Come here," murmured Filipin Those days, of course were not yet over, b release had begun; the promise of releas "He will send me to college," said Filipin

An optimist sees an opportunity in every calamity; a pessimist sees a calamity in every opportunity. —ANON.

Colleges were in America or Europe. O ford was a college. Mr. van Loomis had be at Oxford. He had etchings of Oxford in h room, and Filipino had stood in front them often, gazing into them as if his so would rake out their meaning; he had tried puzzle out their buildings, spires and towe and quadrangles. In England even the v lages had spires. They must have done a ve lot of building, thought Filipino.

Now as they went after the dinghy studied the empty sea air, trying to imagi it pierced with spires, but he could not. looked down into the glassy depths of the s where he could see fish swimming, pale a colored and rainbow-striped, with a sudd shot of silver as one darted behind the cle fronds of weeds; far down below were ane one beds, but no towers such as had be in King Arthur's sunken country und neath the sea, the same Arthur who h pulled the sword from the stone in the pictu in Charis's book that first day. King Arthu country had passed away; it was lost und the sea, but from it you could hear bells rin ing. Filipino had never heard a bell, as had never seen a spire. But I shall, said Fi pino. Now he looked across the sea to t dinghy he was rapidly overtaking; in it we two real unknown men; they would op new worlds to him, worlds of which he a Charis had dreamed and thought and rea Suddenly he was a little frightened. Not ve nice things happen, thought Filipino and h eyes looked scared. Suppose they are not n men? he thought. Suppose they are ba There are many bad people, thought Filipin

Mr. van Loomis had ordered the Time the Spectator, Punch the Illustrated Lond News and the Magician's Monthly to be se with the island mail; none of them was a se sational paper, but in each of them, pla enough, were tales of pain and hate, fightin and killing, hanging and shooting, pover

(Continued on Page 104)

Joyous new pattern...
"DAFFODIL"

Brand-new, lilting and lovely!
Specially created for the young in heart!

or patterns loved for years...

REMEMBRANCE For those who love tradition. A dainty, romantic pattern!

ETERNALLY YOURS Exquisite openwork design, unique in silverplate.

FIRST LOVE Delicate flower-and-scroll motif, adaptable to any decorating scheme.

ADORATION If you want a monogram, this simple, yet elegant design is for you!

Choose 1847 Rogers Bros.
It's still the thing to own"

GENERATIONS AGO, when shining-eyed brides set their tables with the "silverware of their dreams," more of them chose 1847 Rogers Bros. than any other. And that's still true today.

You'll know why, when you see the enchanting 1847 Rogers Bros. designs pictured here. For each has a perfection of balance—an extra height and depth of ornament found in no other silverplate.

So, whether you choose 1847 Rogers Bros. brand-new pattern, or one beloved for years, you have the proud knowledge that—like the brides of great-grandmother's day—you own America's finest silverplate!

1847 ROGERS BROS.

rica's Finest Silverplate

COPYRIGHT 1950, THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO., MERIDEN, CONN.

(Continued from Page 102)

and disease. Sometimes they had frightened Charis and Filipino so that they felt they would rather not read; Filipino had sometimes felt he must shut his eyes and stop his ears and go back to his peaceful little hut and his songs, but "I want to be serious," he told Charis. "We most be con—con ——"

"Contemporary," said Charis, and they read on without flinching.

"Then . . . are people not good?" he had asked Charis.

"No," said Charis. After a moment she said, "Yes. Yes and no. Good and bad." Charis was both more mature and less enthusiastic than Filipino; she did not catch fire, but, as she read the papers, she saw something he did not. She saw a weight of judgment and taste and a steady sanity that helped to balance the horrors. Filipino saw only one thing at a time, Charis looked more widely, if not widely enough. She had pronounced primly, "Good and bad, like you and me."

"But we are good," said Filipino in surprise.

Charis shook her head. "No one is good," she said. "My father says man has tamed everything but himself."

"What has he tamed?" Filipino asked immediately, but he did not listen for an answer; taming, to him, had brought a picture of the little monkey Resurrection had tamed; it was wild, but Resurrection had made friends with it, and it came when he called it and sat on his shoulder and ate nuts from his hand. There was. Filipino had read, a belief that man was descended from a monkey, and now he had a sudden thought that every man had a monkey in him still; now Filipino saw Mr. van Loomis as a great white ape; Charis was a rare white she-monkey; a dark spider monkey was Niu, and a plump pollen-yellow female was Flora Annie; and I have a monkey, thought Filipino. That was not a funny thought, it was uncomfortable. I stole those cigarettes, thought Filipino now; I didn't want to steal them, but I stole. I go from one thing to another, he thought hopelessly, just like a monkey seizing and throwing away. He saw the monkey looking at him with its shallow eyes, and the eyes reminded him of a look he had seen in a real person; with a shock he realized that the person was Mario Fernandes. But there is nothing in me that is like Mario Fernandes! cried Filipino, shocked, but still the monkey's eyes persisted in looking like Mario's. Then is Mario Fernandes sad? asked Filipino. That was a new thought: he had always treated Mario as a clumsy joke. I don't understand what I am thinking, thought Filipino.

Still paddling, he began to think again about his twin brother. He had always despised Resurrection a little for being content to remain a gardener; now he began to wonder about his strength and gentleness; Resurrection was stronger than Filipino, but he was always gentle. Filipino could not imagine Resurrection stealing cigarettes. An uneasy thought came to Filipino; had the quiet young brother tamed himself better than he, the brilliant, boastful Filipino? But Resurrection had nothing to tame, said Filipino in contempt. I am wild. Again he had a quick thought of that monkey, but he turned his mind hastily away from it and began to chant, "O wild West Wind, thou breath ——"

I am informed with poetry, said Filipino proudly. He meant that he had learned it, but there was more poetry in Filipino than that; there was poetry in his songs, in his music, in his bones, in his feeling for the island, in his feeling for himself and his twin brother, in his visions of places far beyond the sea, in his dreamings and torments and passionate longing. Filipino, that unconscious burning being, was born a poet; everything he saw or felt was spun into that; it was that that gave him at once naïveté and wisdom, that made him catch fire and burn him out, so that he needed his long spells of quiescent dreaming. He was also a very robust and greedy young man, easily sidetracked, interested in too many things. "You will get into trouble," said Niu. "You make much trouble," said Niu.

Now, as he sent his boat flying over the water to catch the strangers, splashing the back with drops, he pretended he was in England. England was set in a silver sea; the sea round the island was a deep dark blue-green in the swell, but Filipino knew the color of silver—he cleaned it every day, and he saw the English sea as immeasurably shining. England itself was green—he knew that, too, and it had primroses, but did it not know what they were? London was the chief town, and England was very cold. Filipino tried to imagine what it was to be cold; sometimes bathing in the river before the sun was up he had been chilled, but in England he woke and the world was frozen, and all the green was white. "When men are asleep, the snow comes flying ——" He knew not, of course, what snow. Charis said snow was like manna, but they had not seen manna either. "It is very snow," said Filipino aloud, trying to imagine what it was like. He tried to think of the island covered in snow; the people would think the gods were furiously angry, and they would try to rumble and beat drums and make a sacrifice, one of the sacrifices that Mr. van Loomis had forbidden, but that went steadily on. "A cock," said Filipino lingeringly, "or a white kid. Blood on a white skin was very decorative. The English take snow in their stride," thought Filipino and sighed; he was dimly aware he took many things in his stride that would considerably have upset the English.

He paddled on more slowly, and now he was thinking that snow white and pure and cold, must be akin to the cloud on the mountain; the cloud made him think of Charis, and he began, in his head, to make a song about snow; he heard its music, the words came to him. He knew now that he should not have said "It is very snow." That was incorrect; it came from thinking in the island language, Terraquenese, not English; how often had Charis told him he must think directly in English; but "very snow" seemed to suit what he would say.

The snow is very snow of very snow morning . . . and Filipino paddled on in the hot sunshine, which, unshaded as he was, was sending sweat pouring down his back. Snow is absent and pure and cold.

If the snow were absent it would not be there, thought Filipino. That was a nuisance because it sounded well; he meant absent. Charis was often absent, absent-minded, but you could not say snow was absent-minded; snow did not have a mind. How difficult is to write a song! thought Filipino. He knew he was not going as fast as Mr. van Loomis had intended him to go, but he still dallied

The snow is snow of very snow this morning absent and pure and cold.

(Continued on Page 106)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Garden Shelter

By Fern Mary Munsell

Here in the hollow of the wind
Where for a while no step may pass
Spiders come to weave their webs
By solitary stone and glass.
Out of the way of alien sound—
Where withered stalk and flowers fall,
Their taking gray possession now
Will disinherit none at all.
What is abandoned to the wind
The wind will take, then, for its own.
Knowing spiders string their webs
In dusty warmth of sun and stone.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

make it sweet

make it simple

Make so many pretty salads and desserts so easy—with luscious, sparkling DEL MONTE Brand Fruit Cocktail!

The cutting and mixing are all done—you get the gay color and summery flavor of five sunny fruits in perfect flavor balance, all ready to serve.

Why not enjoy its help often? Just be sure you get DEL MONTE—the brand you know so well for flavor.

SUNSET BASKETS

1 No. 2½ can DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail	2 tsps. unflavored gelatin
3 small grapefruit, cut in half	2 to 3 tbsps. sugar
	Dash of salt

lain syrup from fruit cocktail. Spoon out sec-ns from grapefruit halves. Notch edges of ells, if desired; remove membrane. Soften latin in 1 cup of the syrup from fruit cocktail; solve over hot water. Add ½ cup juice from grapefruit, sugar and salt. Chill till syrupy. r in fruit cocktail; pour into shells. Chill till n. Serve as salad or dessert. (Pour any leftover up from fruit cocktail over spooned-out grape-it sections; chill for breakfast.)

Del Monte

FRUIT COCKTAIL

—the brand that puts flavor first

Every time and Any time...

10-12 Cup Size

FARBERWARE
Trade Mark

Automatic PERCOLATOR Robot

IT'S WONDERFUL how good coffee can taste when it's made automatically the Farberware way . . . the easy way! Never a trace of bitter oils or acids . . . just the full-bodied excellence of coffee at its flavor-peak. Wonderful, too, how this percolator automatically shuts off when the coffee's just right for serving . . . then automatically holds the coffee at serving temperature for hours. Coffee never spoils because it never boils—thanks to Farberware's exclusive Robot heat-control. A treasure to own in gleaming chrome . . . so handsomely designed, so simple to use (no adjustments to fuss with). Convenient at the breakfast table, eminently right at those "dinner at eight" occasions! CHOICE OF THREE SIZES: 8, 10, 12 large 6 oz. cups.

Automatic Percolator Robots
8-cup $20.95
10-cup $23.95
12-cup $25.95

8-cup Coffee Robot $30.95

Farberware was first to develop and perfect the fully automatic coffeemaker. Be sure you get the "original" and you're sure to get the finest in quality, performance and value!

S. W. FARBER, INC., NEW YORK 54, N.Y.

PRICES $1 HIGHER WEST OF MISSISSIPPI

MANUFACTURERS OF FARBERWARE ALUMINUM-CLAD STAINLESS STEEL COOKWARE

(Continued from Page 104)

He decided to sing it aloud, and he was still singing as he caught up with the dinghy and circled round it to show off a little, traveling fast now, and then back-paddled suddenly and stood up, carried past it by the impetus of his boat.

"Good morning," he said politely.

"What were you singing?" asked Valentine, and McGinty stared with his mouth half open.

Filipino did not answer. He had forgotten his song: it was suddenly brought home to him that he was here, in the presence of two wonderful strangers, and that they were really two real young men. A thudding came up into his ears, and, while he had not felt the rocking sea or the buoyant jumping of his boat, this made him dizzy. He dropped down on his knees in the boat.

"Please," said Filipino dizzily and shut his eyes.

"Please what?" said Valentine. This almost naked boy, with his black hair flying and the drops gleaming on his brown skin, with his well-turned English, was like an apparition.

"A moment," murmured Filipino. Then he opened his eyes and stared long at Valentine and McGinty, looking into their faces with shining eyes, caressing every feature of them until McGinty blushed.

"Can't you ask him what he wants?" growled McGinty to Valentine. "Go on! Speak to him."

But Filipino had begun first. "What is your name? How old are you? Where do you live?" he was asking Valentine. They were the questions that children ask one another, but Filipino was not to know that; he wanted to hear the answers. He fixed his eyes on Valentine and asked again, "Where do you live?"

"London," said Valentine briefly. "Now ——"

But Filipino interrupted him. "London!" Filipino cried. "Not London! Excuse me," he said. He felt dizzy again, and once again he had to kneel down in his boat and keep his eyes closed. Then he opened his eyes. He felt elated and full of joyful omens; this was a joyful omen, and he could not contain himself. "That was one of my own songs I was singing to you," he boasted to Valentine in joy. "Could you write a song in our language?" He surveyed them both with amused eyes and said, "No, I bet you you could not, but I can nearly write a song in English. I shall be able to write one quite well when I have been to college."

"Are you going to college?"

"To Oxford," said Filipino happily.

VALENTINE looked at Filipino's bare wet torso, at his knotted-up blue-and-white cloth and his bare brown legs and feet and the hibiscus flower behind his ear.

"Do you know what I shall do when I have my degree?" asked Filipino, quite unaware of Valentine's look. "Or is it more than one degree?" asked Filipino. "If so, I shall get them all. I intend to do everything. And I shall be a musician and poet as well."

"Being a musician and poet is a whole-time business," said Valentine sourly.

"I shall be both," said Filipino. "But first ——"

"You will have no time for first," said Valentine; he did not know why he went on arguing, but he did. "No time for anything," he said severely.

McGinty interrupted. "What is all this about? Are you going to talk to him all day?"

"I shall come back here and be indigenous," said Filipino to Valentine, taking no notice of McGinty. "I shall collect the relics of my people and all of them will be printed. We shall see them in print!" said Filipino reverently. "No one has ever written them down. Some of our island songs are very beautiful. Listen."

And, standing up in his canoe, he began to sing again, looking over Valentine's shoulder at the cloud on the mountain while the dinghy floated buoyantly on the waves. The song was a light nasal chant that changed to a minor key and held an underlying sadness. It seemed, to Valentine, to gather up all that the fringes of the island had held for him that morning; he sat, rocked by the floating dinghy, and listened, entranced, while McGinty fidgeted and groaned impatiently until it ended.

"That is our rainbow song," said Filipino. "You will hear it all over the island, everywhere. All the people sing it, but we have songs more beautiful than that. We have blood songs, very old. This island, they say, every year gives fruit and corn and salt and gold and blood of its own earth. All of these are in its earth."

"Surely not blood," objected Valentine.

"No. Blood is shed," agreed Filipino.

"Is blood shed here?"

FILIPINO dropped his eyelids. "Now we are not allow," he said primly, and as if that made him remember he said, "I have come to take you to Mr. van Loomis." He saw the mailbags and his eyes widened. "We not allow to touch those," he said.

"We found them broken loose and brought them in," said Valentine.

"We not allow to touch," repeated Filipino.

"Listen," broke in McGinty. He could wait no more. At least this talk of songs and salt and blood proved one thing, that English was spoken on the island, and that promised civilization. "Listen," said McGinty. "We're in trouble. We had to come down behind that island there; had no fuel, no juice." Filipino did not look as if he understood. "No petrol," said McGinty.

"Petrol?" repeated Filipino politely. "Oh, Petroleum! That is used for motors?"

"Ours is a plane," said McGinty.

"An airplane?" Filipino's eyes were bright with interest. "A wind machine!"

"Wind machine!" said McGinty.

"It is partly a wind machine," Valentine pointed out.

"Is it down? On the sea? Can we see it? Is it here?" asked Filipino, dazzled.

"No, or we shouldn't be sticking to these paddles," said McGinty tersely.

"Listen," said Valentine in his turn. "We want to get away from here, urgently."

"But you haven't been here yet," said Filipino, disappointed.

"I have urgent business. We have to get away quickly." Valentine's voice was authoritative, and Filipino instinctively became obedient. "What island is this?" asked Valentine.

"Mr. van Loomis call it Terraqueous," said Filipino noncommittally.

"Earth and Water," murmured Valentine, and he asked Filipino, "What is its island name?"

"Island name Mānoa," said Filipino with pride.

"Mānoa." Valentine tried the sound and liked it. "What does it mean?"

"Earth and Water," said Filipino.

"Terraqueous, Mānoa," said Valentine, looking at the island.

"Never heard of it," said McGinty as if that were a reason why it should not exist.

"Is there any petrol here?" asked Valentine.

"For what?" asked Filipino, amazed, and then he saw by Valentine's face that he was getting cross. "Is no petrol," said Filipino hastily.

"Not even a garage?"

"Is no garage. . . . Garage. Petrol." Filipino tried these entrancing new words over on his tongue. "Petrol. Garage. Garage. Petrol."

But Valentine was speaking. "Does a plane ever come?"

Filipino shook his head.

"Then when does the steamer call?" Valentine went on.

"Is no steamer."

"There must be some means of communication," said Valentine crossly. "How do you get to the other islands?"

(Continued on Page 108)

He who would eat the kernel must crack the shell.
—PLAUTUS.

The ORIGINAL "Finest Ever Made!"

No other cookie has ever come close to matching the distinctive fresh chocolate flavor of Sunshine HYDROX... the ORIGINAL and the finest cream filled chocolate cookie ever made!

Sunshine HYDROX COOKIES

THE ORIGINAL CREAM-FILLED
CHOCOLATE COOKIE

A message to doctors that's important to you, too!

LARD–More Than a Superior Cooking Fat

As a cooking fat for sautéing, shortening and deep frying, lard has long enjoyed a favored position with cooks and housewives. It is economical, tasty and easy to use, and produces foods of outstanding flavor and eye-appeal.

But lard is more than a mere shortening agent. It is an excellent source of the unsaturated fatty acids, linoleic, linolenic and arachidonic acids. These important nutrients must be supplied by the foods eaten; the ability of the human organism to synthesize them is limited. An inadequate intake of the unsaturated fatty acids can lead to certain skin diseases in both children and adults. As a source of the unsaturated fatty acids lard is superior to many other cooking fats in which the fatty acid content is destroyed or modified during processing.

Lard is one of the most digestible of all edible fats. Hence it yields its caloric food energy readily and offers no difficulty when the digestive processes are normal.

The Seal of Acceptance denotes that the nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

American Meat Institute

Main Office, Chicago . . . Members Throughout the U. S.

We believe that you as a homemaker are interested in new information on food values and nutrition. For that reason we have reproduced the above message which appeared in leading medical journals and the Journal of the American Dietetic Association.

Armour and Company

(Continued from Page 106)

"Don't get," said Filipino. "Unless you want to go to Zambun. Ha! Ha!" They did not laugh, and Filipino had his first lesson in the provincialism of jokes.

"Listen," said Valentine, and he spoke in a slightly hectoring way to show he was determined. "Your Mr. van Loomis isn't an islander. He didn't grow on the island. How did he come? Something must have brought him here." Filipino shook his head. "It must have," said Valentine. "When was the last time a steamer called?"

"Twenty years ago," said Filipino. "Before that I was born."

There was silence from the two in the dinghy. They were leaning on their paddles. Neither spoke. They looked tired out, bewildered, draggled.

"Come," said Filipino gently. "Come. I will take you to Mr. van Loomis."

After a moment, still in that silence, they turned the clumsy dinghy round. Filipino fastened his boat to theirs and helped to steady them against the current, and they began to paddle back the long way they had come up the bay.

Charis had come down to walk on the beach. She had ceased to cry; she had changed her cloth and sash and blouse, combed her hair, washed her face and calmed her mind. She had also thought a great deal about her mother, and about herself, and accepted her lot.

Charis had pondered and thought, in a way that Filipino had not, over the books and newspapers they had read. Filipino was concerned with himself. Charis was concerned, in a way that was almost painful, with other people, other girls, people and girls she had never met but read about; she thought about them and compared them with herself. For instance, she had tried earnestly, from illustrations and photographs, to make out their dresses and coats and shoes and hats; then, "What should I look like in a hat?" she said to Pheasant.

You are getting pretty old when you feel as young as you ever did. —JAMES GREEN.

"Yo' has a hat," said Pheasant. The island hats were large, of plaited straw, but, like Filipino and the real young man, Charis did not count hers as a hat.

"I mean a real hat," she said. Now she despaired of ever wearing one.

She was hopelessly alone. Most disheartening of anything she had read, to Charis, because they made her feel most separated, were the commercial advertisements. "Study at home for a degree, now more than ever necessary for you in your career. Take the Home Economics course and become important to your work. Accountancy; Advertising, Bookkeeping; Business Management; Commercial Art: send stamp for free booklet." On her father's desk lay her thesis on The Origin of Art in Primitive Man with which he would presently be well pleased; Charis could speak Spanish, French and German besides the island dialect and her own well-inflected English; she was thoroughly grounded in mathematics, history, literature, geography, biology, botany, astronomy and any of her father's subjects, but she had no knowledge of these things that the advertisements said were necessary; she did not even know what they were; she could not take a course, she had no money; she could not send a stamp for a free booklet; there were no stamps on the island, the only mail was her father's and that went by bag. Now she had learned who she was, she had, in a way, met her mother, but that did not make her any more like any other girl, any more like Anya, Rosalind or Emma; though they probably knew nothing of commercial art or business management, they at least had stamps and letters. Charis had never had a letter. One day she had written a letter, to try it. She began it: Dear— Dear who? In the end she had had to write it to herself: Dear Charis. At least it had given her a forlorn identity, but it was forlorn.

Father said the teacher would come, said Charis. What teacher? There were no teachers on the island, and she knew now that the island was to ring her round forever. "Forever and ever and ever," said Charis aloud.

In a way she was right. The sediment of the island was in her bones, in her no more than in the islanders, and they, if they were taken to Zambun, died of homesickness. Filipino had been right; it was a sediment of coral, salt and soil, a vein of gold, a core of fire, a cool surface of dew. The strata of the island held all these things from fire to dew and an interesting interwoven covering of growing and living things that shimmered in the whole as exquisitely as the weaver bird's nests that hung on the palms. The wind blew through the island in an arcade of sound in which all its storms and winds, songs and voices, living and elemental, were blended in a cool perpetual echo of the fringe of all the sounds.

In the first morning light the fishers sang as their boats drifted down with the nets, down past the house to the bay; the lazy, gentle singing had wakened Charis for as since she could remember. Then came the higher, shriller singing of the herd children driving the goats and cows up the valley with songs and whistles from boy to boy and the little pipe of a bamboo flute. Charis had early learned to play on those flutes herself; the flutes were sad, all the island songs were cadences of sadness, as Valentine had heard in Filipino's song; this happy, easy life was tinged with sadness and, as in all life, so also was never far away. The island was old, as old could be seen in the temple on the mountain where the old vestments and shields and masks were kept for the ritual dances. On festival days there were drums sounding from the sea to the land, in the villages and courtyards, in the streets of the town, in the fields and down from the temple. Charis had often met the drummers naked, with their faces whitened and nooses on their hair and vermilion paint between their eyes; they had frightened her as a child, and a drum was always to mean terror, fright and excitement. Every year new designs were painted on the boats, new patterns on the house walls and the wheels of the carts, and the whips were tufted with new bright cotton. The dyes for the whip tufts were gay, but the dyes for the cloth were the old, trusted vegetable dyes, and the only colors were dark, though rich and lasting. Cloths were printed with hand patterns of red and deep blue, blankets were dyed red and blue, saffron, and the pottery was brown and yellow, deep blue or its natural brown-red.

The people worshiped the elements: the sun, the moon, earth and the rain and the rainbow, they believed, interceded for them. They believed that they themselves were spirits and that the spirits of the dead were more powerful than they.

Charis was tinged with this worship, but she could not see the need for complication. If one worshiped the sun, what did one worship but the sun? Why the temple, these symbols, these drums? Charis had not yet learned the significance of the fact that nothing can live near the sun and not be scorched, that one cannot even look at it with his naked eyes. Charis was young and very convinced.

"What religion is Charis?" Valentine had to ask later.

"Charis has studied comparative religion with me since she was ten years old," said Mr. van Loomis.

"Yes, but what religion is she?" asked Valentine, and Mr. van Loomis realized that for all he had carefully taught her, he had omitted to give her a religion of her own.

"All she needs is an open mind," said Mr. van Loomis, but Valentine still seemed to think she needed a religion.

It had not occurred to Charis that any of the comparative religions were to do with her. Impersonally she had learned of the teachings of Christ, Buddha, Mohammed, Confucius and the Greek and Hindu philosophers; none of them had seemed personally for her. Neither was she touched by the mystery

(Continued on Page 110)

PERFECT COOKING PERFORMANCE IS JUDGED BY JUST 3 THINGS— SO Why pay for extras?

ERFECT TOP-BURNER OOKING — INSTANT, ACCURATE ISUAL CONTROL

o boil-overs, no burn-drys, no ot-watching. Hardwick Simmer-enter burners are actually two urners in one — one for high-peed boiling and frying, one or keep-boiling and keep-arm heats — both fully djustable and visual. emovable for easy eaning at the sink.

ERFECT BAKING ITH A BALANCED EAT OVEN

o turning or shifting of baking ans, no basting, no peeking. Heat in a ardwick oven is perfectly balanced. ake anything and everything nywhere in the oven. There are no ot spots, no cold spots. Every ake browns perfectly — top nd bottom.

ERFECT BROILING WITH LIVE-FLAME BROILER

ositively smokeless. The live ame of a gas broiler is the ost perfect for broiling ll meats. Keeps your kitchen lean and smoke-free. And Hardwick broiler is as easy o clean as any pot or pan — emove it, wash it in the sink.

MODEL NO. 5516-1

Old Stove Round-up Time

Trade your old stove NOW!

You see gas stoves offered for almost nothing. Again you see them offered for almost a fortune. Which should you buy? Remember there are just three things that are important to you: the top burners, the oven and the broiler. Gadgets and fancy trimmings that increase the price can't improve the cooking performance. Hardwick Ranges are modern, beautiful, streamlined, without unnecessary extras. That's why the price is sensible and reasonable. Compared to expensive ranges, a Hardwick may save you enough for an additional gas appliance to make homemaking easier. And you can't buy better cooking performance, no matter what you pay.

All models at popular prices
Starting at $99.50

See your dealer, your gas company, or write to Dept. L-12

GAS HAS GOT IT!

HARDWICK
AUTOMATIC GAS RANGES

HARDWICK STOVE COMPANY
Established 1879
CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE

Lovely open stock patterns on display at your nearest fine store. Or write

SYRACUSE CHINA, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 108)

that interested her father—or was she? Or was it a different magic? She thought how the spark came out of the tinder on the dry wood and made a fire . . . and no one knows what will be wood to what tinder, or what fire they light, she said to herself. There is magic in that; but I shan't light any fire, said Charis. She was too cool, and she thought of Filipino, how, if he walked on the shore, he would kick the stones, pick up shells and throw them away, with a perpetual inner restlessness, sit down on a rock, dreaming, gazing, with his thoughts flowing in and out like the waves, like the tide. Filipino, sitting on the rock, had fire in him; he was smoldering. She was cool but, it seemed to Charis, that there was this to be said for her: she saw magic where nobody else did. Isn't it magic, this that is in people, this deep fire? asked Charis. "The rest is conjuring," she might have said. Her father had told her he had given up conjuring, but he had said that we all conjure a little. Because we must, said Charis, her eyes on the sea, unless we have enough magic. She saw this clearly in Filipino: that he would have to choose between conjuring and his own original magic.

Her attention was caught by Resurrection, who was walking along the shore toward the garden bay. He had come down on the shore to collect the smooth white pebbles with which Niu liked to edge the flower beds in the kitchen courtyard. Mr. van Loomis had forbidden them in the garden, and everyone thought that a very singular taste. Charis watched the tall boy walk along. She had not particularly noticed him before; now she saw that he was very like Filipino, but taller, more strong. Resurrection walked along, choosing a pebble here and there and sometimes stopping to wash one in a pool and then putting it in the basket he carried on one hip. As he walked he looked so quiet that Charis thought he seemed to have the power to melt into the air, the clouds, the flying birds, the palm leaves in the breeze, and the tumbling sea, and yet still be Resurrection walking calmly along. The sun shone through his thin white cloth as he walked, lighting its edges, and Charis had the curious thought that what was fire in Filipino had turned to light in Resurrection.

She looked away from Resurrection and saw Valentine. It was as if the sea had drawn back for a moment, a long moment, leaving the shore bare. The moment was held in time: the sun shone, the white sands stretched, the wave held back like glass; nothing moved. There was no sound but the sound of a sigh from the wave; then Charis knew it was her own sigh, and the wave ebbed back and another came up, washing nearly to her feet as she watched Valentine walk toward her on the beach.

THERE were some little monkeys chattering in a cotton tree that stood behind the palms; the wind blew in the palms, making whispers that mingled with the monkey chatter as if it were an urgent voice trying to tell something through all the little broken monkey words; the voice seemed to be in Charis as she watched Valentine draw near. Charis had an inner ear, and she had proved, honestly and beyond a doubt, that if she listened to it she did not go wrong. She might not do right, but she would not go wrong. When she listened she was aware of something in herself larger than she, a feeling of being allied. It had not struck her that this had anything to do with the comparative religions. Now she felt it say, Look well, look deeply at this young man. "But . . . it's impossible," said Charis, "A moment ago he was not here." And it answered calmly, He is here now.

ETIQUETTE

The word actually means a ticket or card. Originally it referred to the custom of delivering a card of directions to be observed by all those who attended court. One interesting story has it that the gardener in charge of Louis XIV's grounds at Versailles was much upset because the courtiers were careless in their strollings about and sometimes despoiled his labors. The gardener persuaded the King to issue instructions included in the Etiquette. Thus the term had its original application to ceremonial and formal observances practiced at court, and finally to suggest the conduct of ordinary individuals in the polite walks of life.

Charis was often grave, but as Valen came nearer she watched him with a pecu gravity and a mounting happiness. The w blew the folds of her cloth against her l she was glad that she had changed and put a cloth of soft raw white silk and not usual cotton; it blew against her, softly reassuringly, and she knew how gracefu it wrapped her thighs and hips and cau her at the waist where the matching wh silk sash was wound over her loose blou She hoped there were no tearstains now her face, and she was glad that her hair drawn back smoothly and caught beh her ears with its two beaten silver pi Charis's hair was not long enough to tw into the usual island knot, and she wore loose and straight to her shoulders. She h taken off her great straw hat—there w shade here from the palms—and she held against her and smelled the scent of chema flower she had pinned in her blouse Valentine came up to her.

CHARIS looked well and deeply at Valent and decided he was beautiful. He was tal than anyone she had ever seen except father, but where Mr. van Loomis was bro and heavy, Valentine was slim, and the effe to Charis, was of a wand, or a tree walki He was tired, rumpled and unshaven, Charis did not see th his clothes fitted, wh Mr. van Loomis's a the islanders' did n Valentine looked, Charis, as if he w poured into his cloth His paleness seem wonderful to her af the deep island ski she had seen that pa ness before only in own mirror; Valentin hand, when he put out, was almost as wh as hers; he had a g watch on his wrist; only other watch Cha had ever seen was father's large fob wat But, with all the reve tion that Valentine to Charis, she imme ately saw something mother and his sister and his friends had seen, the honesty and trouble in his eyes. Th is something the matter, thought Charis; eyes looked as if he were hurt and puzzled phenomenon in a polished, successful pers like Valentine.

As for Valentine, then and ever afterwar he saw Charis as gentle and strong; ev when he learned that she was also a lit shrew it made no difference; and, from t beginning, there was something else that ti him: Charis at once reminded him of grandmother, and, to Valentine, his gran mother had been, as well as the sternest, t most interesting, the most romantic pers he had known. Those qualities soothed h because they fulfilled all his needs; even a little boy he had been the same

"You are ruining that boy," his gran mother had told his mother.

"Why? He is an unstable, nervous, high strung child, I know, but I do everything can to encourage him."

"He shouldn't be encouraged," said V entine's grandmother. "And I don't agre he isn't unstable, he is amazingly constan he is a nervous, highly strung child and, repeat, he shouldn't be encouraged; he is li a violin, and you tighten him up and u what he needs at home is a letting go, a loo ening; he needs to loosen his strings."

As Filipino had guided the dinghy to t shore, for Valentine the island had grow more and more like all coral and treasure lands. Flocks of bright birds rose up out the woods and flew inland, like arrows, wi staccato cries; they were green parakee and after them, silently, in a flash of scarl and yellow, flew small and even bright birds. He had caught a glimpse of the mo keys, brown and lithe when they were swin ing, looking like large brown burrs with lo

(Continued on Page 112)

Community

THE FINEST SILVERPLATE

Thanksgiving tables will gleam, Thanksgiving brides will be thankful for that best-loved of all silverplate — Community. Community — treasured for its five so-popular patterns — valued for its solid silver "Overlay." Community — at your jeweler's now in dinner services for eight starting at $49.75 (no federal tax). Don't miss Community.*

PATTERNS TO LIVE WITH . . . PATTERNS TO LOVE

*TRADEMARKS OF ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, N. Y. COPYRIGHT 1950, ONEIDA LTD.

(Continued from Page 110)

tails when they sat still in the branches. There were flowers growing round the houses, hibiscus and marigolds and rioting gourd flowers that were canary yellow; there were creepers, too, of a white flower that hung between the trees. Valentine had found he was thinking they were white passion flowers. Why? He did not know if passion flowers could be white; he imagined they were purple, but now he saw what he thought were white passion flowers, clear among the vivid scarlet of poinsettias and cotton trees.

Fishing boats had put out to them, and Filipino proudly brought them in through a floating crowd of laughing, shouting, gesticulating men. There seemed to be a great deal of fishing; nets hung from the boats and nets hung in the villages too. Valentine saw fish scales glittering in a net hung from the branch of a cotton tree under the red flowers that were blossoming where presently the great burst cotton pods would be. Other trees were flowering in the woods, more cotton trees, cassias, mauve bauhinias.

"It must be their spring," Valentine had said.

"Spring? Would they have a spring?" asked McGinty, surprised. The only spring he recognized had primroses and thrushes' eggs and cool sunshine tempered with rain. "I don't call this a spring," said McGinty, but Valentine was right. A smell of honey and scent had come lightly over the sea from the trees and seemed to him to give a premonition of new life and happiness; with it came a smell of earth that was mingled with dew drying in the sun and fish drying on the shore, of burning grass and wood and dung; and, as he landed, he had smelled a whiff of peculiar sweetness that he could not identify; could any flower smell as strong and as sweet as that? Now, standing by Charis, that scent came to him again, and he saw it came from a small white wax-petaled flower she wore pinned to her blouse.

There are no hopeless situations: there are only men who have grown hopeless about them. —ANON.

Charis held out her hand and said, "How do you do?" as she had read they said in books, and Valentine did not guess till long afterward, when he saw it must have been so, that it was the first time she had said it. Except for a faint pink flush on her cheeks, the color of the island oleander, there was no sign that this was new to her.

"How do you do?" said Valentine, shaking her hand gently. "My name is Valentine Doubleday. Are you Miss van Loomis?"

"I am Charis van Loomis." Charis was not sure if she should have said Miss van Loomis, but as he had given his two names, she did that too. Valentine Doubleday? Lines from the papers came to Charis from that. She tried to remember, and all at once she knew. "Valentine Doubleday. The playwright?" she asked smoothly, and Valentine was tickled and a little pleased to find himself known even here, on this far island. "Welcome to Terraqueous," said Charis.

THOUGH she could not have been more surprised to see him if a cloud had opened and he had descended on a shaft of gold to her feet, she knew from the books and plays that she had read (she wished she had read one of his plays, but in the days when Mr. van Loomis had chosen his books Valentine was learning his first lines in Pelican Pie) that strangers, to begin with, talked of things that did not really matter and that had nothing to do with themselves or the moment in hand; it was called conversation, and now, though she was burning to ask Valentine why he was here, where he had come from and how he had come, she said, turning back to walk along the beach:

"I'm glad you were able to come now, in spring. This is the best time for our flowers."

More than ever Valentine was reminded of his grandmother. Just so, when he had come in avid with some desire or project of his own, his grandmother had made him wait and not fidget, while she talked lightly or austerely or charmingly of something else that did not matter at all. It was not till long afterward that he had realized how valu those moments of control had been or they put the project in its right perspec it was Valentine's capacity for waiting out fuss, his extraordinary patience, tha helped to bring him where he was; bu needed that reminding still.

VALENTINE missed his grandmother than he knew. She had died when he seventeen, and no one had taken her p His mother was devoted, his grandm had never been devoted: she kept hersel side Valentine and then she could see clearly. She had soothed him; someo brilliant and busy as Valentine needs soothed, and he can be soothed only by ness and the truth. Of late years, thou was still young, he had filled the eye too to be told truths (and there were no truths because he had no home: instinct he lived apart from his mother). That the difference in Charis from the firs took her eyes, both of them, but still she back from him and saw him clearly.

"Very soon," Charis was saying ne her clear soft voice, "our wild lilies w out, and the quisqualis. I hope you w able to wait for those."

So would his grandmother have ta but with this difference. "Have you see larkspurs?" she would have said. "The peas? The snowball tree?" The he flowers, the faint pale hues of Valen childhood; this girl stranger, cool and as she was, was yet exotic. Once again V tine smelled the sweetness of the ch flower she wore; he liked her clothes: in ways she did not remind him of his g mother. Valentine wa prised to find that his was beating a little quickly. As he walke side Charis the sou the surf sounded i ears with the chatter the monkeys and the pering of the palms.

The waves, as they swept up and left patterns of themselves in the wet from which bubbles winked in the su burst into the sand with a little plop th one heard. The bubbles and the wet showed, momentarily, all the colors o rainbow. A soft wind blew from the se blew back, spiced, from the island to th and the cotton tree, where the mo were, dropped its scarlet petals on the

Charis and Valentine walked at the w edge, talking of nothing at all until C stood still and said, "Here is my fathe

They had been so absorbed that sh not heard the "hé's" coming back acro sea, and Mr. van Loomis had landed an been watching them from the garde some time. When he had first seen the of Valentine standing beside Charis, i been so exactly the shape of the young he had prayed for that he had been a Now he stood, watching them walk alo the sea, their heads turned to each Valentine bending a little to Charis. Er right height for each other, said Mr Loomis with as great an equanimity as had made them.

When Filipino had brought the d ashore and saw Charis some instinc made him indicate her to Valentine and McGinty with him. That is a rare goo said Mr. van Loomis, forgetting how tr some Filipino had been, but when Mr Loomis looked at McGinty he immed felt out of temper. McGinty affronted he did not like the way McGinty s leaning against a palm, and smokin looked laconic, and then he saw an thing that did not please him: Filipin carrying something up the beach fro sea. The shapes were familiar to Mr Loomis: they were mailbags. Mr. Loomis swelled with anger.

"Who has touched those?" he sa Luck. "Who has dared to touch them

"The Tsulas, Tsula," suggested

A strange perturbation rose up in Mr Loomis. Now I shall have to read the m will upset me. He was sure it would upset

(Continued on Page 115)

How to have a glorious
COLOR-BRIGHT kitchen
For only a penny a foot, you place gorgeous new Plasti-Chrome Royledge Shelving on every shelf.—and instantly glorify your kitchen with glowing reds, blues, yellows, greens. So quick, so easy! See new patterns at 5 & 10's, supermarkets, housefurnishing, naborhood, dept. stores.
9 ft. and 24 ft. pkgs. Royledge
Shelving Paper and Edging all-in-one Above: "Bridal Roses" Below: "Pond Lily" At top: "Apple Clusters"

YRON IS IN ITS PLACE in transparent crisper boxes, ves and handle trim because its crystal clarity allows you ee where everything is conveniently stored. Styron does not ct food flavors, nor does it allow the transfer of food odors.

